8595. The Divine influx into truth combating. Sig. and Ex. . . For the truth which proceeds immediately from the Lord, being purely Divine, inflows into truths of faith of every kind, and causes them to be truths, 'Joshua'=truth combating . . . against the falsities which are from interior evil. Against these must combat the truth which has been made combating by the influx of Divine truth. The truth Divine which proceeds immediately from the Lord is . . . peace itself . . . and in order that it may become combating it inflows with such Angels as are in ardent zeal for truth and good, who, being excited by this zeal, combat. As this truth was represented by 'Joshua,' he was made leader after Moses . . .

8596. That he should marshal truths for the combat. Sig. and Ex. 8601.

8610. Correspondence (of truth in the ultimate of order) with truth in the first of order. Sig. and Ex. . . When truth in the ultimate of order corresponds to the truth in the first of order, which is the truth Divine that proceeds immediately from the Lord, then this latter truth is supported, for then they act as one . . . and then the first truth has strength in the ultimate truth, for it is in it, and acts by means of it; whereas, if there is not correspondence, there is disjunction, and consequently the first truth has no strength in the ultimate truth. (Sig. by the stone placed under Moses.)

8612. Support (rendered to) the power of truth combating. Sig. and Ex. 8605.

8640. (Thus) the life of the regenerate is impossible for man until he is in a state such that he can acknowledge the truths of faith, and will them in proportion to his acknowledgment.

8686^e. By these words is described the first state, in which the man who is being regenerated is led through truth from the Lord. The truth through which he is led is the Word, for this is truth Divine.

8694. Arrangement among truths from revealed truth then. Sig. and Ex.

—². By revelation is meant enlightenment when the Word is being read, and perception then; for they who are in good, and long for truth, are taught in this way from the Word; but they who are not in good cannot be taught from the Word, but can only be confirmed in such things as they have been instructed in from infancy, whether these things are truths or falsities. Ex.

—³. (This revelation) is a certain consent and favouring from within that this is truth, and a non-favouring if it is not truth. Des. . . The cause of it is (that) there is light through Heaven from the Lord, which circumfuses and enlightens the understanding; and the things which appear in this light are truths; for this light is itself the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord. 8780², Ex.

8699. That thus the truth which has been inseeded would perish. Sig. and Ex.

8701. Without the influx of truth from good from some other source. Sig. and Ex.

— . When the influx of truth Divine is immediate, the Lord does indeed inflow with good and truth, but at that time the good is not perceived, but the truth; and therefore at that time the man is led by means of truth, and not so much by means of good: whereas when the influx is at the same time mediate, then good is perceived; for the mediate influx is into the external sensuous of the man; and hence it is that the man is then led by the Lord by means of good.

—². In general, it is to be known, that a man has not been regenerated until the time when he acts from the affection of good; for he then wills good, and has delight and blessedness in doing it. When he is in this state, his life is a life of good, and he is in Heaven; for the universal Regnant in Heaven is good; whereas the truth which is of faith leads man to good, thus to Heaven, but does not make him present in Heaven. Ex.

[A.] 8704-8708. (That the truth which proceeds immediately from the Lord should mediate and intercede with the Divine Itself, and should be the source of the external and internal goods and truths of the Church, giving the light of intelligence and the derivative life and action.) Sig. and Ex.

8709. The choosing of the subservient truths. Sig. and Ex.

8711. 'Men of Truth, hating gain' (Ex. xviii. 21) = because the truths are pure, without a worldly end. . . For 'men-viri' = truths, and 'Truth' = faith.

8721. If truth inflowed only immediately . . . the man of this Church could be led only through truth, and not through good. Sig. and Ex.

8725. The choosing, by those of the Spiritual Church, of the truths with which good could be conjoined. Sig. and Ex. . . For there are truths with which good cannot be as yet conjoined . . . The truths with which it can be conjoined are truths which have been confirmed, and have also been associated with many [other truths], even with such as delight the intellectual sight; for in this way these truths enter into the affection, which causes the man to will them. When this takes place, then good conjoins itself with these truths; for to will truths, and thence to do them, causes them to be good. It is to be known, further, that good is not conjoined with truths until the truths have been purified from the falsities which are from evil, and until they have a connection with all the truths which must be of faith with the man who is to be regenerated. The connection and purification of truths are clearly seen and perceived by the Angels, from the Lord, however little the man may feel or apperceive such things in himself.

8726. Influx into these truths. Sig. and Ex. . . For in the second state (of regeneration), when the man is led by means of good, the Lord inflows by the truth which proceeds both immediately and mediately from Him; the mediate influx being equally from the Lord as is the immediate; and it is the mediate influx of truth from the Divine which is here signified.

8727. 'Princes of thousands,' etc. = the primary truths which are subordinate in successive order to the truth which proceeds immediately. (And that in this way the Lord acts mediately through them. Ex. 8728.)

8764. 'I have borne you on the wings of eagles' = that they have been elevated by means of truths to heavenly light. Ex.

8766. 'If hearing you will hear My voice' = the reception of truth.

8772. Influx to receive truths in good. Sig. and Ex.

— (Thus) spiritual life can be acquired solely by means of the truths of faith.

—². This spiritual life is first acquired through knowing the truths of faith, afterwards through acknowledging them, and finally through believing them. When they are only known, they are at the door; when they are acknowledged, they are in the court; and when they are believed, they are in the bed-chamber. Thus they advance successively from exteriors to interiors. In the interior man is the good which continually inflows from the Lord, and there conjoins itself with truths, and causes them to become faith, and then charity. This good attracts truths to itself, for it longs for them, in order that by their means it may acquire a quality, and thus come into existence. When, therefore, these truths have been conjoined with good, then the man has been regenerated. (Continued under Good.)

8773. The choosing of those who are primarily in the intelligence of truth. Sig. and Ex.

— Those who are in good which has not yet been formed through truths—which is the good treated of in this chapter—are first formed by the Lord by means of primary truths, that is, by means of general truths in which and from which are all the rest. Primary truths are, that there is one God; that the Lord was born a man in order to save the human race; that there is a Heaven, and a Hell; that those live in Heaven who have lived well, and in Hell who have lived evilly; that love to God and love towards the neighbour are the commandments on which all other things hang; and that love is impossible except through faith. These and the like are the primary truths which are first insinuated by the Lord into good with a man who is being regenerated; and, when these have been insinuated, and have become of good, then all the rest are insinuated, and in these general or primary truths, and under them, are arranged in order according to the heavenly form, and thus by degrees cause the life of Heaven to be in the man . . .

8783. That there may be a permanent faith of truth. Sig. and Ex.

8789. The purification of truths. Sig. and Ex.

8799. That the truths of faith which he has would perish. Sig. and Ex.

8813¹. The love of truth. Sig. For the truth which is from love is attended with a flaming from fire.

8861². Spiritual sight has for its objects, in the spiritual understanding, the truths which are called of faith; but in the natural one, the truths of the civil state, which belong to what is just, and also the truths of the moral state, which belong to what is honourable, and lastly the natural truths which are conclusions from the objects of the external senses. From this it may be seen in what order truths follow each other, and that each and all derive their origin from truths Divine . . .

8867. That truths are not to be thought of as from any other source than the Lord. Sig. and Ex. 8868, Ex.

8868. For the Lord is not in truths with a man when he denies Him and His Divine, or when he acknowledges Him and still believes that good and truth are not from Him, but from himself . . . The truths also in which the Lord is not are those which are taken from the Word, especially from the sense of the letter, and are explained in favour of the man's own dominion and gain. In themselves these are truths, because they are from the Word; but still they are not truths, because they are wrongly explained, and thus perverted. Sig.

—². The truths which are from the Lord are truths in their internal form also; but the truths which are not from the Lord appear as truths only in their external form, whereas . . . within they are either empty, or false, or evil. For truth to be truth, there must be life in it; for truth without life is not the truth of faith with man, and life is from no other source than good, that is, through good from the Lord. If, therefore, the Lord is not in the truth, it is truth devoid of life, thus is not truth; and if there is falsity in it, or evil, the very truth with the man is falsity, or evil; for that which is within is what makes the essence, and also in the other life shines through what is external. Des.

—³. Hence it is known (there) what lies stored up in truths, whether the Lord, or not. The truths in which the Lord is, are truths which are alive; but the truths in which the Lord is not, are truths which are not alive. Those which are alive are truths of faith, from love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour. Those which are not alive are not truths, because within them is the love of self and the love of the world.

8881. 'And keep My commandments'=those who receive the truths of faith.

— For the truths which are called of faith, in order that they may be of faith, and in order that they may be alive with a man, [must] also inflow from the Lord. They are indeed learned by the man, and are stored up in the memory, but so long as the man does not will them, and thence does not do them, they do not become alive. But when they are taken out of the memory, and by means of the Intellectual are insinuated into the will, that is, by means of thought into affection, and thence into act, they then become alive, and are of faith. This is effected by the Lord, when the man desists from evils.

8882. To take the name of God into what is vain, properly = to turn truth into evil, that is, to believe that it is truth, and still to live in evil; and it is also to turn good into falsity . . . Both are profanation.

8897. 'Honour thy father and thy mother'=love for good and truth.

8920. The reception of truth in an accommodated form. Sig. and Ex.

8940. A representative of worship in general from truths. Sig. and Ex.

8941². The truths from which the Lord is to be worshipped are to be taken solely from the Word, for in everything there, there is life from the Divine. When truths are taken from proprium, they have as the end dignity and eminence over all in the world, and also worldly possessions and wealth, and therefore have in them the love of self and of the world; whereas the truths which are from the Word regard and have as the end eternal life, and have in them love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour, thus all truths in the complex. When truths are hatched from proprium or from Own intelligence, they dominate over the truths which are from the Divine; for the latter are applied to confirm the former; whereas truths from the Divine ought to dominate, and those which are from Own intelligence ought to serve. (The latter) are called truths, but are not truths; they only appear as truths in the external form: for they are rendered like truths by applications from the literal sense of the Word, and by reasonings; but in the internal form they are falsities.

—³. Those (in the Philistine religion) acknowledge nothing as truth which they do not apprehend . . .

8942. 'Tool'=made-up truth, thus truth from proprium.

8960. In temptation, the Angels call forth the truths of faith which are in the man.

8962. These combats are carried on by means of the truths of faith from the Word; from these the man must fight . . . and if he fights from any other truths, he does not conquer, because the Lord is not in any others.

8964. He who has not in him truths of faith from the Word . . . is not admitted into any combat. Ex.

8970. In Ex. xxi. it treats of those who injure or destroy the truth of faith or the good of charity in themselves or in others: what the penalty is, and what the restitution.

8972. Exterior truths such as there must be in the civil state where there is a representative Church. Sig. and Ex.

8974. 'A Hebrew servant'=those within the Church who are in the truths of doctrine, and not in good according to them. Ex.

—². In the Spiritual Church . . . there are two kinds of men: those in the truths of faith and not in the corresponding good of life; and those in the good of charity and the corresponding truth of faith; (the latter constitute the very Church itself, and are men of the internal Church, and are called 'the sons of Israel.' These are free, because they are in good . . . But (the former) are men of the external spiritual Church, and are meant by 'the Hebrew servants' . . . for such is the truth of faith relatively to the good of charity, because the truth of faith is of service to introduce the man of the Church into the good of charity. 8979², Ex.

—³. Moreover, they who make everything of the Church to consist in the truth of faith, and not in the good of charity, and who also do what is good solely from obedience, and not from affection which is of love, cannot be regenerated as can those who are in the good of charity, that is, who do what is good from affection of love: they can indeed be reformed, but not regenerated; and their reformation is here treated of.

[A. 8975]². For those who are in the truth of faith and not in the corresponding good of life are not admitted into any grievous combat, or temptation, because they would succumb. Ex.

8976. 'In the seventh he shall go out free for nothing' = a state of confirmed truth without its works. . . For with such there is no conjunction of good and truth . . . but instead of it there is the confirmation of truth . . . and the truth of faith with them is confirmed by the Lord without any works of theirs when they are in some combat. 8984, Ex.

—². But those who are in truth to which delight is adjoined, are meant by the servants who come with a woman . . . In the man of the external Church, delight is instead of good ; for the good he has is . . . from a natural origin, for it derives its relish from the delight of living and teaching truth for the sake of gain or of honour, consequently for the sake of self, and therefore it is called delight, and not good . . . 8979, Ex.

—³. But good from a spiritual origin is meant by the woman whom the master gives to his servant ; but this cannot be conjoined, and therefore it was decreed that when the servant went forth, the woman should be the master's, and also her sons and daughters. For spiritual good is good . . . for the sake of the Church and the salvation of the neighbour, and such good cannot be conjoined with those who are in the externals of the Church, for it is the good of charity itself . . . and those who are in the externals of the Church cannot be affected with the truths of faith in any other way than principally for the sake of self, and secondarily for the sake of the Church ; and they who are such can indeed act according to truths, thus can do what is good, but not from affection, but from obedience ; and these are meant by those who are willing to serve for ever. 8981, Ex. 8983. 8987, Ex. 8991.

—⁴. These arcana can be apprehended only by those who are in the good of charity, and not by those who are in the truth of faith without that good. The reason is that (the former) are in the light of Heaven, and from it see the things which are in the light of the world ; whereas the (latter) are in the light of the world, from which they cannot see the things which are in the light of Heaven.

8980. 'His woman shall go forth with him' = the state of truth conjoined with delight also after combat. Ex.

8989. 'He shall bring him either to the door or the post' = the state of truth confirmed and implanted with spiritual good. Ex.

9007. 'He that smiteth a man, and he die' = injury inflicted on the truth of faith, and the consequent loss of spiritual life. Ex. 9008-9014, Tr. and Ex.

9018. 'He that stealeth a man, and selleth him' = the application of the truth of faith to evil, and the alienation of it. 9019, 9020, Tr. and Ex.

9024. 'When men shall dispute' = contention about truths among themselves. Ex.

9025. 'And a man shall smite his companion with a stone or with his fist' = the weakening of one [truth] by some scientific or general truth. . . That truth is called general which is received and prevails everywhere.

—². What it is to weaken any truth of the Church by means of scientific or general truth. Ex.

— The truths of faith which are of the doctrine of the Church arise from the truths of the literal sense by explication. Ex.

9032. The two preceding verses treat of spiritual truth, which is the truth of the doctrine of faith from the Word, weakened by scientific truth, which is the truth of the literal sense. But, as it is commonly believed that (the former) truth is the same as (the latter) truth, we may illustrate the difference by an example.

9033. In the two following verses it treats of the weakening of scientific truth which is that of the literal sense, by spiritual truth which is that of the doctrine of faith. Example.

view, there is condemnation, because it is the rejection of his truth of faith; for that which has been made of anyone's faith, even if it is not truth, must not be rejected except with a full view; if it is rejected before that, the first beginning of his spiritual life is extirpated; and therefore the Lord never breaks such truth with a man, but bends it as far as possible. Examp. (This is meant by the avenging of a servant if he dies under his master's hand, and by his not being avenged if he continues a day or two.)

9042. 'And shall strike a woman with child' = injury of the good which is from truth, (causing a bringing forth of good from truths from the internal man into the external man in an order which is not right. Restitution is made when the external man acts from the internal. 9046°.)

9045, 9046. 'He shall surely be fined, as the lord of the woman shall put upon him' = amendment until it agrees with the truth of good. Ex.

9049°. 'The eye' = the understanding of truth; 'the nostrils,' the perception of truth; and the things of the mouth, as 'the jaws,' 'the lips,' 'the throat,' 'the tongue,' such things as belong to the utterance of truth.

— For the truth of faith is in the internal man, and makes his life. 9082°.

9061. (For) if the truth of faith in the natural or external man has been extinguished, the external man can no longer serve the internal, (and then the man cannot be regenerated). Sig.

9062. 'If he shall strike out the tooth of his man-servant or the tooth of his maid-servant' = if he shall destroy the truth or its affection in the Sensuous. Ex. (See also 9081.)

9090. 'When a man's ox shall strike the ox of his companion' = two truths, of which the affections are diverse, and that of one shall injure that of the other. . . 'A man, and his companion' = two truths.

9093. That the truth thereof shall be dissipated. Sig. and Ex.

—². 'To serve two masters' = to acknowledge truth, and do evil.

—⁵. The Lord's 'garments' represented truths in the external form; and His 'under-garment,' truths in the internal form.

9094°. All the truths with man have life from the affections of some love: truth without life from this source is like a sound without an idea; (so that) the life of truth is from the life of good . . . and therefore if there are two truths which have not their life from the same general affection, but from diverse ones, they must needs be dissipated, for they clash with each other; and, when the truths are dissipated, their affections also are dissipated; for there is a general affection under which all the truths with a man are consociated; and this general affection is good. Sig. (by the oxen of two men, one of which gores the other so that it dies; the other ox being sold, and the silver divided.)

9141°. The love of good, that is, love to the Lord and towards the neighbour, constitutes the fire of life with a good man and an Angel; and the love of truth and belief of truth constitute the light of life with them.

—². For in the internal man truth appears in its own light; but in the external man apart from the internal, truth appears in darkness. Hence the celestial Angels . . . do not confirm truths even by reasons . . . —³. Sig.

—⁷. 'To swear (not) by one's head'=not to confirm the truth which the man himself believes to be truth . . . for this constitutes the head with a man; and therefore it is said, 'for thou canst not make one hair white or black'; for 'the hair'=the truth of the external man, such as is with those who are in the belief of truth not from perceiving it to be truth, but because the doctrine of the Church so teaches; and, because they do not know it from any other source, it is said that we are not to swear by it . . . 'To make a hair white'=to say, from one's self, that truth is truth; and to make one black'=to say, from one's self, that falsity is falsity. . . . From (all which) it is evident . . . that truth Divine is not to be confirmed by man, but by the Lord with man. Further ill.

—². But a man is said to receive truths from some other source, when he is instructed by another; and, if these truths are not in agreement under the good in which the man is, they are indeed stored up in his memory among the scientifics, but do not become his, that is, of his faith, because they are from a different stock. These truths are treated of in this and the following verse.

9176. These ('borrowed') truths either have, or have not, with them, their own good. The truths which have with them their own good, are those which, when heard, affect the hearer; whereas those which have it not, are those which do not do so. Sig.

—². The truths which are not conjoined with their own good are those which are learned from others . . .

9180. They who learn and imbibe truths from the Word, from doctrine, from others, or even from themselves, for the sake of gain, that is, in order to gain honours or wealth, or in order to merit Heaven. Sig.

9188. There are two things which constitute Heaven and thus spiritual life with man: the truth of faith in the Lord, and the good of love to Him . . . and the Lord, so far as possible, withholds man from the conjunction of truth and good with falsity and evil, because this conjunction is profanation; but still many of those who are in the Church cannot be withheld, because from their infancy they have imbibed such things as are of the Church from the Word and from doctrine from the Word, and some of them have imbued them and made them of their faith, and when these have arrived at adult age . . . they have made as of no account the things which they had made to be of their faith, and have seized on falsities instead, and also imbued them. These are they who have conjoined in themselves truths with falsities; for truths which have once been made of faith remain, and cannot be eradicated, and falsities which are afterwards made to be of faith conjoin themselves with them; and it is this conjunction which is here signified (by the command, 'Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live.' Ill).

9192². There are some who are in genuine truths, some in truths not genuine, and some who are in falsities; and yet those who are in genuine truths are often damned, and those in truths not genuine, and also those in falsities, are often saved. Ex. —⁷. Ex.

—³. 'The intelligent'=those who are in truth, and who teach truths.

—^e. Truths-vera=from evil may be compared to food which is clean to the sight, but is malignant within . . .

9193⁴. The internal man is closed by a life of evil, and when it has been closed, truths are turned into falsities; and, where they remain, they merely serve the evils which are of the love of self and of the world.

—^e. Those in the Church who do not acknowledge the Lord, cannot be in good, thus neither in truth; and those acknowledge Him who are in faith and at the same time in the good of life; but not those who are in evil of life. Ex.

9196. 'A sojourner thou shalt not afflict . . .' = that those who want to be instructed in the truths and goods of faith, are not to be infested with falsities of faith and evils of life.

9198. 'Any widow' = those who are in good without truth, and yet long for truth. Ill.

9199. 'Or orphan' = those who are in truth and not yet in good, and yet long for good. Ill.

9207. 'And your sons, orphans' = that truths will perish at the same time; for 'orphans,' here, = those who are in truth and do not long for good. . . That truths perish with those who do not long for good, is evident from what has been said about the conjunction of good and truth. . . Further: truths which have been conjoined with good always have in them a longing to do what is good; and, at the same time, to be thereby more closely conjoined with good. Or, what is the same, those who are in truths always long to do what is good, and so to conjoin it with their truths. Therefore, those who believe themselves to be in truths, and who do not long to do what is good, are not in truths, that is, are not in the faith of them, however much they may believe that they are. This is described by the Lord by 'salt.' (Fully quoted and ill. under SALT, here.)

—⁶. When the one longs to be reciprocally conjoined with the other—that is, good with truth, and truth with good—they then look towards each other; but when truth separates itself from good, they then turn away from each other, and look backwards. This is signified by Lot's wife.

9210². As it is with good, so it is with truth—they who do truth for the sake of truth, do it for the sake of the Lord also, because from the Lord. To do truth for the sake of truth is to do good; for truth becomes good when it enters from the Intellectual into the will, and goes forth from the will into act. To do good in this way is Christian charity. They who do good from Christian charity sometimes have regard to the consequent reputation for the sake of honour or gain. Ex.

—⁶. Anyone who obliges and incites another to confirm the truths (of the inciter), causes the other not to think or speak from himself . . . and when anyone thinks and speaks from someone else, the truths in him are disturbed, and yet he is not amended; except in the case of one who is as yet ignorant of truths. Sig.

9224. For truths, whether taken from the Word, or from the doctrine of the Church, cannot possibly become of faith unless there is good for them to be implanted in. The reason is that it is the Intellectual which first receives truths, for it sees them and introduces them to the will; and, when they are in the will, then they are in the man . . . and everything which is of the will is called good, because it is loved. Thus truth becomes good, or faith charity, in the will.

—². Before man has been regenerated, the truths which must be of faith are apperceived by him, but not the good which is of charity; for the truths of faith enter by an external way . . . whereas the good of charity inflows by an internal way . . . and therefore does not come to apperception until the truths which are called of faith begin to be loved for the sake of good use and for the sake of life, which takes place when they become of the will. Sig.

—⁴. That a man can will evil and believe truth, thus that truth accords with evil (is an error).

9226. The first state of those being regenerated, when they are in truths. Sig.

9227. The beginning of the following state, when good is lived from. Sig. . . There are two states with man when being regenerated; the first, when he is being led by means of the truths of faith to the goods of charity; and the second, when he is in the good of charity. Refs. . . (For) the truths which are called of faith enter by an external way . . . and the good of charity and of love by an internal one. Ex. . . The good which inflows from the Lord by an internal way inflows into the will . . . and in the confines of it meets the truths which have entered by the external way; and, by means of conjunction, causes the truths to become good; and, in proportion as this is done, the order is inverted, that is, in the same proportion the man is not led by means of truths, but by means of good, and consequently by the Lord. (This shows) how man, when being regenerated, is elevated into Heaven. Ex. 9229, Sig.

9230². All that of the Church is called the truth of faith (as distinguished from the good of faith) which is as yet without an end of use or for the sake of life, consequently which is known and kept in the memory, and is thence apprehended in the understanding, and taught from; for the truths of the Church—so long as they advance no further—are only Knowledges and scientifics, and, relatively to the goods, are outside the real man. Ex.

[A.] 9231³. 'Desiring to be fed with the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table'=his longing to learn a few truths from those who being within the Church were in abundance; 'the dogs that licked his sores'=those without the Church who are in good, although not in the genuine good of faith, (and who administer healing in the way they are able).

9243. The faith which is meant by believing... the truths which are from the Word, is not possible with those who are in evils from the love of self or of the world; for (these loves) either reject, or extinguish, or pervert the truths of faith. (Thus) these persons are devoid of the confidence of faith; for he who does not believe the truths which are from God, cannot believe in God; because to believe in God is from the truths which are from God.

9257-9259. (That a state of non-reception of truth from being in falsity must be 'relieved.') Sig. and Ex.

—³. From this it may appear how the case is with truths, both genuine and not genuine, which inwardly contain good; namely, that after the good has been formed, it produces such truths as are in agreement with good; and although they may not be genuine truths, they are nevertheless accepted as if they were genuine, because they savour of good; for from it they derive their essence and life. (Continued under Good.)

9267. 'A word,' in the Hebrew, means that which is something, and which really comes into existence; and therefore it=truth; for everything which really comes into existence from esse has relation to truth; and hence it is that Divine truth is called 'the Word.'

9272. 'Six years thou shalt sow the land'=the first state (of regeneration) when the man of the Church is being instructed in the truths and goods of faith. Ex.

—³. To teach truths not genuine. Sig.

9274. 'And in the seventh thou shalt let it pass, and release it'=the second state (of regeneration) when the man of the Church is in good, and is thus in the tranquillity of peace... For 'to let the land pass,' that is, not to sow it,=not to be led by means of truths, as previously.

—³. After truths have been implanted in good, the man is no longer led by means of truths, but by means of good, which takes place when he wills good and does good from the affection of love, that is, from charity; and this state of regeneration or deliverance from condemnation is signified by the third feast, that of 'ingathering.'

—³. How (this new will) is perfected by the implantation of truth. — This new will . . . is the habitation by means of which the Lord enters with the man, and excites him to will good, and, from willing, to do good; and this influx operates with the man in the proportion that he desists from evils; and hence he has the faculty of knowing, apperceiving, reflecting on, and understanding moral and civil truths and goods according to the delight of use. Afterwards, the Lord inflows through this good into the truths of doctrine of the Church which are in the man, and calls forth from his memory such as are of service to the use of life, and these He implants in good, and perfects the good; and hence it is that the good with a man is exactly according to the use of life. Ex. . . Hence it is evident how truths are implanted in good, and form it; and also that when a man is in good, he is in Heaven with the Lord. Ex. . . Such are the things . . . represented by this feast . . . of ingathering and . . . of tabernacles.

—⁴. In the truth of faith there are theoretical things and practical ones; and he who regards theoretical things for the sake of practical ones, and sees the former in the latter, and the good use of life from both thus conjoined, and is affected with both the former and the latter for the sake of this end, he is in faith from the Lord. The reason is, that the use of life, being the end, is good with him, and all things are formed according to the use of life; and the truths of faith are what the formation is effected by. . . In the other life, all are reduced to the state of their own good, or evil, thus to the use of their life . . . and the truths or falsities which had made a one with this use, remain, and more besides are associated which conjoin themselves with the former ones, and complete the use, and cause the use to appear in its own real form. Hence it is that Spirits and Angels are forms of their use . . . their truths of faith are Known from their faces . . . and the good which is the use, from the fire of love in them . . . and also from the sphere which flows out from them. Hence it may appear, again, what is the presence of the Lord in the truths of faith.

9298. That the worship of the Lord from the truths of the Church must not be commingled with falsities from evil. Sig. and Ex.

—². There are, indeed, truths with the evil, and also falsities with the good; but the truths with the evil are not commingled with the falsities from evil in them so long as they are merely in the memory, and serve them as means for evil; for so long they are devoid of life. But if the truths are falsified in order to favour evil, which is done by a wrong interpretation, they then are commingled, whence is profanation of truth.

9300. That all truths of good and goods of truth are holy, because from the Lord alone. Sig. and Ex.

— . For goods and truths have their life from the Lord; and they have life from Him when they are ascribed to Him. Sig.

—². It is said truths of good and goods of truth, because with the man who is being regenerated, and still more so with him when he has been regenerated, truths are of good, and goods are of truth; for truths constitute the life of the understanding, and good that of the will. (Continued under GOOD.)

—⁴. Even they believe that man is enlightened in truths and inflamed with good when he is reading the Word; and that when he is enlightened he perceives what is true, and what is not true . . . from which it is evident that they who are enlightened see and perceive within themselves whether a thing is true or not . . . and if that in which they are enlightened is the genuine truth of faith, and if that with which they are inflamed is the genuine good of charity, then it is the Intellectual of the internal man which is enlightened, and the Voluntary of the internal man which is inflamed. The case is different if it is not the genuine truth of faith, nor the genuine good of charity: they who are in these (non-genuine truths and goods), and also those who are in falsities and evils, can indeed confirm the truths of the Church, but cannot see and perceive from within whether they are truths; and hence it is that most remain in the doctrinals of the Church in which they were born . . . From which it is evident that the Intellectual is enlightened with those who are in the affection of truth from good; but not with those who are in the affection of truth from evil: with (the former) the Intellectual of the internal man is enlightened, and the Voluntary of the internal man is inflamed; but not with (the latter), because these are natural men. (From experience, —⁶.)

—⁶. (Thus) the truths of faith constitute the life of the understanding; and the good of charity the life of the will, so that the understanding must be present in the things which are of faith, and the will in those which are of charity. . .

—⁷. Hence (those with whom the internal man has not been opened) cannot apprehend what Christian good, or charity, is; inasmuch that they actually think that the life of Heaven consists in the mere truths which they call of faith . . .

9301. That the good of innocence of the subsequent state must not be conjoined with the truth of innocence of the former state. Sig. and Ex.

—^e. The truths which belong to the innocence (of the former, or ignorant, state) are for the most part founded upon the fallacies of the external senses.

9325¹⁰. This miracle (of the healing of the waters at Jericho) = that amendment takes place when the Natural, from such a desire (of truth for good) receives truths from the Word; for . . . the Jordan = that with the man of the Church which first receives truths, thus the Natural . . . and which is regenerated last.

[A.] 9327². All power in the Spiritual World is from the truths which are from good, thus from the truths which proceed from the Lord, as is very evident from the fact that the Lord disposes all things in Heaven, and all things in Hell, and also all things in the world, by means of the truths which are from Himself. (Continued under DIVINE TRUTH.)

— But those who think solely from what is material . . . can have no other idea about truths than as being of no power because they are of thought only . . . although they know that thought rules the whole body . . .

9340. Extension from scientific truths to the interior truths of faith. Sig. and Ex.

—³. The truths which are in the external man are called scientific truths; and the truths which are in the internal man are called interior truths of faith. Scientific truths are in the memory, and when they are drawn forth from it they come to apperception; but the interior truths of faith are the truths of the very life, inscribed on the internal man, and of which but little appears in the memory. . . Scientific truths, and the interior truths of faith, are signified by 'the waters below, and those above, the expanse.'

9341⁴. That the truths of faith are then seen by, and are revealed to, those who are in love to the Lord. Sig.

9348⁴. The successive profanation of truth through the allurements of falsities from evils. Sig.

9372³. 'A reed' = truth in the ultimate, such as is the Word in the letter.

—⁸. 'Locusts' = ultimate or most general truths.

9376. The chief truths of the Church or of doctrine accordant with good. Sig. and Ex.

9380^e. The reason there is no conjunction of the Lord with the truths of such persons, is that the Lord enters through the life of a man into his truths of faith, thus through the soul which is in the truths.

9385. 'All the words which Jehovah hath spoken we will do' = (the truths from the Word which are of life received in the heart).

9391¹³. To hatch truths and primary truths from our Own light. Sig.

— So with the truth which becomes of worship: worship from truth which sticks fast exclusively in the memory, and thence appears in the understanding, is not worship; but worship from truth which goes forth from the will, thus from affection and love, is worship.

9394². Those in the loves of self and of the world, see only such things as favour these loves, and these things they call truths; and by means of fallacies and appearances they make them appear like truths. Ex.

9396³. Heavenly drink is all the truth of faith from that good.

9417. 'The law and the precept' = truth in general and in particular.

—¹⁰. Hence there is a likeness of truth in the external form, but falsity in the internal. There is falsity in the internal form when truths are not rightly thought about; for one and the same Truth is thought about differently by one person from what it is by another, and is thought about falsely by all those who are in evil; for one Truth consists of infinite other Truths; but with those who are in evil, of infinite falsities; and therefore with the latter there is no life in that Truth. Sig.

9431. 'Six days' = when in a state of truth. . . For the first state (of a man being regenerated) is called a state of truth, and the second a state of good. Ex. . . While the man is in the state of truth, he is outside of Heaven; but when he is in good, he is in Heaven, thus has been introduced to the Lord. Moreover when the man is in ... the state of truth, he is in labour and combat, for then he undergoes temptations; but when he is in the state of good, he is in the quiet and tranquillity of peace ... This state is represented by 'the Sabbath.' 9432. 9509².

9466. 'Hyacinthine blue'=the celestial love of truth. Ex.

9468. 'Scarlet,' and 'double-dyed'=celestial truth, which is the same as the good of mutual love. Ex. and ill.

9469. 'Linen'=truth; and 'fine linen,' truth from the Divine; both=truth in the natural man.

9470². 'Wool'=truth from a celestial origin, which in itself is good. Ill.

9474. 'Spices for the oil of anointing'=the internal truths which are of the inaugurating good. Ex.

9476. 'Onyx stones, and stones of fillings'=spiritual truths and goods in general. Ex.

9488. 'A cubit and a half the breadth thereof'=what is full as to truth.

9509⁴. It is believed that the Lord can be approached by means of the truths of faith; but He cannot be approached by means of them when they are separated from the good of love; nor indeed can Heaven; but as soon as the separated truths want to enter, Heaven is closed, and therefore the way to the Lord. And, as truth cannot enter by itself, and unless good is in it, and it has thereby been made the truth of good, so neither can the Intellectual ...

9530. 'A cubit the breadth thereof'=somewhat as to conjunction with truth.

—⁴. The Divine of the Lord is in all things of good, and thence in all things of truth with a man, when he wills from love and believes from the derivative faith, that all good and all truth ... are from the Lord, and not at all from himself; and also that he possesses so much of the truth of faith as is in proportion to the good which he receives from the Lord; for good is the all in all things of truth; and truth without good is truth without life.

9594². The three degrees of life with man are opened successively; the first by a life according to what is fair and just; the second by a life according to the truths of faith from the Word, and according to the derivative goods of charity towards the neighbour; and the third according to the good of mutual love, and the good of love to the Lord.

9595. 'Of ten curtains'=all the truths from which (the Second Heaven is formed). Ex. 9616.

9596. The spiritual and celestial things from which are these truths. Sig. and Ex. ... For first comes truth from a celestial origin ('fine linen'); next comes the love or affection of truth ('hyacinthine blue'); then the derivative love or affection of good ('crimson'); and finally spiritual good ('scarlet double-dyed').

—³. For the Intellectual is the subject, or continent; and truth is of it; and these two make a one.

9600. The Holy of truth from good. Sig. and Ex.

9601. The marriage of truth with good. Sig. and Ex.

9602. So in each of the truths. Sig. and Ex. 9603.

9605. Conjunction through the celestial love of truth. Sig. and Ex. 9606-9613.

9615. The external of Heaven, which is from the truths which are from external celestial good. Sig. and Ex. 9616-9629.

9631. (The circumference from) external truths from good. Sig. and Ex. 9632.

9637. The derivative truth (from good) which conjoins as much as is sufficient. Sig. and Ex.

9638. The derivative power through truth from good. Sig. and Ex.

9642. (The good which supports Heaven) even in its interiors and inmosts, where truth is in light. Sig. and Ex. 9663.

9643. Plenary support by means of truth. Sig. and Ex. 9650. 9659. 9661.

—². The feet and the bones, similarly=truth supporting; and the fleshy part of the body=good which supports itself by means of truth.

9645. The conjunction of (this truth) with good. Sig. and Ex.

9648. Towards the exteriors of this Heaven, where truths are in obscurity. Sig. and Ex. 9664.

9670⁶. The purification of truth from falsities in the external man. Sig.

9717². Goods are presented in the other life as round, and the goods of the external man, which are called just, as square; but truths and right things are presented as linear and triangular.

9741⁴. Those in the good of faith are in the affection of truth for the sake of truth ; for . . . truth dominates in the Spiritual Kingdom.

[A.]9742. That (the Ultimate Heaven) is in the light of truth. Sig. and Ex. . . For in order that a new Voluntary may be formed in their Intellectual, it is necessary that they be in the light of truth.

9743. 'The hangings for the court' = the truths of this Heaven. 9751, Ex.

9744². The faculty which is allotted to the reception of truth is called the understanding . . . and therefore in proportion as the understanding has been formed from genuine truths, in the same proportion it is excellent. Sig.

9746. Where truth is in light. Sig. and Ex.

9748. The truths from good which fully support. Sig. and Ex. 9753.

9749. The modes of conjunction by means of truth. Sig. and Ex. 9754. 9769.

9755. The state of (the Ultimate Heaven) as to scientific truths. Sig. and Ex.

—². The truth of the natural man is signified by 'the water of the sea'; and it is scientific truth ; for truth in the natural man is truth in knowledge ; whereas truth in the spiritual man is truth of faith ; for truth in knowledge becomes truth in faith, when it is elevated from the natural man into the spiritual man ; and hence it is that the truths with a man in childhood are truths in knowledge, whereas, in adult age, if he suffers himself to be regenerated, they become truths in faith ; for the internal man is opened successively at this age. III.

—^e. That there shall be no reasoning from scientific about the truths of faith, but that truths shall be impressed on hearts, is signified by 'the sea shall be no more.'

9756. Truths—vera—sufficient for uses. Sig. and Ex. 9759. 9772.

9758. The state of truth of this Heaven where goods are. Sig. and Ex.

9760. Truths—vera—in light as many as are sufficient. Sig. and Ex.

9762. Like things where truths are in obscurity. Sig. and Ex.

9818. They who are in the Celestial Kingdom know truths, not from knowledge and the derivative faith, but from internal perception ; for they are in the good of love from the Lord, and all truths have been implanted in this good ; the good itself has been implanted in their voluntary part, and the derivative truth in their intellectual part . . . and the good which has been implanted in the will is presented in its quality and in its form in the understanding, in a light which as it were flames ; and the form of good, and the quality of it, is to them truth, which is not seen, but is perceived from good. Hence it is that with them there is never any discussion about truths, inso-much that when discourse occurs about truths, they say yea, or nay, and nothing more ; for whatever is more is not from good (Matt. v. 37). 9942¹¹.

—⁴. The truths of faith from love are those which love dictates, and thus which derive their esse from love. These truths are alive . . . Hence the truths of faith from love are those which treat of love to the Lord and of charity towards the neighbour ; for these are the truths which love dictates. The whole Word is the doctrine of such Truths . . . and this is meant by the law and the prophets hanging on these two . . . But the truths of faith from love are not bare Knowledges of such things in the memory and thence in the understanding ; but they are affections of life with the man. Ex.

— There are also truths of faith which do not treat of love, but which only confirm the former more nearly or remotely. These truths of faith are called secondary truths ; for the truths of faith are like families and their generations in succession from one father. The father of these truths is the good of love from the Lord and thence to Him, thus is the Lord Himself.

9843, 9844. The whole quality of truths which are from good, and the whole quality of truths through which is good. Sig. and Ex.

9846. The heavenly form of all Truths in their order in the memory from the good of love. Sig. and Ex.

—². For the good of love operates and disposes truths in order with a man when he is being regenerated ; and it afterwards keeps them in their order when he has been regenerated. For truths are created to the whole likeness of good, and to all its beck . . . as may be evident from the fact that a man acknowledges as truths the things which he loves, and thus apprehends and acknowledges truths according to his love ; and hence it is that truths constitute the form of good. From this it may be known how the Lord leads man by the truths of faith . . . namely, by the good of love with him.

9868. The celestial love of truth. Sig. and Ex. 9897.

9872. The spiritual love of truth, in which the higher things cease. Sig. and Ex.

9926. The influx of truth with those in the Heavens and on earth. Sig. and Ex.

9933. Influx into the truth of celestial love. Sig. and Ex.

9937⁸. That it is the truth of faith by means of which man is regenerated. Sig.

9942. The inmost things of the Spiritual Kingdom which proceed from the truths of celestial love. Sig. and Ex.

9955. A representative of the Lord as to the truth of faith. Sig. and Ex.

9959^a. The External itself is truth . . . because internal things cease in external ones, and rest upon them as their supports, and supports are truths . . . and therefore the foundations of a house = truths of faith from good. Moreover truths are what protect goods from evils and falsities, and resist them; and all the power which good has is through truths; and hence also it is that in the Ultimate Heaven are they who are in the truths of faith from good; and therefore also the ultimate or outermost thing with man, which is his external skin, corresponds to those in the Heavens who are in the truths of faith.

9993^a. To worship Satan from the truths of faith. Sig.

10028. That Divine truth is wholly in the Sensuous. Sig. and Ex. . . When man is being purified, such truths are learned first of all as can be apprehended by the sensuous man; such truths are such as are in the sense of the letter: afterwards more interior truths are learned, such as are those which are collected from the Word by those who are in enlightenment, for these collect its interior sense from various places in the Word where the sense of the letter is explained; and from these [interior truths], when known, truths still more interior are afterwards drawn forth by those who are enlightened, which together with the former serve the Church for doctrine; the latter serve for doctrine with those who are of the internal Church, and the former with those of the external Church: and both the latter and the former, if they have lived according to the truths, are elevated into Heaven among the Angels, and are there imbued with angelic wisdom, which is from truths still more interior, and finally from the inmost truths in the Third Heaven; and these truths, together with the former in their order, cease in the ultimate truths, which are of the external Sensuous, and are there simultaneously; from which it is evident that all the interior truths are simultaneously in the truths of the sense of the letter of the Word; for these truths are the ultimate ones. . . From this it is evident what is meant by Divine truth being wholly in the Sensuous, which is signified by all the blood being poured out at the foundation of the altar.

10029^a. The truth in the Natural is scientific . . . and is perceptible to man while in the world, for when he thinks of it, it appears; whereas the truth in the internal man is not scientific and apparent, but is truth implanted in his intellectual part.

10032. 'The kidneys' = truths exploring, purifying, and chastising. H. 96^a.

—^e. The ureters and bladder, which go forth from the kidneys, = more exterior truth and the exploration and castigation effected by it.

10057^a. (The circle of regeneration through which the truths of faith with man pass.)

10109. The truths with those who are in evil are truths falsified, which are dead.

10124. In both the Celestial and Spiritual Kingdoms good is implanted by means of truth; but with those in the Spiritual Kingdom, good is implanted in the intellectual part by means of truth, whereas with those in the Celestial Kingdom, good is implanted in the voluntary part by means of truth. . . With those in the Spiritual Kingdom, truth is implanted in the external or natural man, and there first becomes knowledge, and in proportion as the man is affected with it, and lives according to it, it is called forth into the Intellectual, and becomes faith and at the same time charity towards the neighbour . . . whereas with those in the Celestial Kingdom, truth does not become knowledge, nor faith, nor conscience; but it becomes a reception in the good of love, and, in proportion as the man lives according to it, it becomes a perception, which grows and is perfected according to the love; and this takes place daily unawares to them, unawares, because it does not abide in the memory as knowledge, nor stay as an intellectual thing in the thought, but passes at once into the Voluntary and becomes of the life; and therefore these persons do not see truth, but perceive it, and they perceive it in both quantity and quality according to the good of love from the Lord to the Lord in which they are . . . and, as they perceive truth from good, they never confirm it by reasons, but when truths are brought up they only say, Yea, yea; or Nay, nay; for these are they who are meant by the Lord in Matt. v. 37; for to reason about truths as to whether it is so, is not from good, because in that case truth is not perceived, but is only believed from authority and the consequent confirmation by one's self; and that which is believed from authority, is something in us which belongs to others, and is not our own; and that which is believed merely by confirmation consequent thereupon, does indeed appear after confirmation as truth, although it may be falsity . . . The cause of this difference (between those in the Celestial and those in the Spiritual Kingdom) is that the former at once turn the truths of the Church into goods by means of life; whereas the latter remain in truths, and set faith before life. (The former) are described in Mark iv. 26-29.

10151^a. 'The spirit of Truth' = the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord.

10177^a. 'Frankincense,' in special, = the truth of faith.

10179. What is equally from good and from truth. Sig. and Ex.

10187^a. But as to truth, this can be approached by the evil, because the evil pervert truths by wrong interpretations, and thus apply them to favour their cupidities; but in proportion as there is good in the truths, in the same proportion they cannot be approached. Hence it is evident what kind of protection they have in the other life who are only in truths which are called of faith, and not at the same time in good: by good is meant charity towards the neighbour and love to the Lord; for all goods are thence derived.

10189. Conjunction with truths on the one side, and preservation by them. Sig. and Ex.

—². At the right in Heaven are those who are in the light of truth, thus those who are in the south; and at the left are those who are in the shade of truth, thus those who are in the north; before the face are those who are in the clear perception of good, thus who are in the east; and behind the back are those who are in the obscure perception of good, thus who are in the west: those in good constitute the Celestial Kingdom; and those in truth the Spiritual Kingdom. Ex.

—⁴. For Heaven, in which is the internal man which has been opened, does not inflow immediately into truths, but mediately through the good of love... and therefore with those in whom the internal man has not been opened by means of truths from the good of love and of charity, Hell inflows with falsities from evil, however much the truths of faith, even interior ones, may reside in the external man, that is, in the memory. From this it may be evident what is meant by the interior truths which are grateful, and which are signified by 'the spices.'

10201. When truth also comes into its light. Sig. and Ex.

—². It is said in the intelligence and wisdom of truth derivatively (from a clear state of love), because the light of truth with man is according to the state of his love; for in proportion as love is kindled, in the same proportion truth shines; for the good of love is the vital fire itself, and the truth of faith is the intellectual light itself, which is intelligence and wisdom; the two advance with equal step.

—³. For the Lord enters by means of good, thus by means of the love and charity which are with a man, and leads into the truths which correspond to the good; but when the loves are... turned to self and the world, they lead him from truths into falsities. Ex.

10202. Elevation also in an obscure state of love when truth likewise is in its shade. Sig. and Ex.

10217³. The end is when truth is completely profaned.

10227³. Such cannot look into the truths themselves, but stand without, and confirm whatever they receive, whether it is truth or falsity. Ex.

10229. For all purification from evils is effected by means of truths. Ex. 10237.

10264². The truths of the whole Human with their perceptions and affections, are (here) signified; namely, ultimate or sensuous truth, with its perception, by 'myrrh'; the interior truth of the natural man, with its perception and affection, by 'aromatic cinnamon'; truth still more interior, which is of the internal man, with its perception and affection, by 'aromatic calamus'; and inmost truth, with its perception and affection, by 'cassia.' Ex.

10292². The reason four spices each were taken for the anointing oil and the incense, was that they = truths in their order from external to internal. (The four for the incense were 'stacte,' which = sensuous truth; 'onycha,' which = the affection of interior natural truth; 'galbanum,' which = the affection of still more interior truth; and 'pure frankincense,' which = inmost truth, which is spiritual good. 10292-10296.)

10296. The reason the inmost truth signified by 'frankincense' is spiritual good, is that the good with those in the Spiritual Kingdom is nothing but truth. Ex.

10300. 'Salted' = the longing of truth for good. (Ex. under SALT.)

10303. The disposition of truths into their series. Sig. and Ex.

—². When 'to grind' is predicated of the goods which are signified by 'wheat' and 'barley,' then by 'to grind' is signified the disposition and production of good into truths, and thus its application to uses; for good never puts itself forth into uses except by means of truths: it is disposed into them, and is thus qualified; for unless good has been disposed into truths it has not any quality; and, when it is disposed into truths it is disposed into series in application to Things according to uses, into which Things good enters as the affection of love, whence is what is grateful, pleasant, and delightful.

—³. Truths-vera are said to be disposed into series when they have been disposed according to the form of Heaven (that is, of the Grand Man). Ex.

10307. That worship from the holy truths of the Church must not be applied to man's loves. Sig. and Ex. . . For all the truths of the Church regard . . . love to God and love towards the neighbour . . . and it is the contrary to apply Divine truth, or the truths of the Church, to man's loves; for thus man turns himself from the Lord to himself, and thus from Heaven to Hell . . . And when truths Divine are applied to man's loves they are no longer truths, because evil enters them by applications, and perverts them. Ex.

10335³. It is said (that in the Ultimate Heaven are those who are) in the truth of faith from good, because the truth of faith is not the truth of faith with anyone unless it is from good; for truth is born from good; and therefore unless there is good in the truth there is no soul in it, thus no life. They who are in the truths of faith from good are in the ultimates of Heaven; but not those who are in the truths of faith without good.

—^e. The truth of faith ministers to the good of love, as what is last does to what is first. Sig.

10387. All regeneration is effected by the Lord by means of the truths of faith, and by a life according to them. (Sig. by baptism.)

10422². Hence it is that the quality of Spirits, as to truth, is known from the way in which they go; for all truth leads to its own love, inasmuch as that is called truth which confirms what is loved. III.

10454. 'Joshua' = the truth of the Word surveying and apperceiving; for he was the minister of Moses, by whom was represented the Word; and therefore 'a minister' represents truth, for all truth is of the Word; here, truth surveying, exploring, and apperceiving.

10455. An assault on the truth and good which are of Heaven and the Church by the falsities and evils which are from Hell. Sig. and Ex.

10456. Falsity acting against truth, and truth against falsity . . . and the suspense of combat between falsity and truth, and non-decision. Sig. and Ex.

10465. That falsity from infernal delight was commingled with truths from Heaven. Sig. and Ex.

10551³. For they perceive whether truth is [truth] from no other source than from others by confirmations, which is to see truth from without, and not from within . . . Such can see falsity as truth, and truth as falsity . . .

10582. With those who are in externals without what is internal, all the truth which is of faith is in obscurity . . . and what they believe without light from Heaven appears as truth, but with it is falsity; for they have a material and earthly idea about truth . . .

10604⁴. 'The tribes of the earth' = all the truths of the Church.

10619. 'Great in goodness and Truth' (Ex. xxxiv. 6) = that He is good itself and truth itself.

10645². The Lord is not in the understanding of truth apart from the willing of it; but is in the understanding of truth and the willing of it; for truth does not enter into man and become his until he wills it, and from willing does it. Ex.

—³. The Lord does not dwell with an empty man, that is, with a man who does not know His truths and do them. The Lord is present with man in those truths which are from good, that is, which the man wills and does; for the truths which are from good make the Church and Heaven with him; in a word, they cause the Lord Himself to be with him. Ex.

10648. The falsity (of those who are in the good of life) . . . appears before the Angels as a species of truth. Ex.

—². The falsification of truth is effected in three ways. (Fully quoted under FALSIFY.)

10651. The conjunction of the affections of evil with truths. Sig. and Ex.

10652². Profanation takes place when evil is applied to truth, and truth to evil, which is done by a wrong interpretation of truth and its application to evil, and thus by the insertion of the one into the other, by which truth no longer remains truth, but is mortified and profaned.

10675. The multiplication and extension of truth from good. Sig. and Ex. . . For in proportion as evils and falsities of evil are removed, in the same proportion truths which are from good are multiplied, since nothing else stands in the way to prevent truths from flowing in from the Lord and multiplying themselves with man but evils and the derivative falsities; and therefore in proportion as these are removed, in the same proportion truths succeed in their place.

[A. 10675]². The Intellectual of man is what receives truths, and it is formed by means of truths; for whatever is in his Intellectual has relation to truth; and hence it is evident that in proportion as falsities from evil are removed, in the same proportion truths from good are multiplied; (because the Intellectual must consist of something.) Rep.

—³. Nothing (however) can be properly called intellectual except what is from truths from good . . . and therefore the Intellectual is never opened except when the man perceives and loves truths; and the perception and love of truth is from good; and hence it is that it is truths from good from which comes the Intellectual. Ex.

—⁴. They who love to do truth for the sake of truth, love the Lord, because truth is from the Lord, and the Lord causes it to become good by the willing and doing of it, thus to become of life with the man; for truth does not become of life until it enters the will: that it is in the will may be known and perceived from the fact that he does it, and still more from the fact that he loves to do it; for in proportion as a man wills truth, in the same proportion he loves it. To love truth for the sake of truth, and for the sake of living according to it, is described by the Lord in the words, 'He that receiveth you receiveth Me, and he that receiveth Me receiveth Him that sent Me. He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward; and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man shall receive a righteous man's reward: and whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward' (Matt. x. 40-42).

10728. Instruction concerning the primary truth of the Church, to which all relate. Sig. and Ex. . . For the Sabbath was the primary representative of all, thus the primary truth to which all relate.

10729. 'Six days shall work be done' = the first state of the regeneration of man by the Lord . . . which is when man is in truths, and is led to good by means of truths. . . It also = the state of the glorification of the Lord's Human while He was in the world, and fought from Divine truth against the Hells . . . For man has two states while being regenerated . . . a prior one when he is in truths and is led to good by means of truths; and a posterior one when he is in good, and sees and loves truths from good. In the prior state, man is indeed led by the Lord, but by means of his proprium; for to act from truths is to act from the things which are with the man; whereas to act from good is to act from the Lord; from which it is evident that in proportion as a man suffers himself to be led to truths by means of good, in the same proportion he is led by the Lord and to the Lord. For there is action and reaction in all things which are conjoined together; the agent is good, and the reagent is truth; but truth never reacts from itself, but from good; and hence in proportion as truth receives good, in the same proportion it reacts; and in proportion as it reacts, in the same proportion it is conjoined with it. From this it follows, also, that before a man is conjoined with the Lord, He impels him to Himself by means of truths; and in proportion as the man suffers himself to be brought to Him, in the same proportion he is conjoined; for Divine truths are such that they can be applied and adjusted to good, because truths come into existence from good; and from this the man now has perception, which in itself is reagency. To suffer one's self to be brought to good by means of truths, is to live according to them.

10786². Few in our Earth have interior perception, because in their youth they learn truths and do not do them . . . and they who do not admit truths further than into the memory, and from it a little into the understanding, but not into the life . . . not being able to be in any enlightenment or interior sight from the Lord, say that truths must be believed . . . and they also reason about them as to whether they are truths or not, and they even do not want them to be perceived with any interior sight or understanding. They speak in this way because with them truths are devoid of light from Heaven, and to those who are devoid of light from Heaven falsities can appear as truths, and truths as falsities.

10787. They who are being regenerated by the Lord, and who introduce truths at once into the life, come into interior perception about them; whereas they who receive truths first into the memory, and then into the understanding, and finally into the will, are those who are in faith; for they act from faith, which is then called conscience.

10808. From this they apperceived that I was in the Truth.

H. 3. These are deprived by degrees of the faculty of thinking truth about any subject whatever.

15. To love the Lord (in Heaven) is . . . to love the good which is from Him; and to love good is to will and do good from love: and to love the neighbour is . . . to love the truth which is from the Word; and to love truth is to will and do truth . . .

26. (The celestial Angels) excel all others in wisdom and glory, because they have received and do receive Divine truths at once into the life; for, as soon as they hear them they also will and do them, and do not lay them up in the memory, and then think whether they are so. Such know at once, by influx from the Lord, whether the truth they hear is truth; for the Lord inflows immediately into the will of man, and mediately through His will into his thought; or, what is the same, He inflows immediately into good, and mediately through good into truth; for that is called good which is of the will and the derivative work; and that truth which is of the memory and the derivative thought. Moreover all truth is turned into good, and is implanted in love, as soon as it enters the will; but so long as truth is in the memory and derivatively in the thought, it does not become good, and is not alive, and is not appropriated to the man. Ex.

132. As Divine truth is light in the Heavens, all truths, wherever they are . . . shine; but truths without the Heavens . . . shine coldly, like snow . . . because they do not derive their essence from good, as do truths which are within the Heavens.

153. When evil Spirits are turned to the quarters of Heaven, they have the intelligence and perception of truth, but no affection of good; and therefore as soon as they turn back to their own quarters . . . they say that the truths they had heard and perceived are not truths, but falsities; and they also want falsities to be truths. . . (This turning of the Intellectual with the evil) has been provided by the Lord to the end that everyone may be able to see and acknowledge truths; but no one receives them unless he is in good, because good is what receives truths, and never evil . . . But if the man is in evil as to life, he immediately turns himself back, and confirms with himself the falsities of his evil against the truths which he had understood and seen. Ex. 464^o.

214. (In the Celestial Kingdom) the truths which are called of judgment are inscribed on their hearts; everyone knows, perceives, and sees them; and therefore matters of judgment never come into dispute, but matters of righteousness, which are of life.

225. All the preachers are from the Spiritual Kingdom . . . because in that Kingdom they are in truths from good, and all preaching is from truths; (whereas) in the Celestial Kingdom they are in the good of love, and from this they see and perceive truths, but they do not speak about them. Although (these) Angels perceive and see truths, still there are preachings there, because by them they are enlightened in the truths they had known, and are perfected by many which they had not previously known. As soon as they hear them, they also acknowledge them, and thus perceive them. The truths which they perceive they also love, and by living according to them make them of their life. They say that to live according to truths is to love the Lord.

231^o. Those in the arms are in the greatest power, because they are in truths more than all others, and good from the universal Heaven inflows into their truths.

270^o. But the Angels of the First Heaven have not truths Divine so much inscribed on their interiors . . . and therefore they reason about them.

—^d. And they who reason about truths, and especially they who dispute about them, since they do not see truths from the light of truth, but learn them either from others, or from the sense of the letter . . . say that they must be believed . . . and they do not want the interior sight to enter into them. The Angels said that such cannot arrive at the first threshold of the palace of wisdom . . . But it is otherwise with those who are in truths themselves; for nothing hinders them from being carried on and advancing without limit; for truths which are seen lead wherever they go, and this into wide fields, because every truth is of infinite extension, and is in conjunction with many others.

347. They who are affected and delighted with truth itself, are affected and delighted with the light of Heaven. Ex.

351. It is believed that they who know many things . . . see truths more interiorly and acutely than others . . . But true intelligence and wisdom consists in seeing and perceiving what is true and good . . . from an interior sight and perception. Ex.

—^e. The simple of this kind . . . perceive truths when they hear them, but do not see them in themselves; whereas the wise of this kind . . . both see truths in themselves and perceive them.

—². But those are not of this kind who in childhood have supposed those things to be truths which they have heard from their teachers, if in a riper age, when they think from their own understanding, they do not remain in them, but long for truth, and therefore seek it, and, when they find it, are interiorly affected. These, because they are affected with truth for the sake of truth, see truth before they confirm it. Examp.

—^c. The good Spirits at once saw and perceived that it was so, and this solely from the light of truth.

356, App.⁶. The truths which have gained spiritual life are comprehended by means of natural ideas. Ref.

—¹⁰. The same scientifics are false with the evil, because they are applied to evils, and true with the good, because they are applied to good. Ref.

371. The sole receptacle of good is truth; and therefore nothing can be received from the Lord and Heaven by anyone who is not in truths; and therefore in proportion as the truths with man have been conjoined with good, in the same proportion is man conjoined with the Lord and with Heaven.

376. Conjugal love is genuine in proportion as the truths which are conjoined with good are the more genuine.

[H.1424. For man is reformed by means of truths, and truths are of the understanding. Ex. . . Hence it is that man can think truths from the understanding, and also speak and do them, from it; but still he cannot think them from the will, until he is such that he wills and does them from himself, that is, from the heart.

425. In proportion, therefore . . . as a man wills truths and thence does them, in the same proportion he has Heaven in him . . . But in proportion as truths . . . have not been conjoined with goods . . . in the same proportion the man is in a middle state.

—². At this day almost every man is in such a state that he may know truths, and from knowledge and also from understanding think them, and may either do much of them, or little, or nothing, or may act contrary to them from the love of evil and the derivative faith in what is false; and therefore in order that he may have either Heaven or Hell, he is first brought into the World of Spirits, and there is effected there the conjunction of good and truth with those who are to be elevated into Heaven, and the conjunction of evil and falsity with those who are to be cast into Hell; for no one there is allowed to have a divided mind . . . and therefore in Heaven he who wills good must understand truth; and in Hell he who wills evil must understand falsity; and therefore with the good there falsities are removed, and truths are given which are in agreement with their good; and with the evil there truths are removed, and falsities are given which are in agreement with their evil. 482².

455. For a man can understand truths . . . if he will.

464⁵. Such can never be brought to acknowledge truths, because truths cannot be seen from falsities; whereas falsities can be seen from truths.

468. The genuine Rational consists of truths . . . and truths are of three kinds: civil, moral, and spiritual. Ex. . . The Rational is opened to the first degree by means of civil truths; to the second by means of moral truths; and to the third by means of spiritual truths; (not indeed) by the man's knowing them, but by his living according to them; (that is) loving them from spiritual affection. Ex.

—². In proportion as a man loves these truths from corporeal affection (that is, for the sake of self) in the same proportion he does not become rational, because he does not love them, but himself, whom truths serve as menials do their master; and when truths become services they do not enter the man, or open any degree of his life . . . but merely reside in the memory as scientifics under a material form, and there conjoin themselves with the love of self.

517². Therefore with everyone (there) the affection of truth is conjoined with the affection of use, inasmuch that they act as a one: by this, truth is implanted in use, so that the truths which they learn are truths of use. Thus are angelic Spirits instructed.

527. Some (who had led an evil life) had believed that they should easily receive truths Divine after death, when they heard them from the Angels . . . Some of them with whom this was tried understood the truths, and seemed to receive them, but the moment they turned to the life of their love they rejected them . . . Some rejected them at once, being unwilling to hear them . . .

551. No one in Hell is in evils and truths at the same time. Most of the evil in the world know spiritual truths . . . But such of them as have thought in themselves contrary to these truths . . . are in truths and goods as to the body only . . . and therefore . . . in the other life . . . they are altogether in evils and falsities, and not in any truths and goods . . . They can no longer speak truths . . . for to speak truths from evils is impossible . . . This is called being devastated as to truths and goods. Ex.

589³. There is also an equilibrium between truth and falsity. (See EQUILIBRIUM, here.)

603. What has been said in this work . . . will be obscure to those who are not in the delight of knowing spiritual truths, but clear to those who are in that delight, and most especially to those who are in the affection of truth for the sake of truth, that is, who love truth because it is truth; for whatever is loved enters with light into the idea of the mind, especially so does truth when it is loved, because all truth is in light.

N. 11. On good and truth. Chapter.

20-27. (Refs. to passages on the subject of good and truth.) 106.

112. Faith is the affection of truth from willing truth because it is truth; and to will truth because it is truth, is the Spiritual itself of man; for it is withdrawn from what is natural, which is to will truth not for the sake of truth, but for the sake of self-glory, reputation, or gain. When withdrawn from such things, truth is spiritual, because it is from the Divine. And therefore to will truth because it is truth is to acknowledge and love the Divine. J.36³.

J. 38. And truths which regard faith only, and not life, cannot make man spiritual; and so long as they are outside the life they are only natural; for they are known and thought of merely like other Things.

C. J. 19⁶. Those in the neglect and contempt of truth appear ghastly like corpses.

S. 12². The 'black horse'=the understanding of the Word destroyed as to truth in the third state of the Church. The 'pair of balances'=the estimation of truth so slight as to be scarcely anything.

26². For the Lord teaches everyone through the Word . . . from those truths which he has, and does not immediately pour in new ones; and therefore unless a man is in Divine truths, or if he is in only a few truths and at the same time in falsities, he may from these falsify truths . . . and therefore guards have been set . . . T.208.

40. The truths of the sense of the letter . . . are in part not naked truths, but are appearances of truth . . . but being correspondences, they are receptacles of genuine truth . . . Naked truths themselves . . . are in the spiritual sense; and naked goods are in its celestial sense. Examps.

49. The Lord's power of saving man is [exercised] through the truths with him; for man is reformed and regenerated through truths from the sense of the letter...

52. (Thus) they who read the Word without doctrine, or they who do not procure for themselves doctrine from the Word, are in obscurity about all Truth.

60. They who read the Word from the doctrine of a false religion... and have regard to their own glory... read truth, but do not see it... Sig.

74. The celestial Angels are in the good of love from the Lord, and the Spiritual Angels are in the truths of wisdom from Him; and where there is the good of love, there wisdom resides at the same time; but where there are truths there resides no more of wisdom than in proportion to the good of love. (Hence) goods of love are expressed in the Word of the Celestial Kingdom... but truths of wisdom in that of the Spiritual Kingdom...

93. Every man is instructed by the Angels after death, and those who see truths are received...; for it is given to everyone after death to see truths spiritually. Those see truths who have not confirmed themselves; but those who have confirmed themselves do not want to see truths; and if they see them, they turn their backs, and then either laugh at or falsify them.

Life 15. Hence it is that Truth and love do not make a one with a man unless he is spiritual.

32. That in proportion as anyone shuns evils as sins, in the same proportion he loves truths. Gen.art.

—2. The Angels of all the Heavens are in intelligence and wisdom in the same proportion as that the good with them makes a one with truth; the good which does not make a one with truth, is not good to them; and so also the truth which does not make a one with good is not truth to them; from which it is evident that good conjoined with truth makes love and wisdom with Angel and man; and, as an Angel is an Angel from the love and wisdom with him, and in like manner with a man, it is evident that good conjoined with truth causes an Angel to be an Angel of Heaven, and a man a man of the Church.

33. As good and truth are a one in the Lord, and proceed as a one from Him, it follows that good loves truth and truth loves good, and that they will to be a one.

35. A man who does not shun evils as sins can indeed love truths; but he does not love them because they are truths, but because they promote his reputation...

45. Evil inwardly hates truth. Ex.

87. That in proportion as anyone shuns false witness of all kinds as sins, in the same proportion he loves Truth. Gen.art.

89. In proportion as anyone loves Truth, in the same proportion he wants to know it, and is affected at heart when he finds it; nor does anyone else come into wisdom: and, in proportion as he loves to do it, in the same proportion he feels the pleasantness of the light in which Truth is.

90. Truth is that which is meant by 'the seed' (in the parable of the sower). Ex. (Quoted under SEED.) From which it is evident that the Truth of the Word cannot be rooted in those who do not care for Truth; nor with those who love Truth exteriorly and not interiorly; nor with those who are in the concupiscences of evil; but with those in whom the concupiscences of evil have been dispersed by the Lord: with these... Truth is rooted in their spiritual mind.

F. 1. That faith is an internal acknowledgment of truth. Gen.art.

3. Spiritual truths can be comprehended equally as well as natural truths; and if not so clearly, still, when heard, they fall into perception as to whether they are truths or not; and this most especially with those who are affected with truths. Des.

4. Hence it is that there is an internal acknowledgment of truth in those who are in the spiritual affection of truth.

5. There is a spiritual idea—of which few know anything—which inflows with those who are in the affection of truth, and which interiorly dictates that what is heard or read is truth, or not. Ex.

6. Thus faith and Truth are a one. Ex. In Hebrew they are one word: 'Amuna,' or 'Amen.'

12. If anyone should think in himself, How can I have the internal acknowledgment of truth which is faith?... I would say to him, Shun evils as sins, and approach the Lord, and you will have as much as you desire.

13. That the internal acknowledgment of truth which is faith is not possible with any others than those who are in charity. Gen.art.

when they are instructed by the Angels they are unwilling to acknowledge truths, and consequently do not receive them; for evil of life interiorly hates truths; whereas good of life interiorly loves truths.

[F.] 33. With a regenerated person the Knowledges of truth become truths, and so also do the Knowledges of good; for the Knowledge of good is in the understanding . . . and that is called truth which is in the understanding, and good that which is in the will.

67^e. '(The he-goat) cast down Truth to the ground' (Dan. viii. 12) = that it would falsify the truths of the Word.

70^e. That those who have confirmed themselves in faith separated from charity have not any Truth. Shown.

W. 70. In spiritual light the objects of thought are truths. 71^e.

116^e. In proportion as an Angel believes that love and wisdom are in himself . . . he has no conjunction with the Lord; for he is not in Truth; and, as Truth makes a one with the light of Heaven, in the same proportion he cannot be in Heaven.

203^e. No others are elevated into these degrees (of height) than those who in the world had been in truths, and had applied them to life.

251⁸. The spiritual man loves spiritual truths; he not only loves to know and understand them, but also wills them; but the natural man loves to speak these truths, and also to do them; to do truths is to perform uses.

252^e. Communication through correspondences is not perceived in the understanding except by this: that truths are seen in light . . .

253. The spiritual degree has not been opened, but still is not closed, in those who have led some life of charity, and yet have known little of genuine truth. Ex. . . Therefore if the genuine truths, from which comes wisdom, or light, are not known, love does not avail to open this degree, but only keeps it in the capability of being opened. (Continued under Good.)

—². For in Heaven, and in every Society of it . . . those who are in Divine truths more than others are in the middle, and in the boundaries are those who are in few truths; and those are in few truths who know from religion no more than that there is a God, and that the Lord suffered for them; also that charity and faith are the essentials of the Church, not troubling themselves to know what faith and charity are.

—^e. (Thus) from charity no more can be carried into works than in proportion to the degree in which charity has been conjoined with the truths which are called of faith: by means of these truths charity enters into works, and qualifies them.

254². (This causes) Truth, which is in the light of Heaven, to become nauseous.

258. Every man is born into the faculty of understanding truths even to the inmost degree, in which are the Angels of the Third Heaven. Ex.

267. If the understanding (of one who is in evils and falsities) is elevated higher, and sees truths opposite to the delight of his life or to the principles of his Own intelligence, he then either falsifies them, or passes them by and from contempt neglects them, or else he retains them in the memory that they may subserve his life's love or the conceit of his Own intelligence, as means.

275⁴. A certain Divine truth flowed down from Heaven into Hell, and on the way it was by degrees converted into falsity, thus, at the lowest Hell, into the exact opposite. Ex.

276. (When the natural mind is a Hell, then) the truths of the Church from the Word are relegated from the middle to the sides, and are finally exterminated; and the man . . . perceives evil as good, and sees falsity as truth; and the converse.

404. (The origin and genesis of the affection of truth, and of the perception of truth. Fully quoted under AFFECTION OF GOOD, etc.)

—². No man whose reason is sound ever lacks the perception of truth, so long as he has the affection of understanding truth. Every man is possessed of the faculty of understanding truth, which is called rationality. Ref.

—³. That the third conjunction (of the will and understanding) is through the affection of seeing truth, from which is thought. Ex. . . The affection of truth is one thing; the perception of truth another; and the thought [of it] another. (The reason the distinctness of these three mental operations is obscurely seen. Ex.) They follow one another in order from the love . . . for when the love enters the understanding, which it does when the conjunction (of the will and understanding) is accomplished, it first produces the affection of truth; then the affection of understanding the truth which it knows; and finally the affection of seeing in the thought of the body the truth which it understands. . . . Thought is indeed the first to come forth . . . but the thought which is from the perception of truth which is from the affection of truth is the last to come forth . . . (Shown from the physiology of the heart and lungs. 405.)

406. For all the perception of truth belongs to love in the understanding . . .

—^e. Moreover, all the power of good exists—est—by means of truth; and therefore good acts in truth, and thus by means of it; and good is of love, and truth is of the understanding. (Shown from the physiology of the heart and lungs. 407, et seq.) (See also under Good, at W. 409^e. 410².)

411. Love calls . . . all those things its truths which as means lead to (its) goods; and because these are means they are loved and become of its affection, and thus they become affections in form; and therefore truth is nothing else than the form of the affection which is of the love. The human form is nothing else than the form of all the affections of the love; the beauty [of it] is its intelligence, which it procures for itself by means of the truths which it receives either by the sight or the hearing, external and internal. These are the things which the love disposes into the form of its own affections, which forms exist in great variety, but they all derive a likeness from their general form, which is the human form. All these forms are beautiful and lovable to the love; but all others are unbeautiful and unlovable to it.

420°. In the lungs, the blood purifies and nourishes itself correspondently to the affections of the lower mind . . . (Therefore) men impregnate their blood . . . in accordance . . . with the affections of their love . . . and from this correspondence it follows that a man is purified in respect to his love if he loves wisdom . . . Moreover, all the purification of man is effected by means of the truths which are of wisdom; and all the defilement of man, by means of the falsities which are opposite to the truths of wisdom.

422. The love becomies spiritual and celestial by a life according to the truths of wisdom which the understanding teaches and demonstrates. The love imbibes these truths by means of the understanding, and not of itself; for the love cannot elevate itself unless it knows truths; and it cannot know these except by means of an elevated and enlightened understanding. Then, in proportion as it loves the truths in and by the doing of them, in the same proportion it is elevated. Ex.

425. It is man's love which becomes spiritual and is regenerated, and it cannot (do this) unless, by means of its understanding, it knows what evil is and what good, and thence what truth is and what falsity. When it knows these things, it can choose the one or the other; and, if it chooses good, it can, by means of its understanding, be instructed as to the means through which it can come to good. All the means through which a man can come to good are provided. To know and understand these means is from RATIONALITY; and to will and do them is from FREEDOM.

427°. As (those in the Third Heaven) speak nothing about the truths of wisdom . . . they appear simple.

428. If faith is mentioned (those who are in spiritual love) understand Truth; and when charity is mentioned they understand to do Truth; and when it is said that we must believe, they say that that is an unmeaning-vanam-way of speaking; for who, they ask, does not believe truth? They say this because they see truth in the light of their Heaven; and therefore to believe what they do not see they call either simplicity or folly. These are they who constitute the Pulmonic of Heaven.

429. Inasmuch as (those who are in spiritual natural love) do not know . . . whether faith is Truth, they cannot be among those in the Heavens who are in wisdom and intelligence, but among those who are in knowledge only.

P. 20. Those who are in evil and at the same time in truths may be compared to eagles which fly aloft, and which, while their wings are taken away, fall down. Ex.

36. The wisdom which comes to perception is the perception of truth from the affection of it, especially the perception of spiritual truth. For there are civil truth, moral truth, and spiritual truth; and those who are in the perception of spiritual truth from the affection of it, are also in the perception of moral and civil truth; for the affection of spiritual truth is the soul of these.

83°. (or 84°.) Yet man becomes spiritual no further than in the proportion in which he is in truths; for every man is regenerated by means of truths and a life according to them; for by means of truths he knows life, and by means of life he does them. Thus does he conjoin good and truth, which is the spiritual marriage in which is Heaven.

143. The reason no one is reformed in a state of ignorance, is that all reformation is effected by means of truths and a life according to them; and therefore they who do not know truths cannot be reformed. But if they desire them from the affection of them, they are reformed in the Spiritual World after death.

168. Interior enlightenment (or illustration) from the Lord consists in this: that at the first hearing the man perceives whether what is said is truth or not truth.

—2. A rational man, by interior enlightenment from the Lord, perceives at once, when he hears them, many things as to whether they are truths, or not truths. For example: That love is the life of faith . . . That whatever a man loves, he wills; and that he does that which he wills; and hence that to love is to do. Also: That whatever a man believes from love, he wills and does; and hence that to have faith is to do. And also: That a wicked person cannot love God; and therefore cannot have faith in Him. A rational man, from interior enlightenment, also perceives as soon as he hears them the following: That there is one God: That He is omnipresent: That all that is good is from Him: and also, That all things have relation to good and truth; and that all good is from Good itself; and all truth from truth itself. These, and the like other things, a man perceives interiorly in himself, when he hears them. The reason he perceives them is that he has rationality; and this is in the light of Heaven, which enlightens.

172°. All who are taught by the Lord in the Word are taught a few truths in the world, but in many when they become Angels. Ex.

227°. That (evil and good cannot be kept apart) if a man first acknowledges the truths of faith, and lives according to them, and afterwards recedes from and denies them. Ex.

231°. That the second kind of profanation is [committed] by those who understand and acknowledge Divine truths, and yet live contrary to them. Ex. But those profane more slightly who only understand; and those more grievously who also acknowledge them. . . . But it is one thing to acknowledge appearances of truth, and another to acknowledge genuine truths: those who acknowledge genuine truths, and still do not live according to them, appear in the Spiritual World to be devoid of the light and heat of life in tone and speech, as if they were mere inertnesses.

[P. 231]7. That the seventh kind of profanation is [committed] by those who first acknowledge Divine truths, and live according to them, and afterwards recede from and deny them. This is the worst kind of profanation. Ex. and ill.

—9. That the Lord provides that man should not interiorly acknowledge truths, and afterwards recede, and become profane, is meant by John xii.40.

232. That therefore the Lord does not admit man interiorly into the truths of wisdom and at the same time into the goods of love, except in proportion as he can be kept in them to the end of life. (Shown in the following order.)

233. First: That evil and good cannot be simultaneously in the interiors with man; nor consequently can the falsity of evil and the truth of good. Ex.

—3. Secondly: That good and the truth of good cannot be introduced by the Lord into the interiors of man, except in proportion as evil and the falsity of evil have been removed there. Ex.

—4. Thirdly: If good with its truth were introduced sooner or more than as evil with its falsity has been removed, the man would recede from good and would return to his evil. Ex.

—7. Fourthly: That when man is in evil many truths may be introduced into his understanding, and be stored up in the memory, and yet not be profaned. Ex. . . It is incumbent on everyone to learn truths from the Word, or from preachings, to store them up in the memory, and to think about them; for the understanding must teach the will . . . from the truths which are in the memory . . . so that this is the principal means of reformation: when truths are solely in the understanding and thence in the memory, they are not in the man, but are outside of him. Ex.

—9. Fifthly: But that the Lord, by His Divine Providence, is most careful that the will shall not receive [truths] thence any sooner or more than the man as from himself removes evils in the external man. Ex. . . Both the falsities of evil and the truths of good can be in the understanding, but not simultaneously, otherwise the man could not see evil from good . . . but they are separated as a house is into its interiors and exteriors; so that when an evil man thinks and speaks goods, he thinks and speaks exteriorly; and when evils, interiorly . . .

—10. Sixthly: That if (this were done) sooner, or more, the will would adulterate good, and the understanding would falsify truth, by commingling them with evils and the derivative falsities. Ex.

278a². These . . . do not admit any truth which leads away from any falsity of their religion; saying to themselves, What is that to me? . . . Thus they reject the truth the moment it comes to their ears; and, if they hear it, they suffocate it. . . As they deal thus with truths, they do not know what good is; for they act as a one; and evil is not Known from the good which is not from truth, except that it too may be called good . . . Sig.

282^e. If the understanding alone were healed, the man would become like a corpse . . . covered over with spices and roses . . . and so would it be with heavenly truths in the understanding if the evil love of the will were (shut in and prevented from showing itself).

284. Man's understanding is the recipient of both good and evil, and of both truth and falsity; but not his will . . . If evil conquers, good with its truth is removed to the sides, and becomes turbid and offensive, like unfermented wine.

286. Therefore some say, What is truth? cannot I make true whatever I wish?

298³. That if (when the will is in evil) man's Own intelligence sees truth, it either averts itself, or it falsifies that truth. Ex.

—4. That the Divine Providence continually causes man to see truth; and also gives the affection of perceiving it and of receiving it. Ex.

—5. The reason why when the Divine Providence gives to see truth, and gives at the same time the affection of it, the man can be withdrawn from evil, is that truth points out and prescribes; and, when the will does it, it conjoins itself with it, and turns, in itself, truth into good; for the truth becomes of its love, and what is of the love, that is good. All reformation is effected by means of truth, and not without it; for without truth the will is continually in its evil; and, if it consults the understanding, it is not instructed; but evil is confirmed by means of falsities.

312. Is spiritual truth anything but the beauty and harmony in spiritual things? (Quoted under Good.)

317. It is believed by many that no truth can be seen by man except from things proved—confirmatis; but this is false. In civil and economical affairs . . . what is useful and good cannot be seen without a knowledge of many statutes . . . nor in judicial matters unless the laws are known; nor in the things of nature, as in physics, chemistry, etc. unless a man has been imbued with the sciences. But in things purely rational, moral, and spiritual, truths appear from the light itself which belongs to them, provided a man has become in some measure rational, moral, and spiritual by a right education. The reason is that as to his spirit . . . every man is in the Spiritual World . . . and is consequently in spiritual light, which enlightens the interiors of his understanding, and as it were dictates . . . Hence man can . . . see many truths, which do not fall into darkness except from confirmed falsities. The man sees these almost as he sees the lower mind of another from his face, and perceives his affections from the tone of his voice, without any other knowledge than what has been implanted in everyone.

318². That there is nothing which cannot be confirmed; and that falsity can be confirmed more easily than truth. Ex. . . As all falsity shines in the natural man, from its appearances and fallacies, it is evident that it can be confirmed more easily than truth.

—5. That from confirmed falsity truth does not appear; but that from confirmed truth falsity does appear. Ex. All falsity is in darkness, and all truth in light, and nothing appears in darkness . . . but it does in light. . . Who would see any spiritual truth unless the Word taught it? . . . What heretic can see his falsities, unless he admits the genuine truth of the Church? Ex.

—⁸. Some of (these confirmers) say, What is truth? is not that truth which I make truth?

—None are intelligent but those who perceive truth to be truth, and who confirm this by Truths continually perceived.

—These two classes can be distinguished from each other but little, because it is impossible to distinguish between the light of confirmation and the light of the perception of truth. Ex.

322. The image of God (which is in all men) consists in this: that they are able to understand truth, and to do good; the ability to understand truth is from the Divine wisdom, and the ability to do good is from the Divine love; and this ability is the image of God, which remains with a sane man, and is not eradicated. Ex.

328⁵. (The necessity of knowing truths.)

—⁹. All men after death . . . are instructed . . . and receive truths, at first; but they who had not acknowledged God and shunned evils as sins, soon loathe truths, and depart; and those who had acknowledged them with the lips, but not with the heart, are like the foolish virgins, who had lamps, but no oil . . . 'Lamps' = the truths of faith; and 'oil,' the good of charity.

335. That the operation of the Divine Providence continually goes on through means, from pure mercy. Ex. . . The means are those by which man becomes man, and is perfected as to the understanding and as to the will . . . The means by which man becomes man and is perfected as to the understanding are called by the general term truths; which in the thought become ideas, and in the memory are called Things; and which in themselves are Knowledges, from which are knowledges. Ex. —³.

R. 6². 'To bear witness' is predicated of Truth, because, in the world, Truth is to be borne witness to; and, when it has been borne witness to, it is acknowledged. But in Heaven the Truth itself bears witness to itself, because it is the very light of Heaven; for, when the Angels hear Truth, they at once know and acknowledge it; and, as the Lord is the Truth itself (John xiv.6), He is, in Heaven, the Testimony to Himself. Ill.

8³. 'To receive a prophet in the name of a prophet' = to receive the truth of doctrine because it is truth.

17. 'The first-born' = the first and primary thing from which is everything of the Church; and it has been believed by many, that it is truth in doctrine and in belief; but by few, that it is truth in act and work, which is the good of life. That this is the first and primary thing of the Church . . . will be seen. . . They believed that truth in doctrine and faith is the first and primary thing of the Church . . . because truth is learned first, and because the Church becomes the Church by means of truth, but still not until truth becomes of the life. Before this it is only in the thought of the understanding and in the memory, and not in the act of the will; and truth which is not truth in act or work is not alive: it is only like . . . a foundation upon which a house is built . . . the first in time, but not the first in end. Ex.

—². Moreover, every truth is sown in the internal man, and rooted in the external man; and therefore unless the truth that is sown is rooted in the external man, which is done by act, it is like a tree which is not set in the ground, but above it, which . . . withers. The man who has done Truths, carries this root with him after death; but not the man who has Known and acknowledged them in faith only. (Continued and fully ill. under FIRST-BORN.)

—⁴. For the Church does not exist with man until truth becomes of the life; and, when truth becomes of the life, it is then good. Ex.

—⁵. For the Church is not in a man until the truth of doctrine conceived in the internal man is born in the external man.

74. The Lord, from whom through the Word are all truths. Sig. and Ex.

82. By 'the Church of Ephesus' are meant those in the Church who regard the truths of doctrine . . . in the first place . . . when yet the goods of life are to be regarded in the first place; for in proportion as a man is in the goods of life, in the same proportion he is really in the truths of doctrine, and not conversely. The reason is that the goods of life open the interiors of the mind, (and then) truths appear in their own light, from which they are not only understood, but are also loved. But when doctrinal things are regarded primarily, or in the first place, then indeed truths may be known, but cannot be interiorly seen, and loved from spiritual affection.

—². Every Church, at its commencement, regards the goods of life in the first place, and the truths of doctrine in the second; but as the Church declines, it begins to regard the truths of doctrine in the first place, and the goods of life in the second . . .

85. That otherwise enlightenment will not be given them to see truths any longer. Sig. and Ex.

—². For to see truths from their own light is to see them from the man's interior mind . . . (which) is opened by charity: when it has been opened, there inflows from Heaven light and the affection of understanding truths, whence comes enlightenment (or illustration). The man who is in this enlightenment acknowledges truths as soon as he reads or hears them; but not he whose spiritual mind has not been opened, who is the man who is not in the goods of charity, however much he may be in the truths of doctrine.

102. 'Be thou faithful unto death' = the reception and acknowledgment of Truths, even until falsities have been removed and as it were abolished. Ex.

107. 'The Church in Pergamos' = those who make everything of the Church to consist in good works, and not anything in the truths of doctrine. . . There are two kinds of men of whom the Christian Church at this day for the most part consists: those in works alone and in no truths; and those in worship alone, and in neither works nor truths; the latter being treated of in what is written to the Church in Sardis. (The former) are like those who do, and do not understand; and deeds without understanding are inanimate. They appear before the Angels like images carved out of wood . . .

[R.] 108. 'He that hath the sharp two-edged sword' = the Lord as to the truths of doctrine from the Word, by means of which evils and falsities are dispersed.

110. Their life in thick darkness, (that is,) that they are in no truths of doctrine. Sig. and Ex. . . Satanic Spirits have power through such.

112. 'Antipas My faithful martyr . . .' = when all Truth had been extinguished through the falsities in the Church. . . 'Antipas the martyr' = a confessor of the Truth; abstractedly, the Truth itself.

121. 'I will give him a white stone' = truths which favour good and are united to it. Ex. . . Hence they see truths from good alone.

123. Truths—vera—united to good are not inscribed on the memory with them, but on their life; and (this) does not appear to anyone, not even to themselves, except from the fact that they perceive whether [a thing] is true, and what is true, when they are hearing and reading; for the interiors of their mind are open even to the Lord; and, as the Lord is in them, and He sees all things, therefore He causes them to see as of themselves. But still they know from their wisdom that they do not see truths from themselves, but from the Lord. (This shows) what is meant by, 'I will give him to eat of the hidden manna; and I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no one knoweth but he that receiveth it;' by which is signified, in substance, that they will be Angels of the Third Heaven, if they read the Word, draw from it truths of doctrine, and approach the Lord.

129. 'Thy faith and endurance' = the Truth, and the study to procure it for themselves and to teach it.

130. For from charity is the spiritual affection of knowing truth. (Continued under Good.)

139. That with them all the truths from the Word will be turned into falsities. Sig. and Ex.

148. 'He shall rule them with a rod of iron' = by means of truths from the sense of the letter . . ., and at the same time by means of rational things from natural lumen. . . In these two consists the power of truth. Ex.

153³. The novitiate Spirit . . . is brought into various Societies, both good and evil, and is explored as to whether he is affected with truths, and in what way; or whether he is affected with falsities, and in what way. If he is affected with truths, he is withdrawn from the evil Societies, and is introduced into good ones . . .

155. 'He that hath the seven spirits of God' = the Lord from whom are all Truths.

158. 'Be watchful' = that they should be in truths, and in a life according to them.

161. That everyone knows from the Word, etc., that truths are to be learned, and that by means of truth man has faith, charity, and all things of the Church. (Sig. and fully shown by refs. to passages.) But all these things are effected by means of truths from good, and not by truths without good . . .

167. That they shall live with the Lord in His Spiritual Kingdom, because they are in truths from Him. Sig. and Ex.

173. 'He that is Holy, He that is True' (Rev. iii. 7) = the Lord as to Divine truth. Ex. (See HOLY, here.) (= from whom are charity and faith. E. 204.)

212. An admonition that they should procure for themselves genuine truths of wisdom. Sig.

224³. The Angels replied, Read the Word, and believe in the Lord, and you will see the truths which must be of your faith and life. . . We assure you that every man whose soul desires it, can see the truths of the Word in light. There is no animal which does not know the food of its life when it sees it; and man is a rational and spiritual animal; and he sees the food of his life; not so much that of his body, as that of his soul, which is the truth of faith, if he hungers for it, and seeks it from the Lord.

287. Truths—vera—are manifold, but goods are simple. Sig.

308. The destruction of truth through the falsities of evil. Sig. and Ex.

378. General truths are the Knowledges of good and truth from the sense of the letter . . .

384. 'He shall lead them to living fountains of waters' = that the Lord will lead them by means of the truths of the Word to conjunction with Himself. Ex.

400. That with (these) all the affection and perception of truth, which make the man of the Church, had perished. Sig. and Ex.

404. That with them all general truths had been falsified. Sig. and Ex.

407. Their quality as to the affection and reception of Truths from the Word. Sig. and Ex.

409. That hence all the truths of the Word had been completely falsified. Sig. and Ex.

413. That on account of evils . . . they did not know . . . any truth. Sig. and Ex.

454^o. For Truth shines before those only who are in charity and the derivative faith.

462³. This kind of enchantment, at this day, causes that truths are not received, and, with many, that they are not understood. Ex.

489. That (this state of the Church) has dispersed all the truth of the Word until not any remains. Sig. and Ex.

492. Mourning meanwhile on account of the non-reception of truth. Sig. and Ex.

540. That all the truths of the Word had been falsified and profaned. Sig. and Ex. 541, Ex.

547². For truths which are received and implanted before falsities have been removed are not permanent . . .

564². As, in the New Church, the dogma that the understanding must be kept in obedience to faith is rejected, and, as instead of it is received [the doctrine] that the truth of the Church must be seen in order to be believed ; and, as truth cannot be seen in any other way than rationally, it is therefore here said — from truths rationally understood. Ex.

566. A debate among Spirits as to whether anyone can see any doctrinal theological truth in the Word, except from the Lord. Ex. . . Some said that doctrinal truth from the Word can be seen when God the Father is approached immediately. (But this was shown by experiment to be impossible.) But those who approached the Lord immediately did see truths.

—². Then came up some from the abyss, who . . . after being examined, were told from Heaven that they did not know a single doctrinal truth from the Word . . . (—⁴.) They said, We will demonstrate that we have truths from the Word in great abundance. (They state many truths,) but receive the answer: All the things you have advanced are in themselves truths ; but you have falsified them by applying them to confirm a false principle. (This was shown in the following manner. They wrote their truths on a paper, which caused the paper, when placed in the light of Heaven, to shine like a star ; but when they looked intently at it, the paper became black ; and when they touched it, flame burst forth and consumed it.)

629. Acknowledgment and confession that all the truth of the Word, from which the Church is the Church, is from the Lord, and that every man will be judged according to it. Sig. and Ex.

655⁷. For every devil can understand truth when he hears it ; but he cannot retain it ; because when the affliction of evil returns, it casts out the thought of truth. M.415³. T.77³.

666. That He is the Word, the Truth, and the enlightenment. Sig. and Ex.

681. 'Every living soul died'=that every truth of the Word, and of the Church, and of faith from the Word, had perished. Sig. and Ex.

696. 'They gnawed their tongues for pain'=that they could not endure truths. Ex.

706. Lest they should be with those who are in no truths, and their infernal loves should appear. Sig. and Ex. . . 'To walk naked'=to live without truths. . . This is said to those who will be of the New Church, in order that they may learn truths, and remain in them, because without truths the evils born in them, which are infernal loves, are not removed. A man can indeed live like a Christian without truths ; but only before men, and not before the Angels. The truths which they must learn are those about the Lord, and about the commandments according to which they must live.

715. That because they had confirmed such falsities with themselves, they had denied truths to such a degree that they could not acknowledge them . . . Sig. and Ex.

805. 'True and just are His judgments' (Rev.xix.2) =the Divine truths and goods of the Word. (=that the laws of the Divine Providence, and all the works of the Lord, are of the Divine wisdom and the Divine love. E.1199.)

817. 'These are the true words of God' (ver.9)=

that this must be believed because it is from the Lord. (=that these words are from the Lord, who is the Word, and who is the Truth. E.1226.)

821. 'Faithful and true' (ver.11)=the Divine good and the Divine truth.

845. That the truths of the Word, according to which all are judged, had been opened. Sig. and Ex.

886. 'For these words are true and faithful' (Rev. xxi.5)=that these things must be believed, because the Lord Himself has testified and said them. —^e.

889. That to those who long for truths for the sake of any spiritual use, the Lord will give all that are conducive to that use, from Himself by means of the Word. Sig. and Ex.

900^e. When, in Knowledges, there is what is spiritual from Heaven from the Lord, they are not called Knowledges, but truths ; whereas if (this) is not in them, they are nothing but scientifics.

916². For there is a connection of all spiritual Truths . . . like that of all the members, viscera, and organs of the body ; and as the soul holds all these together in order and connection, so that they are felt as if they were a one, so the Lord holds together all the spiritual Truths in a man.

933. That in the inmosts of the Truths of doctrine and of the consequent life in the Church is the Lord in His Divine love . . . Sig. and Ex.

936³. Rational truths are those which proximately receive spiritual truths ; for the Rational of man is the first receptacle of spiritual truths ; for in the Rational of man there is the perception of truth under some form, which the man himself does not see in his thought, as he does the things which are beneath the Rational in the lower thought . . . Rational truths are signified by 'leaves.' Ill.

956. 'He that is athirst, let him come ; and he that will, let him take the water of life freely'=that he who longs for truths should pray that the Lord may come with light ; and that he who loves truths will then receive them from the Lord without any labour of his own. Ex.

M. 28. Moreover man has a common perception—which is the same thing as the influx of Heaven into the interiors of his mind—by virtue of which he perceives truths, and as it were sees them, inwardly in himself ; and especially this truth : that he will live as a man after death ; happy, if he has lived well ; and unhappy, if evilly.

62^e. This . . . must be acknowledged, because it is a universal truth ; and every universal truth is acknowledged as soon as it is heard, which is from the influx of the Lord and the simultaneous confirmation of Heaven.

126. It appears as if truth were the primary thing of the Church, because it is the first in time. Ex. . . Nevertheless the good of charity is the primary thing of the Church. Ex. . . Now as the good of charity is from the Lord, and as the truth of faith is with a man as if from himself ; and as these two effect such a conjunction of the Lord with man, and of man with the Lord (Sig.) it is evident that this conjunction is the Church.

[M.] 164². The spiritual virtues with men-viros-are charity, Truth, etc.

220. That men have abundant store according to the love of propagating the truths of wisdom, and according to the love of doing uses. Ex.

— That (virile semination) is from the truths of which the understanding consists, was inferred by the Ancients from many proofs of both reason and experience; and they said that from the spiritual marriage of good and truth which inflows into every thing in the universe, nothing else is received by males than truth, and that which has relation to truth; and that this, in its progress into the body, is formed into seed; from which it is that seeds, spiritually understood, are truths. In respect to the formation, they said that the male soul, being intellectual, is truth; for the Intellectual is nothing else; and therefore when the soul descends, truth also descends. Ex.

232. (These reasoners) love nothing better than to attack Truths themselves, and to tear them to pieces by making them the subjects of controversy. Des.

233. (Those called Confirmers) cannot see whether truth is truth, or not; and yet can make anything truth they please. Des. . . One of them said openly and from his heart, What is truth? Is anything truth in the nature of Things, except what a man makes to be truth? Say anything you like, and I will make it truth. Examps.

—⁵. If heavenly light does not inflow into natural light, the man does not see whether anything true is true; and consequently does not see that anything false is false.

—⁷. I made the following universal conclusion: That to be able to confirm whatever one pleases is not the part of an intelligent person; but to be able to see that truth is truth, and that falsity is falsity, and to confirm the same.

I. 2. For a hypothetical Truth is not a real Truth; but a conjecture of the Truth.

7. The good which a wise man thinks, is truth. (Fully quoted under Good.)

T. 8. The truths which must be of faith do indeed inflow through the hearing, and thus are implanted in the mind, and thus below the soul; but by means of these truths the man is merely disposed to receive influx from God through the soul; and such as is the disposition, such is the reception; and such is the transformation of natural faith into spiritual faith.

38. All that which proceeds from wisdom is called truth; for wisdom consists of nothing but truths . . . and therefore wisdom is the complex of all Truths . . . The pleasantnesses of wisdom, which are also those of faith, cause truths to be called truths. Ex.

40. Truth-verum-is not creatable.

42². Perfection of life does not consist in thought; but in the perception of truth from the light of truth. By this may be inferred the differences of life among men; for there are some who as soon as they hear truth perceive it to be truth: these are represented . . . by eagles. There are others who do not perceive truth, but conclude it from confirmations through appearances: these are represented by singing birds. There are others who believe a thing to be truth because it has been asserted by a man of authority: these are represented by magpies. And there are also those who are neither willing nor able to perceive truth, but only falsity, the reason of which is that they are in delusive light, in which falsity appears as truth, and truth either as something over head hidden in a dense cloud, or as a meteor, or as falsity: the thoughts of these are represented by birds of night, and their speech by screech-owls; and those of them who have confirmed their falsities cannot endure to hear truths; but as soon as any truth knocks at the door of their ears, they repel it with aversion . . .

61². A man who is in some light of truth, and yet in evil of life, while in the delight of the love of his evil, in the beginning sees truths no otherwise than as a bat sees clothes hanging up in a garden . . .

69. Hence man cannot be in any truth of wisdom interiorly, except from God.

—². The man who . . . acknowledges that all the truth of wisdom is from God . . . is like one who stands on a high tower . . . But he who confirms himself that all the truth of wisdom is from the natural lumen in himself . . . is like one who abides in a cavern . . .

71². V. It is a consequent law of order that man ought to introduce himself into faith by means of Truths from the Word . . .

73². The laws of order prescribed for man are that he should acquire for himself Truths from the Word, and think them naturally, and, in so far as he can, rationally, and thus procure for himself natural faith; and then the laws of order on the part of God are that He should approach, infill the Truths with His Divine light, and thus infill the man's natural faith, which is only knowledge and persuasion, with the Divine essence.

87^e. All the laws of order by which God preserves the universe, are Truths.

116^e. When such hear anything concerning the living water, which is the genuine truth of the Word . . . they are violently heated, and reject it as something that would burst their heads.

180. The 'great afflictions' . . . = the infestation of truth by falsities, until there remains not any truth which has not been falsified and consummated.

186. (The arrangement of the mind with those who love truth because it is truth, and with those who love truth merely for the glory of their reputation. Fully quoted under REGION.)

—^e. Hence it is that there are so many in the world who see the truths of doctrine from the Word no more than those born blind; and when they hear them close their nostrils, lest their odour should offend them . . . but open all their senses to falsities.

224. Scarcely anyone now knows that there is any power in truths; for truth is supposed to be only a word spoken by some one in authority . . . when yet truth and good are the principles (or beginnings) of all things in both worlds . . . They are the things by means of which the universe was created, and by means of which it is preserved; and by means of which also man was made; and therefore these two are the all in all things. Sig.

263². For he who thinks and speaks nothing but truth, becomes that truth.

318. 'To steal,' in the spiritual sense, = to deprive others of their truths of faith.

323. 'To bear false witness,' in the celestial sense, = to blaspheme the Lord and the Word, and thus to banish Truth itself from the Church . . .

336. Some (of the Ancients) said that truth is the first-born. Ex.

—². Faith or truth, is first in time; but charity, or good, is first in end; and that which is first in end is actually the first, because primary, and is therefore the first-born . . . (Shown by comparisons.)

343. That man receives faith by approaching the Lord, learning Truths from the Word, and living according to them. Gen.art. 347, Ex.

344. The Essence of the Faith of the New Church, is Truth from the Word. (Its) Existence is . . . the harmony of Truths, etc.

347². That faith is formed by man's learning Truths from the Word, is because faith, in its essence, is Truth; for all things which enter into faith are Truths; and therefore faith is nothing else than the complex of the Truths which shine in the mind of the man; for Truths teach not only that man must believe, but also in whom he must believe, and what he must believe. The reason the Truths must be taken from the Word, is that all the Truths which conduce to salvation are there; and there is efficacy in them because they have been given by the Lord, and therefore have been inscribed on the whole angelic Heaven; and therefore when a man learns Truths from the Word, he comes into communion and consociation with the Angels more than he has any idea of. Faith without Truths is like seed deprived of its inside substance . . . whereas faith from Truths is like good grain . . . In a word, the essentials of faith are Truths . . . 348².

—³. That faith is formed by the man's living according to the Truths, is because spiritual life is according to Truths; and Truths do not actually live until they are in deeds. Truths abstracted from deeds are solely of the thought . . . being only on the threshold to the man. (Shown by comparisons, and ill.) 348, Ex.

348². Truth-veritas is the essence of faith; and therefore such as is the Truth, such is the faith . . .

349. That an abundance of Truths, cohering together as in a bundle, exalts and perfects faith. Gen.art. 352, Gen.art. 353, By comparisons.

— Faith in its essence is Truth, for it is Truth in its light; and, as Truth can be procured, so also can faith. Who cannot approach the Lord if he will? And who cannot collect Truths from the Word if he will? And every Truth in the Word, and from the Word, gives light; and Truth in light is faith. Ex. and ill.

350. That the Truths of faith are multiplicable to infinity. Gen.art.

— Wisdom is solely from Divine truths divided analytically into forms by means of the light inflowing from the Lord.

— The Word of the Lord is an abyss of Truths, from which is all angelic wisdom . . .

351. That the arrangement-dispositio-of the Truths of faith is into series, thus as it were into fascicles. Gen.art.

—⁴. There is nothing in nature which is not fasciculated into series . . . the universal cause of which is that Divine truths have such a conformation . . .

353. All Truth shines in Heaven; and hence Truth shining is faith in its essence.

354. That the Truths of faith, however numerous they are, and however diverse they may appear, make a one from the Lord . . . Gen.art.

—³. On account of his business in the world, man cannot procure for himself the Truths of faith except a few only; nevertheless if he approaches the Lord, and worships Him alone, he comes into the potency of Knowing all Truths; and therefore every true worshipper of the Lord, as soon as he hears any Truth of faith which he had not known before, at once sees, acknowledges, and receives it. The reason is that the Lord is in him, and he in the Lord; and therefore the light of Truth is in him, and he in the light of Truth; for the Lord is Light itself, and Truth itself. (Confirmed by an experience, and ill.)

377². The Truths of faith not only illumine charity, but also qualify it, and, what is more, nourish it; and therefore a man who has charity and not the Truths of faith, is like a person walking in a garden in the night, who plucks fruits . . . and does not know whether they are fruits of good or of evil use. (Further comparisons.)

379. Truth cannot be cut into halves so that one part may look to the left and the other to the right, and still remain its own Truth. Faith, in a general sense, consists of innumerable Truths, for it is the complex of them; but these innumerable Truths make as it were one body, and in this body the Truths are what make its members; some . . . the arms . . . some the feet, etc. But interior Truths make the head; and the Truths which proximately proceed from them, make the sensories which are in the face . . . Of this body and all its members, the Lord God the Saviour is the Life and Soul. Ill.

381⁴. When hypocrites are . . . teaching truths from the Word, they do not know but that they believe them. Ex.

508⁵. The doctrinal things of the New Church are continuous Truths disclosed by the Lord through the Word; and confirmations of the Truths by means of rational things cause the understanding to be opened above more and more, and thus to be elevated into the light in which are the Angels . . . and this light, in its essence, is Truth . . . This is meant by the writing . . . Nunc licet; and also by the veil . . . being lifted. For it is a canon of the New Church that falsities close up the understanding; and that Truths open it.

[T.508]^e. There was written (on the paper from the Third Heaven) Enter into the mysteries of the Word . . . for its several Truths are so many mirrors of the Lord.

571. The first state (called reformation) is formed by means of truths which must be of faith, through which truths the man looks to charity; and the second state (called regeneration) is formed by means of the goods of charity, and from these he enters into the truths of faith. Ex. 587, Ex.

580. (Thus) the first of the new birth is the reception of Truths in the understanding; and the second of it is that the man wills to act according to the Truths . . . But verily no one can be said to be reformed through the mere Knowledges of Truths. Ex. . . But he is a reformed man who is in the affection of Truth for the sake of Truth; for this affection conjoins itself with the will; and, if it advances, it conjoins the will with the understanding; and then regeneration commences.

596. A combat then arises, because the internal man has been reformed through truths. Ex.

597². The reason temptations have not heretofore been known . . . is that heretofore the Church has not been in truths. No one is in truths but he who approaches the Lord immediately, rejects the former faith, and embraces the new one.

618. That regeneration is not possible without truths, through which faith is formed, and with which charity conjoins itself. Gen.art.

—². As to faith, neither is this possible without truths. Ex.

— . Besides, all the truths which make the body of faith, emit light from themselves . . .

619⁴. This (spiritual) sphere also invades men in the natural world, and extinguishes the conjugal torches between truths and goods.

—^e. This is why spiritual Truths are so invisible at this day (A.D.1771) among men in the world.

634. But the Truth must be publicly declared . . .

650². When such things are read in the Word, the appearances of truth are turned into genuine truths, in passing from the man to Heaven.

718. In every sane man there is, to eternity, the faculty of receiving wisdom from the Lord, that is, of multiplying the truths from which wisdom is . . .

753. When there is no genuine truth, there can be no genuine good. Ex.

—^e. Therefore, when truth is being consummated in the Church, good is being consummated also.

754. The Church is consummated . . . especially through such things as cause falsity to appear as truth; and, when it appears to be truth, the good which in itself is good . . . is no longer possible. Ex.

758². There is not a single genuine truth left in the Church.

779. I testify (this) in Truth.

786. None of the four Churches (which preceded the New Church) were in the Truth. Ex.

799. All who have lived a life of charity, and still more those who have loved truth because it is truth, suffer themselves to be instructed in the Spiritual World, and accept the doctrinal things of the New Church . . .

Ad. 3/4163. How Truths torture some there.

D. 996. That Truth (without good) terrifies.

1312. That if Truths are received as propositions or principles, innumerable Truths are then disclosed, and all things confirm. Ex.

1370a. On the penalty of vastation inflicted on those who . . . trust in themselves, and thus will not acknowledge interior and more interior Truths, unless they come through them, as if from them. 1377^e.

1427^e. (The necessity of knowing the opposites of Truths.)

1935. For every Truth can be augmented to infinity.

—^e. Without the most general Truths, as vessels, nothing of truth can be insinuated.

1937. When Truths are long disputed about, they are wont to become obscure. 1955.

1994. How truth is turned into falsity.

2293. That Souls, Spirits, and Angels learn Truths in both a pleasant state, and a sad one. Ex.

— . The Spirits complained that they should learn these Truths in a state so hard and grievous . . . But it was replied that the state in which they are when they learn them . . . returns along with the Truths themselves . . . and then that sadness . . . is gladdened by the Lord and is made delightful, and thus the sense of it is exalted. Ex.

2394. (Even) when any Truth has never been heard of (by the Angels), they at once know its quality, and also its genera and species. Ex.

2467. To know is not to believe; there must also be a persuasion of the Truth. Ex.

2471. They cannot be such vessels unless they are in Truth—Truths are each and all things which are of faith, and are thus very remote from fallacies and falsities—for Truth cannot dwell in a vessel of falsities, but wholly in its own vessel, namely, in Truth.

2480. That all Truths whatever which are not sensuous and ocular, are at once rejected by the learned. Ex.

—e. For the Spirits around the man are such that as soon as any Truth comes forth, even although they do not know that it is a Truth, they feel a repugnance, and at once oppose it; and this from their natural disposition, which is contrary to the Truth. Ex.

2484. Nature . . . can teach us, if we view Things from Truth, thus from visible things; but by no means ought we to make an induction from such things to Truths, and thus explore Truths; but, from Truths revealed by the Lord, see such things as confirmations . . .

2634. How the case is with natural knowledges (or sciences) and their Truths, relatively to spiritual and celestial Truths. Ex.

— Natural knowledges and human philosophy . . . completely extinguish the light of spiritual Truths, when yet Truths are in them, and they conduce so much to confirming and as it were illuminating spiritual Truths; and therefore Spirits . . . represented natural Truths as transparent, and that spiritual Truths would shine through them; and so also suppose the learned of the world . . . But it was granted me to reply that those natural Truths are in themselves thick darknesses; but that when they are illumined by spiritual Truths which come from the Lord, then they become as it were transparent; for there is the Lord's light in spiritual Truths, which makes natural Truths lucid; but never the converse; for it is contrary to order . . .

2636. Very many suppose that they can see this to be the case with Truths by means of human philosophy; but still they do not believe them unless they see them in this way; and consequently they doubt about the Truths which are from the Lord.

2651. As this is the Truth, there should be no reasoning about the Truth of the matter from causes (or reasons); and if no reasons are found, the Truth is not to be invalidated or denied, as is wont to be the case; but being Truth it should be believed; and if they want to investigate the reasons they may do so . . . provided that if they do not find the reason, or if many things inflow which are not soluble, the Truth is not to be denied on that account. Just as in almost all things in nature . . . if all things were denied because no reasons (or causes) can be found, there would be no natural truth in any kingdom. 2829.

2781. On the inverted order of Knowing spiritual and celestial Truths. Ex.

2795. How Truths appear to those who are in falsity. Ex.

— To those in Falsity who have become persuaded that their Falsity is Truth, Truths appear as Falsities . . . Truths cannot possibly enter into the sphere of such . . .

2890^e. They wanted to draw me into reasonings; but I said to them that this is the Truth, and a general law . . .

2945. Being in the Truth, (evil) is not imputed to him; but he cannot be in that Truth unless he is in faith in the Lord. Ex.

2999. On the confirmation of heavenly Truths by means of human scientifics. Ex.

3064. If a Spirit were to say the word truth, I (should know his quality both) from the tone and the idea. Ex.

3095. That philosophical Truths convince such more strongly than all other Truths. Ex.

3105. That man knows many Truths; but the moment he reasons does not acknowledge them. Ex.

3428. Pref. What good is; the truth of good; and truth. In the case of fruit, its use is good; the way in which the use is to be applied, is the truth of good; and the quality of the fruit as to flavour, odour, and beauty, is truth. In the case of the odour of fruit or of flowers, the use of the odour, as for instance to the brain, lungs, heart, is good; the way in which it is to be applied so as to serve its use, whether to the nostrils, the temples, or round the head like a wreath, is the truth of good; and the nature of the odour, and such things, are truth. In the case of charity, the use it serves is good; the way in which it is to be dispensed is the truth of good; and the nature of it, is truth.

3537. On Truths: that they vary with circumstances. . . . Spirits suppose that in this way there is no fixed Truth . . . And so Pilate said to the Lord, What is Truth? It was granted to say that all the Knowledge of faith are Truths; and now, that there are eternal Truths, and that whatever is of the Truth of faith is an eternal Truth; and that circumstances vary, but do not take away Truths. Examps.

3614. By a single objection, all confirming Truths, however numerous, are of no effect; for man is so carried away by his cupidities . . . that one objection avails more than a thousand confirmations; and therefore for a man to be true, that is, in true faith, he should be in the opposite, so that one Truth would prevail over thousands of objections. In this way evil Spirits flee, because they cannot live in such a sphere.

3693. On Truth. (The Truths of faith confer nothing more than the life of light; and not that of love. 3694.)

3756. That evil Spirits do not know what truth is. Ex.

3918. That in man there is nothing true. Ex.

— Certain Spirits wanted to have it that there exists with man an aptitude for truth . . .

3919. But the good Spirits, being indignant, said that I should be cast out of Heaven if I were in such an opinion; and I was then instructed that truth can never come forth with man as his Own; for all truth is from love, and with man there is nothing but evil . . . so that everything from him is false.

3976^e. A Spirit who is evil . . . is permitted to speak evilly, because he thinks so; for thus he speaks what is true; for no Spirit is allowed to speak anything but what is true, that is, what is true to him . . .

4149. That holy Truths are to be found in a certain place in the head. . . Angelic Spirits . . . searched deeply (for this truth) in a certain place in the left of the head, where Truths and Falsities are . . . When there is falsity, that part of the head is indurated and gives pain when looked into by angelic Spirits . . . but when there are Truths, it is soft, and free from pain.

[D.] 4203. (This shows) how easily man may be confirmed in evils and falsities unless he believes truths from the Lord.

4312. These are such intellectually that they seize on anything as truth which, in general, is truth, and inhere in it without application to circumstances. Examp. These are led by Sirens and the deceitful.

4396. These three, who had lived an atheistical life . . . and had been very criminal, in the other life receive the truths of faith, because endowed with the faculty of receiving them, by reason of their having thought justly and rightly about worldly things; for thus they had a plane . . . in which the truth of faith could be implanted . . . They have been withheld from the profanation of truth: which they had blasphemed, but could not profane. They can receive truth; but whether good, I do not yet know. Natural, moral, and civil truth is a recipient vessel of the truth of faith, and there is a species of conscience in it.

4531. Even the worst infernals have the faculty of understanding truth . . . but are no better. Ex. 4540. 4754.

4533. On the universal affirmative with which man is imbued by the Lord as to truths.

4691. Such can have innumerable opinions about one Thing, and not know what is true; they suppose that that merely is truth which inflows . . .

5400. On those who care nothing for the truths of the Church.

5587. All truths have been inscribed (on the interiors of the celestial) according to the order of Heaven . . . and, being thus in truths themselves, they never think about them . . . But what they see with their eyes, they know. Ex.

5596². Then the very infernals have acknowledged heavenly Truths; for heavenly Truths have such a force.

5597. When the celestial hear truths from others, they see them . . .

5629. When the English hear truths, they see them, and follow them. Ex.

5643. That regeneration is effected through the truths of faith. Ex.

5709. On the two foundations of truth; one from the Word, and the other from nature or the Truths of nature. Ex.

5848. On those who reason about truths, as to whether it is so.

5870. When Lang was nearly vastated, he again began to hear the truths of the Church, supposing he would become better; but there then appeared a sledge with a devil sitting in it . . . on which he ran, followed by the sledge, and could not escape until he had rejected those truths.

5962. On (two) who can defame others acutely, but can see nothing of truth.

5972². (In the temples there) the preacher vacillates, tries to go on, and sticks, until he comes into truths; and when he teaches them, his hearers all acknowledge and receive them. Ex.

6011. On the progression of truth or of faith from knowledge in the understanding; then from the understanding into the will; and from the will into act. Ex.

6033. All his . . . falsities were taken away, and genuine truths were given him in their stead; but he was as stupid as one who knew nothing.

6037. That falsities have no power against truths. Ex.

6039. On the thought of truth where falsities are. Luther wanted to think contrary to faith alone; but could not, because falsities filled his thought . . . He said he had prayed to the Lord that he might understand and make manifest the truth; but had received the reply that it would be given if he could receive it. 6044².

6095. The Africans . . . drink in truths with longing more than others, and call it being nourished. Ex.

D. Min. 4579. The ancient wisdom taught naked Truths; and thus man could know and think innumerable truths; but at this day scarcely any.

4589. How the truths of faith enter to the love, and the love infills them. Ex.

4591. In respect to the Lord, all such things are called truths of faith as enter into and confirm the love . . .

4610. That principles of truth change and break the cupidities or delights of evil. (From experience.) 4611.

4671. This light of persuasion exists with those who are in the light of truths, and who want to exercise command through truths, and thus to seem greater than others . . . There are many of this kind, and women among them.

4622. See IDEA, here.

4718. On a certain infernal who had a remarkable perception of truth . . . It was supposed that he could be converted, and he desired it . . . but he was told that this effects nothing, but the life. Ex. 4746 (another similar case).

4771. On those who are in principles of truth, and in the will of evil.

4815. Lagerberg had a strong sphere from truth ; and, being safe in it, he traversed many Hells . . . I compared him to Eneas . . . Wherever he came (the infernals) either fled, or were deprived of the power to do anything against him, or else they lamented : everywhere they were afraid. With such a [power] is the man attended who is in truth. (He describes the Hells to Swedenborg as he advances through them. 4815-4823.)

E. 20°. Everything man believes is called truth ; and everything he loves is called good.

22. The delight of truth and good. Sig. and Ex.

— . To those in the Spiritual Kingdom it is granted . . . to be in the affection of truth for the sake of truth ; and this . . . is what is called 'grace.' There is no other Divine grace. Ill.

30. Regeneration through the truths which are from Him. Sig. and Ex.

34. 'Amen' = Truth. Ex.

70. The last age they called that of Iron, because there then reigned only truth without good ; and, when this reigns, falsity reigns.

117. Anxiety of mind from a longing to Know truths. Sig. and Ex.

— . The reason is that they are conjoined with the Angels, who continually long for truths . . .

—². The spiritual sense . . . inflows into the affection of one reading the Word, and through this into the Knowledges he has, and thus kindles his longing ; and he then receives the genuine truths of the Church in so far as he can see them from the literal sense. Everyone who is in the spiritual affection of truth is conscious that the things he knows are few . . . Those who pride themselves on the things they know have not reached the first step to wisdom. Such are wont to glory from falsities more than from truths ; for they are affected with their own reputation, and not with truth itself.

122. That those who are in falsities from evil, will attempt to deprive (those in the spiritual affection of truth) of all truth from the Word. Sig. and Ex.

123. A consequent increase of the longing for truth. Sig. and Ex.

125. Steadfastness in truths to the end. Sig. and Ex.

131⁵. In the Spiritual World those who are in falsities cannot endure (or withstand) truth : they are in anguish . . .

—³. The vastation of the Church as to truth. Sig.

162. That those who are derivatively in falsities do not convert themselves to truths, and through truths. Sig. and Ex. (In other words) those who have falsified truths . . . by applying them to the delight of the love of self, do not afterwards turn themselves to truths. (For) a man, from his internal man . . . sees, from the Word, the truths which are of the Church ; but does not receive them there, except in the proportion that he loves them to the extent of wanting to do them. When the man so wills, his internal man calls forth and elevates to itself, out of the natural man and its memory, the truths which are there, and conjoins them with the love which is of his will ; and thus the internal spiritual man is opened . . . But if the man suffers natural

—³. But those who read the Word from the spiritual affection of truth—which is the love of knowing truth because it is truth—see truths there, and rejoice at heart when they see them : the reason is that they are in enlightenment from the Lord. Ex. . . It is therefore granted them to see truth from its own light, and this in the Word, because the Word is Divine truth, and in it are stored up all the truths of Heaven. But those only are in this enlightenment who are in the two loves of Heaven . . . But so long as they live in the world, they do not perceive truths in the interior mind ; but they see them in the lower mind. Further Ex.

—². But those who read the Word from a doctrine which is from others, are not able to see truths from the light of their own spirit, thus not within themselves, but without themselves ; for they think that a thing is truth because others have seen it, and they therefore attend solely to things confirmatory of it . . . These cannot be enlightened . . . and they remain natural ; for to become spiritual is to imbue one's spirit with truths from the Word ; and the spirit is not imbued except as it longs to know truth wherever it is in the Word, and delights in it when it sees and perceives it. This affection is the spiritual affection of truth.

—³. That it is the part of a wise man to see and perceive truth from the light of Heaven, and not to confirm what is said by others ; and that to see and perceive truth in the light of Heaven is possible only to those who love truth because it is truth. Refs.

196. For the Lord is in His truths with man. Ex.

[E.] 198. Intelligence and wisdom according to truths and the reception of them. Sig. and Ex.

— To see truths and what they are belongs to perception ; and to live according to them, to reception . . .

— For intelligence is to see inwardly in one's self whether a thing is true or not ; but they who are wise solely from worldly things do not see truths inwardly in themselves, but from others ; and to see from others is only to know.

204². For whatever is loved is called truth when it is thought . . . for everyone confirms that which he loves by many things in his thought, and all the things by which he confirms it he calls truths : the truth which anyone has is from no other source. From this it follows that such as is the love in a man, such are the truths he has ; consequently, if the love in him is spiritual, the truths also are spiritual ; for they act as a one with his love. All truths in one complex are called faith, because they are believed.

209². Truths—vera—become of life when the man loves them. Ex. . . The reason these truths are from the Lord, is that the Lord inflows into the love with man, and through it into the truths, and thus causes the latter to be of the life.

—⁴. Therefore all power belongs to the good of love through truths ; and, with the spiritual, from the good of charity through the truths of faith ; for good puts on a quality for itself through truths ; for good without truths has not any quality ; and where there is no quality there is no force or power.

228. 'The Amen, the faithful and true witness' (Rev. iii. 14)=from Whom is all truth and everything of faith. (=the Lord as to the Word, which is the Divine truth from Him. R.199.)

237⁶. For truths cannot be together with falsities of evil . . . for truths are from Heaven, and falsities of evil are from Hell : and therefore when the latter reign, the communication with Heaven is taken away, and then truths cannot be seen ; and if they are said by others, they are rejected. Hence it is that it is not possible for those in false principles to be in any truths.

—⁵. In Heaven no one believes any truth unless he sees or has seen it ; for they say, Who can believe that a thing is so unless he sees it ? it may perhaps be false ; and to believe what is false is not possible for any but the evil ; for the evil, from evil, see falsities ; whereas the good, from good, see truths ; and, as good is from the Lord, the seeing of truth, from good, is also from Him. The reason the Angels see truths, is that the light of Heaven in which they are, is the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord ; and hence there is the seeing of truth with all with whom there is that light, even in the world. 759⁵.

272. All truths disposed into order by Divine good. Sig. and Ex.

— All the truths of Heaven and the Church are from Divine good ; the truths which are not from it are not truths ; the truths which are not from good are like shells without a kernel . . .

275¹³. Knowledges—cognitiones—and truths differ in this : that Knowledges are of the natural man, and truths of the spiritual.

—²¹. (It may be) supposed that the truths which are in the natural man, and which are called Knowledges and scientifics, are not [merely] the generals of truth, but are all the things of truth there are with man ; whereas . . . the truths which are in the spiritual man, and which are the source of those in the natural, immensely surpass the latter in number. But the truths in the spiritual man do not come to the perception of the natural man until he arrives in the Spiritual World.

283⁶. As both=truth ; and as 'to cover'=guarding by means of truth, it is said, 'Truth—veritas—is a shield and buckler' (Ps.xci.4).

292. This good inflows from the Lord alone, and is received by Angels and the men of the Church in the truths which are from the Word. (These) truths are in their memory, from which the Lord calls them out, and conjoins them with good, in proportion as the Angel or man is in the spiritual affection of truth, which he has when he lives according to truths from the Word. The conjunction takes place in the interior or spiritual man, and from that it takes place in the exterior or natural man. This conjunction constitutes the Church with a man while he lives on earth, and after that, it constitutes Heaven with him. (Thus) without this conjunction no one can be saved ; and no conjunction of truth and good is possible unless the man is living a life of love, (which is) to do the Lord's commandments . . .

294². For all the good into which man is reformed is not possible except through truths.

— 'The cedar of shittah'=genuine truth.

295². The truth which is called of faith is only a medium for the coming forth of good, and for the subsequent coming forth of truth from good.

—⁵. Hearing and help from love, through the proceeding Divine which is Divine truth, is signified by, 'For the greatness of Thy mercy answer me, in the Truth of Thy salvation' (Ps.xlix.13).

323³. 'The word of Jehovah is right' (Ps.xxxiii.4)=the truth of good ; 'and all His work is done in Truth'=the good of truth. The truth of good is the truth which proceeds from good ; and the good of truth is the good which is produced through truth.

324. The good of love produces this sweet scent, but through truth, and not from itself without truth; and still less does the truth which is called of faith without good [produce it]; for good without truth has not any perceptibleness, nor has truth without good.

348^e. It is according to Divine order for the Lord to confirm the truths which an Angel or a man speaks as from himself, although not from himself: these He confirms in their hearts by an affirmative which does not ascend manifestly into their thought; yet by a full acquiescence of the lower mind proceeding from an internal affection, which is from peace and its delight. This is the confirmation which is here signified (by the words, 'The four living creatures said, Amen').

349^e. For what a man loves is good to him; and what he believes is truth to him.

— (Thus) no good and no truth . . . are in man; but they inflow from the Lord. Life itself is in good and truth, and nowhere else. The receptacle of the good of love is the will, and that of the truth of faith is the understanding; and to will good does not belong to man, nor to believe truth. Further ex.

356^e. From doctrine, truths can be seen in their own light, and in their own order; but not from the Word without doctrine . . . [and] all combat against evils and falsities is from truths, that is, by means of truths, by the Lord. (Continued under DOCTRINE.)

—⁵. Those are in enlightenment (or illustration) from the Lord who love truths because they are truths. These, because they do them, are in the Lord and the Lord in them.

365²⁸. 'The vine shall give its fruit'=that truth shall produce good; and 'the land shall give its produce'=that good shall produce truths.

— The conjunction of truth and good is further described by, 'Speak ye the Truth a man with his companion; judge the Truth and the judgment of peace in your gates; only love ye Truth and peace' (Zech. viii. 16, 17). By 'Truth' is signified truth (or what is true).

366. The falsification or extinction of Truths. Sig. and Ex.

— For when truths are falsified they are also extinguished; for falsification produces a different understanding of truths; and truth is truth to anyone according to his understanding of it; for the love and the principle which reign in a man draw all things to themselves, and apply them to themselves, even real truths; and therefore when the love is evil, or the principle false, then the truths are infected with the evil of the love, or with the falsity of the principle, and thus are extinguished. This is signified by 'they shall kill one another.' This takes place when there is no good with the man; and still more when there is no good in the doctrine of his Church. Sig. and Ex.

372. 'The black horse'=the understanding of the Word destroyed as to truth. Ex.

— In the Church, good perishes first, and then truth; and at last evil succeeds in place of good, and falsity in place of truth. This last state is signified by 'the pale horse.'

—². That 'black'=no truth. Ill.

—⁴. That by such reasoning will perish all Knowledges of truth, and with them all truths which savour of good and have their essence from it. Sig.

375². Although (the idea that God is angry, etc.) is in itself not truth . . . still, with those who live well, and so believe because the Word in the letter says so, it is accepted by the Lord as truth, because the truth lies concealed within it, and is also manifest before the interior Angels. Another examp.

376. That the good of charity and the good of faith, in their essence are truth. Ex.

—³. Where good is rejected there cannot be any truth which in itself is truth; for all truth is from good; for the Lord inflows into the good of a man, and through the good enlightens him, and gives the light to perceive truths; and therefore, without this light . . . there is no truth, however much it may sound like truth because it is from the Word. It is truth falsified by the ideas which the man holds in respect to it.

386¹⁵. 'Desert'=where there is no good because no truth; for all the good with man is formed through truths; and therefore where there are no truths, but only falsities, good is not possible.

—²⁶. For those who are in falsities stand out of doors; whereas those who are in truths are in the house; for 'the house'=the intellectual mind, into which nothing but truths are admitted; for this mind is opened through truths from good.

— 'The naked'=those who are devoid of truths.

—³⁰. That 'vinegar' was given Him=that in the coming Church there would be no genuine truth, but truth mixed with falsities. Ex.

394. 'Who art holy and true' (Rev. vi. 11)=Him who is righteousness.

395. As Spirits and Angels are clothed according to their intelligence, and all intelligence is of truth . . . they are clothed according to truths; and therefore 'garments'=truths (interior, or exterior, according to the garments). Ill.

401²⁵. That truths will be resplendent from good. Sig.

—³⁵. 'The seeds' (in the parable of the sower)=truths from the Word, that is, those which man receives from the Lord. . . 'Stony places'=historical faith, which is the faith of some one else in one's self; for the man believes it to be truth, not because he sees it in himself, but because some one else, in whom he has confidence, has said so. 'Soil'=spiritual good, because this receives truths as the soil does seeds. . . (Thus) these words of the Lord, in a series,=that the truths implanted from infancy from the Word or preaching, are adulterated and perish through the concupiscences from the love of self, when the man begins to think from himself. All things in the Word are indeed truths, but they are adulterated by the ideas of thought about them, and by the applications; whence truths with such are not truths except merely as to the utterance of them. The reason it is so, is that all the life of truth is from spiritual good; and spiritual good resides in the higher mind, (which) cannot be opened with those who are in the love of self; for they look to self in every thing. Ex.

[E.] 405¹⁷. 'To dry up all the herbage'=the consequent destruction of all truths. . . 'To make the rivers islands, and to dry up the pools'=to annihilate all the understanding and perception of truth. . . The understanding of truth is from the light of truth; but the perception of truth is from the heat or love of truth.

406. 'Islands'=the natural man as to the truths which are in it. . . The truths of the natural man are memory-scientifica-truths, which are under the view of the rational man, and they are [also] the Knowledges of truth, which are under the view of the spiritual man. The Knowledges of truth are those [truths] which the natural man knows from the Word; and the memory-scientifica-truths are those which the natural man sees from the rational man, and by which also he is wont to confirm the truths of the Church. (Fully quoted under MIND.)

— . For the faculty to love truths because they are truths is possible only through the influx of the light of Heaven through the spiritual mind. Ex.

409⁹. 'Ye shall Know the Truth, and the Truth shall make you free' (John viii.32)=the Divine truth which is from the Lord; for he who receives this in doctrine and in life is free, because he is being made spiritual and is being led by the Lord. —¹⁰, Sig.

427¹. The good of charity and the truth of faith are called 'brothers'; and the truth of faith is called 'the first-born,' because the truths which are afterwards to become the truths of faith are first acquired, and are stored up in the memory, in order that from it as from a storehouse, good may draw what it may conjoin with itself, and make the truths to be of faith; for truth does not become of faith until the man wills it and does it; but in proportion as the man does this, in the same proportion the Lord . . . inflows . . . with good; and through the good into the truths which the man has acquired from childhood; and conjoins them with good, and causes them to be truths of faith. Before this, they are nothing but Knowledges and knowledges, in which the man has as yet no other faith than such as he has in things heard from another. (Continued under FAITH.)

430². That goods and the derivative truths are of infinite variety, is because every Angel and man . . . is his own good and derivative truth.

434. 'The tribe of Reuben'=the light of truth from (love to the Lord).

—⁴. See FIRST-BORN, here. 725¹.

—⁵. The truths which man imbibes in his childhood . . . do indeed appear to be truths, but still are not truths with him: they are only like shells without a kernel . . . They do not become truths until they are received in the will. Ex.

—¹⁵. 'Reuben,' in the opposite, =truth separated from good. . . and truth without good is not truth except merely as to the words and sound. Ex.

440². There are two things which constitute the Church: the truth of doctrine and the good of life.

Both of these must be in a man for him to be a man of the Church. They are represented by 'Ephraim and Manasseh.' Ex.

455. All who are in the good of life according to the dogmas of their religion, which they have believed to be truths even although they are not truths, are saved; for falsity is not imputed to anyone who lives well according to the dogmas of his religion, because it is not his fault that he does not know truths. For the good of life according to religion has stored up in it the affection of knowing truths, which truths such also learn and receive when they come into the other life. For every affection remains with man after death, and especially the affection of knowing truths, because this is a spiritual affection; and when a man becomes a Spirit he is his own affection; and therefore such then imbibe the truths which they long for, and thus receive them deeply into their hearts.

458. 'Palms in their hands'=in the good of life according to truths. 'A palm'=the good of truth. . . For truth becomes good by a life according to it; until then, truth is not good with anyone. For when truth is solely in the memory and the derivative thought, it is not good; but it becomes good when it comes into the will and the derivative act; for the will itself transforms truth into good; as may be evident from the fact that whatever a man wills he calls good, and whatever he thinks he calls truth. (Continued under GOOD.)

474. Through temptations . . . truths are implanted; for all who are to come into Heaven must be in truths. Ex. 478², Ex.

—². The evil . . . are not tempted; for truths cannot be implanted in them . . . but truths are taken away from them. Ex. . . For no one with truths can enter Hell. Ex.

475⁸. The internal man is purified through the truths which are of faith; and the external man through a life according to them. Sig.

478. 'They serve Him day and night in His temple'=that they are constantly kept in truths in Heaven. Ex.

479. The influx of Divine good into the truths with them. Sig. and Ex.

492. 'There was given him much incense'=truths in abundance. Ex.

511. Truth-verum—in the natural man is called knowledge-scientificum. But real truth is in itself spiritual, and in the spiritual man makes a one with the affection of truth; for it is the form of the affection there. In proportion, therefore, as this affection, together with its form, is derivatively in the scientific which are in the natural man, in the same proportion the scientific contains truths in them, and are scientific truths; for, regarded in themselves, the scientific which are of the natural man are not truths; but are only vessels which contain truth.

—². But when merely natural affection is dominant with a man, there is no truth in the natural man, but everything therein is knowledge—scientificum—which is not truth. Ex. . . Real truths, being in themselves spiritual, conjoin themselves with spiritual affections only . . . When truths conjoin themselves with merely natural affections, they are no longer truths, but are falsities; for a merely natural affection falsifies them. Conjunctions of truth with merely natural affections correspond to whoredoms and adulteries of various kinds . . . It is the conjunctions of the Truths of the Word with the love of self and the love of the world which correspond to these.

518. That consequently all the understanding of truth perished, and thereby the doctrine of the Church. Sig. and Ex.

519. 'The name of the star is called wormwood' = truth mixed with the falsity of evil. Ex. 520, Ex.

520^o. Truth—verum—is mixed with the falsity of evil, when evils of life (enum.) are confirmed by the sense of the letter . . . because all things of the Word are truths; but when they are applied and wrested to confirm evils of life and false principles of religion, then the truths of the Word are conmingled with falsities of evil; by which real truths come to be truths no longer, but truths falsified, which, in themselves, are falsities. In order that the truths of the sense of the letter . . . may remain truths, they must be applied to confirm goods of life, and true principles of religion; and if they are drawn aside and diverted from this application as their end, they are no longer truths, because there is not any perception of truth in them. The perception of truth comes from good, and not from evil. For in every thing of the Word there is a marriage of good and truth; and therefore if in the truths of the Word there is not good on the part of him who perceives them, they are truths without their consort, and can be applied to any evil cupidities and false principles whatever, and can thus become falsities of evil. So are falsified the truths of the Word by all who are in the conceit of their own intelligence from the love of self; for within reign evils of every kind . . . and falsities of every kind . . . but without, in speech and preaching, they are truths from the Word, which, before those who are in simple good, sound as truths; but within, with the speaker or preacher, they swarm with falsities of every kind. The truth of the Word with such is like a clean and bright vessel with filthy water in it, which does not show through the vessel before those in simple good, but does so plainly before the Angels of Heaven.

526. For good is turned into evil and the derivative falsity; whereas the truth of faith . . . is turned into falsity and the derivative evil. Sig.

—²³. That care must be taken lest the truth which has been once perceived in the understanding and received in the will be turned into falsity. Sig.

527. That the spiritual light of truth and the natural light of truth had been completely extinguished. Sig. and Ex.

—². Those Heavens look to the Lord as a Sun which are in the spiritual affection of truth; that is, which love truth because it is truth . . . But those Heavens look to the Lord as a Moon which are in the natural affection of truth; that is, which love truth in order that they may be learned and instruct others. These latter love truth because of its usefulness to themselves, and not for the sake of the truth itself; and therefore they are in the light which proceeds from the Lord as a Moon. This light differs from the (former) as the light of day does from that of night; and the truths with them differ in the same way.

—³. Therefore those who are in spiritual light are in genuine truths; and, when they hear truths which they had not previously known, they at once acknowledge them, and see that they are truths. (Whereas) those who are in natural light, when they hear truths, they receive them even although they do not see or perceive them, but because they are said by men of reputation in whom they have faith; and therefore the most of them are in faith from others; but still they are in a life according to their faith.

532^e. Spiritual fullness is formed through truths.

538^e. For the truths of doctrine without good are not truths, because all truths are of good.

541^e. 'Thy Truth reacheth to the skies—aethers' (Ps. xxvi. 5). . . 'Truth' = the Divine truth; and as the Divine truth is the light of Heaven, it is said 'it reacheth to the skies.'

543^{is}. Every truth which is from good ought to be appropriated to man . . . but not truth which is not from good; for this truth has been conjoined with some evil. Sig.

548. That the understanding . . . would be drawn away from seeing truth so long as they are in this state. Sig. and Ex.

550. That they want to destroy the faculty of understanding truth, but cannot. Sig. and Ex.

556^e. That in proportion as anyone takes away from another the understanding of truth, and the sense of truth, in the same proportion they are taken away from him. Sig.

557. Their persuasions . . . against which the truths of the spiritual rational man avail not. Sig. and Ex.

617^{io}. 'Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters . . . ' = that everyone who longs for truth, and who has not had truth before, may acquire and appropriate it to himself from the Lord. Ex.

618^o. 'The waters at Marah' = adulterated truths . . . For all truth is adulterated by evil of life and of love; and therefore it is opened and restored through the good of love and of life. The reason is that all truth is of good; and the good of love is like a fire from which truth is seen in light.

[E.] 625. [To still teach the Word] to all who are in truths and goods as to life, and at the same time in goods and in truths as to doctrine, according to the religion of each person; consequently, that the Word should be taught as to goods of life, and as to truths of doctrine. Sig. and Ex.

—². Because they had lived a life of love to God and charity towards the neighbour, the falsities of their religion were accepted by the Lord as truths; for the reason that within their falsities there was the good of love; and the good of love gives quality to all truth, and in this case to the falsity which is believed by such to be truth; and moreover the good which lies concealed within causes such to perceive genuine truths and to receive them when they come into the other life. There are, moreover, truths which are only appearances of truth, such as those truths which are in the sense of the letter . . . and these also are accepted by the Lord as genuine truths, when there is in them the good of love to the Lord, and the good of charity towards the neighbour; and moreover the good which lies concealed within in the other life dissipates the appearances, and lays bare the spiritual truths, which are genuine truths.

627¹². Truth-verum-conjoined with good, constitutes the good of love and of charity; since all the good of love and of charity is formed by means of truths.

635. 'My two witnesses'=the good of love and of charity, and the truth of doctrine and of faith, both from the Lord. Ex. 638, Ex.

—⁴. 'That I should bear witness unto the Truth' (John xviii. 37)=to cause that the Divine truth which proceeds from Him should bear witness about Him.

638². The truth of (celestial) good is called the good of love towards a brother and companion . . . and the truth of (spiritual) good is called the good of faith.

645. That with these persons, truths are turned into falsities from evil. Sig. and Ex.

652³. As by 'Truth' is signified the truth of doctrine and of faith, it is said, 'See . . . if ye can find a man that . . . seeketh Truth' (Jer. v. 1).

—⁴. That they have wandered away from the truths of doctrine, and that there is consequently no truth in the life . . . is signified by, 'Truth hath stumbled in the street, so that uprightness cannot come' (Is. lix. 14).

654². For the truths and falsities of the natural man are called Knowledges and scientifics; but real truths, when they have acquired life, which is effected through a life of faith, . . . are of the spiritual man. These, together with their affections and pleasantnesses, do not appear to the manifest sense and sight of man, as the Knowledges and scientifics of the natural man do, for the reason that so long as man lives in the world he thinks and speaks naturally . . . But his spiritual thought, which is conjoined with the affection of truth, or of falsity, does not appear until man has put off the natural body. Ex.

—⁵. For when the natural man has been separated from the spiritual man, the man has no truths; and if he imbibes truths from the Word or from the doctrine of the Church, he falsities them by the ideas of his thought; and therefore with such a man of the Church all truth becomes falsity.

—¹⁵. That man must be instructed in truths scientifically and naturally, before he is instructed in them spiritually. Sig.

659⁸. 'Truth-veritas' (Ps. lxxxviii. 11)=the Divine truth of the Divine wisdom.

675⁷. Those who possess truths in the memory only, and not in the life, are deprived of them after (death); whereas those who possess truths in both the memory and the life, enrich intelligence in themselves to eternity. (Rep. by the parable of the pounds.)

701⁹. 'The law of Truth' (Mal. ii. 6)=Divine truth from Divine good.

710²⁰. The understanding varies with everyone just as do the truths from which it is. There are, in general, celestial truths, spiritual truths, moral truths, civil truths, and even natural truths; and of every kind of truth there are species and varieties innumerable . . .

714⁶. The sensuous . . . cannot see whether Divine things are truths, or not; they call that truth which they have imbibed from childhood . . . and afterwards from doctrine . . . As these persons see nothing from the light of Heaven, they do not see truths, but in place of them falsities, which they call truths; for real truths cannot be seen except in the light of Heaven, and not in the light of the world, unless this light is enlightened by the former.

718. The falsification and adulteration of all the Truths of the Word. Sig. and Ex.

719. It has been said that the Sensuous falsifies and adulterates the truths of the Word . . . and those who do not know how this is done . . . may believe that the truths of the Word, being truths, and being plainly expressed in the sense of the letter, cannot be made falsities. (How it is done, shown by an example.)

— That the sun stands unmoved, is a truth for the rational man; and that it advances, is one for the sensuous man; thus both become true, actually for the rational man, and apparently for the sensuous one.

720. Truths-vera-falsified and adulterated, are more false than those from any other origin. Ex.

726¹⁰. That the truths of the natural man have no power without the influx (from the Lord through the spiritual man). Ex. . . (For) truths without life are not truths; nay, regarded interiorly, are falsities, (which) have no power.

730. 'The woman fled into the wilderness'=the Church among a few, because with those who are not in good, and consequently neither in truths. Ex.

—². As to there being no truths where there is no good . . . the reason is that the Lord never inflows immediately into the truths with a man . . . and therefore if the will is not in good . . . the influx of truth from the Lord into the understanding has no effect . . . and the truth is falsified. (Fully quoted under Goon.)

— . Moreover it is dangerous to so enlighten the understanding in truths as to produce belief, except in so far as the will acts as one with it; for the man is then able to pervert, adulterate, and profane truths.

— . And besides, in so far as truths are known and understood, and are not at the same time lived, they are nothing but lifeless truths . . .

— . From all this it may be evident whence it is that there are no truths where there is no good, except as to the form, and not as to the essence.

—³⁸. 'To drop' is predicated of the influx, acknowledgment, and reception of truth.

732^c. The doctrine of the New Church . . . cannot be acknowledged . . . except by those who are interiorly affected with truths, who are no others than those who are able to see them; and only those see truths who have cultivated their intellectual faculty, and have not destroyed it . . . by the loves of self and of the world.

734. 'There was war in heaven'=the combat of falsity against truth, and of truth against falsity. Ex.

736. Lest there should be a conjunction of truth with evil, it is provided that such should not have any genuine truths, but only truths falsified.

740^a. That they had destroyed all truth of the understanding, is signified by, 'he was a murderer from the beginning, and stood not in the Truth, because there is no Truth in him' (John viii.44).

754. The reason the devil's hatred is against spiritual truths and goods, is that merely natural truths and goods are the direct opposites of them; for truths and goods merely natural are in their essence falsities and evils, although before those who are merely natural and sensuous they appear as truths and goods, because their goods are the pleasures and delights which spring from the loves of self and of the world, and their truths are the things which favour these goods; and, as the loves of self and of the world are from Hell, these goods and truths are in their essence evils and falsities.

— . But spiritual truths and goods are, in their essence, truths and goods, because the goods are the delights which spring from love to the Lord and from love towards the neighbour; and the truths are the things which teach these goods; and, as these truths and goods are through Heaven from the Lord, therefore they are called spiritual . . .

759¹. 'The wings of the eagle'=the understanding of truth; for all who are of the New Church have the understanding enlightened, by virtue of which they can see truth from the light of truth, that is, whether it is truth or not truth. And, as they see truth in this way, they acknowledge it, and receive it in the affection which is of the will; and from this the truths with them become spiritual . . .

— . But verily those who are not of this Church, who are those who do not acknowledge the Divine in the Lord's Human, and who do not love truth because it is truth, thus spiritually, cannot have the understanding enlightened so as to be able to see whether a thing is truth or not; but they see appearances of truth as genuine truths, and confirm them as genuine truths by the sense of the letter . . . and yet most things in this sense are appearances of truth; and, if they are confirmed as genuine truths, they are falsified, and falsified truths are falsities. Des.

768. An ardent endeavour . . . to assault the truths of doctrine of the New Church. Sig. and Ex.

776. Against the man who is in truths from good (the beast and the dragon) have no power; and in every case they have less power in proportion as truths are multiplied in a man . . .

780^c. For every truth from the Lord, in its form, is a man . . .

—⁶. By 'Truth' (Is.xi.5) is meant Divine truth.

790^a. First: There is given to man the affection of truth, which is called the spiritual affection of truth, which consists in this: that the man loves truth because it is truth. The reason this affection is given then, is that when evils are removed, the man is in goods from the Lord, and good loves truth, and truth good, and they want to be conjoined together. This affection is given by the Lord alone, because the Lord in Heaven is the Divine truth; and it is given through the Word, because the Lord in the Church is the Word.

— . Secondly: . . . the genuine truths (in man's storehouse) are discriminated and separated from falsities; for the spiritual mind of man cannot be formed except from genuine truths, because Heaven is in no others.

— . Thirdly: These truths are elevated by the Lord in a wonderful way, and become spiritual, which is done by the influx of Heaven; and these truths are there disposed into the heavenly form.

— . Fourthly: But the truths elevated into the spiritual mind are not in a natural form, but in a spiritual one: truths in a spiritual form are such as are in the spiritual sense of the Word; but truths in a natural form are such as are in the natural sense.

—¹². Faith derives all that it has from truth; and this is why it is said . . . the truth of faith.

794³. He who speaks truth for the sake of truth, speaks truth from truth, thus from the Lord, who is truth itself, and the source of all truth.

798³. He, then, in proportion as his faith is from genuine truths, in the same proportion enters Heaven . . .

—⁸. But still, as they have no genuine truths . . . they can come no further than to the threshold of Heaven. To such of them, however, as have loved truths for the sake of truths, Heaven is opened when the Divine order has been restored with them.

799⁷. 'He that speaketh the Truth' (Ps.xv.2)=to be in truths as to doctrine.

803². How a man can be in such enlightenment as to learn the truths which must be of his faith, and in such affection as to do the goods which must be of his love; and can thus know whether his faith is a faith of truth, and his love a love of good. Let him read the Word every day, one or two chapters; and let him learn from a teacher and from preachings the dogmas of his religion; and especially let him learn that there is one God; that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth; that the Word is holy; that there is a Heaven and a Hell; and a life after death. (2) Let him learn . . . what works are sins. Ex. (3) When the man begins to think for himself . . . it must be to him the first and chief thing to desist from doing evils because they are sins. Ex. (4) In proportion as the man detests these evils because they are contrary to the Word . . . in the same proportion there is given him communion with the Lord, and there is effected for him conjunction with Heaven. Ex. (5) Then, in proportion as the man detests these sins, in the same proportion good affections enter. Ex. (6) In proportion as the man is in these good affections, in the same proportion he is led by the Lord . . . and, in proportion as he acts from them, in the same proportion he does goods. Ex. (7) The spiritual affections which are given by the Lord to the man who is in these good affections, and who acts from them, are the affection of knowing and understanding the truths and goods of Heaven and the Church, together with the affection of willing and doing them; and also the affection of combating with zeal against falsities and evils . . . in both himself and others. (8) In this and in no other way is man reformed; and, in proportion as he knows and believes truths, and wills and does them, in the same proportion is he regenerated, and from being natural becomes spiritual.

[E.] 810. That those who have shut out others from truths, have been shut out from the Divine truths in the Word. Sig. and Ex.

—². Those who are in truths can say the same things as those not in truths; for the latter confirm the separation of faith from good works by the same passages of the Word as those by which the former confirm the conjunction of faith with good works; for . . . it is the perception (men have) of a Thing which causes it to be truth or falsity . . . For the truth with man is not a matter of his speech, but of his perception. . . . This is meant by . . . 'Two women shall be grinding . . . the one shall be taken, and the other left.' 'To grind' = to investigate and learn truths from the Word; he who investigates and learns truths is meant by the grinder who is taken; and he who falsifies truths, by the one who is left. —^e.

811. For when truths have been destroyed, not only do falsities succeed in their place, but evils also. Sig.

817². 'Cain' = truth separated from good; and 'Abel,' good conjoined with truth. And as truth is the first of the Church—for every Church is formed through truths; for every Church commences from truths, that is, from the Knowledges of good and truth—therefore Cain was the first-born. . . . The separation of truth from good is signified by the murder of Abel by Cain; for when everything of the Church is made to consist in truths, or in Knowledges, and not in goods, or in the affections of living according to truths, then good with its affections is killed. And as everything of the Church perishes when truth is separated from good, therefore Cain was banished. . . . But as truths are the first things of the Church—for truths teach life—therefore a mark was set on Cain, lest some one should kill him. . . . And as truth without good is carried hither and thither, because there is nothing to lead it . . . therefore Cain . . . became a fugitive and a wanderer.

—⁶. All the wars waged . . . with the Philistines, represented . . . the combats of truth conjoined with good with truth separated from good, which in itself is not truth, but falsity; for truth separated from good is falsified in the idea of thought about it; the cause of which is that there is nothing spiritual in the thought to enlighten it. This is why those in faith separated from charity have no truth, except merely as to their speech or preaching from the Word: the idea of the truth perishes the moment it is thought about.

—⁸. Philistia = the Church, or those in the Church, who are in truths from the sense of the letter . . . or from some other revelation, and yet are in filthy loves; whence their truths are not alive; and truths which are not alive are turned into falsities when [they pass] from the exterior thought . . . into the interior . . .

—⁴. For without this acknowledgment (that the Lord is 'the Son of the living God') truth is not truth; for truth derives its origin, essence, and life from good, and good from the Lord.

— . As soon as good is implanted in truths with a man, he is conjoined with the Angels; but so long as good has not been implanted in truths with a man, so long Heaven is closed to him; for then instead of good he has evil, and instead of truths he has falsities.

any dictate, or by means of any perceptible inspiration, but by means of an influx into his spiritual delight, whence he has a perception according to the truths of which his understanding consists; and, when he acts from this influx, he appears to be acting from himself, and yet he acknowledges in his heart that it is from the Lord.

826². Those in the Third Heaven . . . possess truths inscribed on their life, and not on the memory . . . and this is why they never speak about truths, but only hear others speaking about them . . . for they see in themselves whether what they hear is truth or not; and this they see not from any sight in the thought . . . but from the affection of truth in the understanding; for with them all truths are inscribed on their affections, which derive their essence from celestial love . . . Thus, with them, truths make a one with their affections . . . 831³.

—¹. (Thus) love to the Lord consists in doing truths from the affection of them.

—⁴. But the spiritual Angels do not admit any truth into the memory . . . unless they see it; for the Angels in that Heaven see truths from the light of truth, thus by enlightenment from the Lord; for in the Heavens truths are spiritual objects, which appear before the Angels more clearly than natural objects do before men in the world. Ex. . . These Angels are perfected in understanding in proportion as they are in the love of truth for the sake of life and its genuine uses; and in the same proportion truths are implanted in their life, and they become affections of truth. Ex.

—⁵. As their love is the love of truth, therefore they acknowledge as the neighbour truth in act, which is called spiritual good. Ex.

832³. All love becomes spiritual through truths from the Word. Ex.

—⁴. But if you say that spiritual truths cannot be seen . . . be it known that he who loves truth from truth, that is, because it is truth, can see spiritual truths; and those which he does not see (here), he sees in Heaven. The very love of truth receives the light of Heaven, which enlightens the understanding. Moreover, everyone can receive in thought and understand truths more than he himself knows, unless his Own love induces obscurity . . . For evil Spirits have understood spiritual truths just as well as good Spirits . . . from which it was evident that every man has the faculty of understanding truths, and even of seeing them; but that nothing except the love of truth for the sake of truths causes a man to understand them rationally in the world and spiritually after death.

—⁵. But the love with man, and consequently his life, does not become spiritual by merely knowing and understanding truths, unless he also wills and does them. Ex.

—⁶. For the truths of the understanding reside in the love.

834. The Angels of the First Heaven . . . do not see truths in the light, as do those of the Second Heaven; but they receive, acknowledge, and believe them from doctrine, in which they are instructed before they are admitted into Heaven.

836. 'The free'=those who think from themselves . . . and to think from one's self is to see from one's self whether a thing is truth or falsity. Ex.

—^e. 'Bondmen'=those who do not think from themselves, but from others, and do not see whether a thing is truth or falsity, but still acknowledge that it is truth.

837¹². Such do not see in the Word . . . a single genuine truth of the Church.

—¹³. The reason is that no truth is possible with man . . . unless he wills and does it. Ex.

846². In order that man may see and perceive, from enlightenment, the genuine Truths of the Word, these three degrees of the understanding, the natural, the rational, and the spiritual, must be together. Ex.

—³. (Thus) the Lord wills that man should not only know the truths of his own Church, but should also understand them, yet not from natural light separated from spiritual light. Ex.

—⁴. To comprehend the Things of the Church from natural light, is not to understand them . . . for by this light alone man sees truths as falsities, and falsities as truths; and this is especially what takes place when any received dogma is assumed as if it were truth itself, with no previous investigation as to whether it is truth or not. Ex.

—⁵. (Thus) an understanding of the truths of the Church means an understanding of them which is enlightened by the light of Heaven . . . The man who is in this enlightenment is able to see the truths of the Church, in the world rationally, and after death spiritually.

847^e. It is surprising that through a single truth wrongly understood, all the truths and goods of the Church . . . have been rejected.

863. 'For they are virgins'=because they are in the affection of truth for the sake of truth.

—⁶. Natural affection of truth exists in almost everyone, especially during childhood. Ex.

—⁷. Therefore he who, from spiritual love, receives truth because it is truth, receives the Lord.

867². (Although) the doctrine of faith separated from life does not teach the truths through which man may be reformed as to his life, those who are in the Lord are kept in the spiritual affection of truth; and those who are in this affection may indeed receive falsities, but still not with full consent, but only . . . in so far as they agree with good and the derivative truths; and therefore when those who are in the spiritual affection of truth imbibed any falsities, they easily reject them when they hear truths, both in this world and in the other. Such is the spiritual affection of truth; and therefore those who are in this affection are perfected to eternity in intelligence and wisdom; and they also have the faculty of understanding truths; whereas those who are not in this affection refuse both to understand and to listen to truths, and therefore are not in any faculty of understanding them.

[E.] 885². Some (permit the teaching of faith conjoined with life) because they cannot openly resist the Truth itself; for Truth operates and persuades in unseen ways; for it inflows from Heaven with everyone; and is received by those who do not live evilly . . .

889². (Thus) man is either his own truth, or his own falsity (and this) not only as to the thoughts which are from his will, but also as to his whole body. Ex.

895². All Angels and good Spirits see the truths of Heaven, as the eye of the body sees the objects of the world; for the objects of Heaven are truths to those who are spiritual . . .

— Why the term Truth should be used instead of faith. Ex.

904². They had loved the Truth because they had regarded lies and slanders as wicked.

918². Charity, that is, spiritual good, is to do good because it is truth, thus it is to do truth; and to do truth is to do the things which have been commanded by the Lord in His Word.

923². Without the opening of the spiritual mind . . . no understanding of truth is possible. He who believes that he can see any truth of the Church from the light of reason, is much mistaken. He may indeed know it from some one else; but he cannot see it in light. And when he wants to see it . . . mere shades from falsities . . . blind him.

931. The generals of truth in the Word transparent from spiritual truths which are from the good of love. Sig. and Ex.

950². The falsities which have devastated the Church, can be dispelled only by means of genuine truth opened in the Word. Ex.

970. There was a discussion as to whether everyone has the faculty of understanding truths; and an infernal Spirit was (found) to understand the truths of Heaven when he heard them as well as a good Spirit . . .

— Those who are not willing (to understand truths) appear not to be able, although they would be able if they were willing. Ex.

975². The goodness of the works increases with a man according to the fulness of the Truths from the affection of which they are done; for the man who is averse to evils as sins wants to know truths, because truths teach uses, and the quality of their good. This is why good loves truth, and truth loves good, and why they want to be conjoined. In proportion, therefore, as such a man learns truths from the affection of them, in the same proportion he does goods more wisely and fully. Ex.

1008. That he may not be devoid of truths, and thus devoid of goods. Sig. and Ex. . . For those who are devoid of truths are also devoid of goods; for all good is acquired by means of truths; and besides, good without truth is not good, and truth without good is not truth. In order for there to be truth, it must be conjoined with good; and in order for there to be good, it must be conjoined with truth. There may indeed be truth without good, and good without truth; but truth without good is dead, and so is good without truth. For truth has its being from good; and good has its coming into existence through truth. Thus 'to walk naked' = to be without truths, and consequently without goods.

1076². For all the light which proceeds from love is felt as truth.

1087². For the Lord does not reform and regenerate man except through truths in ultimates, which are natural ones.

1089². In a word, he who loves truth because it is truth, can as it were interrogate the Lord in doubtful matters of faith, and can receive answers from Him, but nowhere else than in the Word; for the reason that the Lord is the Word.

1099². But he who thinks from few truths, thus from little intelligence, when he thinks from love is indeed conjoined with Heaven, but in its more ultimate parts.

1141². That to think and speak truth, and to will and do good, from freedom according to reason, is not from man, but from the Lord. Ex.

1147⁴. A truth from the Word was uttered from Heaven in a loud voice, and flowed down to the bottom of Hell; and as it flowed down it was heard that it was successively turned into falsity; and at last into such a falsity as was exactly opposite to the truth . . . Thus the truth, flowing into inverted forms, was successively inverted.

1150². All things (which proceed from celestial good) relate to truth; and truth, in its form, is wisdom. This truth, because it derives its essence from the good of celestial love, is called the good of wisdom.

1158². That man is not let into the truths of faith and goods of love . . . except in proportion as he can be kept in them to the end of life. Gen.art.

1173². That the Lord does not immediately teach man truths, neither from himself, nor through the Angels; but mediately through the Word, preachings, readings, and conversations and intercourse with others, and thus by thought within one's self from these things; and that man is then enlightened according to his affection of truth from use. Ex.

1179². The good of love is from God, immediately; the truth of faith also is from God, but mediately. The good of love is that through which God leads man; and the truth of faith is that by means of which man is led. . . The truth of faith appears to man as if it were his own, because it is from those things which he himself acquires for himself as if of himself. God, therefore, conjoins Himself with man through the good of love; and man conjoins himself with God as if from himself through the truth of faith. . . The Lord continually inflows with the full good of love, but still He cannot be conjoined with man in the full truth of faith, but solely in that which is with the man, and this is various. Ex.

1199. 'True and just' (Rev. xix. 2) = the things which are of His Divine wisdom, and at the same time those which are of His Divine love. Ex.

J. (Post.) 192. The evil Spirits . . . could not say anything against these (truths); for the Truth closes the mouth, because it does not allow the understanding to think against it. Hence it was evident that those who are in the simple faith of truth resist the evil; and I have seen some who were in truths who passed through many Hells, and all (there) receded . . . and could do no harm.

D. Wis. 10. Those have spiritual light who love to understand whether that which another says is true . . .

xi. 2a. That Truth becomes Truth when it is perceived and loved; and that it is called faith when it is known and thought. Ex.

— All Truth is in light. Ex.

— Those in the love of truth are actually in the light of Heaven; and therefore are in the illustration and perception of truth when they are reading the Word. But no others are in the illustration and perception of truth . . .

— Those in the love of truth, while they are reading the Word and thinking from it, keep the sight of their understanding constantly on the principle itself, and thus seek to know whether it is truth before it is confirmed. Whereas all others assume a principle from the knowledge of the memory, without wanting to know whether it is truth . . .

— Hence those in the love of truth are wise and become spiritual; whereas all others remain natural . . .

3a. That the truths of faith regard the Lord on one side, and the neighbour on the other. Ex.

— All truths regard as their universal objects the three following things: the Lord and Heaven, above them; the world and the neighbour, near them; and the devil and Hell, below them; and truths must teach man how he can be separated from the devil and Hell, and conjoined with the Lord and Heaven, and this by means of a life in the world in which he is, and with the neighbour with whom he is. Ex.

4a. That truths teach how the Lord is to be approached; and afterwards how the Lord does uses through man. Ex.

5a. That both of these are taught by truths spiritual, moral, and civil. Ex.

— Spiritual truths are those which the Word teaches about God, (enum.); that the Word is holy and Divine; that there is a life after death, etc. These and the like things are properly spiritual truths. Moral truths are those which the Word teaches about the life of man with the neighbour . . . Civil truths are the civil laws of kingdoms and states . . .

6a. Truth becomes charity when man wills and does it. Ex. . . Truth is like a seed, which when out of the ground is merely a seed; but when it goes into the ground, it becomes a plant . . . puts on its form, and thus another name. Truth is also like a garment which apart from the man is merely a piece of cloth fitted to the body; but when it is put on, it becomes clothing within which is a man. It is the like with Truth and charity: so long as Truth is known and thought it is merely Truth, and is called faith; but when the man wills and does it, it becomes charity.

7a. The first truths with a man, which are called faith, are not as yet alive; for they are of the memory only, and of the derivative thought and speech, and are adjoined to his natural love, which imbibes them from its desire of knowing; and, from its desire of glorying . . . it excites them, so that he either thinks or speaks them. But these truths first become alive when the man is being regenerated, which takes place through a life according to them . . . The spiritual mind is then opened, in which there takes place a conjunction of the Lord with the man, and the truths of infancy, childhood, and first adolescence are consequently made alive.

C. 113. But they who are not in charity do not love truth in light; but they can love truth in shade; and this truth is the truth of faith of the present day; that is, truth is to be believed although it is not seen in the understanding . . .

[C.] 211. The very affection of love is like a flame, from which there is light in truths: the reason is that the Lord inflows into the affection of man, and gives light.

212. That there is no Church where there is no truth of faith; and no religion where there is no good of life. Ex.

Inv. 6. All truths are dissipated (by miracles).

22. Man cannot find out one single Divine truth unless he approaches the Lord immediately. Ex. . . This is why there is not one single truth left in the Church. 38.

27. No one can see the desolation of truth in the Church until Truths from the Word come into the light; and what heretic knows otherwise than that all his [ideas] are Truths?

Docu. 302. C. 10. The determinations (of the love) through the understanding are called truths.

Truth from good. Verum ex bono.

A. 2063². The truth . . . was not yet so united to good as to be truth from good. But when it was so united to good as to proceed from good . . . the truth also was then good, because it was the truth of good. Ex.

2065. 'Sarah' = the truth of good, which is intellectual truth.

2180. The Lord's Rational is called 'tender' from the Celestial Spiritual, or the truth of good. 2184¹.

2227. Truth from good, in the genuine sense, is spiritual good. Ex.

2235. Truth derives its essence from good, and is called truth from good . . .

2643. 'Milk' = what is spiritual from a celestial origin, or truth from good.

2729. No one can be in genuine conjugal love, unless he is in the good of truth and the truth of good from the Lord.

2774. 'Isaac' = the quality (of the Divine Rational), namely, that it is the good of truth and the truth of good; that is, the Divine marriage as to the Lord's Human.

3009. In order that the truth signified by 'king' might be from good, and thus the truth of good, (the kings were anointed).

3010^e. Thus a Christian is one who is in truth from good.

3157^e. When the truth of faith has been received by the will . . . the man is regenerate; for then truth is of good, or faith is of charity. 3175³.

3195². By 'light,' in the Word, is signified the truth which is from good.

3207. The affection of truth . . . then becomes the truth of good . . .

3242³. 'Midian' . . . = those who are in the truth of simple good, and thus allow themselves to be easily persuaded.

3300³. 'Garments like him that treadeth in the wine-vat' = the truth of good.

3316⁴. 'Meal' = the truth which is from good, or the Spiritual which is from the Celestial. 4335, Ex. 4844¹². 9198⁷.

3501. 'Hunt me a hunting' = the truth of good. 3502^e.

3519. 'Two good kids of the goats' = the truths of (domestic) good. 3540.

3571. 'The smell of my son' = what is grateful from the truth of good. 3575.

3575. 'Garments,' being those of Esau, = the truth of good.

— The truth of good is that which is produced in the Natural through the influx of the Rational immediate and mediate. This truth was what was desired; but, as it could not be produced through immediate influx from the good of the Rational, unless at the same time through mediate, that is, through the truth of the Rational . . . therefore by 'smelling the smell of his garments' is signified the truth of good, that it was perceived. 3576, Ex.

3576^e. Thus truth will become of good.

3577. 'The smell of a field' = the perception of truth from good.

3579¹. 'Dew' = the truth of good which is from a state of innocence and peace. III.

3581. 'Peoples shall bow down to thee' = the truths of good, which are spiritual goods, and are called truths relatively; the goods of charity are such truths.

3588. 'Esau his brother came in from his hunting' = the truth of good and its coming. . . 'Hunting' = the truth which is from good. 3594.

3614. The truth of good which is represented by Esau.

3623. (The understanding and the will) make a one when the understanding is of the will, or, what is the same, when truth is of good.

3677. 'Esau' = the truth of good, or the good from which is truth in the Natural. (See 3669.)

3679⁷. At first, the truth of good, which is 'Esau,' is not conjoined in the external form with the good of truth, which is 'Jacob'; for the good of truth, relatively to the truth of good, is inverted; but still they are conjoined inmosty, that is, as to ends. Ex. 3688². Examp.

3688³. The truth of good, which is interior, inflows thus into these acts.

3703¹². 'Her clothing is inwrought with gold' = the quality of this truth from good.

3709. That all the truths of the good of doctrine should be conjoined with good. Sig. and Ex.

3775. 'Jacob said to them' = the truth of good.

3956. 'Reward,' in the supreme sense, = the Divine good of truth and truth of good.

3960⁴. The former (words) = the truth of good; and the latter, the good of truth, both together making the heavenly marriage.

3995². (After regeneration) truth is done from good. This shows what . . . the truth of good is.

—². 'The he-goats-capri'=the truths of good.

4038. 'Camels and asses'=exterior and external truths of good. Ex.

4063. The truths of the good signified by 'Laban,' of what quality they were . . . Sig. and Ex.

4070. 'Nativity'=the truth which is from good; for all truth is born from good . . . and it is called truth because it is of good, and because it confirms that from which it is, that is, good.

4166. That no truths of good had been his own, but all given. Sig. and Ex.

4170. The truths of good, that of this he took nothing. Sig. and Ex.

—, 'Rams'=truths of good.

4192. 'They took stones, and made a heap'=truths from good. Ex.

4241. 'The field of Edom'=truth from good.

—, The truths which are from good are those which man acquires after regeneration; for (then) truths proceed from good, since he then perceives and knows from good that they are true.

4287^e. The truth which is from good is called 'vir homo,' and also 'the son of man.'

4328². The lucid flaming appearance represented truth from good.

4385. That some things from the truth of good should be conjoined. Sig. and Ex.

—, The truths of good are those truths which proceed from good, and which accompany the good that inflows through the internal man into the external.

4402¹¹. 'Horn of unicorn'=the power of truth from good.

4574. 'A company of nations'=truths which are from good, or, what is the same, forms of good.

—². Truths from good are said to be forms of good, because they are nothing else than goods formed. (Continued under TRUTH.)

4592¹³. 'Joseph'=the good of truth; and 'Benjamin,' the truth of this good, or the Spiritual of the Celestial. (These together) are the Conjugal in Heaven.

—¹⁴. As the truth of good, which is intermediate between celestial good and spiritual truth, was represented by Benjamin, Jerusalem fell to his inheritance; for 'Jerusalem' (then) signified the Church in general.

4647^e. The principal of the truths of good. Sig. 4648³.

4742. 'The coat of many colours'=the quality of the appearances as to truths from good.

4748². A fragrant odour corresponds to a grateful perception, such as is that of truth from good.

4809⁶. 'He shall set the sheep on His right hand, but the goats on the left'=separation according to truths from good, and falsities from evil.

4816. Adullam was on the boundary of the inheritance of Judah, and hence signified the truth which is from good.

4858. A simulation of truth from good. Sig. and Ex.

4925. 'His brother came out'=the truth of good. . . The truth of good is that truth which is from good, or that faith which is from charity.

4932. Those in the hands, arms, and shoulders, are those who are in power through the truth of faith from good; for they who are in the truth of faith from good are in the power of the Lord; for they attribute all power to Him.

5044³. For the Heavens are distinguished into sovereignties according to truths from good.

5117. 'Clusters'=the truth of spiritual good.

5221². There is no tranquillity until truths from good have been replaced in their order.

5280³. Then, as the man suffers himself to be regenerated, there is insinuated by the Lord, through an internal way, the light of truth from good into the Natural, into which light truths are remitted, in order.

5328^e. Therefore power . . . is predicated of the Spiritual, namely, of truth from good.

7995. The laws of order are truths which are from good; and the complex of all the laws of order is the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord's Divine good.

8018. That the Lord delivered from damnation those who were in the good of truth and truth of good. Sig. and Ex.

8042³. When man is in the good of charity he has been regenerated; and then from that good he begets truths which are called the truths of good. It is these truths, which are the veriest truths of faith, that are meant by 'the first-born'; for the generations or births of truths from good are circumstanced like those of sons and daughters from their parent; afterwards of grandsons and granddaughters; then of great grandsons and great granddaughters; and so on.

8056. 'Milk' is predicated of the truth of good; and 'honey' of the good of truth.

8197. '(The pillar of cloud) illuminated the night'=the enlightenment of truth from good.

8279. Truth from good is of such a nature that it rises to higher things, like a light body in the world.

8301. That all the truth of good proceeds from the Divine Human of the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

— For truths may proceed from anyone; but truths from good only from the Lord, consequently from those who are in good from the Lord.

8315^e. The word by which 'mighty ones' is here expressed in the Hebrew, is predicated of those who are in truth from good; and, in the opposite sense, of those who are in falsity from evil.

8321. That thus, without danger of infestation, all will be saved who are in the faculty of receiving the truth of good and the good of truth. Sig. and Ex.

A. 223. The Lord never turns away His face from anyone; but it is man, who when in evil, turns away his own face.

245°. The Lord turns it into good.

330. Because they had turned away from the Lord.

927. That man would not any more so turn himself away. Sig. and Ex. -

1093. 'To be cursed' = to turn one's self away. 5971.

2045°. Turns the light into ugly colours . . . as a wicked man turns benefits into vituperations and malice.

2123. All the good which inflows . . . into the World of Spirits is turned in a moment into evil . . . and all the truth into falsity . . .

2454. That truth turned itself away from good. Sig. and Ex.

—°. To turn one's self away from good to truth. Sig.

2749. Heavenly delight is turned in them into what is loathsome.

2888. (The influent life from the Lord) is turned in the evil into what is evil and false. Ex. 3957⁷. 5118². 6467. 6991.

3638. However one may turn himself, the Societies there always maintain the same relative situation to him. Ex. 3639.

4214³. The light of Heaven with such is at once turned into fatuous lumen. Ex.

4255³. The Knowledges of good are said to 'turn themselves back' (Ps.cxiv.3) when the good of love obtains the dominion. Ex.

4493°. All the evil which the evil intend for the good, the Lord turns into good. Examp.

4681. Contempt and turning away from Divine truth. Sig. and Ex.

5034. A turning away from spiritual truth. Sig. and Ex.

—°. The reason 'anger' = a turning away, is that while a man is in anger against anyone, he turns away his lower mind from him. 5798.

5145³. Good (then) flows through . . . to the Sensuous, and is there . . . turned into what is filthy . . .

5268. For when the things which take place in Heaven flow down towards Hell, they are turned into the opposites.

5390. They turned clean things into unclean ones.

5492°. Human thought and speech are turned into spiritual thought and speech when they ascend.

5650°. Man is placed in this state . . . in order that he may be in freedom to turn whither he will . . .

5651². Whatever good inflows from the Lord is turned in the Natural into evil.

5746. Why is there a turning away? Sig. and Ex.

—°. For evil is nothing else than a turning away from good. Ex.

5798. Lest he turn himself away. Sig. and Ex.

5820°. To turn truths into goods by willing and doing them. Sig.

6089². The state is then inverted. Ex.

6356. That they had completely turned themselves away, and in their turning away had extinguished faith. Sig. and Ex.

6358. A grievous turning away from good, and the consequent condemnation. Sig. and Ex.

6359. A turning away from the derivative truth, that it was confirmed. Sig. and Ex.

—°. 'Wrath' = a turning away from truth.

6408°. After death (this delight) is turned into what is sad and shocking.

6507°. When the truth of the Spiritual Church becomes good, a turning takes place. Ex.

6564. That they had been turned away from the good and truth which inflow. Sig. and Ex.

—°. 'Evil' = a turning away.

6572. That the Divine turns evil into good. Sig. 6574³. Ex.

6663². In such combats . . . the Lord turns into good all the evils which the Hells intend. Ex.

6832². When the fire of love from the Lord as a Sun enters those who are in contrary things, it is turned into the fire of cupidities . . . which is what torments the infernals. Ex.

[A.] 6884. At the first threshold of Heaven, what is worldly of the sense of the letter is turned into the spiritual sense.

6948°. Sensuous lumen is turned into mere thick darkness when light from Heaven falls upon it.

6951. The serpent is turned into a rod, that is, evil into good.

7007°. The glorying and gladness of the wicked is . . . there turned into infernal unhappiness.

7112°. When the Angels perceive the ideas of such (natural things) with man, they turn them into the corresponding spiritual ones.

7295°. Evil men also, can, if they will, turn themselves to Heaven . . .

—³. The second degree, is described by the waters of Egypt turned into blood. (= truths falsified. 7317.)

7343. Hence the infernals turn the influent Divine truth into falsities; and the Divine good into evil; heavenly loves into diabolical ones; mercy into hatred and cruelty; and conjugal love into adulteries; thus into the contraries. Ex.

7442°. If the Sensuous is full of phantasies and fallacies . . . the truths which inflow are turned into like things; for they are received according to the induced form; and in proportion as truths are turned into falsities, in the same proportion the interiors . . . are closed.

7643°. Thus man turns into evil the good itself which inflows from the Lord.

7693°. For wherever the love turns itself, there the interiors of the man turn themselves. 7818.

7796°. Turns into evil the Divine good which continually inflows.

7817. Man looks below himself, when he turns to himself the influx of truth and good from the Lord. Ex.

7906°. This fermentation arises when the state is turned with man. Ex.

8455°. This delight is (there) turned into undelight.

8483. That they turned away truth Divine from themselves. Sig. and Ex.

8521°. The (imperfect) quality of the truth which is turned into good with many.

8626°. Devils are allowed to act so far as . . . their evil can be turned into good.

8882. 'To take the name of God in vain' = to turn truth into evil. Ex.

9010. For when man does evils, and thereby turns himself away from the Lord, it appears as if the Lord turns Himself away. Ex.

9193°. When the internal man is closed, truths are turned into falsities.

9252. Not to consociate with those who turn goods and truths into evils and falsities; and the converse. Sig. and Ex.

9308. A turning away from Him through falsities from evil. Sig. and Ex.

9313. That the Lord will turn away all falsities from evil. Sig. and Ex.

9314. That He will turn away all the evils from which are falsities. Sig. and Ex.

9346. Lest evils turn away the goods which are from the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

— . 'To sin' = to turn away.

9434°. With these, the Divine love . . . is turned into the fire or love of self and of the world . . .

9447. The infernal loves . . . in which they are, turn the influx of good into evil, and that of truth into falsity.

9668°. No one in Heaven can look backwards from the Lord however he may turn himself. 9828°.

9849. For when a man turns himself away from the Lord, which is when he does evil, it appears as if the Lord did not see him . . . and the contrary when a man turns himself to the Lord, which is when he does what is good. Ex.

9864°. All in Heaven turn the face to the Lord, to whatever quarter they may turn—convertunt—themselves. 10130°.

10130°. All (there) turn their eyes to those whom they love; they who love the Lord, turn their eyes to Him as a Sun; they who love the neighbour . . . turn their eyes to the Lord as a Moon; (and this) in whatever direction they turn themselves . . . But in Hell, the more they are in the love of self and the world, the more they turn themselves from the Lord . . . in whatever direction they turn themselves. 10189°.

10189°. All are known there from their turning—versione.

10396°. For the man then turns himself from Heaven and the Lord to the world and self; and his heart is where he turns himself.

10420. That they have quite turned themselves away from the Divine. Sig. and Ex.

10420°. Spirits turn themselves according to their loves.

10431. That thus they turn themselves away from internal things, thus from Divine ones, so that they must needs perish. Sig. and Ex.

10460. The turning away of that nation from the internal of the Word, etc. Sig. and Ex.

10498. Total alienation and turning away. Sig. and Ex.

10506. That they will perish who turn themselves away from the Divine. Sig. and Ex.

10579°. The Lord never turns away His face from man; but the man who is in evil turns away his own face from the Lord; and, as the Lord is then behind him, it appears as though He hides or turns away; and it is a fact that all infernal Spirits turn the back to the Lord as a Sun, but the Angels the face; and in like manner man as to his spirit. H. 545°.

10702. Some men turn themselves to the Lord, and thus to Heaven (in respect to the things of the Word); and some to themselves and the world; they who turn themselves to the Lord receive influx thence . . . but they who turn themselves to themselves and the world, cannot receive any influx from the Lord, and are therefore in no illustration. Ex.

—². The interiors of man also actually turn themselves according to the loves.

—^e. To turn one's self to the Lord, is to be turned by the Lord Himself. . . . But to turn one's self to self is to be turned by Hell . . . H. 17^e.

H. 26. All truth is turned into good as soon as it enters the will.

123². The reason (Angels and infernals) turn themselves in this way, is that all in the other life look towards the things which reign in their interiors, thus to their loves . . . Man, too, as to his spirit, turns himself in the same way . . .

142. The whole Heaven turns itself to the Lord as its common centre; and hence all the Angels turn themselves thither . . . The interiors of the Angels are actually turned forwards . . .

143. The east is in front of the Angels in every turning-conversione-of their faces and bodies . . . The Angels, like men, turn and bend their faces and bodies in every direction . . . but the turnings-conversiones-of the Angels are not like those of men . . . for the reigning love is the origin with them. Ex.

165. Thus is a natural idea of man turned into a spiritual idea with the Angels.

223². If anyone in the congregation dissents, he must turn away his face.

272². As heavenly loves open the interiors to the Lord, therefore all the Angels turn their faces to Him; for in the Spiritual World it is the love which turns the interiors of everyone to itself, and wherever it turns the interiors, it also turns the face. Ex.

401. The delights of the love of self and the world are there turned into painful and direful things . . .

479². (In the third state after death) he turns-convertit-his face constantly to his own love . . . however he may turn himself round-circumvertit.

—⁴. (Even) the spirit in man, when it turns itself away from another, is no longer in his view.

485. That after death the delights of life of everyone are turned into corresponding things. Chapter.

511^e. At sight of them the good Spirits turn themselves away; and, in proportion as they turn themselves away, the evil Spirits who are being carried round, have their faces turned away from them to the quarter where is their infernal Society. Not to mention other methods of separation.

546². If the Lord were to turn Himself away, and the man were to be left to his evil alone, he would be no longer a man.

548. He then turns himself away from the Lord, and turns his face to the Hell with which he had been conjoined here.

561. The interiors . . . of those who love themselves above all things are turned to self and the world, thus are turned away from the Lord and Heaven.

579. Genii, in a moment, turn good affections into evil ones. Ex.

583^e. Good Spirits can see evil ones; but they turn themselves away from them; and Spirits who turn themselves away, become invisible.

S. 97. For the sense of the letter can be turned in every direction . . . without its internal being injured. . . . This guard is signified by 'the cherubs and flaming sword which turned this way and that' (Gen. iii. 24).

W. 105. The third reason (why the Sun appears at a middle height) is that the Angels are thus enabled to turn their faces constantly to the Lord.

129. That the Angels constantly turn their faces to the Lord as a Sun. Gen. art. P. 29².

— . All that is here said of the turning-conversione of the Angels to the Lord as a Sun, is to be understood of man also, as to his spirit. Ill.

130. That the Angels turn their faces constantly to the Lord as a Sun, is because they are in the Lord and the Lord in them, and the Lord interiorly leads their affections and thoughts, and turns them constantly to Himself. . . . from which it is evident that the Angels do not turn themselves to the Lord, but that He turns them to Himself. Ex. P. 29².

131. The turning-conversio-of the Angels to the Lord is such that in every turning-conversione-of their bodies they look to the Lord as a Sun before them. An Angel can turn-convertere-himself round and round, and thus see the various things around him, and still the Lord as a Sun appears constantly before his face. . . . For many years I, too, have thus seen the Lord as a Sun, to whatever quarter of the world I have turned-converteram-myself.

133. (Thus) the universal Heaven turns itself to the Lord, and, by this turning-conversionem, Heaven is ruled . . . as one man.

135. That all the interiors, of both mind and body, of the Angels, are turned to the Lord as a Sun. Gen. art. 137, Ex.

138. This turning-conversio-to the Lord is an actual turning-conversio: it is a kind of elevation. Ex.

—^e. Hence it is that these turn themselves back from the Lord; and (this) is to turn themselves to Hell.

139. This actual turning-conversio-to the Lord, is from love and at the same time wisdom. Ex.

140. That every Spirit, whatever his quality, in like manner turns himself to his reigning love. Gen. art. 143, Ex.

142. As all in love to the Lord turn themselves to the Lord as a Sun . . . all in the love of dominating from the love of self turn themselves back from the Lord. The reason they thus turn themselves in an opposite way. Ex. 144.

144. They can turn themselves round and round, yet all the things they see around them appear like their love.

P. 38^e. They are (then) turned into direfulnesses.

83². This delight of infernal love is turned into what is undelightful, painful, and direful. 324⁸.

—⁶. With him who is being regenerated, the order of life is turned . . .

95². The man then turns his face from the devil to the Lord; and, when he turns his face to the Lord, love and wisdom are given him: these enter man by the face, and not by the nape.

327. Good can be turned into evil, not by good, but by the recipient evil; for every form turns what flows into it into its own quality.

R. 938. 'They shall see His face . . . '=that they will turn themselves to the Lord, and the Lord will turn Himself to them, because they are conjoined by love.

M. 42⁴. She then turned herself away sideways from her husband, and I could survey her more intently.

444⁴. Man himself, by a turning-conversionem-from God to himself, implanted in himself the origin of evil.

—⁶. I will call any evil Spirit, who turns away himself from God, and I will speak to him from behind, and you will see that (all) things are turned into their contraries.

I. 13⁴. All the Angels of Heaven turn the forehead to the Lord as a Sun, and all the angels of Hell turn the occiput to Him. (The consequence.)

T. 70^e. Man himself turns himself away as does the Earth from the sun; and, when he turns himself away from the truths of wisdom, it is like the Earth turned away from the sun in the night-time; and, when he turns himself away from the goods of love, it is like the Earth turned away from the sun in the winter-time.

310. 'Murder,' in the spiritual sense, means . . . to turn men away from God . . . by persuading to such things as cause a turning away, and also aversion.

490². Evil was introduced by man, because man turns into evil the good which is continually inflowing from God, by turning away himself from God, and turning-convertet-himself to himself.

613. All in Hell turn away the face from the Lord . . .

—². As evils are removed, they turn away themselves from the Lord, and successively invert themselves.

650. The appearances of truth, while passing from man to Heaven, are turned into genuine truths . . . I have often observed this . . . turning in the World of Spirits.

767². An evil Spirit perpetually turns himself away from the Lord, and constantly looks towards his own love, and this in every turning-conversione-of his body and face. Ex.

D. 1992. How good is turned into evil by Spirits. Ex.

1993. Three general causes by which good is turned into evil . . .

1994. And in like manner by which truth is turned into falsity.

2334^e. Wherever I turned my body, (all the Spirits) appeared in the same relative situation in regard to it.

3021. Good is turned into evil by the evil, and truth into falsity . . .

3133^e. So that the Spirit is turned into such things.

3640. The evil are thus turned into serpents . . .

3679. I asked whether anyone had been turned into a dog . . .

3726. All good inflowing into the World of Spirits is turned into evil . . .

4098^e. A Siren who could turn others into monsters, and into apes. 4381.

4406. Mutual love and the faith of Heaven . . . when they descend into the World of Spirits . . . are turned into a filthy adulterine sphere.

4428^e. He said that he regards such things, but they are sometimes turned into mire.

4471. The evils they try to inflict, are turned by the Lord into good. 5509.

4705. On those who are turned into animals.

4850. On turning-ersione to the Lord, and on turning-ersione-from the Lord.

— . To be turned to Him is a sign of being led by Him, and of being continually in His presence . . .

5111. That the evil can be thus vastated . . . is because they thus turn themselves to their loves: whithersoever they turn themselves, their loves are in front of them . . . They cannot be turned from any other source than the Lord . . . but they fall back.

5535a. They are examined . . . and then turn themselves to the west; and, when they are turned to the east, they spring back . . . For to be turned to the west is to be turned to the world; but to be turned to the east is to be turned to Heaven. Some also turn themselves to the east while they are thinking about it . . . but this is apparent; for the Angels then look at their interiors, which turn of their own accord.

5659². When they turned the face to me, they believed; but as soon as they turn themselves to their own loves . . . they are at once in a like faith to that in which they had been in the world.

5904. On those who can turn away the thoughts.

D. Min. 4685. That which was with the Angels . . . was turned into evil and falsity by a wonderful turning-ersionum, or gyre, as it flowed down towards Hell.

E. 159². For these loves . . . turn all their thoughts and intentions to themselves and the world . . . The interiors of man are actually turned to his loves . . . When a man loves God above all things, and the neighbour as himself, then the Lord turns the interiors of his mind to Himself . . . and thus turns them away from his proprium . . . Hence it is that the spirit of man . . . after its release from the body, is actually turned to its own love . . . This may be illustrated by the fact that all the least things of the body turn themselves to the common centre of our world . . . but there is another centre of gravity in the Spiritual World. Ex.

297². The Lord . . . turns and draws all to Himself . . . but those in evil and falsities do not follow (the turning), but turn themselves back from the Lord; and to turn themselves back from the Lord is to turn from Heaven to Hell. Ex.

412²⁰. Man, as to his spirit, then turns himself away from the Lord, and consequently does not perceive good or see truth . . . It is from this appearance that the Lord is said to 'hide His face.' Ill. A. 5585⁶. 5798.

— . That it is man who . . . turns himself away from the Lord. Ill.

—²¹. That the evil turn away their face from the Lord . . . means that they do it with the face of their spirit. Man can turn his face whithersoever he pleases, because he is in a free state to turn himself—convertendum se—to either Heaven or Hell . . . but when he becomes a Spirit . . . he who has lived in evils, completely turns away the face from the Lord. This is meant by, 'They have turned—obverterint—the nape and not the face' (Jer. xxxii. 33).

426⁴. When the good are being separated from the evil . . . the Lord causes (the former) to turn themselves to Him, and thus to turn themselves away from the evil; and, when they turn themselves, they become invisible to the evil; for it is a general thing there, that when anyone turns himself away from another, he becomes invisible to him.

504¹⁵. When the Divine love descends . . . into Societies where the evil are, it is turned into a love contrary to the Divine love, and thus into various ardours of cupidities . . . and (therefore) into torments.

518². That when the Divine truth descends from Heaven into the (World of Spirits), where the evil are, it is turned into falsity. Refs. For the Divine truth is turned into such falsity as is the evil in those with whom it inflows.

526³. 'The sun shall be turned into darkness . . .' (Joel ii. 31). Ex.

645. 'They have Power over the waters, to turn them into blood' (Rev. xi. 6) = that the truths with them are turned into falsities from evil.

780⁷. 'Their backslidings—aversiones—have become strong' (Jer. v. 6) = adulterations of good.

1044⁴. 'To turn and rend' (Matt. vii. 6) = to treat with ignominy and contumely.

1163. For these loves turn all things of the mind downwards and outwards . . .

— . The interiors of all things of the mind . . .

can be turned downwards, and can be turned upwards: they are turned downwards when the man loves himself above all things; and they are turned upwards when he loves the Lord above all things. There is an actual turning—versio. From himself, man turns them downwards; and, from Himself, the Lord turns them upwards. It is the reigning love which turns them. The thoughts do not turn the interiors of the mind except in so far as they derive from the will.

Turn aside. Declinare.

Turning aside, A. Declinatio.

A. 920. When the Church turned aside.

1292². The turning aside (or decline) of the Church. Tr.

2339. They turned aside to him' (Gen. xix. 3) = abode.

3068. 'Let down thy pitcher' (Gen. xxiv. 14) = the submission of scientifics.

4815. 'To turn aside' = to go to falsity, and then to evil.

4816. '(Judah) turned aside to man an Adullamite' (Gen. xxxviii. 1) = to falsity; for 'to turn aside' = to go off into what is perverted, because 'to turn aside,' like 'to descend,' is predicated of far removal from good to evil, and from truth to falsity.

4867. 'He turned aside unto her by the way' (ver. 16) = that it applied itself (to falsity). . . For 'to turn aside' is predicated of falsity.

8096. That they will turn aside from truth in consequence of assaults. Sig. and Ex.

9252. 'To turn aside after many' (Ex. xxiii. 2) = conformation, and thus consociation with many.

9260. 'Thou shalt not turn aside the judgment of thy needy one' (ver. 6) = the non-destruction of a little truth . . . For 'to turn aside' = to pervert, and thus to destroy.

R. 82^e. As the Church declines . . . D. 4070.

1782. The 'turtle-dove,' and 'young pigeon' (Gen. xv. 9) are representatives of spiritual (as distinguished from celestial) things of the Church. 1826.

1827. 'A turtle-dove' = exterior, and 'a young pigeon' interior, spiritual things. Ex.

3994^e. The reason a woman in child-bed . . . was to offer . . . the young of a pigeon, or a turtle-dove (Lev. xii. 6), was that the effect of conjugal love might be signified; for this love is innocence. (And these creatures = the good of innocence. 10129⁴. 10132⁹. 10210^e. E. 314^e).

M. 42². (The angelic married pair) held two turtle-doves in their hands.

137. (Another angelic pair seen as) two little children with turtle-doves flying about them.

270². I saw . . . two turtle-doves flying in the east. . . I saw . . . the turtle-doves fly into the palace through the open windows in the highest row. . . The highest part of the palace, into which the turtle-doves betook themselves, represented the highest region of the mind, where dwells conjugal love in the love of good with its wisdom. . . The pair of turtle-doves also = the conjugal love of the highest region.

A. 575^e. 'Twelve' = faith, or all things which are of faith in one complex.

577. 'Twelve' = faith, or the things which are of love and derivatively of faith in one complex. Ill.

648². (In Rev. xxi. 12-17) the number 'twelve' occurs all through, and this number is most holy, because it = the holy things of faith . . . and it is therefore added that this measure is 'the measure of a man, that is, of an Angel.' 3858³. 6419⁴.

1667³. That 'they served twelve years' (Gen. xiv. 4) = all the time there are such good and truth; for 'twelve' = all things which are of the faith of charity, or of faith from charity.

1925⁵. 'Twelve Angels' (Rev. xxi.) = the same as 'twelve tribes,' that is, all things which are of faith, thus the Lord, from whom is faith and all things of it.

1988. Whenever 'twelve' occurs (in the Word) there comes to the Angels the idea of all things of faith; for the reason that these were signified by the twelve tribes.

2075³. 'Twelve' = all things of faith. 2252². 2336². 3242⁴.

2089. 'Twelve princes shall he beget' (Gen. xvii. 20) = the primary precepts of faith, which are [those] of charity; for 'twelve' = all things of faith.

—². That 'twelve' = all things of faith, has been hitherto unknown . . . and yet whenever 'twelve' occurs in the Word . . . it = nothing else. Ill.

2130^e. The reason twelve Societies appeared was that twelve = all things of faith.

2760, Pref.². The twelve apostles, like the twelve tribes of Israel, represented . . . all things of such faith. Refs.

3239^e. There are, in general, twelve classes (or 'lots,' of the Lord's Kingdom); for by 'twelve' are signified all the things of charity, and, derivatively, of faith, which are of the Lord's Kingdom.

3268. (For) there were twelve (sons of Ishmael); and 'twelve' = all things which are of faith, thus of the Church . . . and therefore it is said that they were 'twelve princes of their peoples' (Gen. xxv. 16); (which words = all the primary things of that Spiritual Church; because 'twelve' = all things of faith, or of the Church. 3272.)

3272. 'Twelve,' everywhere in the Word, = all things; as for instance 'the twelve tribes' . . . and 'the twelve apostles' = all things of faith, and consequently all things of the Church. —², Ill.

3727⁴. That 'twelve' = all things of truth in one complex. Refs.

3858. Why there were twelve tribes. . . In general, the twelve tribes signified all things of the doctrine of truth and good, or of faith and love. . . That 'twelve' = all things in general. Refs.

—³. (Thus) by 'twelve' are meant all things in one complex.

3863. 'The twelve tribes' = the twelve universals. (Continued under TRIBE.)

3913. For the twelve sons of Jacob here [represent] the twelve general or cardinal Things by means of which man is initiated into what is spiritual and celestial. (Continued under TRIBE.)

4592¹³. 'Twelve,' or, what is the same, 'twelve thousand' (Rev. vii.) = all things of love and of faith, or all things of good and truth. Refs.

4603. 'The sons of Jacob were twelve' (Gen. xxxv. 22) = the state of all things now in the Divine Natural. . . For 'twelve' = all things; and, when 'twelve' is predicated of the sons of Jacob, or of the tribes named from them, it = all things of truth and good. Refs.

4918^o. The reason there were 'twelve stars,' is that 'twelve' = all things, thus all things of faith. Refs.

5313¹⁵. 'Twelve lions' (1 Kings x. 20) = all these truths in one complex.

5440. 'We . . . are twelve brethren' (Gen. xlii. 13) = that all things of faith were thus conjoined together; for 'twelve' = all things, and, when predicated of the sons of Jacob, of the tribes, or of the apostles, 'twelve' = all things of faith in one complex. Refs.

6000². 'Twelve hours' (John xi. 9) = all states of truth.

7973. 'Twelve' = all things of faith and charity. Refs.

—². 'Twelve' has a like signification, whether divided into 6, or multiplied into 72, 144, 12000, or 144000. Ill.

8368. 'Twelve fountains of waters' (Ex. xv. 27) = truths in all abundance; for 'twelve' = all things in the complex, thus all abundance.

10235⁶. 'Twelve oxen' (1 Kings vii. 25) = all goods of the natural and sensuous man in the complex. . . That 'twelve' = all in the complex. Refs.

10624. 3, 6, and 12 belong to the spiritual class.

R. 348. The number twelve = all things, and is predicated of truths from good, because twelve arises from the multiplication of 3 and 4 into each other: and 3 = all as to truth, and 4 all as to good; and therefore twelve, here, = all as to truth from the good of love.

—³. As 'twelve' is predicated of the truths and goods of the Church, the New Jerusalem . . . is described in various particulars by 'twelve.' Enum.

534. 'A crown of twelve stars' (Rev. xii. 1) = (all) the Knowledges of Divine good and Divine truth from the Word. . . 'Twelve' = all things of the Church which relate to its good and truth.

899. 'Having twelve gates' (Rev. xxi. 12) = all the Knowledges of truth and good therein. . . 'Twelve' = all.

900. 'Twelve Angels' (id.) = all the truths and goods of Heaven. . . 'The twelve tribes of the sons of Israel' = all the truths and goods of the Church.

902. 'Twelve foundations' (ver. 13) = all things of the doctrine of the Church.

916. 'The twelve gates were twelve pearls' (ver. 19) the sum of the Knowledges of truth and good, by means of which man is introduced into the Church.

933. 'Twelve fruits' (Rev. xxii. 2). . . 'Twelve' = all, and is predicated of the goods and truths of the Church.

E. 194². The twelfth hour, to which all had laboured (Matt. xx) = truths and goods in their fulness.

—³. As 'twelve' = truths and goods in their fulness, thus man's state of light or of intelligence from them, the Lord says, 'Are there not twelve hours in the day . . . ?' 430¹⁶.

430². As '3' = fulness, and fulness implies all, the number twelve derives from this its signification of all things and all persons; and it is predicated of truths from good, because it arises from 3 multiplied into 4; and 3 is predicated of truths, and 4 of good. Ill. —⁶, Ill. —⁷.

—⁵. Cannot it be seen (from this) that the number 'twelve,' so often employed (in connection with the 'New Jerusalem') means the principal and primary thing from which is the Church, (which is) truth from good? Ex.

—⁸. As a representative Church was to be instituted among the sons of Jacob, it was provided . . . that (they) should be twelve, in order that all together might represent all things of the Church . . . and this is why twelve tribes sprang from them . . . and therefore it is (here) said that twelve thousand were sealed of each tribe, by whom are signified all who are in that particular essential of the Church, that is, all who are in that kind of truth from good. . . 431. 433. 434.

—⁹. As the twelve tribes . . . represented the Church and all things of it, the number 'twelve' was employed in various connections. Ill.

—¹⁴. The apostles had the like representation . . . and therefore there were twelve of them.

[E.430]¹⁵. 'Twelve baskets of fragments' (Matt.xiv. 20)=Knowledges of truth and good in all abundance and fulness. (=full instruction and blessing. 548°.)

—¹⁶. As 'twelve'=all things, and is predicated of truths from good, which constitute the Church, the Lord, when twelve years old, left father and mother, and remained in the temple... (Luke ii.42,46); by which is meant the initiation and introduction of His Human into all things of Heaven and the Church.

—, 'Twelve legions of Angels' (Matt.xxvi.53)=the universal Heaven; and 'more than' these = the Divine omnipotence.

851³. 'Twelve'=truths and goods in the whole complex.

Twenty. Viginti.

Twentieth. Vigesimus.

A. 2141². That the Lord interceded... afterwards, for those with whom there are states of the affection of good from any other source, who are signified by 'twenty' (Gen.xviii.31). Tr.

2280. 'Peradventure twenty shall be found there' (id.)=if there be not anything of combat, but still there be good.

—, 'Twenty,' being twice ten,=remains, that is, good, in a higher degree... The good of ignorance exists from man's tenth to his twentieth year; and from this year he begins to become rational... Thus the good of ignorance is signified by 'twenty,' for those in it do not come into any temptation... and those who are not in temptations, and yet have good, are here treated of. As by 'twenty' are signified those who have this good, all those who went out from Egypt were numbered 'from twenty years old and upwards'... and all those who were 'above twenty years' died in the wilderness (Num.i.:xxvi.4; xxxii.10,11), because evil could be imputed to them; and they represented those who succumb in temptations. Further ill. and ex.

2905. 'Twenty,' or twice ten, = what is full... And the fulness of the states of the Church means their end.

2939⁷. The reason it is so often said that 'the shekel is twenty gerahs'... is that (this expression)=the estimation of the good of remains; for 'twenty'=the good of remains.

4759. 'For twenty pieces of silver' (Gen.xxxvii.28)=estimation; for 'twenty'=the good and truth which are stored up by the Lord in the interior man, which are called remains; and thus holy good or truth; here, holy truth, because 'silver' is mentioned. The same number also=what is not holy... relatively to those who sold Joseph; but it=what is holy relatively to those who bought him.

—². The reason 'twenty'=also what is not holy, is that 'twenty'=remains; and with those who have no remains... what is holy is not holy, but... is either filthy or profane. Ill.

—³. In these passages, 'twenty'=what is unholy, unclean, and profane.

5291. 'Twenty'=the like as 'ten.'

9747. 'The twenty pillars thereof' (Ex.xxvii.10)=the goods of truth which fully support... For 'twenty'=fully. 9752.

9748. 'Their twenty bases of brass' (id.)=the truths from good which also fully support... 'Twenty'=fully.

9764. 'Twenty cubits' (ver.16)=to the full; for 'twenty'=what is full.

10222. 'Twenty oboli a shekel' (Ex.xxx.13)=all things of good; for 'twenty'=all things; also the remains of good, and also what is holy. Refs. For 'twenty,' when predicated of the Lord,=what is His Own, which is what is holy itself; from which it is evident why the shekel was of twenty gerahs or oboli; and why it is called 'the shekel of holiness.'

—³. 'A son of twenty years and upwards' (Num.i.3)=those who are in a state of intelligence; for with these the truths and goods of faith and love can be ordained and disposed by the Lord. Ex... And therefore it is said 'from a son of twenty years and upwards everyone that goeth forth into the army'... —¹⁰. —¹¹.

R. 866². At this day no Spirits stay in the World of Spirits longer than twenty years.

E. 675¹⁵. 'The flying roll' was 'twenty cubits in length, and ten in breadth' (Zech.v.2), because 'twenty,' and 'ten'=all; here, all good changed into evil, and all truth into falsity; for 'twenty' is predicated of good, and of all of it; and 'ten,' of truth and of all of it.

Twenty-first. Vigesimus primus.

A. 7842^e. 'The twenty-first day' (Ex.xii.18)=what is holy, because it arises from the multiplication of 3 into 7. Ill.

Twenty-four. Viginti quatuor.

A. 5291. 'Twenty-four'=the like as 'twelve.' Ex.

5313⁶. 'The twenty-four thrones round about the throne' (Rev.iv.4)=all things of truth in one complex; the like as 'twelve,' R.233. E.270.

10652^e. 'Twenty-four thousand' (Num.xxv.9)=all truths and goods of truth in the complex; in like manner as 'twelve thousand.'

R. 233². 'Twelve'=all, and it is predicated of the truths and goods of Heaven and the Church; and in like manner 'twenty-four'; and therefore 'the twelve apostles,' and 'the twenty-four elders'=all things of the Church; and 'twelve,' and also 'twenty-four, thrones'=everything of Judgment.

Twenty-seventh. Septimus et vigesimus.

A. 901. 'The twenty-seventh day' (Gen.viii.14)=what is holy, because it is compounded of 3 multiplied twice into itself... and therefore 3 reigns in this number.

Twenty-eight. Octo et viginti.

376³⁷. 'Woe... to them who tarry into the twilight till wine inflame them' (Is.v.11)=the perverted states of those who believe that they are enlightened of themselves... 'To tarry into the twilight'=to be enlightened.

the reason that everything in (both worlds) relates to two things, namely, good and truth . . . and, as all things relate to these two, and as nothing is ever produced unless these two become a one by something resembling a marriage, 'two'=conjunction. Ex.

[A.] 5291⁴. The servant who received 'two talents'=those who in advanced age have adjoined charity to faith.

5351⁶. When two are mentioned in the Word (as Manasseh and Ephraim are here), the one=good, and the other truth.

5614. 'Two times' (Gen.xliii.10), as it here relates to life, it=exterior and interior life. Ex.

5893. 'Two years hath the famine been' (Gen.xlv.6)=a state of the lack of good . . . 'Two years'=a state of the conjunction of good and truth, because 'two'=conjunction; here, not conjunction as yet, because it is 'two years of famine.' Ex.

5977. Why there are two infernal Spirits and two Angels with man.

7230². If there were two exactly alike, they could not be two, but one.

9166. For 'two'=conjunction into a one. Refs. Thus ('both')=whatever there is in a one, that is, each and all things therein. The reason these things are perceived in Heaven by 'two.' (Ex. under TRUTH.)

9653. 'For the two thighs of the Habitation' (ver. 22)=conjunction with Heaven . . . for 'two'=conjunction.

9942¹². 'Two coats,' 'two shoes,' and 'two staffs' (Matt.ix.10)=truths and their powers from both the Lord and self.

10181. 'Two cubits the height thereof' (Ex.xxx.2)=the degrees of good and truth, and their conjunction; for 'two'=conjunction.

10261⁴. 'Two (olive trees)' (Zech.iv.)=the internal and external of the Celestial Kingdom, and the conjunction.

10375. The conjunction thereby with man, is signified by the tables being 'two' (Ex.xxxi.18), and being joined together as a likeness of a covenant; and moreover 'two'=conjunction. 10452.

10624. The numbers 2, 4, and 8 belong to the celestial class . . . and are predicated of goods or of evils. R.322. E.847.

H. 367^e. In Heaven two married partners are not called two . . .

372. Good and truth conjoined in an Angel or man are not two, but one. Ex. Hence it is that two married partners are not called two, but one Angel. Hence also we read . . . 'they two shall be one flesh; wherefore they are no more two, but one flesh . . .' (Matt.xix.5,6; Gen.ii.24).

R. 245. 'Two'=all as to good.

447. 'Two' is predicated of good; and, in the opposite, of evil.

M. 316⁴. It is from the Conjugal in every substance . . . that there are two eyes, two ears, two nostrils, two cheeks, two lips, two arms, two loins, two feet . . . two hemispheres of the brain, two ventricles of the heart, two lobes of the lungs, two kidneys, two testicles; and, where there are not two, still they are divided into two. The reason there are two, is that one is of the will and the other of the understanding, which act into each other in a wonderful way so as to present a one; and therefore the two eyes make one sight, the two ears one hearing . . . and so on. E.746⁶.

D. 6055. The husband's love depends on the wife's; and in proportion as she loves (congress) so does the husband . . . The reason is that they are a one, and are conjoined as to the interiors. This is meant by their not being two, but one flesh.

E. 384². When the Angels have spoken of the conjunction of good and truth . . . the number 4 has been exhibited, and sometimes the number 2, or 8, or 16.

411¹⁶. 'If two of you shall agree on earth in My name . . . it shall be done . . . For where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them' (Matt.xviii.19,20). . . (This is) because 'two' is predicated of good; and 'three' of truth; consequently, 'two' and 'three,' of all who are in truths from good.

430². (The simple number) '2'=union, and is predicated of good. . . From the number 2 arise the numbers 4, 8, 16, 400, 800, 1600, 4000, 8000, 16000, which have a similar signification to 2, because they arise from this simple number . . . 532. 924.

532⁶. 'Two' and 'four' are predicated of goods, because they=conjunction.

—7. 'Two three berries' (Is.xvii.6). . . 'Two three'=the few who are in good, and in the derivative truths.

573. It is said 'two myriads of myriads' (Rev.ix.16) because there are signified innumerable things which are conjoined and conspiring; for 'two'=conjunction, consent, and unanimity.

638². It is said that 'the two witnesses are the two olive trees and the two candlesticks' (Rev.xi.4), which yet are four, because 'two'=conjunction and thus a one. For there are two things which make a one, namely, good and truth. Ex.

684³⁷. 'Two (weeks)' (Dan.ix.26)=(a full time and state as to the implantation of) good . . .

710²⁶. Thus the 'two' become one affection of truth and good; and this is meant by the 'one flesh' which the 'two' must become . . . 'Therefore they are no more twain, but one flesh'=that thus the understanding of good and truth, and the affection of good and truth, are not two, but one; in like manner as the will and understanding are indeed two, but still are one; and in like manner as good and truth, and also faith and charity, are indeed two, but still are one . . .

816. 'Two horns like a lamb' (Rev. xiii. 11) = the power of persuading [to believe in] the conjunction of faith separated with the Word . . . 'Two' = conjunction. . . For this beast = confirmations from the Word; and in the Word is the marriage of good and truth; and this marriage is signified by 'two.'

1004². Love truly conjugal is not possible except between two. Ex.

— . Moreover . . . there are two things to which all things relate: good and truth . . .

— . One truth cannot be united to two diverse goods, nor the converse. Nor one understanding to two diverse wills . . . Nor one man who is spiritual to two diverse Churches; and in like manner not one man inmost to two women.

— . The husband communicates and conjoins his soul to his wife by actual love . . . and the wife receives it in her heart; and from this the two become one . . . This is genuine marriage, which is possible only between two.

—³. Therefore, when two minds act as one, their two bodies are potentially so united that they are no more two, but one flesh.

—⁴. In the Heavens there are married pairs in such conjugal love that the two-ambo-can be one flesh . . . Des.

1115. 'To double double' has this signification because . . . 'two' = the quality of a Thing as to union; and it is predicated of good, or of evil.

D. Wis. iii. 3. Love and wisdom are two distinct things. Ex. . . . Nevertheless, in the formation of things, they do not operate as two, but as one. Ex.

—². The same union is meant by . . . 'they twain shall be one flesh . . .' (Mark x. 8).

—³. As there are two things, love and wisdom, which form the embryo in the womb, there are therefore two receptacles . . . and there are also two things everywhere in the body, which are in like manner distinct and united: as two hemispheres of the brain, two eyes, two ears, etc., and the rest of the viscera are also twinned . . .

798⁹. The idea of God as of a tyrant . . .

Tyre. Tyrus.

A. 425². 'Tyre'=those who possess spiritual and heavenly riches.

1154. 'Tyre'=those who possessed the Knowledges of celestial and spiritual things. 1156. (=the possession of Knowledges. 1232. 1462⁴.)

1201. Tyre and Sidon were the ultimate boundaries of Philistia, and indeed next the sea, and therefore by 'Tyre' are signified interior Knowledges, and by 'Sidon' exterior Knowledges, of spiritual things. Ill. 2576⁸.

1238². Philistia as far as Tyre and Sidon a country of the Ancient Church. 2385⁵. 3240⁵. Tr.

S. 21. How it was that the science of correspondences came to be cultivated in Tyre and Sidon, etc. 102.

97⁴. 'The king of Tyre' (Ezek.xxviii.)=the Word where and whence are the Knowledges of truth and good. (=the Knowledges of the truth of the Church from the literal sense of the Word. E.717⁹.)

102. The Ancient Word existed in Tyre and Sidon, etc.

R. 90². 'Tyre'=the Church as to the Knowledges of truth and good, thus as to intelligence.

238⁵. As 'the sea'=Divine truth with those in the boundaries of Heaven, Tyre and Sidon, because next the sea,=the Church as to the Knowledges of good and truth.

898². 'Tyre'=the Church as to the Knowledges of truth from the Word.

E. 208¹¹. 'Tyre'=the Knowledges of truth and good, which are introductory truths.

236⁵. 'Tyre . . . heapeth up silver as dust, and gold as the mire of the streets' (Zech.ix.3). Here 'Tyre'=those who acquire Knowledges for themselves.

[E.] 242¹². 'Tyre and Sidon' = those within the Church who are in the Knowledges of truth and good; here (Joel iii. 4-6) those who have perverted these, and have applied them to falsities and to the evils of falsity.

304²⁷. 'Tyre is laid waste' (Is. xxiii. 1) = that there were no longer any Knowledges of truth. 406¹¹. 514⁵.

323¹³. 'Tyre' = the Church as to the Knowledges of spiritual truth and good; here (ver. 15, 16) the Church in which these have been falsified.

355¹⁶. 'Tyre' = the Church as to the Knowledges of truth.

406¹¹. 'The report concerning Tyre' (Is. xxiii. 5) = the Knowledges from the Word devastated by the falsities and evils to which they are applied.

—¹². 'The kings of Tyre and Sidon' (Jer. xxv. 22) = the Knowledges of truth and good from the Word in the natural man; for all (these) Knowledges, as such, are in the natural man.

—¹³. 'To cut off from Tyre and Sidon every helper that remaineth' (Jer. xlvii. 4) = that they have no Knowledge of truth and good.

412²⁶. 'The daughter of Tyre' (Ps. xlv. 12) = the affection of the Knowledges of truth and good. 863¹⁴.

433¹⁴. 'Tyre and Sidon,' and 'the Philistines' (Joel iii. 4-6) = those who have falsified the truths and goods of the Word.

504²⁸. 'Tyre' = the Church as to the Knowledges of truth and good; thus 'Tyre' = the Knowledges of truth and good which are of the Church. The devastation of this is here signified (Zech. ix. 4).

514². Tyre is treated of in Ezek. xxviii. and as 'Tyre' = the Knowledges of truth and good, her 'trading' is treated of, and the various wares by which she was enriched. Ex. 840⁶.

617¹¹. 'The merchandise of Tyre' (Is. xxiii. 18) = the Knowledges of truth and good of every kind.

721³. 'Sidon' and 'Tyre' (ver. 4, 5) = the Knowledges of good and truth from the Word; that the Church has not by means of them acquired anything of intelligence and wisdom, nor wrought any uses. Sig.

Tyro. Tiro. T. 106.

U. The letter. (Sounded oo, as in rule.)

H. 241. The speech of the Celestial Angels sounds much from the vowels U and O.

—². It may be known to some extent from the words themselves in the Hebrew language whether they belong to the celestial class or to the spiritual class, thus whether they involve good or truth. Those which involve good derive much from U and O.

—³. Since affections manifest themselves chiefly through sounds, therefore also in human discourse, when great subjects are treated of, as Heaven and God, those words are preferred which contain the vowels U and O.

S. 90². The vowels A (ah), O, and U are in use in the Third Heaven, because they give a full sound. T. 278².

D. 5112. When the spiritual Angels utter U there is something of I (ee) or Y (ee) in it . . . whereas the words of the celestial Angels have an affinity with A (ah), O, and U; and therefore when their speech falls into human speech, it falls into such words as contain these vowels. For this reason, when a man is speaking with them, he is bent from words which contain E (eh) and I (ee) to those which contain A, O, and U.

5620^e. The celestial Angels have not the vowels I (ee) and E (eh); but A (ah), O, and chiefly U . . . (because these vowels give a full sound. De Verbo 4².)

5787. The speech of Spirits is according to the nature of the Thing . . . The vowels . . . are also according to the nature of the Thing, as is evident from the celestial Angels: U involves all things, and so on.

Ugly. Deformis.

Ugliness. Deformitas.

A. 1008³. In each of his ideas there is an image of himself, which . . . is so ugly as to be a horror.

3212³. (The unregenerate form of the spirit) is that of hatred and cruelty, and is of inexpressible ugliness.

3425³. The spirit of him whose external man is opposite to his internal man . . . is black and ugly, such as is the love of self and of the world . . .

5199^e. The infernals, being against good and truth, have horrible ugliness (or deformity). 5377^e. 5387^e. Ex. 5717, Des.

6605². If the communication (of a Spirit) is with infernal Societies, his form is ugly and diabolical.

7506^e. When evil of life inflows into the understanding, it produces deformed ideas . . .

8945³. When such come into a more interior Heaven, they become ugly from the falsities which are from the evils with them.

H. 99^e. In some who had beautiful faces, the spirit was seen to be ugly, black, and monstrous.

131^e. If a man is evil, his spirit, when viewed by the Angels, appears as a monster, ugly according to his evil.

457². (Former acquaintances) who had been in evil affections, I did not recognize (on account of their) ugly faces.

481². They who are corporeal loves appear gross, dusky, black, and ugly.

T. 61. As the eye looking at a beautiful object sees it accurately while something ugly is beside it; and therefore it is usual for painters to set an ugly face beside a beautiful one.

D. 574^e. The faces of the evil of this Earth in the other life become successively so ugly and distorted that they cannot be looked at by the Spirits of Jupiter on account of their ugliness.

2673^e. Thus they become effigies of death, so ugly that the ugliness cannot be described.

3589^e. As the (antediluvian) men grew up, they became ugly, hairy.

4718. The faces of the evil, when seen in the light of Heaven, appear monstrous, of various ugliness. Ex.

E. 1003°. In place of the beauty possessed by those who live chastely in marriages, there is the ugliness of those who live in adulteries . . .

Ulcer. Ulcus.

Ulceration. Exulceratio.

A. 5188°. Such (Spirits) may be called deadly ulcers, whether they are in the chamber of the breast, in the pleura, the pericardium, the mediastinum, or the lungs.

7495. The seventh degree of their vastation is described by 'the sore breaking out into pustules' (Ex.ix.9). (=filthy things with the derivative blasphemies. 7524.) 7530. 7531. E.962°.

7524. 'A sore'=the filthy things which are from evils . . .

—². That 'sores'=filthy things with blasphemies. Ill.

—³. These various kinds of sores are 'haemorrhoids,' 'scab,' 'itch,' (Deut.xxviii.27-36) which=so many kinds of falsities which are from evils. Nearly similar is the signification of 'sores on the knees and thighs' (id.).

— The sores of leprosy, as 'the tumour,' 'the abscess,' 'the pimple,' 'the burning,' 'the scurf,' 'the tetter' (Lev.xiii.) also=such (falsities); for 'leprosy'=the profanation of truth.

7768. Like painful sores, which cannot endure the touch [even] of lukewarm water, or a breath of air.

9231°. 'To lick the sores' (Luke xvi.21)=to heal their [falsities] by such means as are within their power.

H. 553°. The faces of some (of the infernals) are disfigured with pustules, warts, and ulcers.

S. 40°. That the gentiles were despised by the Jews (and were in falsities and consequently not in goods) is meant by Lazarus cast out at the gate of the rich man full of sores. E.962°.

Life 110°. Breaks forth like the matter from an ulcer outwardly healed.

P. 113°. Concupiscences are then shut in, like a closed ulcer.

R. 678. 'An evil and noxious sore' (Rev.xvi.2)=interior evils and falsities destructive of all good and truth in the Church. 'A sore,' here=nothing else than evil originating from this doctrinal head, that faith alone . . . justifies and saves. (=evil works and the derivative falsifications of truth. Ex. E.962.)

— The reason 'a sore'=these things, is that the sores of the body originate from a corrupt state of the blood, or some other interior malignity; for so sores spiritually understood originate from concupiscences and their delights, which are the interior causes. The evil itself which is signified by 'a sore,' and which in externals appears as delight, conceals within itself the concupiscences from which it arises, and of which it is made up. Ex.

—². (Thus) 'a sore'=evil appearing in the ultimates or extremes, originating from internal malignity . . .

—³. 'Sores,' and 'wounds'=evils in the extremes originating from interior evils, which are concupiscences. Ill.

697. 'They blasphemed the God of Heaven . . . for their sores' (ver.11)=that they could not acknowledge the Lord . . . on account of resistances from interior . . . evils originating from the dogma concerning faith alone . . . 'Sores'=interior evils. E.992.

T. 595°. He may be compared to an ulcer dressed with plaster, and afterwards covered with a thin skin, but which has nothing but foul matter within.

635. 'Sores'=interior evils and falsities destructive of the good and truth in the Church.

D. 654. Those who want to counterfeit holy things . . . are punished (by) an ulceration of the body: scab, leprosy, lice, and the like things according to the profanation.

1781. On those who constitute deadly ulcers of the head, within the skull. Gen.art.

E. 962. 'A sore'=works which are done from man, thus which are of his proprium, which are evil. Ex. —², Ill.

963°. It is from Divine order that where there are not good works there are evil works; and the latter are signified by 'the great and noxious sore in the earth,' that is, in the Church, with those in faith alone in doctrine and life.

992. 'Sores'=evil works which are from the proprium of man, and the consequent falsifications of truth and good.

1152°. Like a palliative treatment, by which an . . . ulcer is healed externally.

C. 25. In this way only, is the ulcer opened and healed; otherwise it is only a palliative cure.

1648°. The form of the speech is according to the . . . unanimity of the Society.

2027. Whatever destroys unanimity (there) is contrary to the order of Heaven, and therefore conspires to the destruction of the whole.

2130°. The more there come into Heaven, the more blessed it is for those there, because the consequent unanimity-unanimus=is stronger.

4625. Every Society is an image of the whole; for that which is unanimous is composed of so many images of itself.

4837°. If Heaven were distinct according to the truths of faith there would be no Heaven, for there would be nothing of unanimity.

[A.] 5182. There are gyres . . . for in the other life there must be concord and unanimity of all . . .

7729^e. They knew that by . . . a hill (Parnassus) is signified unanimity; and, in the spiritual sense, charity.

H. 373. Under a different appearance, but still like and unanimous, like the soul and body.

418². For in the Heavens . . . there is a unanimous looking of all to one end, which is the common good. Ex

A. 1774. Such are represented by an old woman, with an ill-favoured—indecorae—face.

M. 296. With men it is not unbecoming—indecens—to speak about love.

T. 183. Hence have arisen many unbecoming—indecorae—ideas about God.

Unbelief. Under INCREDULITY.

Unbridled. Effraenus.

M. 267^e. The unbridled love of the world

Unchangeable. Immutabilis.

Changed. Immutatus.

W. 160. The lowest things of nature are . . . immutable and fixed.

R. 331. (The participle immutatus occurs, which means changed.) E. 400. 534. 1015.

Unchasteness. Incastitas.

Unchastely. Incaste.

See under CHASTE.

M. 44⁴. If his sphere is unchaste, they flee from him.

—5. This love is not possible together with the unchaste love of the sex. Love truly conjugal . . . has nothing in common with unchaste love . . .

—7. The Angels grow cold over their whole bodies at unchaste, that is, extra-conjugal love.

49. An external perception of love is . . . sometimes (the effect of) unchasteness.

138. Conjugal love cannot be known in special . . . unless its opposite, which is unchaste, also appear . . .

— Non-chastity is merely the removal of what is unchaste, from what is chaste.

139. The love opposite to love truly conjugal . . . is unchastity itself.

— Yet there exists a conjugal love not chaste, but which is not unchastity. Ex.

140. The unchastity—incastum—which is seated in their minds is heard from the tone of their voices, and from their applying all things to what is libidinous . . . which is a sign that . . . their whole minds and bodies, from inmosts to ultimates, abound with unchaste things. . . With the greatest hypocrites, what is unchaste is perceived by the hearing, however chastely they may speak, and also from their sphere; which also is a sign that unchasteness resides in the inmosts of their minds, and thence in the inmosts of their bodies . . .

—2. That a sphere of lasciviousness pours out from the unchaste, is evident from the Israelitish statutes—that everything should be unclean which was merely touched by those who were defiled.

147. Chastity is the removal of unchastity. Ex.

—2. For the heat of unchaste love extinguishes conjugal love.

149. Unless the renunciation of whoredoms is made from religion . . . unchasteness lies hidden within . . .

228. Dissimilitudes . . . may in time be conjoined by . . . abstaining from things unchaste, etc.

281². If (merely natural married partners) have any heat, it is from what is unchaste.

304. (Betrothal causes a conjunction of minds) with those who think chaste about marriages: otherwise with those who think unchastely about them. Ex.

—². The unchaste are those who do not think from religion about marriages and their holiness. With these there is a marriage of the body (only). Des.

313². Therefore the state of marriage (of the natural) is inwardly full of unchaste things; and as many unchaste things as there are, so many colds there are; and (hence) so many obstructions of the inmost life . . .

452². Fornication is (then) light . . . because from the unchaste state in which he is, he looks to a chaste state.

A. 1666. In the unclean things of cupidities. Sig.

— The persuasions of falsity, which in themselves are unclean. Sig. . . Such Spirits desire . . . to pass their time in marshy, miry, and excrementitious things . . . Such unclean things exhale from them . . . when they approach the sphere of good Spirits . . .

2045. Those in the loves of self and the world cannot believe they are in things so filthy and unclean. Ex.

2177⁵. 'Unleavened' = what is . . . devoid of unclean things.

3693⁷. 'The soul which has touched what is unclean shall be unclean until the evening' (Lev.xxii.6). Ex.

4161. That (interior natural truths) were as yet among unclean things . . . (that is) among scientifics which did not yet correspond. Sig. and Ex.

4581¹⁰. 'They shall eat in Assyria what is unclean' (Hos.ix.3) = things impure and profane derived from reasoning. (=the Rational abounding with the falsities of evil. E.654⁵⁶.)

4744². 'Uncleanness,' and 'scum' (Ezek.xxiv.11) = evil and falsity.

—³. 'The unclean Spirit' (Matt.xii.43) = unclean-ness of life with a man; and also the unclean Spirits who are with him; for unclean Spirits dwell in the uncleanness of a man's life. S8S2², Ex.

— 'The house empty' = the interiors of the man again replete with unclean things, that is, with falsities from evil.

5246³. A state of temptation is relatively . . . squalid and unclean; for when man is being tempted, unclean Spirits are near him . . . and excite the evils and falsities in him . . . hence it is that the man is then in what is unclean and squalid. (From experience.)

5390. Spirits who correspond to unclean excretions. Des. . . To these unclean excretions also correspond those who . . . turn clean things into unclean things. Des.

5910². Thus the things which enter a man's thought, but not . . . his will, do not render him unclean . . . The reason why (those which enter the will) render him unclean, is that they are appropriated to him . . . according to Matt.xv.17-19.

9231. 'Ye shall cast it to a dog' = that it is unclean; for 'dogs' = those who render the good of faith unclean by falsifications.

9917¹. 'Uncleanness in the fringes' (Lam.i.9) = in the deeds and sayings, thus in the extremes.

10109². It was severely forbidden that anyone unclean should eat of the holy things, because by 'uncleanness' is signified defilement by evils and the derivative falsities, (and) so long as man is in these, good cannot be appropriated to him. Ex. and Ill.

—². For all these external uncleannesses (Lev.vii.18-21) represented internal uncleannesses, which are the evils with man, that is, such evils as are of his will, appropriated by actual life.

P. 40^e. For the corresponding unclean things affect the evil; and the corresponding clean ones, the good.

R. 728. 'The uncleanness of her whoredom' (Rev.xvii.4) = the defilings of the good and truth of the Word.

924. 'There shall not enter into it anything unclean' (Rev.xxi.27). . . By 'what is unclean' is signified spiritual whoredom, which is the adulteration of the good and the falsification of the truth of the Word; for this is uncleanness-immundum-and impurity itself . . .

M. 140². See UNCHASTE, here.

252². Uncleanness (a cause of lawful separation).

264¹. The Hell where were the emperors of emperors . . . was full of all uncleanness.

430. That the uncleanness of Hell is from scortatory love . . . Ex.

— The whole Hell abounds with unclean things, and the universal origin of these is immodest and obscene scortatory love: its delights are turned into such things. Des.

431. In like manner the uncleanness-immundum-and cleanness in the Church. Ex.

495³. (These adulterers) have immersed the love of their will, and with it their understanding, in the uncleannesses of scortatory love, and they are delighted with them, as unclean birds and beasts are with decay ing and stercoraceous things . . . These are they who become corporeal Spirits, from whom gush forth the unclean things of Hell and of the Church.

[M.] 500^e. All the uncleanness-immundum-of Hell is from adulteries.

D. 3489. They said to me that I was unclean . . .

E. 195^e. 'There shall no more come to thee the un-circumcised and the unclean' (Is. lii. 1) = those in evils and falsities.

257⁷. The 'seven unclean Spirits' (Matt. xii. 45) = all falsities of evil; thus the complete destruction of good and truth.

483¹¹. 'The unclean Spirit' (Zech. xiii. 2) = the evils springing from falsities of doctrine; for when a man lives according to (these) he becomes an unclean Spirit.

587¹⁴. 'I will sprinkle clean waters upon you, that ye may be cleansed from all your uncleanesses' (Ezek. xxxvi. 25). 'Clean waters' = genuine truths; falsities are called 'uncleanesses,' because they are falsities from evil, and falsities which produce evil.

1000. 'Three unclean Spirits like frogs' (Rev. xvi. 13) = reasonings from mere falsities against Divine truths; for 'unclean Spirits' = falsities of evil which are from Hell; for all in the Hells are unclean from falsities of evil; because all unclean things come forth from the falsities which are from evil; and all clean ones from the truths which are from good.

1099. 'A hold of every unclean Spirit' (Rev. xviii. 2) = where there is nothing but evils from the adulterated goods of the Word.

1100. 'And a hold of every unclean and hateful bird' (id.) = where there are nothing but falsities from the falsified truths of the Word. . . 'Unclean' = that which flows forth from a filthy love, especially from the love of dominating; for this makes the uncleanness in Hell.

2758. There exists not anything unconnected with a cause, and thus with an end.

3241². For everything which is unconnected with the Lord is nothing.

3627. Everything unconnected with what is prior to itself, and through prior things with the First, perishes in an instant. 5084³. 5116³.

4525. For without correspondence there would be . . . what is unconnected; and what is unconnected is dissipated as nothing.

5377. Without correspondence with the Grand Man . . . nothing can ever exist and subsist, because it has no connection with what is prior to itself, consequently neither with the First . . . and what is unconnected, and thus independent, cannot subsist for a single moment . . .

9481³. When yet everything unconnected with the Divine perishes and becomes null.

P. 74^e. For there is not anything in the natural world unconnected with the Spiritual World.

Uncover. Discooperire.

A. 1073. 'He was uncovered in the midst of his tent' (Gen. ix. 21) = things thereby perverted . . . For he is called 'uncovered,' or naked, from the drunkenness of wine, in whom there are no truths of faith, and still more he in whom they are perverted. Ex. . . By its being said that he lay 'uncovered,' is signified that he stripped himself of the truths of faith by wanting to investigate them by sensuous things and the derivative reasonings. Ill. (= evils from the lack of truth in worship. 9960¹⁶.)

Uncreate. Increatus.

W. 4. The Lord . . . is uncreate and infinite . . . and because He is uncreate and infinite, He is Esse itself. . . and Life itself. From the uncreate, infinite, esse itself, and life itself, no one can be created immediately. Ex.

18^e. Comparison of the uncreated Man, who is God, with the created man.

44. Esse and Existere in itself is also uncreate; and everything created must be from the uncreate.

30². (Next comes) faith in the understanding, which is an intellectual faith. . . This is represented by the inanimate things.

—^e. The 'lesser luminary' (is therefore said to be placed) in the understanding. (Continued under WILL.)

35. Man has two faculties: will and understanding. When the understanding is ruled by the will, they together constitute one mind, or one life . . . but when the understanding is dissident from the will . . . the one mind is torn asunder . . .

40. 'Birds'=rational and also intellectual things.

44^e. The things of the understanding are signified by 'the creeping things which the waters make to creep forth,' and by 'the bird above the earth' and 'upon the faces of the expanse.'

48. The fifth state is that the man speaks from faith which is of the understanding, and thereby confirms himself in what is true and good; and the things he then produces are animate, and are called 'fishes of the sea' and 'birds of the heavens.' 52^e, Ex.

54². They called the understanding, in the spiritual man, 'the male' . . .

61. Spiritual things pertain to the understanding.

99. With the spiritual man, the Lord inflows through faith into his intellectual, rational, and scientific things.

203. The spiritual Angels . . . confirm the things of faith by intellectual, rational, and scientific things; but never draw conclusions from these about faith: those who do so are in evil.

398. 'Towards the east of Eden'=near the intellectual mind, where previously love had reigned . . .

476. 'Male,' or 'man-vir'=the understanding, and the things of the understanding; thus the things of faith.

568². The male sex is so formed that understanding, or reason, reigns.

641. As this man of the Church had to be reformed (first) as to that part of man which is called the understanding . . . it is here described how the things of the will were separated from those of the understanding . . . 645, Sig.

—². The intellectual things of Spirits and Angels inflow into the left side of the head or brain . . . and face . . . 3884.

655. 'The window'=the Intellectual. Ex. and Ill.

—². The highest row of windows in the Temple represented intellectual things; the middle, rational things; and the lowest, scientific and sensuous things. (So the three stories of the ark. 657.) 658.

657. There are three degrees of intellectual things in man: his lowest is what is scientific; his middle is what is rational; and his highest is what is intel- lectual: these are so distinct from each other that they are never confounded. Ex. . . The Lord inflows through the Intellectual with man into his Rational; and through this into the Scientific of the memory . . . This is the true intercourse of the soul with the body. (Continued under WILL.) 1443.

* Scientific things are those which are exclusively in the external memory.

[A.] 735. Temptation as to intellectual things, that is, as to falsities, is light. Ex.

757. The extreme of temptation as to intellectual things. Sig. and Ex.

794². Every principle, or persuasion, of falsity, forms the life of the understanding.

895. 'The ground' of the man of the Spiritual Church is in his intellectual part; and the seeds are sown in this, and never in his voluntary part, which, in the spiritual man, has been separated from the intellectual part. Ex.

927². (In the man of the Most Ancient Church) the will and the understanding constituted one mind, (but both were destroyed). Ex.

—³. It was therefore provided that man . . . might be reformed and regenerated as to the second or intellectual part of the mind . . .

977. With the regenerate man, there is a new will and a new understanding; (these) are his conscience . . . The unregenerate man has no . . . understanding; but has reasoning, and thence a lapsus to everything false.

991. Scientifics are of three kinds: intellectual, rational, and sensuous . . .

1023. The heavenly marriage with the man of the Ancient Church was effected in his intellectual proprium; for . . . the Lord miraculously separated his intellectual proprium from that corrupt voluntary proprium; and formed a new will in his intellectual proprium, which is conscience . . . In proportion as the voluntary proprium of man can be separated from his intellectual proprium, in the same proportion the Lord can be present with him . . . Temptations and the like . . . cause the voluntary proprium to be quiescent . . . and in the same proportion the Lord, through the conscience implanted in the intellectual proprium, can operate in charity. Sig. 2256³. 2930.

1043. The darkness with the spiritual man, which is here called 'a cloud,' is falsity, which is the same as his intellectual proprium; and when innocence, charity, and mercy are insinuated by the Lord into this proprium, this 'cloud' no longer appears as falsity, but as an appearance of truth, together with truth from the Lord; hence the likeness of a 'coloured bow.' 1832², Ex.

1044². A regenerate man is the Lord's as to the intellectual part, but his own as to the voluntary part, which two parts, in the spiritual man, are opposite. But the voluntary part, although opposite, cannot but be present; for all the obscurity in the intellectual part . . . is thence: it continually inflows from it; and, in proportion as it inflows, in the same proportion the 'cloud' in the intellectual part is made dense; but in proportion as it is removed, in the same proportion the 'cloud' is made thin. 1047. Sig. and Ex.

1051. That man's Intellectual should no longer be able to imbue such a persuasion. Sig. and Ex.

— . For with the last posterity of the Most Ancient Church . . . the intellectual part also was destroyed . . . so that they could not be regenerated, that is, have a new will formed in their intellectual part.

1059. For (with those outside the Church) there is not so great a 'cloud' in their intellectual part, as there is, in general, with those called Christians.

1101⁶. The more he is instructed, the more is the 'cloud' of his intellectual part dispelled; for (with the man who is in charity) the intellectual part has charity and conscience in it.

1186⁷. 'Israel,' 'Assyria,' and 'Egypt' = the three things which constitute the intellectual things of the man of the Spiritual Church . . . 2588¹³.

1443. The intellectual things of the celestial man are compared to a garden of trees of every kind . . .

1458. The states of intellectual things are as those of the times of the day and year . . .

1495. The intellectual man.

1555². The understanding is the secondary part: man's life after death is not according to his intellectual part . . .

—³. As man is not man unless endowed with an understanding also, the will alone does not make man, but the understanding together with the will; and the understanding cannot be acquired except by means of knowledges . . . and thus is formed the second plane. When the intellectual part is instructed in knowledges . . . then the man can be regenerated . . . so that his intellectual things make one Thing with his celestial things . . .

1594². The Intellectual and Rational can perceive the nature and quality of the Scientific; but not contrariwise.

1773³. Those who had been delighted with the Word, but had not been solicitous about the understanding of it, had heat in the right arm only.

1901². This intellectual truth . . . is the Spiritual itself which inflows . . . by an internal way . . . and is as a kind of light which . . . gives the faculty of knowing, thinking, and understanding.

1904⁵. Man places both the Rational and the Intellectual in the knowing faculty—scientifico; and is not aware that they are . . . so distinct that the Intellectual can exist without the Rational . . .

1923. When the Rational is insurgent against the intellectual, there arises an intestine combat . . .

1936. These things are above even the angelic understanding. 4027. 4641.

1949. Intellectual, rational, and scientific things. Sig.

—⁴. 'Ephraim' = the Intellectual of the Spiritual Church.

1972⁶. Equally before the understanding and the sight.

1997. The affection of truth, or to do good from the love of truth, is properly of the understanding.

2053². As conscience is formed from the truths of faith, it is evident that it is formed in the intellectual part; for it is the intellectual part which receives those truths; and therefore the Lord miraculously separated this part from the voluntary part.

2069^e. The Divine truth inflows with the spiritual man, because it inflows solely into his intellectual part, which in him has been separated from his voluntary part.

2072. The internal sight, that is, the understanding, is signified by 'the eye.'

2150. 'To see'=to understand.

2161. That they should let themselves down from Divine things nearer to His intellectual things. Sig. and Ex.

—e. 'Waters'=scientific and rational, consequently intellectual things.

2196⁷. The good of charity is not done from the Voluntary, but from the Intellectual . . .

2203. The mere human Rational cannot understand what is Divine.

2291. The tender understanding of infants there, shown.

2504. There are, in general, the intellectual things of faith, the rational things of faith, and the scientific things of faith . . . the inmost things of faith are called intellectual things . . .

2531². That which is Divine is incomprehensible, because above all understanding, even angelic; but still this Divine . . . can inflow into the Rational of man through the Divine Human; and . . . it is received according to the truths there . . . and in proportion as these truths are more genuine, the inflowing Divine is more perfectly received, and at last the man's Intellectual is enlightened. Ex. 2568⁵.

2552. The Lord's thought (as distinguished from His perception) was from the Intellectual itself.

2651. To understand is the same as to view from the sight of the mind.

2699². (Spiritual) light enlightens not only the sight, but also the understanding. 2776³.

2701. A kind of perception interiorly in the understanding. Ex.

2708. In the spiritual the good of love is implanted in the intellectual part, where is the secondary life of man. 2715, Ex. 2718.

2761. 'The white horse'=the understanding of the Word as to its interiors. Ex. and Ill.

2930. 'The soul'=the understanding. Ex.

— . A new will and a new understanding are formed in the intellectual part of the spiritual man; and the new understanding is called 'the soul.' Ill.

2950^e. Reception is first, being of the understanding.

3048^e. General scientifics . . . form, in general, the natural man as to his intellectual part.

3138. The internal man has its sight and understanding from the light of Heaven; the external has its sight and understanding from the light of the world. . .

3158². What is solely of the understanding is not of man until it becomes of his will; for the things . . . of the understanding constitute the derivative existence of man's life. Consent from the understanding alone is not consent . . . and therefore unless the truth of faith, which is of the understanding, is received by the good of love, which is of the will, there is never any truth which is acknowledged, thus no faith.

3190. 'They rode on camels' = the Intellectual elevated above natural scientifics.

3223. The interior mind, where are the intellectual ideas which are called immaterial, is in the light of Heaven. Of this man is unaware, although he calls his understanding his sight . . .

3236^e. In order for the spiritual man to have the truth of faith, or faith, it must come from the new understanding with which he has been endowed by the Lord; and the new understanding must have its light from the new will.

3295². Before he has been regenerated, man does good from the understanding . . . and the good which is from the understanding is not in itself good, but truth . . . Examp.

3325¹⁰. The Intellectual, which is of truth, is apparently the first-born. Sig.

3332³. The good of truth flows forth from the understanding.

3394². The regenerate spiritual man receives . . . Divine truth in the new understanding.

3412³. No one can . . . understand what truth is unless he is in good.

3438². For the internal eye, that is, the understanding . . . with such a man, is formed (like the eye of an owl, so as to see light as darkness, and darkness as light).

3539³. During regeneration, intellectual things apparently act the first part. Rep. . . For in this state . . . the understanding, not thus conjoined with the will, so inflows and acts into the Natural. Ex.

—⁴. The understanding can apprehend truth when the will is in the contrary. Examps.

—⁶. The faculty that man can understand what is good and true, although he does not will it, has been given to man in order that he can be reformed and regenerated; and therefore it exists with the evil as well as with the good . . . 4802.

3563. The Intellectual . . . within and the Voluntary without; thus inverted order. Sig. and Ex.

3619. Perception from the Intellectual is not of the Intellectual; but is of the Voluntary inflowing; for the Intellectual is nothing but the Voluntary in form. Such is the Intellectual when conjoined with the Voluntary; but before it has been conjoined, the Intellectual appears as if it were by itself . . . although it is only that the external separates itself from the internal; for when the Intellectual inwardly wills and thinks anything, it is an end from the Voluntary which makes its life, and governs the thinking there.

3671². To understand what is good and true . . . is of the Rational . . .

[A.] 3701². (Hereditarily) man is altogether lost as to both understanding and will. Ex.

—⁶. These confirmatory things . . . are the truths of his new understanding . . .

—⁷. Hence a separation takes place of the things of the former will and understanding, from those of the new will and understanding . . .

3727. Man's thought, speech, and action, which are the ultimates of order, are nothing but truths from good . . . for they belong to the intellectual part; but the good in them . . . to the voluntary.

—⁸. The lowest intellectual things. Sig. and Ex.

3825. The understanding of every subject is according to the ideas . . . and also according to the affections. Ex.

3849². (Thus) man's understanding is null, unless the will is in it; for the life of the understanding is from the will.

3869. 'Hearing,' also, = that which is of the understanding. Ex.

3888. The kingdom of the understanding corresponds to the lungs.

— This shows how the case is with the influx of the will into the understanding, and of the understanding into the will.

3901². To grow as to the understanding-intelligere-of truth. Sig.

3957². When man puts off the body, he enjoys a much more enlightened understanding.

3993⁸. For man's Voluntary is nothing but evil, from which there continually inflows falsity into his Intellectual.

3994. The intellectual proprium is falsity.

4038². The sensuous things of sight and hearing are especially those which perfect the intellectual faculty.

4169. Has so concluded of himself by his intellectual faculty.

4224. The organic forms of the understanding.

4270². 'Reuben' = faith in the understanding . . . which is the first of regeneration.

4274. Nothing makes man's intellectual life but what he believes to be true . . . and when (this) is assaulted, the life of his understanding is assaulted . . .

4301². They who have perception are in the light of Heaven as to the understanding, that is, as to the intellectual sight . . .

—⁴. (As) the objects of external sight are implanted according to . . . the affections, and as when any delight recurs, the objects associated with it also recur . . . so is it with the understanding, which is the internal sight; its objects are . . . called truths; their field is the memory; and the delight of this sight is good.

4328^e. For the Intellectual is represented in Heaven by what is lucid.

4526^e. For truths make the whole of man's understanding.

4532. They who believe that they understand from themselves . . .

4601^e. Conjunction with the Intellectual. Sig.

4612³. The Intellectual which man acquires while he is still natural.

4622³. The Intellectual is nothing but an exquisite sense of interior things; and the higher Intellectual, of spiritual Things . . .

4672². A Church which begins from faith has no other regulator than the understanding; and the understanding nothing but what is hereditary . . .

4729. The falsity which is from the doctrine of the Church takes hold of a man's intellectual part only.

— The falsity which is from the fallacies of the senses does not affect the intellectual part so much; for those in (this) falsity have but little insight from the understanding . . .

—². What the understanding imbues does not pass into the will; but what the will imbues passes into the understanding. Ex.

4760. This is according to the intellectual faculty of each man . . .

4884. For the intellectual mind, through truths from good, is in the light of Heaven.

5072. 'The butler' = the sensuous things which are subordinate to the intellectual part. 5077, Ex.

5077⁴. All truths . . . pertain to the intellectual part . . . consequently it belongs to the intellectual part to believe, acknowledge, know, and see, truth and also good . . .

5097. The light of Heaven makes man's Intellectual.

5113. 'A vine was before me' = the Intellectual of the Spiritual Church. Ill.

— For where the Spiritual Church is described in the Word, its Intellectual is everywhere treated of, because it is the intellectual part which, in the man of that Church, is regenerated. Ex.

—². For (in the Ancient Church) there was not anything whole in the voluntary part, but only in the intellectual part.

—¹⁰. 'A noble vine' = the Intellectual of the Celestial Church.

—¹⁵. As the Intellectual of the spiritual man is regenerated by means of the truth which is from the Lord only, the Lord compares Himself to a 'vine.'

—². There are, in man, derivations from the Intellectual, which is in the light of Heaven, to the Sensuous, which is in the light of the world. Ex.

— (This) causes man to see objects intellectually.

—³. These derivations are as steps or degrees between the Intellectual and the Sensuous. Ex.

5121³. Genuine perception . . . through Heaven . . . affects the Intellectual spiritually, and leads it, in a perceptive way, to think as the Thing really is . . . It is a dictate through Heaven . . . concerning such things as are above the Natural . . .

5125. That the things of the Sensuous subject to the intellectual part would be reduced to order. Sig. and Ex. 5165, Sig. and Ex.

5126². Without the influx of innocence (in infancy) there would be no foundation upon which the Intellectual or Rational . . . could be built.

5127³. For the faculty of understanding is always preserved to man . . . but is very obscure in those who are in falsities and evils, and is always clearer in proportion as (these) are lulled.

5144. The succession of intellectual things was represented by the vine, its three branches, blossoms, clusters, and grapes; and at last the truth which is of the understanding was represented by the cup.

5147². The Intellectual cannot receive truth so as to appropriate it, unless the Voluntary receives good at the same time; and the converse; for the one inflows into the other, and disposes it to receive. Intellectual things may be compared to forms which are continually varying, and voluntary things to the harmonies which result from the variation.

5159. Lest sensuous delights . . . win over intellectual things to their side, to confirm them . . .

5202². That the things in the exterior Natural which belonged to the intellectual class were regained. Tr. (in Ex.xl.)

—³. The influx of the Celestial of the Spiritual into . . . those things in the Natural which were of the intellectual part, and which are signified by 'the kine beautiful in look, and fat in flesh.' Tr. (in Ex.xli.)

— But as the Natural cannot be re-born as to intellectual things alone, there were also voluntary things: for in every single thing there must be something from the Intellectual and at the same time from the Voluntary for it to be anything. Ex.

5288. He who knows not how the case is with man's intellectual faculty . . . supposes that . . .

5348. 'Ephraim' = the Intellectual of the new Natural. 5354.

5351². But as the Voluntary of man does not appear to the sense except through the Intellectual—for the understanding is the will in form or the will formed to the sense—it is supposed that the truth which proceeds from the intellectual part is the first-born . . .

5354¹⁰. The Intellectual of the Church ('Ephraim') is the understanding with the men of the Church about truths and goods . . . thus the notion, concept, or idea, about them. Truth itself is the Spiritual of the Church; and good is its Celestial; but truth and good are understood differently by one person from what they are with another; and therefore such as is the understanding of truth, such is the truth with each person; and the case is the same with the understanding of good.

5464². With such a faculty of understanding whether things are true is man endowed, of whatever quality he may be . . . to the end that through the intellectual part he may be . . . regenerated. But when he has gone into perverse ways . . . although he is still in the like faculty of understanding truths, he no longer wants to understand them, but is averse to them as soon as he hears them.

5497². In this way man climbs with the understanding from the world towards Heaven.

5567². (He offered me) something that would take away the understanding of those who drank it.

5733^e. In the Spiritual Church, good is implanted in the intellectual part, through truth; for all truth is of the intellectual part . . .

5826^e. So long as good and truth are in the understanding only, they are outside the man; for the understanding is without, and the will within.

5874^e. (Thus) scientifics are of service to man in the forming of his understanding; but when the understanding has been formed, they then form the ultimate plane, in which the man no longer thinks, but above it.

5937². (By being) in the affection of truth from good . . . the Intellectual is illuminated: and then it is granted to man to perceive something inwardly in himself.

5969. A failing of the life of the Natural and of the derivative understanding. Sig. and Ex.

5977. Spirits act into intellectual things; Genii, into voluntary things.

5978. Celestial Angels act into man's voluntary things; spiritual Angels into his intellectual things.

5998. Influx from the Divine Intellectual. Sig. and Ex. 6003.

6032. Spiritual light makes the life of the understanding. Ex.

—². So the intellectual mind, which is man's internal eye, in order that it may see, needs the light of Heaven to illumine it . . . The light which illuminates the intellectual mind is truly light . . .

— Hence 'to see' = not only understanding, but also whatever is of understanding, as thought, reflection, animadvertence, prudence, etc.

[A.] 6055². It is the internal man which, in the proper sense, is called Intellectual or rational, because it is in the light of Heaven, in which are the reason and the understanding.

6065. But in the good which is from an origin in the understanding were the Ancients of the Spiritual Church . . . In this good are they in the Second Heaven. Ex.

6125. Scientifics from the Intellectual. Sig. and Ex.

— The Intellectual in man is augmented and grows from infancy until his age of manhood, and consists in an insight—intuitio—into Things from such things as are of experience and knowledge; and also in an insight into causes from effects; and also into things consequent from the connection of causes. Thus the Intellectual consists, in the comprehension and perception of such things as are of civil and moral life. It comes into existence from the influx of light from Heaven; and therefore every man can be perfected as to the Intellectual. The Intellectual is given to everyone according to his application, life, and nature—indolem; nor is it lacking in any man, provided he is of sane mind; and it is given to man to the end that he may be in freedom and choice (as to) good and evil. Unless he had such an Intellectual as has been described, he could not do this from himself; and thus neither could anything be appropriated to him.

—². The Intellectual of man is that which receives the Spiritual, so that it is the recipient of spiritual truth and good; for nothing of good . . . or of truth . . . can be insinuated into anyone who has not an Intellectual; but they are insinuated according to his Intellectual; and therefore man is not regenerated by the Lord until adult age when he has an Intellectual . . . and, when a man has been regenerated, his Intellectual performs this use, that it sees and perceives what good is and thence what truth is; for the Intellectual carries over the things of the light of Heaven into those of the lumen of nature, when the former appear in the latter . . . And, as the Intellectual performs this use, therefore, in the Word, where the Spiritual Church is treated of, its Intellectual is also treated of.

—³. Thus scientifics from the Intellectual are those which confirm the things which the man intellectually apprehends and perceives, whether they are evil, or whether they are good. Ill.

—^e. That intelligence must not be procured through scientifics from man's Own Intellectual. Sig.

6190^e. Heavenly light, which is faith, makes man's understanding; for the truth which is of faith, which proceeds from the Lord, enlightens his Intellectual . . . according to the reception.

6216. It treats (in Gen. xlviii.) of the Intellectual of the Church which is from truth ('Ephraim'); and of its Voluntary . . .

6222². The Intellectual of the Church is to perceive from the Word what the truth of faith and good of charity are.

—³. For the Intellectual of the Church is that when man reads the Word, and carefully compares one thing with another, he perceives what is to be believed and done. But this happens solely with those who are enlightened by the Lord. (Continued under ENLIGHTEN.)

—². Moreover, those who have been regenerated receive from the Lord an Intellectual which is capable of being enlightened.

—⁴. But this Intellectual, which is called the Intellectual of the Church, is more interior than the Intellectual which is only from scientifics; for it is an apperception that the case is so . . . because the Word, in its spiritual sense, so dictates. Examp.

—⁵. It is believed that those have an Intellectual in the Things of the Church who know how to confirm the doctrinal things of their own Church . . . but this is not the Intellectual of the Church. Ex. . . But the Intellectual of the Church consists in perceiving and seeing, before any dogma is confirmed, whether it is true or not, and in confirming it then. This Intellectual is what is represented by 'Ephraim.'

—⁶. For the truths of faith, together with the good of charity, are what inflow into the Intellectual, and enlighten it; and also cause the Intellectual and the Voluntary to constitute one mind. That both the Intellectual and the Voluntary are born from the Internal. Ex.

6267. The truth of the Intellectual as in the second place. Sig. and Ex.

6377⁴. That the Intellectual would consult scientifics about the arcana of faith. Sig.

6378. That the Lord's Intellectual is Divine good from His Divine love. Sig. and Ex.

— 'Covering—reclamen' = the Intellectual; for the Intellectual is a recipient . . .

6379. That the Intellectual, or internal Human, is nothing but good. Sig. and Ex.

6384². These ('Zebulon') have but little light from the Intellectual; for it has been immersed in scientific and sensuous things.

— But with those who have been in the affirmative, and have confirmed the truths of faith by scientifics, but yet so that they can be elevated from . . . the Natural . . . the Intellectual is enlightened, and thereby is in a certain perception of spiritual truth . . .

6396. As these ('Dan') do what is good . . . not from any new Voluntary, but from the Intellectual, thus . . . from obedience because it has been so commanded, they are in . . . the First Heaven.

6400. The Intellectual of the lowest Natural (is here treated of). Ex.

6405. For those who do works from truth and not as yet from good ('Gad') have the understanding obscured; whereas they who do them from good have the understanding enlightened; for good enlightens. For the light of truth from the Lord inflows into the Intellectual through good . . . but not into truth immediately. Ex.

6534. That intellectual things (accompanied the Internal in the establishing of the Church). Sig. and Tr.

— . 'Horsemen' = intellectual things. Ill.

—³. 'Horse' = Intellectual ; and 'his rider,' the understanding.

—⁵. The understanding perverted. Ill.

6578. 'To comfort' is predicated of the understanding.

6583. The establishment of the Church as to the Intellectual and its derivatives. Sig. and Ex.

6598. The cause of one man's excelling another in the faculty of understanding and perceiving what is honourable . . . just . . . and good . . . consists in the elevation of the thought to the things of Heaven ; for by this the thought is withdrawn from external sensuous things. Ex.

6599^e. The faculty of understanding and perceiving is according to the extension into (the surrounding Societies of Spirits and Angels) that is, according to the influx thence. 6600.

6608. Intellectual light has been given me, taken away, diminished, and regulated . . .

6750. For scientifics are a plane for the Things of the understanding ; and the understanding is the recipient of the truth of faith . . .

6751^e. It is these planes which are enlightened by the light of Heaven ; and hence comes the Intellectual, and the Perceptive, of faith and the good of charity.

6854². The spiritual are they who cannot be regenerated except solely as to the intellectual part ; and not as to the voluntary part ; and a new will is therefore implanted by the Lord in their intellectual part, which will is according to the doctrinals of faith which belong to their Church.

7112². The Angels with a man understand all things spiritually which the man understands naturally.

7290². For nothing enters into the internal man except through intellectual ideas . . .

7295^e. By such degrees are the evil (there) deprived of the understanding of truth and good.

7342. The understanding does not rule man unless the will inclines ; for the understanding favours the will ; for, regarded in itself, the understanding is willing but the form of the will. (Continued under WILL.)

7503. (The vastation) of the intellectual and scientific things of the truth of faith. Sig.

—². As to the intellectual part, it is that part which receives the truths of faith ; for the understanding is the internal sight, which is enlightened by the light of Heaven, and in the same proportion apperceives, sees, and acknowledges the truths of faith when the Word is being read . . .

7912. The enlightenment of the understanding of those of the Spiritual Church through the influx and presence of truth Divine. Sig. and Ex.

8025. A kind of discourse which fell solely into the interior understanding. Des.

8067. That this must be perpetually in the understanding. Sig. and Ex. 8090.

8160. The Intellectual of the mind, and [its] thought. Sig. and Ex.

8215³. 'Wheels' = the intellectual power of advancing.

8307^e. The Lord gives man the faculty of understanding truth ; and the reason he does not understand it, is that he does not want to understand it, on account of the evil of his life . . .

8332. All falsities from a perverted Intellectual with these . . . Sig. and Ex.

8443². Two degrees of truth Divine above the angelic understanding. Ex.

8521². The good of truth, which is the good possessed by those in the Spiritual Kingdom, is implanted in their intellectual part . . .

8628. They who have used their knowledges as means to annihilate the things of faith, have completely destroyed their Intellectual.

—². In this Earth, knowledges are a means for opening the intellectual sight.

8694². With those who are in good, and thence in the affection of truth, the Intellectual of the mind is open into Heaven . . .

—^e. For through Heaven (comes) a light which encompasses and enlightens their understanding, which is the eye of the internal sight ; and the things which appear in that light are truths . . .

8701². In the other life all are consociated according to the life of the will, and not according to the life of the understanding ; for where the will is, there the understanding is ; but not the converse . . .

—^e. But (here) the case is different ; here, a man can . . . understand differently from what he wills ; but this is for the sake of the possibility of his reformation ; that is to say, he can understand what is good, although he wills what is evil ; and thus, through the understanding, he can be led to will what is good. But in the other life everyone is led according to his will which he had acquired in the world.

8707. 'Way' is predicated of the understanding of truth ; here, in an interior degree, because it is predicated of the understanding which is possessed by the man of the Spiritual Church from the immediate influx of truth from the Lord; from which there is not the apperception of truth, but a light which confers the faculty of understanding. Ex.

[A.] 8764². 'Birds'=intellectual things; and hence 'wings'=spiritual truths, because all the Intellectual is from them: an Intellectual from falsities, however perspicacious and acute it may appear, is not an Intellectual; for the Intellectual sees from the light of Heaven, which is spiritual truth... and therefore where there is not the truth of faith, there is no light, but thick darkness, and an Intellectual in thick darkness is no Intellectual.

8890. 'Son' = the Intellectual... in the internal man.

—². For truths constitute the Intellectual.

8904⁸. Imaginary power from man's Own Intellectual. Sig.

8988. To act from the Intellectual, and not from the Voluntary, is to act from that which stands without and serves; for the understanding has been given to man in order that it may receive truths, and introduce them into the will...

9007². Instead of 'man-vir' the Angels perceive his intellectual faculty, from which he is a man... for man-homo-is man-homo—from the will; but man-vir—from the understanding.

9009². The evils which proceed from... the Intellectual part, and not at the same time from the voluntary part, are not inrooted and appropriated to the man. Ex.

9013. For he who is in deceit meditates evil, and thereby nourishes his understanding, and delights it, and thus destroys therein everything which belongs to man...

9050. To the faculty which is called the understanding pertains faith; for the truths of faith make its life...

9051. If they should injure anything in the interior Intellectual. Sig. and Ex.

— Man has an exterior understanding, and an interior understanding; the exterior understanding is where that thought is which comes to perception; and the interior understanding is where that thought is which does not come to perception—but still it comes to the perception of the Angels. It is this understanding which is enlightened by the Lord when the man receives faith, for it is in the light of Heaven; and in this understanding is the spiritual life of man, which is not much manifested to him (here)... Meanwhile this life lies hidden interiorly in the thought of the exterior understanding, and produces there what is holy and reverential for the Lord, the Church, etc.

9052. If they should injure anything in the exterior Intellectual. Sig. and Ex.

9055². (Thus) when a man is being regenerated, there is given him by the Lord a new understanding through the truths of faith...

9057. If anything of affection in the Intellectual should be extinguished or injured. Sig. and Ex.

9069. For evil from the Voluntary, and not at the same time from the Intellectual, does not condemn. Sig. and Ex.

9071. Evil which has passed into the Intellectual. Sig. and Ex. 9095.

9096. It is the Intellectual which sees evil; and that which is seen may be restrained, not by the Intellectual; but through it by the Lord. For the Lord inflows into those things with a man which are known to him, but not into those which are unknown to him.

9132². For what is done consciously, goes out from the will and at the same time from the understanding; thus from the whole man; for man is man from both; and that which is done from both is done from the falsity which is from evil; from falsity, because from the understanding; and from evil, because from the will; and hence the man is guilty; (for) that is appropriated to a man which comes from his understanding, and at the same time from his will; and a man becomes guilty, if he does not, by means of his Intellectual, repress the evil of his Voluntary, when he sees it.

—². And when these evil loves are assailed, there bursts forth fire from the will into the understanding, and conceives a flame there, which is called anger... This flame attacks the truths and goods which are in the Intellectual, and not only hides, but also consumes them; and, what is an arcanum, when this evil fire bursts forth from the will into the Intellectual, the Intellectual is closed above, and is opened below... and this is why evils and falsities then inflow...

9156. The evils (called 'transgressions,' and 'iniquities') come forth from a perverted understanding...

9224. For the Intellectual is that which first receives truths, because it sees them, and introduces them to the will.

9227². The external way (through which truths enter) is through the hearing into the memory, and from the memory into the understanding; for the understanding is the internal sight...

9230². For the memory and the understanding are like courtyards...

9274². For the will is the man himself, and the understanding is its minister.

— For the understanding is only the sight of the Things which the man wills and loves.

9279². Intellectual things are opened by means of those things which relate to truth.

9282. To know, understand, acknowledge, and believe, are of the understanding; but these are not with a man until they become of his will; nor do they come forth—existent—with him until they become of the understanding from the will. Ex.

9283. For the thought which does not speak, is the higher or interior Intellectual of man which proceeds from his will; but the thought which speaks is the lower or exterior Intellectual, formed from the higher or interior one, to present, or to simulate before the world, the things which are just and fair, and good and true.

9296³. The derivative new Intellectual is as it were the tabernacle through which there are entrance and exit.

9297². These truths from good are what make the new Intellectual, which makes a one with the new will . . .

—⁵. (Thus) it is evident that the Intellectual is enlightened with those who are in the affection of truth from good, but not with those who are in the affection of truth from evil. With (the former), the Intellectual of the internal man is enlightened; and the Voluntary of the internal man is enkindled; whereas with (the latter), the Intellectual of the internal man is not enlightened, nor is the Voluntary of the internal man enkindled; the reason is that these latter are natural men.

9384. Reception in the understanding by those who are truly of the Church. Sig. and Ex.

9386. So long as truths are regarded only intellectually, they are not impressed on the life . . .

9393. Truth is occasionally called forth from the memory to the internal sight, or understanding, from which it again falls back into the memory . . . But when truth is called forth from the memory into the understanding, and, from the understanding, enters the will . . . it becomes of the man's life.

9394. All things which are . . . laid up in the memory and are capable of being called forth from it to the intellectual sight, are called scientifics; and, in themselves, are the Things which constitute the Intellectual of the natural or external man.

— But the internal sight, which is the understanding, sees nothing else in the fields or gardens of the Things of its memory than those which are in agreement with the loves in which the man is, and which also favour the principles which he loves . . .

9398. 'To hear' = obedience from the understanding, thus from the soul.

9399. For the Divine truth which is from the Lord is continually inflowing with man, and making his Intellectual . . .

—³. That every man in the world, of sane reason, is in the faculty of understanding truth Divine . . . in proportion as he desists from evils, has been granted me to know from much experience; for all in the other life, both evil and good, are able to understand what is true and what is false, and also what is good and what is evil; but the evil, although they understand what is true and good, do not want to understand them; for the will resists; and therefore when they are left to themselves, they relapse into the falsities of their evil, and are averse to the truth and good which they had understood . . .

9407⁴. But he who cannot think intellectually, that is, abstractedly, from material things, cannot apprehend these things . . .

9424². These, being enlightened by the Lord, are led to see the truths of the Word as they are in Heaven; for the Lord inflows through Heaven into their understanding; for it is the interior understanding of the man which is enlightened.

9509⁴. As truth cannot enter Heaven, unless there is good in it . . . so neither can the Intellectual . . .

9514². Good is to truth as the will to the understanding . . . The will receives its quality from the understanding; and the understanding its esse from the will; for the will is formed in the understanding . . .

9595. 'Curtains' = the interior truths of faith which are of the new Intellectual.

9596³. 'Twined fine linen,' properly = the Intellectual such as exists with the spiritual man, or spiritual Angel. Ex. 9744, Ex. 9774.

— For the Intellectual is the subject, or containant; and truth is of it.

— (Thus) the Intellectual itself, with those of the Spiritual Kingdom, is, in the strict sense, 'the habitation'; and it is described by the expanse formed of curtains.

—⁵. To regenerate man, and thus to create or form a new Intellectual in which there is a new Voluntary, which is the Heaven itself of the spiritual man, in which the Lord dwells with that man. Sig.

9598. 'The work of the designer' = the Intellectual. Ex. 9835, Ex.

9637. The Voluntary does not appear without the Intellectual; and the Intellectual does not come into existence without the Voluntary . . .

9696. For the understanding is according to the reception of the light which is in the Heavens.

9716⁶. For the Intellectual is allotted to the perception of truth from good; and the Voluntary to the perception of good in truth.

[A.] 9723. The scientifics stored up in the external memory serve the internal sight or understanding as a plane of objects . . . for the interior sight, or understanding, by virtue of its light which is from Heaven, looks into this plane . . . which is below it, and chooses and elicits from the various things there such as are in agreement with its love; and these it calls forth to itself, and stores them up in its own memory, which is the internal memory. This is the source of the life of the internal man, and of his intelligence and wisdom . . .

9744. For the Intellectual consists, and is as it were woven together, of truths from a celestial origin.

— The faculty allotted to the reception of truth, is called the understanding . . . and therefore the understanding excels in proportion as it has been formed from genuine truths.

9780¹¹. The Intellectual of the man of the Church perverted through reasonings from scientifics. Tr.

9781. The will does not appear in the light except through the understanding; for it is the understanding which forms the Voluntary, and presents it so that it can be seen.

9796. When it is known what the internal and the external man are, it can be known whence are the understanding of truth and the will of good.

9797. In proportion as the internal man has been opened towards Heaven, in the same proportion it is in the light of Heaven; thus in the understanding of truth . . .

9799. Therefore the understanding of truth consists in seeing, by enlightenment from the Lord, truths from the Word.

9800. They who are in love to and faith in the Lord, and in charity towards the neighbour, are in the understanding of truth and the will of good . . .

9810. Divine truth . . . received in the intellectual part, is called spiritual good.

9817². 'Spirit' = the life of the intellectual part.

9818³. And the life of the intellectual part is to know, see, and understand truth to be truth, and good to be good.

9835. What is meant by a thing coming from the Intellectual. The Spiritual Kingdom, as to all truths and goods there, pertains to the intellectual part. Ex.

—². (The Grand Man also therefore) has these two faculties . . . and his understanding is in the Spiritual Kingdom . . . 9858.

9846. Hence . . . the Intellectual of a regenerate man corresponds to the Spiritual Kingdom.

9915². The faculties which receive (the Celestial, Spiritual, and Natural) are called the Voluntary, the Intellectual, and the Scientific . . . The Scientific constitutes the Intellectual of the natural man . . . and these three are signified by 'the weaver,' 'the designer,' and 'the embroiderer.' The reason 'the weaver' = the Voluntary, is that the Voluntary inflows into the Intellectual, and weaves it, inasmuch that the things which are in the Intellectual are things woven from the Voluntary; for that which the Voluntary wills, it forms so that it may appear to the sight in the Intellectual. This sight is thought; and therefore by 'the designer' (or 'thinker out-evogitator') is signified the Intellectual.

9942². For all things which are of the understanding with man proceed from his Voluntary . . .

9952. Everyone (there) is clothed according to his Intellectual corresponding to the Voluntary which is in him. The reason is that the Intellectual with man invests his Voluntary; and the Intellectual has been formed from truths, and the Voluntary from goods; and good is that which is clothed.

9960¹⁶. The implantation of good and truth in the intellectual part is described by Shem and Japheth putting the garment on their shoulders, going backwards, and turning their faces backwards; for such is exactly the case with the truths and goods of faith with the man of the Spiritual Church. Ex.

9993. To the Spiritual Kingdom in the Heavens corresponds the Intellectual with man . . . and the Intellectual with man is internal and external . . . the internal Intellectual making the spiritual (as distinguished from the celestial) life of the internal man; and the external Intellectual making the spiritual life of the external man . . .

9995². With a spiritual man and Angel the marriage of good and truth takes place in the intellectual part . . . The external way, through which truth enters, is through the hearing and sight into the understanding . . .

9996. The ultimate of the Intellectual is called the sensuous Scientific . . . and it is imbibed through the two senses of hearing and sight . . .

10062. The derivative Intellectual in the Middle Heaven. Sig. and Ex.

—³. For all the Intellectual has been formed from truths . . . and the understanding of man has been given for truths; and therefore as 'the hand' = truth in its power, it also = the understanding.

10064². The understanding of man is therefore such as are the truths which form it; and such as is the faith in them . . . In the opposite sense . . . the understanding is such as is the falsity which forms it, and such as is the faith in the falsity . . . The understanding of falsity is from Hell . . . for it is opposite to the understanding of truth . . . which is from Heaven from the Lord.

10093. For in the Spiritual Kingdom Divine truth is received in the intellectual part . . . and that which is received in the intellectual part is said to be acknowledged.

10109². The understanding is only so far the man as it has from the will. Ex.

10110². Truth (alone) does not make man's life, because it is of the understanding; and the understanding without the will is not the man himself, being only the entrance to him; for entrance is made through the understanding. Ex.

10124. With those in the Spiritual Kingdom, good is implanted through truth in the intellectual part . . .

— In proportion as the man is affected with the truth, and lives according to it, it is called forth into the Intellectual, and becomes faith . . . and this faith constitutes his new Intellectual . . .

10196². The understanding has been formed to receive Divine truth . . . The understanding serves them for reception, and also for perception.

10237². Spiritual ideas cannot be comprehended in the Natural; for they are intellectual ideas which are devoid of objects such as are in the material world . . .

10264³. The Intellectual is constituted from the perception of truth . . .

10367⁴. Hence it is that the Knowledges of truth and good must precede, and must enlighten the man's understanding: for the understanding has been given to man in order that it may be enlightened through the Knowledges of good and truth, to the end that they may be received by his will . . .

— Therefore when man is in good as to the will, he is in the truths of this good as to the understanding; for the understanding with a man actually makes a one with his will; for that which the man wills, he thinks, when left to himself.

—⁵. They who love their evils . . . can indeed . . . in some measure understand truths from the Word . . . for every man is kept by the Lord in this state as to the understanding, to the end that he may be regenerated; but when he loves his evils, the Intellectual of his internal man is not imbued with truths, but only the Intellectual of his external man, which Intellectual is merely scientific . . .

10409⁴. Every man is led by the Divine through his Intellectual, otherwise no man could be saved.

10569². For the understanding is the internal eye . . . and it is a real light which illumines the understanding . . . H.130.

10659³. But to those who are in illustration (or enlightenment) the Lord gives to understand the things they believe . . .

10675². As to the Intellectual of man, whether it consists of truths which are from good, or from falsities which are from evil, it cannot consist of both together, for they are opposites; and the Intellectual of man is that which receives truths, and is formed through truths; for whatever is in his Intellectual, relates to truth.

—³. For, in the proper sense, nothing else can be called an Intellectual than that which is from truths from good: that which is from falsities from evil is not an Intellectual; for intelligence and wisdom can never be predicated of falsities from evil . . . And therefore the Intellectual of man is never opened, until the man loves and perceives truths; and the perception and love of truth are from good. Hence it is that truths from good are the source of the Intellectual.

—⁴. He who believes that he has an Intellectual who can reason dexterously against the truths of the Church, is very much mistaken; for such a one sees nothing within himself, but without himself . . .

10714. Faith makes the life of man's understanding, hence such as is the . . . faith, such is the life.

H. 128. The understanding is the internal sight of the Angels, which inflows into their external sight, and produces it.

130². In proportion as I have been elevated (into the light of Heaven) my understanding was enlightened . . .

136. Angels, like men, have understanding and will; the light of Heaven makes the life of their understanding, because it is Divine truth . . .

153. With the evil, the Intellectual can be turned to the quarters of Heaven; but not the Voluntary . . . which has been provided . . . to the end that everyone may be able to see and acknowledge truths . . .

368. For the man-vir-is born to be intellectual, thus to think from the understanding . . .

462². The pleasures of the appetites . . . obscure and debilitate the understanding in proportion as they prevail.

464². The internal Sensuous, or the Intellectual.

N. 35. (Refs. to passages on the subject of the will and the understanding.)

113. A man is able to know, think, and understand much; but, when left to himself, he rejects the things which are not in agreement with his love.

J. 36. The understanding, whose province it is to think, is the receptacle of faith.

L. 18². 'The will of man-vir'=the intellectual proprium of man, which in itself is falsity.

S. 12. The successive states of the Church as to the understanding of the Word. Sig. and Enum.

76². It is not the Word which makes the Church, but the understanding of it; and the Church is such as is the understanding of the Word with those who are in the Church.

77. The Word is the Word according to the understanding of it with man; that is, according as it is understood. If it is not understood, the Word is indeed called the Word; but it is not the Word with the man. The Word is the Truth according to the understanding of it . . . The Word is spirit and life according to the understanding of it; for the letter, without the understanding of it, is dead. As man has 'Truth and life according to the understanding of the Word, he has also faith and love according to it . . . It follows that through the understanding of the Word, and according to it, the Church is the Church . . .

F. 4. The Angels therefore utterly reject the dogma that the understanding must be under obedience to faith.

W. 40°. (For) appearances are the first things from which the human mind forms its understanding . . . and, if the cause lies deep, the mind cannot investigate it unless it keeps the understanding in spiritual light for a long time; but it cannot keep it long in that light on account of the natural light which continually draws it back.

46. (Such) think from the eye, and cannot think from the understanding. Thought from the eye closes the understanding; whereas thought from the understanding opens the eye.

67. As man perfects his understanding by knowledges, he is elevated into the third degree (of the natural world), and then becomes rational. 237.

243. That the understanding can be elevated into the light of Heaven . . . but that the will cannot be elevated into the heat of Heaven . . . unless the man shuns evils as sins. (From experience.) 258, Ex.

258. Every man is born into the faculty of understanding truths even to the inmost degree in which are the Angels of the Third Heaven; for the human understanding, rising up by continuity around the two higher degrees, receives the light of their wisdom . . .

264. By rationality is meant the faculty of understanding truths and thereby falsities, and of understanding goods and thereby evils . . . which every man has from creation . . . and which is never taken away.

357. In spiritual light, the understanding (of atheists) appeared open below, but closed above . . . Above the Sensuous—which is the lowest of the understanding—there appeared as it were a covering . . .

363°. It is the understanding which sees through the eye; and therefore seeing is predicated of the understanding. . . It is the understanding which hears through the ear; and therefore hearing also is predicated of attention and giving heed, which pertain to the understanding. . . It is the understanding which smells and also tastes, by virtue of its perception . . .

368°. It is believed . . . that the understanding makes man; but this is because the understanding can be elevated into the light of Heaven . . . But still so much of the understanding as transcends . . . the love (only) appears to be the man's . . . and therefore in time either passes away, or lingers in the borders outside the Things of the memory . . . and therefore is separated after death . . . 397.

382. That the understanding corresponds to the lungs. Gen.art. 413, Ex.

383. Therefore by 'the soul,' and 'the spirit,' is signified the understanding. Ill.

395°. It has therefore been effected that the under- standing of man can be elevated above his own proper love into some light of wisdom, in the love of which the man is not . . . But as man has abused the faculty of elevating the understanding above his own proper love, he has destroyed in himself the ability to be a receptacle and habitation of the Lord . . . by making the will a habitation of the love of self and of the world, and the understanding a habitation of confirmations of these loves. This is the origin of these two habitations, the will and the understanding, having been made habitations of infernal love . . . and infernal thought.

401. That love or the will cannot do anything . . . without a marriage with wisdom or the understanding. Ex.

402. That love or the will prepares a house or bridal bed for its future consort, which is wisdom or the understanding. Ex. (and shown from the physiology of the heart and lungs.)

403. That love or the will prepares all things in its human form, in order that it may be able to act conjointly with wisdom or the understanding. Shown.

404. That when the nuptials have taken place, the first conjunction (of the will and understanding) is through the affection of knowing, from which comes the affection of truth. Ex.

—². That the second conjunction (of the will and understanding) is through the affection of understanding, from which comes the perception of truth. . . The affection of truth and the perception of truth are two faculties of the understanding which with some accord in a one; but with some do not. They (do so) with those who want to perceive truths with the understanding; but not with those who merely want to know truths. It is also evident that everyone is in the perception of truth in proportion as he is in the affection of understanding it; for take away the affection of understanding truth, and there will be no perception of truth; but give the affection of understanding truth, and there will be the perception of it according to the degree of the affection of it. No man of unimpaired reason ever lacks the perception of truth, so long as he has the affection of understanding truth. That every man has the faculty of understanding truth, which is called rationality, has been shown above. —³. Further ex.

—⁴. For when love enters the understanding . . . it first produces the affection of truth; then the affection of understanding that which it knows; and at last the affection of seeing in the thought of the body that which it understands.

405. That these three . . . follow in order in the understanding. Shown.

406. Love without the understanding . . . can neither feel nor act in the body. Ex.

— Hence, without the light of the understanding even the bodily senses would be blind and blunted . . . and the same is true of every act of the body. Ex. 407, Shown.

408. That love or the will introduces wisdom or the understanding into all things of its house. Shown.

409. That love or the will does nothing except in conjunction with wisdom or the understanding. Ex.

410. That love or the will conjoins itself with wisdom or the understanding; and causes wisdom or the understanding to be reciprocally conjoined with it. Ex.

—⁴. Thoughts, perceptions, and the derivative knowledges, do indeed inflow from the Spiritual World; but still they are not received by the understanding; but by the love, according to its affections in the understanding. It appears as if the understanding receives them . . . but it is a fallacy. It also appears as if the understanding conjoins itself with the love or the will; but this too is a fallacy. Ex. 411^o.

413. That wisdom or the understanding, from the power given it by the love, can be elevated, and can receive such things as are of light from Heaven, and can perceive them. Ex. and Shown.

—³. This takes place in the lungs, because the understanding can be elevated above its own proper love, and can receive light from Heaven. But still, when the understanding is elevated above its own proper love, it does not recede from it, but derives from it that which is called the affection of knowing and understanding for the sake of something of honour, glory, or gain, in the world.

—^o. To see (these things) from correspondence is to see the lungs from the understanding, and the understanding from the lungs . . .

416. That (unless love or the will loves the understanding in the degree of its elevation) it draws down wisdom or the understanding from its elevation, in order that it may act as a one with itself. Ex. 417, Shown.

419. That love or the will is purified in the understanding, if they are elevated together. Ex. 420, Shown.

421. That love or the will is defiled in the understanding, and by it, if they are not elevated together. Ex.

422. That love, when purified by wisdom in the understanding, becomes spiritual and celestial. Ex.

424. That love, when defiled in the understanding, and by it, becomes natural, sensuous, and corporeal. Ex.

425. That there still remains the faculty of understanding, which is called rationality . . . Ex.

P. 96². Man has an understanding from no other source than that he is able as from himself to understand whether a thing is of reason or not; and to understand whether a thing is of reason or not is from the faculty continually given him by the Lord which is called rationality.

—³. As man can will, he can also understand; for to will is not possible without to understand; to understand is its consort, or mate, without which it cannot be. . . Moreover if you take away willing from understanding, you understand nothing; but in proportion as you will (to understand) in the same proportion you can understand, provided the aids called Knowledges are to hand . . .

—⁵. For the Lord resides with men in these two faculties . . . and hence it is that both an evil and a good man can understand . . .

99. I have heard atheists, who had become devils and satans, understand the arcana of wisdom as well as the Angels; but only when they heard them from others; but when they returned into their own thoughts, they did not understand them, for the reason that they would not . . .

144. That no one can be reformed in a state of blindness of the understanding. Ex.

— . When the understanding is blinded, the will is also stopped up . . .

— . In addition to ignorance, the religion which teaches a blind faith also blinds the understanding; and also a doctrine of what is false; for, as truths open the understanding, so falsities close it; they close it above, but open it below; and an understanding which is opened only below cannot see truths but can only confirm whatever it wills, especially what is false. The understanding is also blinded by the cupidities of evil; for so long as the will is in them, it impels the understanding to confirm them. Examp.

—². So thinks the understanding, which is then the whore of the will.

149. The second cause (of spiritual slavery) is that the religion of the Christian world has closed the understanding; and faith alone has sealed it up . . .

150². For what the Lord teaches, He gives to man to perceive by reason; and this in two ways; one, that he sees in himself that it is so as soon as he hears it; the other, that he understands it by reasons: to see in himself is in the internal man; and to understand by reasons is in the external man.

—^o. For the understanding sees in the eye, and hears in the ear; and not the converse.

172⁵. Everyone is taught according to the understanding of his love; what is beyond this does not remain.

187³. I have sometimes thought, would such acknowledge the Divine Providence if their understanding were opened above . . . and I have perceived that those who have confirmed themselves in favour of nature . . . would not. Ex.

223. Man possesses in himself the faculty of understanding the arcana of wisdom, like the Angels themselves; for I have seen fiery devils, who, when they heard the arcana of wisdom, not only understood them, but also spoke them from their own rationality ; but as soon as they returned to their diabolical love, they did not understand them, but things contrary to them . . . R.940^e.

[P.] 233⁷. When a man is in evil, many truths can be introduced into his understanding, and yet not be profaned. The reason is that the understanding does not inflow into the will, but the will into the understanding . . .

— . When truths are solely in the understanding, and thence in the memory, they are not in the man, but outside of him.

282. The Lord could heal the understanding with every man, and thus make him not think evils but goods . . . but merely to heal the understanding, is to heal a man outwardly only ; for the understanding together with its thought is the external of man's life ; and the will with its affection is the internal of it ; and therefore the healing of the understanding alone would be like a palliative healing . . . It is the will itself which must be healed, not by the influx of the understanding into it, because this is impossible ; but by instruction and exhortation by the understanding. If the understanding only were healed, the man would become like an embalmed corpse, or one enveloped in fragrant spices and flowers, which in a short time would acquire a stench from the corpse . . . So would it be with heavenly truths in the understanding, if the evil love of the will were shut in.

321³. All influx from the Lord is effected by the enlightenment of the understanding, and by the affection of truth, and through the latter into the former.

R. 25. That all will acknowledge the Lord who, from affection, are in the understanding of Divine truth. Sig. and Ex.

214. That the understanding may be healed, lest the genuine truths of wisdom be profaned and falsified. Sig. and Ex.

224³. Things which the learned of the clergy have removed from the understanding, not knowing that there are two ways to the understanding ; one from the world, and the other from Heaven ; and that the Lord withdraws the understanding from the world, when He enlightens it ; whereas if the understanding is closed by religion, the way to it from Heaven is closed, and then the man sees nothing more in the Word than a blind man. Examps.

—⁷. The Angels said, We will not say anything but what you understand ; otherwise our discourse would fall like rain upon sand . . .

—¹³. The Angels replied, It is a mystery, but such a one as can be understood.

—^e. Then they said, Now for the first time we understand ; and, when they said, We understand, a flaming light descended from Heaven and consociated them with the Angels.

564. The spiritual truths, rationally understood, adduced by the Michaels of the New Church. Sig. and Ex.

—². As, in the New Church, the dogma that the understanding is to be kept in obedience to faith, is rejected ; and as there is received in its stead [the doctrine] that the truth of the Church must be seen in order that it may be believed ; and as truth cannot be seen in any other way than rationally, it is said, by truths rationally understood. How can any man be led by the Lord, and be conjoined with Heaven, who has closed his understanding in such things as belong to salvation and eternal life ? Is it not the understanding which must be enlightened and taught ? And what is an understanding closed by religion but thick darkness ? . . . The wise cast out of their memories . . . words which have not entered by the understanding. . .

575². The dragon reigns and prevails . . . especially through this dogma, That the understanding must be kept under obedience to faith ; and that that is faith which is not understood ; and that, in spiritual things, faith in a Thing which is understood is intellectual faith, which is not justifying. When these [ideas] prevail among the laity, the clergy have Power, reverence, and a kind of adoration. Sig.

611⁸. Those whom you saw . . . like dead horses, were those who have closed the rational sight . . . by their peculiar dogma that the understanding must be kept under obedience to their faith ; not thinking that the understanding, when closed by religion, is as blind as a mole. Des.

655⁷. For every devil can understand truth when he hears it ; but he cannot retain it. Ex.

914. With every man the understanding is such that it can be elevated even into the light of Heaven ; and also is elevated if from any delight it wills to see truth . . .

—². But they who have confirmed the dogma, that in theological things the understanding must see nothing . . . cannot see any truth in the light. This dogma was retained by the Church of the Reformed from the Roman Catholic religiosity, which holds that no one but the Church itself, by which they mean the Pope, and the Papal Consistory, must interpret the Word . . .

—³. They who hereafter retain (a faith which is separated from the understanding) cannot be enlightened by the Lord in Divine truths. So long as the understanding is held captive under obedience to faith, that is, so long as the understanding is removed from seeing the truths of the Church, theology becomes a mere affair of the memory . . . (Such) are 'blind leaders of the blind'; and 'when the blind leads the blind, both fall into the ditch' . . .

940². This conceit from that love can elevate the understanding into the light of Heaven . . .

M. 55⁶. The love of a man-vir—for a man-vir, is like the love of an understanding and an understanding; for the man was created, and is thence born, in order to become understanding. The love of a woman for a woman is like the love of an affection and an affection of the understanding of the men; for a woman has been created and is born to become the love of the understanding of the man.

90. This reception (with the male, of the truth of wisdom) takes place in the understanding; and consequently the male is born in order to become intellectual. Ex.

—^e. Moreover, the prolific principle is in the male; and this is from no other source than the understanding; for it is from the truth from good there.

151a³. (The idea that) the understanding is only a modification of the light of the sun . . .

168. The Masculine consists in perceiving from the understanding . . . and the understanding perceives also those things which are above the body, and outside of the world . . . whereas love does not go beyond what it feels; and when it does go beyond this, it derives its doing so from a conjunction . . . with the understanding of the man. For the understanding is of light; and love is of heat; and the things which are of light are seen; and those which are of heat are felt.

183^e. Some appeared crowned with flowers, because they had understood more profoundly.

218^e. From these things I could plainly see that the man-vir—is born understanding . . . also the quality of understanding in its beginnings; and thus what the quality of the understanding of the man would be in its development without conjunction with feminine love . . .

223. The masculine form is the intellectual form . . . and the intellectual form cannot grow warm with conjugal heat of itself . . .

245. The reason why souls or offspring are propagated

(even when cold separates the souls of the parents) is that the understanding of the man is not closed; but is capable of being elevated into the light in which the soul is . . .

—⁶. Devils have such rationality from the glory of the love of self; for . . . glory elevates the understanding even into the light of Heaven. For with every man the understanding is capable of being elevated according to the Knowledges; but not the will, except by a life according to the truths of the Church and of reason. Hence it is that atheists themselves . . . enjoy a more lofty rationality than many others . . . but only when they are in the thought of the understanding . . . The affection of the will possesses the internal of man, but the thought of the understanding his external.

354. For, in the Spiritual World, the understanding clothes everyone.

372. The seat of jealousy is in the understanding of the husband . . . For conjugal love protects itself by the understanding . . .

—^e. The understanding of the husband then hardens itself, and becomes like a horn striking the adulterer.

446. That the love of the sex . . . commences when a youth begins to think and act from his own understanding. Ex.

—². It is known that the love of the sex follows the initiation of one's Own understanding, and progresses according to its vigour; a sign that this love ascends as the understanding ascends, and descends as the understanding descends. By ascending is meant into wisdom, and by descending is meant into insanity . . .

—^e. The reason the voice becomes masculine together with the beginning of one's Own understanding, is that the understanding thinks, and speaks through the thought; a sign that the understanding makes the man-virum, and also his masculinity; consequently, that in proportion as his understanding is elevated, so does he become a man-homo vir, and also a male man-masculus vir.

486. That adulteries of the first degree . . . are committed by those who cannot as yet, or cannot at all, consult the understanding, and so prevent them. Ex.

—^e. After death these adulteries are imputed according to the presence, quality, and faculty of understanding in the will of those who commit them.

488. That adulteries of the second degree . . . are committed by those who are indeed able to consult the understanding; but from accidental causes at the moment are not able to do so. Ex.

[M.] 489. That adulteries committed by these persons are imputatory, according as the understanding afterwards favours them or not. Ex.

490. That adulteries of the third degree . . . are committed by those who confirm by the understanding that they are not evils of sin. Ex.

—³. Whatever the will does, it does through the understanding. On the other hand, the understanding does nothing alone from itself; but whatever it does, it does from the will. The will inflows into the understanding, and not the understanding into the will; but the understanding teaches what is good and evil, and consults the will so that from these two the will may choose and do what is pleasing to the understanding. After this there is effected a twofold conjunction; one in which the will acts from within, and the understanding from without; and the other in which the understanding acts from within, and the will from without. . . In adultery of the reason, the understanding acts from within, and the will from without; but in adultery of the will, the will acts from within and the understanding from without; and the will is the man himself; and the understanding is the man from the will; and that which acts within dominates over that which acts without.

492. That adulteries of the fourth degree . . . are committed by those . . . who do not consider them of sufficient importance to consult the understanding about them. Ex.

—². Those who are evil from the understanding . . . are called satans . . . With such the understanding plays the leading part . . .

493. Therefore the understanding, regarded in itself, is nothing but the form of the will . . .

—². That which flows forth from . . . the understanding and its thought, is called intention.

495. That adulteries . . . from the confirmation of the understanding, render men natural, sensuous, and corporeal. Ex.

— . To this end there has been given man the faculty of elevating the understanding (to the highest region of the mind); but if the love of his will is not elevated at the same time, he . . . remains natural; nevertheless he retains the faculty of elevating the understanding, in order that it may be possible for him to be reformed; for he is reformed by means of the understanding. Ex.

—². But if the man does not live according to the Knowledges of good and truth . . . his understanding becomes spiritual [only] by alternations; for it elevates itself alternately, like an eagle, and looks down below to what belongs to its love; and, when it sees it, it flies down to it, and conjoins itself with it . . . and again, for the sake of renown . . . it lifts itself on high . . .

498. That a natural, sensuous, and corporeal man is equally rational as to the understanding with a spiritual man, has been shown me from satans and devils . . .

— . Without the faculty of elevating the understanding above the love of the will, man would not be a man, but a beast; for a beast does not enjoy this faculty; consequently, neither would he be able to choose anything . . . and therefore could not be reformed . . . 499, Ex.

527². All things which are done by the understanding, are done from confirmation, because the understanding confirms. . . Hence evil, or good, is imputed to everyone according to the quality of his will in them, and according to the quality of his understanding about them.

B. 53. Therefore (the present) dogmas enter the memory only, and not any understanding above it. Ex.

54. The dogma that the understanding must be kept under obedience to faith. Ex. 59. T.185³ (in a sermon).

55. For the human understanding possesses two lights; one from Heaven, and the other from the world . . .

I. 14⁴. Unless the understanding could be perfected separately, and the will through it, man would not be man, but a beast; for, without this separation, and the ascent of the understanding above the will, he could not think, and, from thought, speak . . . nor could he act from reason, but only from instinct; still less could he know the things which are of God . . . and thus be conjoined with God, and live to eternity . . . T.588².

T. 11³. The faith of God enters man . . . from the soul into the higher things of the understanding; but Knowledges about God enter by a posterior way, because they are drawn in from the revealed Word by the understanding through the senses of the body; and the meeting of the influxes is in the middle of the understanding; and there natural faith . . . becomes spiritual . . . and therefore the human understanding is like an exchange.

40. The life which is the light . . . as it illuminates, also vivifies the understanding of man.

173. The human understanding is like the true stomach, as the memory is like the ruminatory one.

—⁷. I asked his hearers whether they had understood anything? But they replied, We took everything in with open ears; why do you ask whether we understood; is not the understanding stupefied in such things? And the priest added, Because you have heard and have not understood, blessed are ye . . .

224². For all things of man relate to the under- standing and will; and the understanding is the receptacle of Divine truth . . .

374³. In these things (the seed, branches, leaves, etc.) a tree corresponds to the understanding in man.

508³. I saw this writing . . . Nunc licet, which meant that now it is allowable to enter intellectually into the arcana of faith. . . It is very dangerous to enter with the understanding into dogmas of faith which have been made up from Own intelligence . . . the understanding is thereby closed above, and gradually below also . . . and remains solely in politics, etc.

—⁵. But in the New Church it is allowable to enter with the understanding and penetrate into all its secrets . . . for confirmations of these Truths by rational things cause the understanding to be opened above more and more, and thus to be elevated into the light in which are the Angels of Heaven . . .

— For it is a canon of the New Church, that falsities close the understanding, and that Truths open it.

533³. The will is the house itself . . . and the understanding is the court . . .

504². The cerebrum has been allotted to the understanding . . . and the cerebellum to the will . . .

571. (Reformation) is a state of thought from the understanding . . . (but after regeneration has commenced) the love of the will inflows into the understanding, and leads it to think in agreement with its love. 587, Gen.art.

587. Therefore regeneration must be effected through the understanding as a mediate cause. Ex.

589. The faculty of elevating the understanding even to the intelligence in which are the Angels, is in every man from creation, both evil and good, and even in every devil in Hell. Ex. 602.

590. The quality of a man whose understanding has been elevated, but not the love of the will thereby. Shown by comparisons.

602². As to the lower region in the mind, the understanding is actually in the light of the world; and is in the light of Heaven as to the higher region . . .

658². By this delight the will enters the understanding, and produces consent.

—³. The understanding is the derivative existere or existence. And, as an essence is not anything unless it is in some form, so the will is not anything except in the understanding; and therefore the will forms itself in the understanding, and thus comes forth—prodit—into the light.

—⁴. The love . . . in the understanding, seeks and finds causes . . . Purpose also is of the will, and enters the understanding by intention . . .

—^e. (Thus) man is man (only) secondarily from the understanding.

814. Influx adapts itself to efflux; and in like manner so does the understanding from above to the measure of the freedom there is in speaking and acting out the thoughts . . .

815. Hence (the Germans) rarely elevate spiritual things into the higher understanding; but only let them into the lower understanding, from which they reason about them . . .

Ad. 653. To the soul succeeds the intellectual mind . . . See 666. 917.

924. Hence comes the understanding.

929. The human understanding is a kind of sight . . .

930. The use of the understanding, or intellectual mind. 931.

944. The understanding, or human mind as to that part which is properly called intellectual, has Truths for its objects . . .

945. How a theoretical understanding becomes practical.

964. The soul of the understanding is affection . . .

996. The understanding comes forth from these loves . . . 997.

998. Intellectual light.

D. 157. On the disturbing of the understanding by the dissenting of Spirits.

857². We ought to believe these arcana although we do not understand them. Ex. 858. 860.

861. As the human understanding is full of falsities . . .

899. There are two ways into the human understanding: through the senses . . . and the human understanding is born through this way; and through Heaven from the Lord . . .

1667. The right side of the brain is devoted to intellectual things; and the left to affections; but the contrary in the body; for the left eye is devoted to intellectual things . . .

1757. That intellectual faith is only an affair of the memory.

1925. When I had no understanding of certain things, that is, no attention, the Angels had a fuller one. Hence, from infants, who do not understand what they are praying for, the Angels perceive a still fuller understanding.

2546^e. Therefore truths are not to be denied because we do not understand them . . .

2949. In proportion as man is in a most arcane leading, and not his own, he is in the faculty of understanding . . .

3094. That the faculty of understanding is of the Lord. Ex.

3154. The quality of the ideas of those who do not believe because they do not understand. Ex.

3209. That the Intellectual can apprehend or understand that there is an internal more interior than itself, but cannot enter it.

3486^e. Dippel took away all understanding of truth and good from those who adhered to him.

3891. I asked Dippel who understands the most; he who knows many falsities, or he who knows a little truth . . .

4311. On intellectual things not instructed. . . There are Spirits who are affected with goods; but have no understanding for discriminating... (They showed) what affection is without understanding, namely, that unless a man is instructed as to the intellectual part [he is easily led astray]. 4312, Examp.

[D.] 4387. What intellectual life is. Ex.

4537. On the Holy Spirit, and the intellectual gift... The more anyone supposes himself to be the Holy Spirit, the more he loses the intellectual gift; for it is the love of self which destroys it... This was shown also by... the most deceitful, who have the intellectual gift more than others... It was shown by looking into their eyes, where is the intellectual gift...

4627⁸. Thus the understanding sees by the light of Heaven; the interior understanding by the light of Heaven; the exterior, by the influx of the light of Heaven into the light of the world...

4690. Some complained when they saw that their Intellectual which they had had in the world was taken away... but they were told that otherwise they would be in Heaven by their Intellectual, and in Hell by their Voluntary... and also that if their external Intellectual were to remain, they would use it to confirm evils...

4751. (Charles xii.) was vastated as to his Intellectual by the evil of the Most Ancient Church; for to be conjoined with them is to perish as to all the Intellectual.

4754. A most striking example that the evil... have the gift of understanding truth. Des.

5545. Why so many intellectual things are here given.

5641. The Intellectual of man is preserved entire by the Lord, however his Voluntary may be...

5670. On the Intellectual of man as to the Word. Gen.art.

5696. (On those who receive truths only intellectually.)

6085. On the operation of the understanding and the will. Gen.art.

—c. (Thus) the understanding only teaches, and does not produce the will; but the will the understanding.

D. Min. 4653. On intellectual hypocrites. Ex.

4728. On the light and understanding which are from proprium, and which are from the Lord. Ex.

4752. On the understanding of those who only confirm principles which have been given or apprehended. Ex.

E. 8². They who receive (heavenly things) with love, see them in their understanding...

11. Their understanding enlightened. Sig. and Ex.

68². For the Divine understanding, being infinite, is the Divine Providence.

140⁶. Man can be in enlightenment as to the understanding, although in evil as to the will; for the intellectual faculty has been separated from the voluntary faculty with all who have not been regenerated; and only with those who have been regenerated do they act as a one; for it is of the understanding to know, think, and speak truths; whereas it is of the will to will the things which the man understands, and, from will or love, to do them... 140, Tr.

—7. The possibility of the understanding's being in enlightenment has been given to man for the sake of his reformation; for all evil resides in the will of man, both that into which he is born, and that into which he introduces himself; and the will cannot be amended, unless the man knows, and through the understanding acknowledges, truths and goods, and also falsities and evils.

239. That they are devoid of the understanding of truth, and of the understanding and will of good. Sig. and Ex.

—, Therefore they remove the understanding from the Things of faith. Ex... There lurks something like (popery) in this... Yet the understanding is the way to man's life... All in Heaven see truths with the understanding... and what they do not see with the understanding they do not receive... saying, I cannot believe what I do not see, that is, understand...

—2. That (such) are devoid of the understanding of good, because devoid of the will of good. Ex.

242⁴. The circle of life is to know, understand, will, and do...

273. Enlightenment, understanding, and perception of Divine truth... Sig. and Ex.

—, 'Thunderings' are predicated of the understanding of Divine truth. —², Ill.

274². As the understanding derives its all from the will... when the understanding of truth is from the good of the will, the whole man is spiritual. Sig. But it is the contrary when the understanding is formed from the evil of the will. Sig.

283. The will... is the man himself, or man in essence; and the understanding... is the derivative man, thus man in form. 295².

313⁶. 'The light of the body is the eye,' etc. = that if the understanding of man is good, that is, if it is from the truths which are from good, then the whole man is such; but if the understanding is from the falsities of evil the whole man is such.

329¹⁵. The correspondence of the understanding is with the blood . . .

331². To dispel the shade which has covered the understanding . . . Sig.

354. What comes from the Middle Heaven, is understood . . .

376³³. 'Shepherds who know not to understand' (Is. lvi. 11) = who have no understanding of truth.

427⁸. All the understanding of man is from the good of his love, and according to that which he receives from the Lord. Sig.

546. 'Man-homo,' here, = the understanding of truth and perception of good. Ex.

547. That they should not be deprived of the faculty of understanding truth . . . Sig. and Ex.

—. For every man is born into the faculty of understanding truth . . . This faculty man never loses . . . A sensuous man . . . seems to have lost it, because he does not understand truth . . . when reading the Word . . . but still he has not lost the very faculty of understanding . . . but only the understanding of truth . . . so long as he is in falsities . . . But if the persuasion of falsity . . . is removed, he understands and perceives that truth is truth . . . —², (From experience with evil Spirits.)

—². For it is the affection of the will which makes all the understanding there is with a man; because the very life of the understanding is from it. Ex. . . From this it is evident that a man can indeed lose the understanding of truth . . . but still he cannot lose the faculty of understanding truth . . .

548. That the understanding would be darkened and drawn away by falsities of evil from seeing truth . . . Sig. and Ex.

550. That they then want to lose the faculty of understanding truth; but that they cannot. Sig. and Ex.

559². For these are the ultimates of the understanding, which persuade. Sig.

572. Depriving themselves of all understanding of truth, and thus of spiritual life. Sig. and Ex.

—^e. The understanding is opened by truths from good; but not by truths without good. Ex.

622³. 'The belly' = the interior understanding; and 'to fill their belly with treasure' = to instruct their interior understanding in the truths of the Word. . . For man has also an exterior understanding, (which) is of the natural mind; whereas the interior understanding is of the spiritual mind. Ill.

696²¹. 'A good understanding' (Ps. cxi. 10) = intelligence.

706⁹. 'To see with the eyes and understand with the heart' (John xii. 40) = to receive in the understanding and will.

—¹⁵. The Natural, the Spiritual, and the Intellectual, perverted. Sig.

708². Those who receive the light of intelligence from the Lord as a Sun, are those in whom the Intellectual and its Rational have been opened . . . while those who receive light from the Lord as a Moon, are those in whom the Intellectual and the interior Rational have not been opened . . .

710²⁵. For the man-vir-has been born to act from the understanding . . . and the understanding with men-viros-is the understanding of truth and good . . . and as all the understanding derives its life from affection, the two are coupled in Heaven (in marriage) . . .

—. The understanding is various with everyone; as the truths, from which the understanding is, are various (enum.): and hence the understanding of one is never like the understanding of another . . .

—. Two various affections cannot correspond to one understanding . . .

—³⁰. 'To be made eunuchs of men-ex hominibus' = to be reformed through the understanding from the memory; 'man-homo' = this understanding.

715². The truly human understanding is formed and perfected by means of natural, civil, moral, and spiritual truths; the interior understanding by means of spiritual truths; and the exterior by means of moral and civil truths; thus such as are the truths, such is the understanding from them.

—. In this case the interior understanding cannot be formed . . .

759⁴. 'The wings of an eagle' = the understanding of truth; for all of the New Church have the understanding enlightened, by which they are able to see truth from the light of truth . . .

—. But (others) cannot have the understanding so enlightened as to be able to see whether a thing is true or not . . .

790¹¹. For the understanding in the natural man is formed by the influx of the light of Heaven through the spiritual man . . . thus the understanding is formed from the truths which are from good . . . and therefore such as is the will of good with a man, such is the understanding of truth in him . . . These are in the natural man; but in the spiritual man the will and understanding are much more perfect . . .

[E.] 810^e. They are not true as to their understanding of them.

828³. (With the celestial Angels, truths) are in the life, and thence in the understanding; but not as thought; but as the affection of good in its form . . .

831³. The spiritual Angels admit truths first into the memory, and thence into the understanding . . . But not unless they see them. Ex. —⁴.

—⁴. These Angels are perfected in the understanding in proportion as they are in the love of truth for the sake of life . . . Hence the truths from which their understanding has been formed, when they become of the will . . . are called goods . . .

— . When there is no will, the understanding perishes; and there remains only the faculty of understanding.

834. As these Angels are natural, they have not the understanding elevated above what it was in the world, except a little; and therefore they do not see truths in the light . . .

846. 'The number of a man' = as if it were from such an understanding of truths . . .

—². Moreover, those in faith separated . . . exclude the understanding . . .

— . The spiritual sense treats much of the understanding of Divine truth . . . (and shows that) in proportion as the understanding of truth perishes in the Church, in the same proportion the Church perishes.

— . These three degrees of understanding—natural, rational, and spiritual, must be together. Sig. For the natural understanding . . . cannot be enlightened by its own lumen, but must be enlightened by the light of the rational man . . . and this by spiritual light; for the spiritual understanding is in the light of Heaven . . . Hence it is evident that the natural understanding, without light through the Rational from the Spiritual, is not understanding; for it is devoid of light from Heaven . . .

—³. (Thus) the Lord wants a man not only to know the truths of his own Church, but also to understand them; yet not from natural light separated from spiritual light. Ex.

— . To comprehend the Things of the Church from this light is not to understand them; but is rather to not understand them . . .

—⁴. (Thus) by the understanding of the Truths of the Church, is meant the understanding of them enlightened by the light of Heaven, thus by the Lord . . .

874². Hence it has been evident to me that almost every one has the faculty of understanding . . .

889⁴. So the understanding, according to its determinations, takes the quality of its thought from the truths which are its objects in the Spiritual World . . .

923. Dominion over the understanding. Sig. and Ex.

—². It is the understanding of truth in the Word, which is meant. Ex.

— . But he who has no spiritual affection of truth, cannot have his understanding enlightened . . . (and therefore) at the end of the Church the understanding of truth so far perishes that it cannot be enlightened. Ex. —³.

941^e. He who believes that man has a Rational and an understanding before his Natural has been purified from evils, is mistaken; for understanding is to see the truths of the Church from the light of Heaven . . .

970. There was a discussion among the Spirits as to whether everyone has the faculty of understanding truths; and an infernal Spirit was taken as a witness . . . and it was found that he could understand them . . . as well as a good Spirit; and yet he did not want to understand them . . . Through this faculty, man has conjunction with the Lord . . . The reason this faculty is said to have been destroyed by falsifications, is that they who have falsified the Word do not want to understand real truths . . . 998³.

1004². It is not possible for one understanding to be united to two diverse wills; or the converse.

1049³. For nothing enters the life of man . . . except that which comes into his understanding and thence his will; and man does not think from his own understanding, and act from his own will, until he is grown up.

1153⁶. Therefore the Lord's operation is into man's love, and from it into his understanding; and not the reverse.

1170⁴. For the understanding with man has not been destroyed . . .

— . Nothing destroys the understanding except the will. Ex.

1171. Before reformation, the light of the understanding is like the clear light of the moon . . . but after it, it is like the light of the sun . . .

1216³. For every man, even sensuous man, has been endowed with understanding, which can be elevated into the light of Heaven, and can see spiritual and Divine things . . . but only while he hears or reads them . . . Ex. 1224².

Ath. 58. In theological matters . . . the idea is formed according to each person's understanding, even in regard to those things of which it is said that the understanding must be kept under obedience to faith . . . The idea which is formed about it, is the understanding of it . . .

166^e. As for those who do not want to understand what they believe, let them remain in their own opinion; but let them know that in the Spiritual World, no one receives anything which he does not see, that is, understand; for he says, Perhaps it is not true.

J. (Post.) 329. That the understanding teaches the will, and does not lead it. Ex.

336. In Heaven they utterly reject the dogma that the understanding is to be kept under obedience to faith.

— All things of theology can be apprehended with the understanding: not only with the spiritual understanding by the Angels; but also with the rational understanding by men.

D. Love i. Love is the life of the understanding, and therefore of the whole man. Ex.

D. Wis. vii. 3². In a word, such as is the understanding, such is the respiration . . .

x. 2. (Thus) the understanding returns the life of love received from the will; yet not by the same way as that by which it receives it; but by another towards the sides . . .

3. That the life of the understanding purifies the life of the will. Ex.

—². That the life of the understanding also perfects and exalts the life of the will. Ex.

4. That the life of the will co-operates with the life of the understanding in every motion; and the life of the understanding with the life of the will in every sense. Ex. 5.

6. That . . . with the evil the life of the will . . . is defiled, depraved, and brutified by the life of the understanding. Ex.

Undulatory. Undulatorius.

Undulatorily. Undulatorie.

A. 1763. A speech of Spirits . . . undulating like a wave—volumen. 6923.

4046. Many Spirits acted (by) as it were a reciprocal undulation downwards and upwards.

—². I felt a pulsation . . . undulating in a similar manner . . .

—³. Others inflowed into the pulse, by an undulation not downwards and upwards, but transversely.

10379. The action of these Spirits is into the left knee . . . with a kind of vibration of an undulation . . . 1686.

10382^e. He stood at the occiput, and spoke with me thence undulatorily. D. 1682.

T. 173³. The heavenly aura in which their thoughts fly and undulate . . .

D. 894. The speech of the Angels was . . . perceived by me only as a gentle undulation . . . above and backwards.

942. When such speak, it takes place with an undulation as of the waves of the sea.

1688. There was first as it were a reciprocal undulation, downwards and upwards . . .

2662. A commotion (which) undulated tremulously.

2999. Speech with me from Heaven by means of a kind of general undulation . . .

3121. The general undulation of Heaven was perceived, (which) was the respiration of Heaven.

3207. Thus (Sirens) may undulate from one extreme of fire and ice to the other.

3218. On a tritutory undulation.

3233^e. The Spirits above me undulated quickly, like the atmosphere. Ex.

3284. They saluted their own people in a volume, by a kind of undulation. Des.

3728. There was a kind of undulation descending from the Spirits above the head . . .

3741. These Spirits from the side of Gehenna . . . acted by an undulatory vibration, by which they also spoke; for to speak by means of an undulation had often been done before. The undulation fell towards the left knee, and extended itself towards the sole . . . As the front of the knee and the foot are bony, they are such that the speech of (such Spirits) falls thither with a vibratory undulation.

3880. These Spirits . . . undulated gently, by thus speaking among themselves.

3895. Lascivious girls flowed together above my head with a rather sweet undulation. Des.

3911^e. This undulating volume adhered to my head . . .

3926. The deceitful . . . at a middle distance above my head, were perceived as a kind of undulation, as it were a pure watery one.

3954. (He supposed the soul to be) something of ether, as it were undulating generally . . .

5521. The speech (of the celestial) is like a soft undulatory [motion] which however is audible.

A. 9125^e. 'To come as a thief'=to come unknown and unexpected.

Unextinguishable. Inextinguibilis.

D. Min. 4786². He entertained unextinguishable hatred.

Unfaithful. Infidus.

See under INFIDELITY.

R. 891. 'The unfaithful' (Rev. xxi. 8)=those who are in no charity towards the neighbour; for such are also insincere and fraudulent; thus unfaithful.

Unfermented. Infermentatus.

See UNLEAVENED.

A. 2342. Unfermented or unleavened.

9287. What is unfermented or unleavened=good purified from falsities.

P. 284^e. Then good with its truth . . . becomes turbid and foul, like unfermented wine, and unfermented strong drink.

T. 404^e. Like the unfermented must of wine, which tastes sweet, but infests the stomach.

Unfold. See DISCLOSE.

Unforeseen. Improvisus.

D. Min. 4784^e. Unforeseen misfortunes are nothing else than the perpetual efforts of evil Spirits; and this because unforeseen goods come forth from the Lord.

Unfortunate. See MISFORTUNE.

Unfruitful. Infocundus.

A. 9325^e. 'There shall not be in thee the unfruitful, nor the barren' (Deut.vii.14)=not devoid of life from truth and good; thus that they shall be spiritually alive.

Unfruitful. Infrugifer.

A. 9272^d. That the cares of the world, etc. render (truths) unfruitful, the Lord teaches in Mark iv.7,18, 19; and therefore it is said (here) that they should circumcise themselves to Jehovah . . . that is, purify themselves from such things as . . . render the truths and goods of faith unfruitful.

E. 403²⁰. As a Church composed of such as are not in natural good . . . is not a Church, it is said, 'Why doth it make the land unfruitful?' (Luke xiii.7).

Unhappy. Infelix.

Unhappiness. Infelicitas.

A. 1103. For they are among the unhappy.

1568³. If these things cannot be removed, the man cannot be otherwise than unhappy to eternity.

3539^d. The most unhappy life is from the love of self and the love of the world, because Hell inflows into it.

7599^e. They see not the things which are behind them: hence comes all evil, consequently all unhappiness and Hell to man.

8480^e. Whatever happens to (those who trust in themselves) . . . is evil, and therefore conduces, as a means, to their eternal unhappiness. Sig.

M. 294^e. (Thus do the pleasures of seortatory love) enter into their unhappiness, which consists in a want of all the delights of the heart. Ex.

D. 4127. On the Hell of the unhappy. Gen.art.

E. 993³. From the happinesses of marriages, a conclusion may be drawn respecting the unhappinesses of adulteries . . . Therefore all unhappinesses belong to (the love of adultery) . . . The undelights and unhappinesses in those marriages in which the love of adultery reigns, increase in direfulness even to the lowest Hell.

Unicorn. Monoceros.

A. 2832^d. 'The horns of the unicorn' (Deut.xxxiii. 17)=the great power of truth. (=the things which are of power from the good and truth of faith. 9081^e.)

S. 18⁵. 'A calf,' and 'a sun of a unicorn' (Ps.xxix. 6)=the falsities of the natural and of the sensuous man.

M. 76². Some of the chariots were carved like unicorns.

E. 316²³. 'His horns are the horns of a unicorn' (Deut.xxxiii.17)=truths in their fulness and in their derivative power. 336^d.

375²³. Occurs.

Unicorn. Unicornis.

A. 4402^d. 'The strength of the unicorn' (Num. xxiii.22; xxiv.8)=the power of truth from good. Ref.

T. 78. I saw (there) unicorns.

Uniform. Uniformis.

T. 365^d. Outwardly uniform; but inwardly manifold.

Unigenitus. Under ONLY-BEGOTTEN.

Union. Unio.

Unite, To. Unire.

Unition. Unitio.

See under ONE, and UNITY.

A. 252. Heaven and the Church are united to the Lord through proprium . . . for without proprium (or what is their Own) there is no union.

343^e. For all gathering together and union are from charity; and all dispersion and disunion are from no charity.

1013³. This 'one' is that mystical union of which some think; which union is solely through love.

—⁴. This union, which makes the image and likeness, cannot be so clearly seen in the human race; but it can in Heaven . . .

1414^e. In the Lord alone was there . . . a union of the corporeal things with the Divine celestial things; and of the sensuous things with the Divine spiritual things.

1432. For each and all things exist and subsist from . . . the unition of His Human essence, in as it were a marriage, with His Divine essence . . .

1577. With no man have the internal man and the external ever been united; nor could they be united; nor can they be united; but in the Lord alone . . . With regenerated men it appears as if they had been united. Ex. —⁴.

—⁴. In the Lord alone has the internal man been united to the external; but in no other man, except in so far as the Lord has united, and does unite them. Love and charity, that is, good, is what alone unites; and (this) is solely from the Lord. Such is the union signified by these words. Ex.

1587^e. The Lord came into the world that He might conjoin and unite the external man to the internal, that is, the Human essence to the Divine essence.

1594. 'A man a brother'=union.

1737. Conjunction or union has been effected with the Celestial of love . . .

1926. The unition was effected successively. . . Every temptation and victory united; and in proportion as He united Himself to Jehovah . . . intellectual truth was united to Divine good.

1985. It treats (in Gen.xvii.) of the union of the Lord's Divine essence with His Human essence; and of the Human essence with the Divine . . . 1986.

1988^e. By these things Abraham represented the union of the Lord's Divine essence with His Human essence; and in fact that of His internal man, which was Jehovah, with His Rational. 1996.

1997^e. The Lord united the affection of truth to the affection of good . . . when He united the Human essence to the Divine essence.

1999³. By this Internal (of man) the Lord is united to man.

—⁵. His Human essence, by the union, was in like manner made life.

2003. The union of the Divine essence with the Human essence. Sig. and Ex.

2004. The union of the Human essence with the Divine essence. Sig. and Ex.

— . The Angels perceive . . . the reciprocal union of His Divine essence with His Human . . . and of His Human with His Divine.

—². That the union was effected reciprocally. Ex.

—³. As to the union of the Lord's Divine essence with His Human essence, and of His Human essence with His Divine essence, it infinitely transcends [the human understanding]. Ex.

— . There was a union of the Lord with Jehovah; but there is no union of man with the Lord; but conjunction.

— . The Lord, by His Own power, united Himself to Jehovah . . .

— . It is this reciprocal union which is meant in John xii.44-46; in which words are hidden most arcane things about the union of good with truth, and of truth with good; or, what is the same, of the union of the Divine essence with the Human essence, and of the Human essence with the Divine essence . . .

— . In John xiv.10-12, are the same arcana concerning the union of good with truth, and of truth with good, or, what is the same, of the Lord's Divine essence with His Human essence . . . This is that mystical union of which many speak.

2011. The union of the Lord's Human essence with His Divine essence is circumstanced as is that of truth with good; and the union of His Divine essence with His Human essence, as that of good with truth, which is a reciprocal union. Nay, in the Lord, it was truth itself which united itself to good; and good which united itself to truth . . .

—^e. But there is union when the countenance, speech, and gesture are in agreement with the thought.

2021. The 'covenant' first mentioned refers to the union of Jehovah with the Human essence; and the second, to the conjunction with those who are 'the seed.' In order that a more distinct idea may be had (of these two things) we may call the former a union, and the latter a conjunction. There was a union of the Divine essence with the Human essence; but there is a conjunction of the Lord with the human race; for the Lord is life, and His Human essence also was made life; and there is a union of life with life; whereas man is (only) a recipient of life . . .

2033. A union still closer. Sig. and Ex.

— . The union of the Human essence with the Divine essence was not effected all at once; but through the whole course of His life . . . Thus He continually ascended to glorification, that is, union. Sig. 2063².

2034². That in His union with the Father, the Lord had in view His conjunction with the human race. Ill. 2077. 2102².

—⁴. 'Glorification'=union.

2074. That the Rational of His Human essence should then be united to the Divine essence. Sig. and Ex. 2095.

2095. The state of union then. Sig. and Ex.

2135. The state of the Lord's perception . . . before the perfect union . . . Tr. 2136.

2144^e. His perceptions were more and more interior, in proportion as He drew near to union with Jehovah.

2213. By Abraham's hundredth year, is signified the full union of the Human of the Lord with the Divine, and of the Divine with the Human. 2636.

2222. The Lord's love towards the universal human race was so great that He willed to save all to eternity through the union of the Human essence with the Divine essence, and of the Divine essence with the Human essence. 2235⁹.

2243⁷. Then the Lord came into the world, and through the union of the Divine essence with the Human essence in Himself, He conjoined Heaven with earth . . .

2249². The Angels are enlightened and confirmed by these things more and more in regard to the union of the Lord's Human essence with His Divine essence.

2250^e. But when the Human essence had become united to the Divine essence . . . He no longer interceded, but He has mercy, and . . . saves.

2253. This life (of love towards the universal human race) is the veriest Celestial through which He united Himself to the Divine, and the Divine to Himself.

2299. They represented (before the little children) the union of the Lord's Human with the Divine.

2310². Thus the Word is the uniting medium of Heaven and earth; the union is through the Church; in fact through the Word in the Church.

2456^e. Salvation through the union of the Lord's Divine essence with His Human essence. Sig.

2457. The good were separated from the evil, and the former were saved and the latter condemned, solely through the union of the Lord's Divine essence with His Human essence. Tr.

2500². These Divine perceptions and thoughts from Himself, He implanted in Divine intelligence and wisdom; and this even to the perfect union of His Human with His Divine.

[A.] 2523². The Lord's life itself was a continual progression of the Human to the Divine, even to absolute union.

2618. As to the state of the union of the Divine Spiritual of the Lord in His Divine Celestial, it is the very marriage of good and truth . . . 2649.

2625⁴. The Divine Rational existed from the union of the Divine Spiritual with the Divine Celestial.

2648. 'Abraham made a great feast'=dwelling together and union . . . As it treats of the union (of the Divine and the Human) it is called 'a great feast.'

2649. From the first verse of (Gen.xxi.) it has treated of the union of the Divine essence with the Human essence of the Lord, in this order: Of the presence of the Divine in the Human for the sake of union, verse 1. Of the presence of the Human in the Divine, thus of reciprocal union, verse 2. That by this union the Human was made Divine, verse 3. And this successively and continuously while the Lord lived in the world, verse 4. That this commenced when the Rational was in a state to receive, verse 5. The state of the union is described as to its quality, with its arcana, verses 6, 7. 2667.

—³. The illumination of the sight and understanding of the spiritual would not take place, unless the Lord had united the Human essence to the Divine essence; and, unless He had united them, man in the world would no longer have had any capacity for understanding and perceiving good and truth; nor would any spiritual Angel in Heaven . . .

2798². The union of the Divine essence and the Human essence was effected mutually and reciprocally. Refs.

2803. For the union of the Divine essence with the Human essence, and of the Human essence with the Divine essence, is the Divine marriage of good with truth, and of truth with good . . .

2826. That the Divine love is that through which the Lord united the Human essence to the Divine essence, and the Divine essence to the Human essence; or, what is the same, glorified Himself. Refs.

2827. The union of the Human with the Divine through the last of temptation. Sig. and Ex. 2854.

2854. The union of the Lord's Human essence with His Divine essence. Sig. and Ex. (Through temptations. 3381, Sig. and Ex.)

2921⁶. The full union was accomplished after the last temptation . . .

3381^e. That the Lord united His Divine essence to the Human essence through temptations by His Own power. Refs.

3382. As through temptations, so also through these continual revelations from Himself, He united the Divine essence to the Human essence. Sig. and Ex.

3573. Whether (the Natural) could be united (to the Rational). Sig. and Ex.

—, 'To kiss'=union and conjunction from affection. 3574.

3574. Presence and union. Sig. and Ex.

3736. Even to perfect union. Sig. and Ex.

—, By His 'going again to the Father,' is meant that He has united the Human essence to the Divine essence. Ill.

3737. The supreme internal sense treats of the union of the Human of the Lord with His Divine . . . and that He would be Jehovah as to the Divine Natural also through the union of the Divine essence with the Human essence, and of the Human essence with the Divine essence. This union is not to be understood as that of two who are distinct from each other, and who are only conjoined by love . . . but it is a real union into a one . . .

3960. This union is not a dwelling together . . .

3993¹³. Evils and goods . . . are not conjoined, still less united . . .

4145³. Finally, there succeeds (in marriage) a union as to celestial good and spiritual truth. Ex.

4450. A union of goods and truths. Sig. and Ex.

5002. Lest thus (truth natural and not spiritual) should be united—adunaretur. Sig. and Ex.

—, Love is spiritual conjunction or union.

—, Therefore, where there is not conjunction, or union, there is not being—esse. Ex.

5469^e. In the supreme sense, this treats of the Lord, how He has united the Internal with the External in His Human.

8495. In the supreme sense, the Sabbath represented the union of the Divine and of the Divine Human in the Lord. 8886.

8666. 'They came into the tent'=what is holy of union . . . for love is union.

— . It treats in this verse of the union of Divine good with truth Divine; and as all union is first effected through the influx of the one into the other and the consequent perception; then through application; next through immission; and afterwards through conjunction, (these things are treated of in order).

8702. 'Jethro' represented Divine good united to Divine truth; hence by 'hearing his voice' is signified consent from union. Ex.

8761. The union of the Divine good in Heaven with the Divine truth there. Sig. and Ex.

— . 'To call to Himself,' when said of the Divine, = conjunction; here, union, because it is said of the Divine good united with the Divine truth, which, through conjunction, become a one.

9382^e. That through the Word there is a union of Heaven and the world; thus of the Lord with the human race. Refs.

9836. The preservation, through a complete unition, of good and truth . . . Sig. and Ex.

10053. In the supreme sense . . . the 'burnt-offerings' = the unition of the Divine truth with the Divine good; which unition is what is meant by 'glorification' . . .

10084. Unition with the Divine good of the Divine love. Sig. and Ex.

10730. 'A Sabbath of a Sabbath' = . . . the union of the Human of the Lord with the Divine itself . . . For when the Lord . . . went out of the world, He made His Human the Divine good, through union with the Divine itself which was in Him.

—². For when the Lord had united His Human with the Divine itself, He had peace . . .

—³. For the universal of all things is, that the Lord has united His Human to the Divine itself; and that from that there are peace and salvation for man.

H. 375. The essential of marriage is a unition of minds; (therefore) such as are the minds, such is the union; (and as) the mind is formed solely from truths and goods . . . it follows that the unition of minds is exactly such as are the truths and goods from which they have been formed; consequently, that a unition of minds which have been formed of genuine truths and goods is the most perfect one.

N. 304. That the Lord has united the Divine truth to the Divine good; thus His Human to the Divine itself. (Refs. to passages.)

L. 34. That the full unition of the Divine and Human in Him has been effected through the passion of the cross. Ex.

35^e. The Lord said these things because the unition was reciprocal, of the Divine with the Human, and of the Human with the Divine. . . It is the like with all unition, which, unless it is reciprocal, is not full . . .

W. 102^e. Therefore an Angel is an Angel of Heaven according to the union of love and wisdom in him. It is the like with a man of the Church . . .

R. 565. Those who believe themselves wise from confirmations in favour of the mystical union of the Divine and the Human in the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

—². By the mystical union, which is also called the hypostatical union, are meant their figments about the influx and operation of the Divinity into the Lord's Humanity as into another . . .

M. 42^e. For such was the union of their minds, from which their speech flows. Des.

50. For no married partners can be received into Heaven, so as to remain there, except those who have been interiorly united, or who can be united, as into a one. Ex.

160. That the inclination to unite herself to the man is constant and perpetual with a wife; but is inconstant and alternate with the man. Ex.

172. Hence there takes place in an effective manner a union of souls, and a conjunction of minds. Ex.

178. That those who are in love truly conjugal feel themselves a united man . . . Ex.

—^e. It follows that the unition of soul and mind with a married partner is felt in the body also as one flesh.

179. That, regarded in itself, love truly conjugal is a union of souls, and a conjunction of minds . . . Ex.

316³. That conjugal pairs are born . . . he confirmed . . . also by the inmost and eternal union of minds—animorum et mentium . . .

321. Those who have lived in love truly conjugal . . . do not want a repeated marriage . . . because (1) they have been united as to their souls, and thence as to their minds; and this union, being spiritual, is an actual adjunction of the soul and mind of the one to those of the other, which cannot possibly be dissolved . . . 2. Because they have also been united as to their bodies through the reception of the propagations of the soul of the husband by the wife; and thus by the insertion of his life into hers . . . and, reciprocally, through the reception by the husband of the conjugal love of the wife . . .

T. 97. That by the same acts the Lord united Himself to the Father; and the Father [united] Himself to Him. Gen.art.

98. That the Father and the Son, that is, the Divine and the Human, in the Lord, have been united like the soul and the body . . . —², Ex.

99. That the union is reciprocal. Ill.

— . The reason the union is reciprocal, is that no union or conjunction between two is possible, unless the one reciprocally accedes to the other. Ex. and examps.

104. That the progression to union was the state of His exinanition; and that the union itself is the state of His glorification. Gen.art.

126. The glorification is the unition of the Human of the Lord with the Divine of His Father; this unition was effected successively; and fully through the passion of the cross. Ex.

D. 2405. A discourse about union: that nothing is possible of which any faculty or quality can be predicated unless there are a number . . . and also that no union is possible . . . unless everyone loves the neighbour more than himself . . .

[D.] 5662a. On those who have consulted together about a union of religions . . .

Unity. Unitas.

A. 1648². (Choirs, in speech) cease in unities, for the most part simple ones; and when they pass on by an accent into the following one, in composite ones. D. 3423.

M. 76⁶. They said, These (pictures and forms) represent unity of souls; these, conjunction of minds . . .

T. 5. On the unity of God. Chapter. (See under ONE.)

9. Such is the Christian faith concerning the unity of God. (As presented in the Athanasian Creed.)

24. The unity of God has been immostly inscribed on the mind of every man. Ex.

679. It is this unity which causes the preservation of the whole.

E. 1106⁴. There is a Trinity in God, and also a unity. Ex.

Ath. 169. Thus there is a unity in Trinity, and a Trinity in unity.

Can. God i. On the unity of God; or, that there is one God. Chapter.

iii. 12. In proportion as a man or an Angel acknowledges the unity and the infinity of God, and according to the way in which he does it, he becomes, if he lives well, a receptacle and an image of God.

Trinity i. 1. The unity of God has been acknowledged and received in the whole world, where there is religion and sane reason.

iii. 2. How can a Trinity of Persons be conceived in a unity of God; and the unity of God in a Trinity of Persons?

Universal. *Universalis. Universus. Universally. Universaliter.

A. 5. The universal Heaven. 14. 15. 29². etc.

468². The case in the universal is as it is in the particular . . .

1637². The spiritual language is the universal language of all languages. (See below, at D. 2138.)

2589. The Lord's mercy is universal, that is, towards everyone. H. 318.

2706⁶. In the universal sense. 2780.

4043. The still more interior forms are also more universal.

4346. What is universal, thus all things. Sig. and Ex.

4842⁶. For the internal or spiritual sense of the Word is universal . . .

5130. The remembrance of the Lord (with such) is what is universally regnant; and that which reigns universally is not apperceived, except when the thought is determined thither. Examp.

—². For that which reigns universally with anyone, produces (a) sphere.

— For that which reigns universally inflows into all the several particulars—singula; and leads and rules them. 6159. —⁶.

—⁶. Unless charity inflows into faith . . . faith cannot possibly reign universally. Ex.

5135⁵. The universal Church. Sig.

5136. 'The universal earth' = the universal Church.

5264². Providence . . . has in it . . . what is infinite, because it regards the universal simultaneously in every singular; and every singular in the universal.

5287. All thought and speech (there) are abstracted from persons, and therefore are universal, and relatively unlimited. 5434⁶. 5614⁴. Ex.

5440⁶. See REIGN, here. 5949. 6159. 6203. 6489. 7118. 7648². 8701². 8864. 8865. etc.

quantity of these things; for that which is called universal, is universal from the fact that it is in all the things singularly.

6338. For the Universal which proceeds from the Lord effects this (arrangement into order), because this Universal contains in it all the singulars down to the veriest singulars: these, together, are the Universal which reduces into order all things in the Heavens. When this Universal acts, it appears as if the goods and truths themselves ordinate themselves . . . This is the case with the universal Heaven, which is . . . continually kept in order by the universal influx from the Lord . . . As soon as Angels or Spirits are congregated, they are at once disposed into order as of themselves . . . which would never be done, unless the Universal which proceeds from the Lord contained in itself the veriest singulars; and unless all these were in the most perfect order. If any Universal devoid of singulars were to inflow from God, as many think, while the man, Spirit, or Angel were to rule himself in the singulars, then in place of order there would be confusion of all things; and there would be neither Heaven, Hell, human race, nor nature.

—². (So) unless man's thoughts were ordained universally, and at the same time singularly, by the affections of love, they could not possibly flow rationally and analytically; neither could the actions. Also unless the soul in the universal and the singular inflowed into the viscera of the body, it would be impossible for anything ordinate and regular to come forth in the body; whereas when it inflows singularly, and thus universally, then all things are ordained as of themselves.

6483. (Thus) it may also be evident that the Universal is entirely according to the singulars: if these are less singular, the universal also is less elevated; but if they are more singular, the universal is consequently more elevated; for the singulars cause the universal to be, and to be called, universal. From this may be known the nature of the Divine Universal; namely, that it is in the most singular things of all; for it is the most elevated above all . . .

6653. By thinking and speaking abstractedly, Angels and Spirits comprehend a Thing universally, and thus at the same time singularly the things which pertain to it . . . Reflection upon any people . . . would withdraw the mind from the universal idea, thus from the extension of the view . . . 6804². 7002.

7007. (Such) attribute to the Divine, only a universal government . . .

8390. He who only universally acknowledges that he is a sinner . . .

8478⁴. The Divine Providence is universal, that is, in the veriest singulars.

8717². (Thus) the Lord has not only a universal care; but also a particular and singular care of all things.

10730³. The two universals themselves on which all other things of the Church depend. . . The universal of all is that the Lord united His Human to the Divine Itself, and that from this man has peace and salvation; and it is also a universal that man must be conjoined with the Lord—which is done by regeneration—in order for him to have peace and salvation.

10775. (The idea) that the Divine Providence is only universal; and that the singulars are with man. P.201.

H. 308. For the Church of the Lord is universal, and with all who acknowledge the Divine, and live in charity . . . In the sight of the Lord, the universal Church is as one man, exactly as Heaven is . . . and the Church where the Word is . . . is like the heart and lungs . . . H.305 (c). S.105. E.351².

328. The Church of the Lord is scattered through the universal world, thus is universal; and in it are all who have lived in the good of charity according to their religiosity . . . (See P.325².)

W. 28. If you inquire what is the universal (of all things you know), you cannot conclude otherwise than that it is love and wisdom. Ex.

222. This matter does not allow of demonstration otherwise than by universals. And, as the Angels are in wisdom from universals, we may adduce their declarations.

[W.] 228. Yet abstract things, being universals, are usually better comprehended than applied ones. Ex.

P. 191. That the Divine Providence, from things most singular, is universal. Chapter.

201². Reflect what is a universal Providence when the singulars have been separated from it. Is it anything but a word! For that is called universal which is made up of singulars taken together . . . and therefore if you separate the singulars, what is the universal but a something which is empty inside, like a surface with nothing within it. Further ex.

203². From these things it is evident that the Divine Providence . . . is universal because it is in the veriest singulars . . . Of this universal Providence, man does not see anything . . .

287. That the Divine Providence, not only with the good, but also with the evil, is universal in the veriest singulars; yet is not in their evils. Ex.

294⁶. These infinite things which proceed from the Lord, inflow not only universally, but also most singularly; for the Divine is universal from the veriest singulars; and it is the Divine veriest singulars which are called the Universal . . . and a Divine veriest singular is also infinite.

R. 20². The universal language. Ex.

398. 'The land and sea,' everywhere in the Apocalypse . . . = the universal Church; 'the land,' those in internals; and 'the sea,' those in externals . . .

470. That the Lord has the universal Church under His auspices and dominion . . . Sig. and Ex.

M. 62^e. This cannot but be acknowledged because it is a universal truth; and every universal truth is acknowledged as soon as it is heard, which is from the influx of the Lord and the simultaneous confirmation of Heaven.

85^e. It is from this that good and truth are called the universals of creation.

209. Universals concerning marriages. Chapter.

261². I began to long for a universal Knowledge of the state of both (Heaven and Hell); knowing that he who is acquainted with universals, is able to comprehend singulars, because the latter are in the former, as parts are in a general.

— I asked them whether they knew the universals concerning Heaven and Hell . . . And they said, The universals of Hell are three; but the universals of Hell are diametrically opposite to the universals of Heaven. The universals of Hell are the love of dominating from the love of self; the love of possessing the goods of others from the love of the world; and scoratory love. The universals of Heaven opposite to these are the love of domination from the love of use; the love of possessing the goods of the world from the love of doing uses by their means; and love truly conjugal . . . It was said to me from Heaven, Examine these three universals above and beneath; and we shall afterwards see them in your hand. Ex.

386. That two universal spheres proceed from the Lord for the preservation of the universe in its created state . . . Ex.

387. That these two universal spheres make one with the sphere of conjugal love, and with the sphere of the love of infants. Ex.

388. That these two spheres inflow universally and singularly into all things of Heaven and of the world, from primes to ultimates. Ex.

— It is said universally and singularly, because when it is said universally, the singulars from which [is the universal] are meant at the same time; for from these it comes into existence, and of these it consists; thus the universal is named from the singulars, as is a general from its parts; and therefore if you take away the singulars, the universal is only a name, and is like a surface within which there is not anything; and therefore to attribute to God a universal government, and to take away the singulars, is an empty word, and is like the predication of an emptiness. A comparison with the universal government of an earthly king avails nothing.

W. 29. The created universe, regarded from order, is so full of wisdom from love that . . .

52. That all things in the universe have been created from the Divine love and Divine wisdom of God Man. Gen.art.

— . This appears from the correspondence of all things in the universe with all things of man . . . inasmuch that it may be said that man also is a kind of universe. Ex.

—². In the Spiritual World (all objects) appear around those there in just such an aspect as that of the created universe . . .

—³. (Thus) the created universe is an image representative of God Man; and it is His love and wisdom which are presented in the universe in an image. Not that the created universe is God Man; but that it is from Him; for nothing whatever in the created universe is substance and form in itself, or life in itself, or love and wisdom in itself.

55. That all things in the created universe are recipients of the Divine love and Divine wisdom of God Man. Gen.art.

— . Hence the universe, with each and all things of it, is called in the Word 'the work of the hands of Jehovah.'

— . Therefore the universe, which is an image of God, and consequently full of God, could not be created except in God from God, (and not from nothing). Ex.

[W.] 58. That all the other things of the universe, which are not like Angels and men, are also recipients . . . Ex.

59. (Thus) the Divine is in each and all things of the created universe; and hence it is that the created universe is 'the work of the hands of Jehovah.' Ex.

— Although the Divine is in each and all things of the created universe, still there is nothing of the Divine in itself in the esse of them; for the created universe is not God, but is from God; and, because it is from God, His image is in it. Ex.

60. I have heard many say that they are willing to acknowledge that the Divine is in each and all things of the universe, because they see the marvellous things of God in them . . . yet when they heard that the Divine is actually in each and all things of the created universe, they were indignant . . .

63. That there is a relation to man of all things of the created universe . . .

64. God is a Man; and the created universe is His image. Ex.

69. That the Divine infills all spaces of the universe without-absque-space. Gen.art.

151. That the Lord created the universe and all things of it by the medium of the (spiritual) Sun . . . Gen.art.

154. End, cause, and effect . . . exist in the greatest, that is, in the universe, in the following order. In the Sun . . . is the end of all things; in the Spiritual World are their causes; and in the natural world are their effects.

155. See CREATE, here. 156. 283. 284. 303^e. 326^e. 329. 349^e. P.9. 51. 202. 324². M.380^e. T.46.

163. The universe in general has been distinguished into two worlds: the Spiritual, and the natural . . .

169. In the created universe, in both its greatest and its least, are . . . end, cause, and effect. The reason these three are in the greatest and least things of the created universe, is that they are in God the Creator . . . And hence it is that the universe, which has been created from His Esse, and which, regarded as to uses, is His image, has obtained these three in each and all things of it.

225. The greatest things in which there are degrees of both kinds, are the universe in its whole complex; the natural world in its complex; and the Spiritual World in its . . .

227. The perfection of the created universe is from the similitude of the generals and of the particulars, or of the greatest and least things, as to these degrees . . .

282. That the Lord from eternity . . . created the universe and all things of it from Himself, and not from nothing. Gen.art. 285³, Ex.

283². They feared that thus they might come strongly into the thought that the created universe is God because from God . . .

285. That the Lord from eternity . . . could not have created the universe and all things of it, unless He were a Man. Gen.art. 286.

— They think, How can God as a Man wander all over the universe, from space to space, and create? Ex.

290. That the Lord from eternity . . . produced from Himself the Sun of the Spiritual World; and from it created the universe and all things of it. Gen.art. I.5. T.33.

298. That all the uses in the created universe correspond to the uses (in man), will be demonstrated. (For) God as a Man is the very form itself of all uses; from which form all the uses in the created universe derive their origin; and thus the created universe, regarded as to uses, is His image.

317. All uses . . . have a relation to all things of man . . . and therefore man is the universe in a kind of image; and, conversely, the universe, regarded as to uses, is man in an image. 319, Gen.art.

319. Man has been called a microcosm . . . from the fact that he bears relation to the macrocosm, which is the universe in its whole complex. Ex.

—^e. The ancients called man a microcosm, or little universe, from their knowledge of correspondences. Ex. 320, Ex.

320. The idea of the universe as regarded in the Spiritual World. 321, Ex.

321². (Thus) the universe of the Spiritual World is exactly like the universe of the natural world, with the sole difference that the things there are not fixed and stated . . .

322. That the universe of that World bears relation, in an image, to man . . .

326^e. From this they know there that . . . the created universe, regarded as to uses, is an image of God.

366^e. Hence it is that man is as it were a universe . . . in the least form.

P. 3. That the universe with each and all things of it has been created from the Divine love through the Divine wisdom. Gen.art.

397. For everything that proceeds from the Lord goes through the universe in an instant.

T. 13. That unless God were One, the universe could not have been created and preserved. Gen.art.

29². Otherwise, that whole universe, into which Souls go . . . might be drawn through the eye of a needle . . . This would be possible if there were no substantial extense there.

47. (Thus) the universe is a work cohering from primes to ultimates, because it is a work containant of ends, causes, and effects in an indissoluble connection . . . and it follows that the universe is a work containant of the Divine love, the Divine wisdom, and Uses . . .

—². That the universe consists of perpetual uses produced by wisdom and initiated by love, may be seen by every wise man . . . when he acquires a general idea of the creation of the universe, and in it views the particulars . . .

67. (Thus) the universe has been created by God in order that uses may come forth; and therefore the universe may be called a theatre of uses . . .

3481. Could they conceive of anything as existing beyond the bounds of the universe? or whether there is any space outside the universe?

— Those who had been in such a phantasy, seem to themselves to be withdrawn outside the universe, (where) some of them said that it was well with them . . . being remote from the troubles which exist in the created universe. But, being kept in the phantasy that they were outside the universe . . . they reasoned about that non-space outside the universe, that it is without end; and therefore they seemed to themselves to advance still further, until at last they saw some there who spoke to them . . . saying that they are in the boundary outside the universe, and that they themselves are the bounds; and that if they approached them they would swallow them. In this way they struck terror into them to prevent their advancing further . . . Those in the bounds were a kind of statues. Des.

3576^e. Thus the universe, as to its inmosts and to its outmosts, is organic, the Lord alone being the Life, so that the universe is full of the Lord.

D. Wis. xii. 2. The human mind . . . can see that the universe has been created by God.

5³. A summary of the arcana of creation. The Sun of Heaven, in which is the Lord, is the common centre of the universe; and all things of the universe are circumferences and circumferences, even to the last one; and these the Lord rules from Himself alone as one continuous thing; but the mediate ones from the ultimate one; and He animates and actuates these unceasingly, as easily as a man, from his understanding and will, animates and actuates his body . . . (Ang. Idea: quoted under CREATE.)

Can. God vi. On the creation of the universe by the one and infinite God, from Divine love, through Divine wisdom. Chapter.

6. The created universe consists of infinite receptacles of these three.

7. The created universe is a receptacle of uses, which, from their origin, are infinite.

8. It follows that the created universe is the fulness of God.

viii. 8. Unless each and all things in the world and Heaven bore relation to a One, who is, lives, and has power of Himself, the universe would be dissipated in a moment.

Unjust. Injustus.

Injustice. Injustitia.

A. 9283^e. (Thus) with an insincere and unjust man, the internal man has been formed into an image of Hell, and the external man into an image of a Heaven which is subordinated to Hell . . .

H. 533. When anything presents itself which the man knows to be insincere and unjust . . .

N. 155. Hence, in the Word . . . 'what is unjust' is said of that to which are ascribed self-righteousness and self-merit.

P. 249⁴. When he sees that injustice triumphs over justice . . .

R. 761. 'God hath remembered her injustices' (Rev.xviii.5)=that the Lord will protect the Heavens from violence therefrom. (=that falsities from evils have separated them from the Lord. E.1112.)

948. 'He that is unjust, let him be unjust still' (Rev.xviii.11)=that goods will be taken away from those who are in evils. . . 'The unjust'=him who is in evils. . . Thus 'let the unjust be unjust still'=that he who is in evils will be still more in evils; (which implies) that goods have been taken away from him.

T. 72. Why does He permit the injustice and impiety of the devil to triumph . . .

664^e. (This would be) to accuse the Lord Himself . . . of injustice.

D. 2827. The greatest justice would be injustice. Ex.

E. 401²⁷. 'He sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust' (Matt.v.45)=that the Lord inflows . . . with Divine truth equally with those outside the Jewish Church and with those within it.

Unknown. Ignotus.

A. 111. At this day they are unknown.

393⁸. Because what is unknown is believed to be nothing.

6479. So many doubts could not be removed . . . owing to . . . the numberless unknown things.

F. 1. A faith in what is unknown. See T.345².

Unknown. Incognito.

A. 9125^e. 'To come as a thief'=to come unknown . . .

D. 4467. He ruled others incognito.

Unlawful. Illicitus.

H. 378 (p). That marriages between those who are of diverse religion are unlawful. Ref.

Life 63. He considers these things lawful before God, but unlawful before the world.

111. He therefore makes adulteries not unlawful before God . . .

M. 270⁶. To warm himself at an illicit fire.

467. That (this) concubinage is not unlawful. Ex.

Unlearned. Indoctus.

A. 2759. Many Spirits from the unlearned commonality.

6317^e. But the unlearned who have been in the good of faith, are not such. Ex.

T. 74. I saw some with turbans, who were unlearned.

Unleavened. Azymus.

See UNFERMENTED.

A. 1947⁵. Hence 'what was unleavened,' in which there was not what is fermented, is called 'the bread of affliction.'

2177⁵. Its being unleavened, or not fermented, = its being sincere, and thus from a sincere heart, and without uncleanness.

2342. 'He baked unleavened things' (Gen.xix.3)=purification. 'Bread'=all celestial and spiritual food

. . . and that these should be without impurities was represented by unleavened bread; for leaven-fermentum=what is evil and false, by which celestial and spiritual things are rendered impure and profane. Therefore . . . they were commanded not to offer any other bread, or meat-offering, than what was unfermented, or unleavened. Ill.

—^e. So with 'what is unleavened,' which=what is holy of love, or 'the holy of holies' (Lev.vi.16,17). Therefore 'unleavened bread'=pure love; and 'the baking of what is unleavened'=purification. 2343.

7853. 'And unleavened things' (Ex.xii.8)=what is purified from all falsity.

7854. 'Unleavened bread'=such good (as the good of innocence).

7886. 'Ye shall eat unleavened things' (Ex.xii.15)=purification from falsities.

7897. 'Ye shall observe unleavened things' (ver.17)=that there must be no falsity.

7902. 'Ye shall eat unleavened things' (ver.18)=the appropriation of truth by good when the truth is purified from falsity. Ex.

—^e. This state is signified by 'the unleavened things' . . .

7910. 'In all your dwellings ye shall eat unleavened things' (ver.20)=that in the interiors, where good is, truth shall be appropriated. . . 'To eat unleavened things'=to appropriate truth to themselves.

7978. 'They baked the dough which they had brought forth from Egypt into unleavened cakes' (ver.39)=that from the truth of good there was again produced good in which there was nothing of falsity. Ex.

8058. 'Seven days thou shalt eat unleavened things' (Ex.xiii.6)=purification from falsities. . . 'To eat unleavened things'=the appropriation of truth, and purification from falsity; for 'what is unleavened'=good purified from falsity. (This is) because 'bread'=good; and 'leaven'=falsity. 8060. (=a holy state then from the appropriation of Divine truth which has been purified from evil and the falsities of evil. 10656.)

8487⁵. 'Unleavened bread,' like 'the manna,'=good pure from falsities. For a like reason this bread is called 'the bread of misery' (Deut.xvi.3).

9286. 'The feast of unleavened things' (Ex.xxiii.15)=purification from falsities.

9287. 'Thou shalt keep the feast of unleavened things' (id.)=worship and thanksgiving on account of purification from falsities. . . This feast is called also 'the passover.' 10655, Sig. and Ex.

9992. 'And bread of unleavened things' (Ex.xxix.2)=the purification of the Celestial in the inmost man. Ex.

—². The reason 'what is unleavened'=what is purified, is that 'leaven'=falsity from evil. Ex.

9993. 'And cakes of unleavened things mixed with oil' (id.)=the purification of the middle Celestial. Ex.

9994. 'And wafers of unleavened things anointed with oil' (id.)=[the purification] of the Celestial in the external man. Ex.

10080. 'Out of the basket of the unleavened things' (Ex.xxix.23)=(from the external Sensuous in which the purified goods are together).

Unlike. See DISSIMILITUDE.

Unlimited. Illimitatus.

A. 5287. Therefore thought and speech there are universal, and are relatively unlimited.

T. 74. Unlimited Divine power. Ex.

De Verbo 3⁵. The difference between the Natural, Spiritual, and Celestial, may be called unlimited.

—⁶. The thoughts of the Angels of the Middle Heaven are . . . therefore unlimited and unterninated.

Unmerciful. Immisericors.

Unmercifulness. Immisericordia.

A. 954. Those who have been . . . unmerciful on earth have their . . . unmercifulness turned into incredible cruelty . . .

6667. Unmercifulness. Sig. and Ex.

6671. The intention of subjugation . . . from unmercifulness. Sig. and Ex.

7272². He who lives . . . in unmercifulness . . .

9452. It would be unmercifulness (on the Lord's part) . . .

T. 155². This excites a zeal which . . . inwardly is unmercifulness, etc.

405³. The evils (from) the love of self are, in general, unmercifulness, etc.

Unmixed. See MERUM.

Unnatural. Innaturalis.

A. 2746. He had thus contracted an unnatural nature. Des. D.1663. De Conj.122.

D. 4367. On a certain unnatural and most filthy person.

Unravel. Enodare.

S. 19. This sense can be unravelled with difficulty.

T. 16. He said, I have unravelled this great mystery.

Restless. Irrequietus.

Restlessly. Irrequiete.

A. 2183³. If the Natural conquers . . . he comes, in the other life, into the unrest and torment of Hell.

3170. For all unrest is from evil and falsity; and all peace from good and truth. 3696².

3610. To appease the unrest of the lower mind with hope. Sig. and Ex. 4783.

3742. Otherwise (the Angels) are in a state of unrest . . .

4050³. (Those of the province of the infundibulum) are restless.

5660⁶. Not anything of the love of the world, and consequently not anything of unrest, etc.

5662². Cupidities from (these loves) are what . . . at last cause the man to make rest consist in unrest . . .

5725. When he is in this inundation . . . he thinks restlessly.

5893. For before man has been regenerated he is in intranquillity, and unrest—irrequieto. Ex.

R. 307. Internal unrest. Sig. and Ex.

Unripe figs. Grossi.

R. 334. 'As a fig-tree casts its unripe figs' (Rev.vi. 13)= . . . the natural good of man separated from his spiritual good. ('Its unripe figs'=the things which are in the natural man, which are especially the Knowledges implanted in the natural man from infancy, and are not yet mature, because they have merely been heard, and so accepted. E.403.)

Unseasonable. Intempestivus.

Unseasonably. Intempestive.

D. 3593. On an unseasonable mercy. 3597.

3594. Those who are unseasonably merciful. 3596.

A. 9960⁵. 'Unsewn garments' (Lev.x.6)=the deprivation of Divine truth.

10076⁷. The dissipation of Divine truth is signified by 'to unsew the garments' (Lev.xxi.10).

Unshoe. Discalceare.

E. 240³. 'To put off the shoe from off the foot,' that is, to unshoe the soles of the feet (Is.xx.2)=to reveal the filthy things of nature.

Unskilled. Atechnicus.

D. 4373⁶. Like the unskilled crowd.

Unspeakable. See INEFFABLE.

Unspotted. See IMMACULATE.

Unstable. Under LIGHT—levis.

Unsuitable. Incommodus.

A. 6202. Hence there usually inflows what is unsuitable (or inconvenient) . . .

D. Min. 4728. He was sent . . . to serve as a Subject, because he was troublesome. (Compare A.4419.)

Unswathe. Exfasciare.

A. 4772². When the externals of the Ancient and of the Jewish Church are . . . as it were unswathed, the Christian Church is disclosed.

9424³. If the appearances . . . are as it were unswathed, the truth appears in its nakedness.

A. 739². 'A wall plastered with what is untempered' (Ezek.xiii.14)=what is fictitious appearing as truth.

7553³. 'They plaster it with what is untempered' (ver.10)=that they devise falsities, and make them like truth.

E. 237⁵. 'When they build a wall, they plaster it with what is untempered. Say to them that plaster it with what is untempered that the wall shall fall' (ver. 10,11)=falsity assumed as a principle, and, by application of the Word as to the sense of the letter, made to appear as truth. . . 'What is untempered'=what has been falsified. 503⁹. 644²⁵.

Coro. 34³. 'The plastering of what is untempered'=the confirmation of what is false.

Untermated. Interminatus. See UNLIMITED.

A. 1661². No one can combat . . . until he has learned . . .

5276⁸. Truths are not appropriated to him until he lives according to them.

6077². Truths have no life until there is good in them.

8456. No truth of doctrine . . . becomes truth with a man until it has received life from the Divine. Ex.

8640. This life cannot be given to man until . . .

8701². Man has not been regenerated until—prius . . . quam.

— They are not sent into Hell until—prius . . . quam.

9224². It does not come to apperception until . . .

9995². Truth does not become the esse of a man's life until he loves it.

10219². Who does not believe, until he has been instructed, that life is in himself?

10683⁴. Truth does not become of the life until—prius . . . quam cum—it enters the will.

J. 69³. The evil do not come to their like in Hell, until the interiors are disclosed.

T. 109². 'Before that Abraham was, I am—fui' (John vii.58).

347³. Truths do not actually live until they are in deeds.

E. 837⁸. The Knowledges of truth and good . . . are not alive with a man until—prius . . . quam—he begins to be affected with truths . . .

1087². It is not the Word until—prius . . . quam dum—it is in this ultimate.

Unusual. Insolens.

Unwonted. Insolitus.

T. 71⁸. The birds . . . gave forth unwonted sounds.

72. I heard an unusual murmur.

Unutterable. Inenuntiabilis.

See INEFFABLE.

A. 9094. Hence it is that the things of angelic wisdom are for the most part unutterable . . .

M. 284⁶. A mother's unwearied care.

396². A mother's unwearied work.

T. 561. Disuse induces an unwillingness (to perform actual repentance).

Unworthily. Indigne.

Unworthiness. Indignitas.

A. 1594⁴. Not only says, but also acknowledges and believes, that he is most unworthy.

4745. They who eat the bread in the Holy Supper unworthily, appropriate evil to themselves.

E. 622⁷. The interiors of the understanding are said 'to waste away with unworthiness' (Ps.xxxi.9) when they are perishing through falsities. 750¹⁴.

Uphaz. Uphasus.

A. 3021⁴. 'The gold of Uphaz' (Dan.x.5)=the good of wisdom which is from love.

9466⁵. 'Gold from Uphaz' (Jer.x.9)=good appearing in the external form, because from the Word. (=celestial good. 9881.) E.576⁷. (=the good of the Word in the sense of the letter. E.585¹⁰.) 587⁶.

Upright. See PROBITY, and RIGHT.

Upsala. Upsalia, Upsala.

D. 1880. A theatre which appeared at Upsala in a dream. Des.

6012. A certain person who was at Rome from Upsala.

Upwards. Sursum.

See under DOWNWARDS.

A. 1702². By communication with the Internal man, man can . . . look upwards, which beasts cannot do; and by communication with the exterior man, he can . . . look downwards. 3646². 4760³.

— The rational man is spiritual or celestial when he looks upwards; but animal when he looks downwards.

2148. Interior things are expressed in the Word by higher things, as by 'looking upwards.'

5013². In the other life, the spiritual appear . . . with their heads upwards, towards the Lord, and with their feet downwards, towards Hell; but the natural . . . with the feet upwards, and the head downwards. 5746⁶. 6468³.

6611. The state of man's life is carried upwards and downwards, that is, towards Heaven, and towards Hell. But they who suffer themselves to be regenerated are continually carried upwards . . .

7693⁶. To look upwards, that is, to Heaven, is not to think about the things of Heaven; but it is to have them as the end . . .

7778³. The things which are of genuine faith, look upwards . . .

8604. 'When Moses raised his hand' . . . =to determine spiritual power upwards, thus to the Lord. . . What it is to look above self, and below self. Ex. . . Man is distinguished from brutes by having the ability to look above himself, or below himself . . .

8608. That the power of looking upwards to the Lord was lacking. Sig. and Ex.

9256⁴. In the other life their internal is opened above . . . and at the same time all the earthly and worldly things . . . are elevated, so as to look upwards all together . . .

9730. Hence upwards=inwards.

10156³. When man becomes spiritual, his interiors . . . are opened, and then the man looks upwards, which is effected by an elevation by the Lord . . .

10420. They who are in (mere) externals all turn themselves away from the Divine, because they look outwards and downwards, and not inwards and upwards; for man looks inwards or upwards when his internal is open, thus when it is in Heaven; but he looks outwards or downwards when his internal is closed, and only the external open, for this is in the world; and therefore when the external is separated from the internal, the man cannot be elevated upwards . . .

E. 112². To look downwards, or upwards. Ex.

179⁵. 'The glory of the God of Israel was over them upwards' (Ezek.x.19). Ex. 422¹⁰.

283¹⁴. 'The cherubim shall expand their wings upwards' (Ex.xxv.20). Ex.

386¹³. 'To look upwards, and to look to the earth' (Is.viii.21)=to look everywhere for goods and truths.

559⁶. 'To be upwards' (Deut.xxviii.13)=to be elevated by the Lord so that he may look to Heaven; and 'to be downwards'=not to be elevated by the Lord, but by self . . .

Ur. Ur.

A. 1368. 'Ur of the Chaldees' (Gen.xi.28)=external worship in which are falsities. Ex.

—^e. Thus by 'Ur of the Chaldees' is signified external worship in which there is interiorly profane idolatry. 1373.

1816. 'I have brought thee from Ur of the Chaldees' (Gen.xv.7)=the first state of the external man; for the maternal which the Lord received from birth . . . is what is here signified by 'Ur of the Chaldees.' . . . It was from this that He was brought out . . .

Urbanity. Urbanitas.

M. 16^e. The prince charged them to summon men of urbanity and affability to entertain them.

Ureter. Ureter.

A. 5378. The Spirits of the ureters, etc. infest (those of the peritoneum). Des. D.991.

5380. In the middle of the series are the ureters . . . They speak with a harsh voice as if cracked, and desire to introduce themselves into the body; but it is only an endeavour. . . Those (of them) who relate to the ureters are to the left further from the body . . . This is one general way to the Hells. (Fully quoted under KIDNEYS.) D.825.

5381. See KIDNEYS, here. 5382. 5383. 5384. D. 1239.

10032^e. For the ureters and bladder, which go forth from the kidneys,=exterior truth and its exploration, and also its castigation.

D. 870^e. Those who constitute the province of . . . the ureters. 959.

993. The case is similar as respects . . . the ureters, which are in the folds of the peritoneum, and are castigated, and are kept in compliance; but it casts forth to the ureters the unclean things, or phlegms.

1001. Those who represent the ureters, and in fact the grosser serosities.

Urethra. Urethra.

D. 867. Those who relate to the sphincter . . . or the entrance towards the urethra.

3453². Signified by . . . a feeling of some burning heat in the urethra.

4283^e. When vastated . . . they serve as the sphincter of the urethra.

D. Min. 4570. Xavier . . . is among the interiors of the urethra.

Urge. Instare.

Urgency. Instantia.

A. 4290. That they were urgent to be representative. Sig. and Ex. 4293². 4317³.

M. 297. They had yielded to the urgencies of entreaty of the men.

Urge. Urgere.

A. 2338. 'He urged them exceedingly' (Gen.xix.3)=a state of temptation when [the man] conquers. Ex.

—². When in this combat the man seems to urge the Lord . . . to be present, etc.

2374. They pressed upon the man' (Gen.xix.9)=that they wanted to offer violence to truth.

2406. To urge. Sig. and Ex.

4373. 'He urged him' (Gen.xxxiii.11)= . . . the affection itself inspired (in it).

7132. 'The exactors were urgent' (Ex.v.13)=that those infesting most nearly were urgent=instarent.

7877^e. The end, which is the salvation of the human race, being urgent . . .

T. 498. The Lord is present in man, and urges the reception of Himself . . . 766.

Urgently demand. See DISGRACE.

Uri. Urus.

A. 10329. What is represented by 'Uri the father of Bezaleel,' and by Hur his grandfather, is evident from the generation of celestial good: it is generated from the doctrine of celestial truth and good; and therefore these doctrines are signified by Uri and Hur; Hur representing the doctrine of truth.

Uriah. Uriah.

A. 2913². That still the Hittites were among the more honoured, may be evident from . . . Uriah, who was a Hittite (2 Sam.xi.3,6,17,21).

Urim. Urim.

A. 2009². 'Honour ye Jehovah in urim' (Is.xxiv.15) = from the holy things of love.

3858⁹. In the breastplate itself, as it was most holy, there were representations of all things which are of love and faith in the Lord: these are the Urim and Thummim . . . Hence it was that the Lord gave answers by the Urim and Thummim.

3862². Hence it is that the Lord gave answers by the Urim and Thummim, and that they received answers by means of lights and their shining forth from the precious and transparent stones according to the state of the matter in question . . .

—⁶. The order of the precious stones in the Urim and Thummim . . .

— . This, then, was the Urim and Thummim, which was upon the breastplate . . . as is evident from the fact that 'Urim and Thummim' = Lights and Perfections . . .

—⁷. Concerning the Urim and Thummim. III.

4606^e. In heavenly light, these things appear like the answers in the Urim and Thummim, by vibrations of light and flame, and perception thereby from the Lord. For in the Urim and Thummim there were twelve precious stones according to the twelve tribes of Israel.

5922¹¹. 'Urim' (Is.xxiv.15) = the light which is from the Divine truth that proceeds from the Lord.

6335². In Heaven the lights are varied according to the goods and derivative truths . . . Hence it is that light sparkled and vibrated by means of the Urim and Thummim, and that variously according to the state of the matter about which there was interrogation. This took place because the twelve tribes—by which are signified all goods and truths in general—were designated in that breastplate, that is, in the Urim and Thummim . . . This is the arcanum which was signified by the Urim and Thummim.

—³. For 'Urim' means fire shining; and 'Thummim,' the shining forth therefrom; and 'fire shining' = the Divine truth from the Divine good of the Lord's Divine love; and 'shining forth' = this truth in ultimates, thus in effect. But it is to be known that 'Thummim,' in the Hebrew, is 'integrity'; but in the angelic language, 'shining forth' . . . The shining forth of the Divine truth produces the sonorous expression Thummim . . . The Angels have a like perception when Thum is read in the Hebrew, by which is signified what is entire, or integrity . . . S.44². E.431².

—⁴. Hence, too, it is, that the Urim and Thummim are called 'the judgment of the sons of Israel'; also 'the breastplate of judgment'; and likewise 'the Judgment of Urim' . . .

— . (Thus) through the Urim and Thummim, that is, through the shining forth of the light of Heaven, the breastplate revealed Divine truths in the natural sphere, thus in ultimates. A like shining forth is presented inwardly with those who are in truths from good, which dictates, and as it were gives answers, when the truth is inquired into from the affection of the heart, and it is loved as good . . . It is to be known, further, that this shining forth appears in ultimates . . .

S. 44. That the truths and goods of the sense of the letter . . . are meant by the Urim and Thummim. Ex. T.218.

R. 349⁴. In the breastplate . . . which was the Urim and Thummim . . .

Ad. 3/1807. On the Urim and Thummim.

E. 406⁴. As the nations from whom was the Church were in natural good, it is said, 'Honour ye Jehovah in urim . . .' (Is.xxiv.15), for 'urim' means 'fire' and 'a hearth,' by which is signified the good of love of the natural man.

431³. How the answers from Heaven were given through the Urim and Thummim. All the light in Heaven proceeds from the Lord as a Sun, and therefore is, in its essence, Divine truth . . . This light is modified into various colours according to the truths from good which are being received . . . and therefore the answers were given by means of the shining forth from the colours of the stones which were in the Urim and Thummim; and at the same time, either by means of a living voice, or a tacit perception corresponding to the shining forth.

— . That the breastplate . . . which was upon the ephod, and was called 'the Urim and Thummim,' = in general, truth shining forth from Divine good. Ref.

—¹⁵. When these things are understood, it may be evident whence it was that answers to anything whatever were given by means of the Urim and Thummim; for there was a shining forth by means of the precious stones from the origin of the colour in that stone on which was the name of some tribe, from which the determination began.

444⁹. 'Urim and Thummim' (Dent.xxxiii.8) = Divine truth shining forth from Divine good, thus the Word.

717⁷. Like things are signified by the precious stones which [were] the breastplate of judgment called 'the Urim and Thummim.'

De Verbo 20³. As, therefore, all answers from Heaven have been and are made by means of such things as are of the sense of the letter; and as therefore the sense of the letter was represented by the Urim and Thummim in the ephod of Aaron, this garment was the last or ultimate one.

He said that he would rather stay and have his home in urinous vats than anywhere else. 954°. 5387°. —4. D. 1160.

5381°. But the Spirits and Societies to which the urine itself, and especially fetid urine, corresponds, are infernal ; for as soon as the urine has been separated from the blood, even although it is in the little tubes of the kidneys, or within the bladder, it is outside the body ; for what has been separated no longer circulates in the body . . .

5387. But those who correspond to the urine itself, are infernal ; for the urine . . . is outside the body, because it has already been separated from the blood, and, in itself, is nothing but unclean and obsolete serum, which is cast down. A certain Spirit (of the urine). Des. He had been a pirate. . . Such are most timorous at the least sign of danger, and most courageous when there is nothing to fear ; and are the opposite of those to whom the expelling of the urine corresponds ; and they strive in every way to injure its expulsion ; (and therefore) when those who correspond to the expelling of the urine withdrew a little, and that pirate stood by, the emission of the urine was completely stopped, and effort was made with danger ; but when they were recalled, the emission of the urine was intensified according to their presence. D. 1153. 1154. 1155. —4. They love feculent urine the most.

5389. There are companies of Spirits who wander about, and by turns return to the same places. Evil Spirits fear them greatly ; for they torture them . . . They correspond to the fundus, or upper part of the bladder in general, and to the muscular ligaments converging therefrom toward the sphincter, where the urine is driven out by a method of contorsion. These Spirits apply themselves to the tergal part, where is the cauda equina. Their method of operating is by quick reciprocations, which no one can stop : it is a constrictory and restrictory method, directed upwards, and acumined in the form of a cone ; and evil Spirits who are cast within this cone, especially at the upper part of it, are miserably tormented by being racked to and fro. D. 867. 868. 869. 870. 871.

H. 499°. They who have applied Divine truths to their own loves, and have thus falsified them, love urinous things, because urinous things correspond to the delights of such love.

—(u). That defilements of truth correspond to urine. Ref.

P. 1647. That those who do not receive are separated from those who are within the Divine man, as the ordure and urine are separated from a man.

D. 618. (Intemperance in drinking causes) a filthy urinous smell.

825°. They are not content with their lot, so that an abundance—facultas—of urine may be inferred.

826. Huge swine joined together, represent the earthy matters in the urine, which are separated from the serum . . .

870°. (The Spirits who are thus tortured) have urinous things collected together which are to be cast out ; for such things are the phantasies of Falsities, to which urine—lotium—corresponds . . .

1156. Such Spirits preside over the liquid excrements, that is, the urines.

1159. The same Spirit . . . evokes as it were a pungent or urinous liquid in my eyes . . . Thus, wherever they are, they excite urinous humours ; as, now that he is above the head, such a urinosity inflows into the eyes ; thus they preside over a collection of urine ; and therefore it follows that they love urine more than all other liquids, especially that which is foul and feculent, and that they dwell in the like ; and are therefore infernals who pertain to the spiritual class, who love to live in like things, as also in urinous ponds.

1170. This Spirit not only infused what is urinous into the eye, but also loved urine so as to have an avidity for drinking it. (This Spirit des. 1171–1174.)

1173. Such are assiduous in this life to whatever they apply themselves ; but as [this Spirit] had applied himself to such things as are wicked . . . he had been attached to the province of the urine, and he therefore loves urine, and also what is green.

1174. Such green dwellings, and clouds shining with green, are formed from filthy fancies, such as are those of the lowest people : moreover they love fetid urinary collections, and also that foul liquor of dung . . .

1221. There are Spirits who constitute the urinary province ; and the grosser of them examine every Soul they meet, and desire to fine and punish him. Ex. . . This may therefore be called the Judgment of Gehenna.

3149. He would (otherwise) have been excrementitious, with urine, so filthy that . . .

3186°. They were cast down . . . to the urinous things, which are beneath man, between his two feet ; and the deeper the more urinous.

3189. On those who excite the urine . . . It is done by those who are in the highest degree urinous, or utterly contrary to conjugal love, and yet are carried away by lust ; and who when they are thus carried away, excite a burning heat in the urine . . .

3453. At last they esteem marriages as urinatorial vessels.

4489. While I have thought about the urine, there at once occurred to them what is against the Lord and the truths of faith, and thus what is most profane was excited among the profane infernals, so that I urinated—mingere—with trouble.

[D.] 4490. He was afterwards sent into a utensil and a vat of urine, which however he did not fear. He had been a robber.

4492. He was again sent into a urinary vat, and there seemed as if he had come into his Heaven.

5751. In a word ('the bottomless pit') is a vast gulf, and is a receptacle of the uncleannesses of the urine, but not of the excrements; for the reason that all these love falsities, and commingle falsities with truths.

D. Min. 4564. On the urine: its correspondence. Whenever I have thought about the urine, Adam Lejel has relapsed into his scandalous principles, which corresponded to his life . . .

E. 659⁵. To those who have confirmed themselves in falsities, and have extinguished in themselves the affection of truth, there is nothing more delightful than a swampy and also a urinous odour.

Urn. Urna.

A. 8530. 'Take an urn' (Ex.xvi.33)=truth; for 'an urn,' here,=truth, because it was a vessel for the reception of manna, by which is signified good; and all truth is as a vessel for good.

M. 103⁴. Place the paper in this silver urn.

—^c. He took out the papers in order from the urn.

See under ACTIVE.

A. 57. 'The herb yielding seed'=all truth which regards use.

454. Angelic life consists in use. Ex.

—². Therefore angelic happiness is in use, and from use, and according to use; that is, according to the goods of love and of charity.

503. The life of love and of the derivative faith, such as was that of the Most Ancient Church, is life while in use, that is, in the good and truth of use. From use, through use, and according to use, is life given by the Lord. The useless can have no life; for whatever is useless is cast away. In this they were likenesses of the Lord, and therefore they became images in perceptive things . . . He who is in love is not delighted in knowing, but in doing what is good and true, that is, in being of use.

696. The Lord turns all penalty and torment . . . into some use. No penalty is possible, unless there is, with the Lord, an end of use; for the Lord's Kingdom is a Kingdom of ends and uses; but the uses which the infernals are able to perform are most vile. When they are in them, they are not so much in torment; but when the use ceases they are remitted into Hell.

986³. When evil Spirits do evil, and are in any use, they are excused; but they are not permitted to speak what is false; the reason of which is that they may learn what is true, and thus, so far as possible, be amended, in order to serve for some vile use.

994². No pleasure . . . except . . . from an interior affection; and no interior affection except from one more interior, in which is the use, and the end. Ex.

995⁹. As they regarded their pleasures from charity and faith . . . they regarded them from use, which was their end. The use itself had been most delightful to them; and this had been the source of the delight of their pleasures.

997. Enjoyment on account of use . . . for whatever is given for food is for use. Sig. and Ex.

—^c. As to use, the case is that those who are in charity . . . do not regard the enjoyment of pleasures except for the sake of use. For there is not charity unless there are works of charity: in the exercise, or use, consists the charity; and he who loves the neighbour as himself never perceives the delight of charity except in the exercise, or use; and therefore a life of charity is a life of uses. Such is the life of the whole Heaven; for the Lord's Kingdom, being a Kingdom of mutual love, is a Kingdom of uses. Therefore every pleasure which is from charity has its delight from use; and the more eminent the use, the greater the delight. Hence it is that the Angels have happiness from the Lord according to the essence and the quality of the use.

—². This is the case with every pleasure: the more eminent the use, the greater is its delight. For instance, the delight of conjugal love, because . . . its use is the greatest of all . . . has heavenly happiness in it. The case is the same with all other pleasures, with a difference according to the excellence of the uses; and these uses are so manifold that they can scarcely be classed into genera and species. . . (Thus) all pleasures have been granted man; but for the sake of use; and they partake of and live from heavenly happiness with a difference according to the use in which they are. 2039.

1399. By his interior communications (with Heaven, a Spirit) is disposed to a use, and is carried to it beyond his knowledge.

1472. The knowing of Knowledges is . . . for the end of use . . . and when they are serving as vessels . . . they are in the use, and receive their delight from the use. Ex. 1486.

—². The internal man regards nothing but use.

1487. Scientifics . . . are disposed by the Lord into order, so that they may serve for use . . . and finally that the life itself may consist in use, and be a life of uses

—². When man becomes a use, that is, when he thinks of all things from the end of use, and does all things for the end of use, (even) if it is by a tacit reflection . . . then the scientifics which have served the first use . . . are destroyed ; and so on. Sig.

1598². The external man . . . is a kind of instrumentality, so that ends may become uses ; and uses be presented in effect . . .

1645. The speech of the Angels . . . is one of ends and of the derivative uses, which are the principals and the essentials of Things.

— . Ends and the derivative uses are as it were the softest recipients, and the most delicious subjects of indefinite variations, and this by means of incomprehensible celestial and spiritual forms. They are kept in these by the Lord ; for His Kingdom is solely one of ends and uses ; and therefore the Angels who are with a man attend to nothing else than the ends and uses . . .

1807³. The soul is in use and end ; the body is in their exercise.

— . All effects whatever are in like manner representatives of the uses which are the causes ; and the uses are representative of the ends which are their first principles.

1944. Whether a man is becoming rational, is Known from the life of his use, or function.

1964. Scientifics and Knowledges must have use as the end ; and when they have use, they have life as the end ; for all life is of uses, because it is of ends. Unless they are learned for the sake of a life of uses, they are of no moment, because of no use.

—². Without a life of use (in knowledges) the Rational becomes like a wild ass . . . But when they have use as the end, they receive life from the uses ; but such a life as are the uses. They who learn Knowledges in order to be perfected in the faith of love . . . are in the use of all uses, and receive spiritual and celestial life from the Lord . . .

2991. Natural forms . . . receive their forms according to the use in the place where they are.

3058⁶. 'Drawers of water'=those who continually desire to know truths . . . without caring for any use from them.

3089². In the first affection of truth . . . there is an affection of use . . . for the sake of self, etc.

3166². Whatever is of use, and life, relates to good (as distinguished from truth).

3603³. In his third age, if he is among those who can be regenerated, man begins to think about use . . . and (then) the order is inverted . . .

3645. The universal kingdom of the Lord is a Kingdom of ends and uses : it has been granted me to plainly perceive this Divine sphere of ends and uses. Ex. 3660⁶.

3646². Thus man can be in the Divine sphere of ends and uses, which is in Heaven, and which constitutes Heaven ; whereas beasts cannot be in any other sphere than one of the ends and uses which are on earth . . .

3796³. If a man perceives in himself a delight from use separated from self, (he may know) that he is in genuine affection.

3887. For in the other life everyone is gifted with intelligence and happiness by the Lord, according to the use which he performs from the affection of the will.

3913³. The spiritual man does not regard himself and the world, except in so far as is conducive to promoting uses in the Spiritual World . . .

— . Regards dignities, etc., for the sake of the use.

3991. That (this) good is to be employed for use. Sig. and Ex.

4054. The brain . . . is in the sphere of ends, which are uses. Ex.

— . Societies which have no end of use. Des.

4110. A state of use, and of end of good. Sig. and Ex.

—³. That 'to shear the flock'=to do use. Ex. and Ill. 4853.

4223. The organs move . . . according to the intention of the function, that is, of the use ; for it is the use which commands in the forms.

—². (Therefore) the use had existed before the organic forms of the body came forth ; and the use produced and adapted them to itself, and not the converse. But when the forms have been produced, or the organs adapted, the uses proceed from them ; and then it appears as if the forms or organs exist before the uses ; when yet it is not so ; for use inflows from the Lord, and this through Heaven, according to the order, and according to the form, according to which Heaven has been ordained by the Lord ; thus according to correspondences. 4926.

4322². This influx (from the Lord) holds (all things in nature and in man) together, in form, according to the uses.

4372. Spiritual riches are predicated of truth ; and their uses, of good.

4459⁷. They who love gains . . . for no other use than the gold and silver . . . But they who love gold and silver for the sake of some use . . .

— . The use itself which a man loves determines his life, and distinguishes him from others : an evil use makes him infernal ; and a good use makes him heavenly ; not indeed the use itself ; but the love of the use ; for the life of everyone consists in love.

4633. By frequent use . . .

[A.] 4658. (Aristotle said) Let him think continually of use . . .

4926. Regarded in itself, good is nothing but use.

4973. The corresponding interior truths in the Natural are applications to uses; and the interior goods there are uses.

4981. For he who is content in God regards honours and riches as means for uses.

5025. Spiritual truth and good will that a man should have pleasure . . . in the use of dignities. Ex.

—². That the use and the end make a thing spiritual, or not spiritual. Ex.

5053. Conjugal love excels all other loves in use, and consequently in delight . . .

5148. According to all the use of the Sensuous. Sig. and Ex.

—, 'Work' = according to all use. . . The reason that 'work' = use, is that it is predicated of the Voluntary . . . for whatever is done by this, and can be called a work, must be a use. All works of charity are nothing else; for works of charity are works from the will, which are uses.

5214. 'Seven thin ears' = scientifics of no use. . . For that is said to be 'full' in which there is use, or, what is the same, in which there is good; for all good is of use; and therefore 'thin' = that which is of no use. Scientifics of no use are those which have no other end than glory and pleasure: these ends are of no use, because they do not tend to benefit the neighbour.

5293. 'Let them gather all the food' = all things which are of use. Ex.

—². For all man's knowing, understanding, and being wise, and thus all his willing, must have use as the end; and therefore the quality of his life is according to the quality of the use.

—, That 'food' = all that which is of use. Ill.

5395. On those who live not for the sake of any use to their country . . .

—, For, with good Spirits and Angels, use constitutes the delight (in) quantity and quality according to the uses.

—, If, in an earthly kingdom, everyone is valued and honoured according to his use, what must it be in the heavenly Kingdom?

—^e. They who have lived solely for self . . . without the end of any use, are under the buttocks, and pass their time in filth . . .

5511². The (statement) that the joy which the Angels have is . . . when they are in the use of performing the things of love and charity . . . sounds hard to those who are in joy solely from the love of self and of the world . . . yet the joy of Heaven first begins in a man when his regard for self in the uses he performs, expires.

5527^e. The truths which are made fruitful by good . . . are committed to life, and then become uses. Sig. and Ex.

5529. Use from the truths in the Natural. Sig. and Ex.

5562. They who emerge from vastations, and serve the uses which the bones serve, have no determined thought . . .

5664⁴. Such a man aims at nothing else through truths of faith than uses, which are the exercises of charity.

5688^e. Man's regeneration . . . presents to view the happiness of the Angels according to the application to uses, which are to reform man.

5947^e. Thus the internal man has been formed to serve the Lord for all the uses which love to Him, and charity towards the neighbour demand; first in the natural world, and afterwards in the Spiritual World.

5949². Man should care for the soul (only) for the sake of the uses it must perform in both worlds; and, when man has uses as the end, he has the Lord as the end; for the Lord disposes to uses, and also the uses themselves.

6073. Concerning offices and uses. Sig. and Ex.

—, 'Works' = goods; thus uses and offices; for these are goods. All the goods which are called goods of charity are nothing but uses; and uses are nothing but works for the neighbour, our country, the Church, the Lord's Kingdom. Ex.

—². The Angels . . . because they are in good from the Lord, long for nothing more than to perform uses; these are the very delights of their life; and they also enjoy bliss and happiness according to the uses. Ill.

6119. Spiritual life consists in exercises according to truths, consequently in uses. Ex.

6325². For to the man who is led by the Lord, there are given an affection and longing to do good; and then nothing is more happy to him than to perform uses . . .

6388. For when those in Heaven who are in mutual love are performing uses, and doing goods to others, they are in such joy and happiness that they then for the first time seem to themselves to be in Heaven. This is given them by the Lord, and to each one according to the uses. But this happiness vanishes as soon as they think about recompence. Ex.

6393³. 'The recompence in the resurrection of the just' = the internal happiness from doing good without reward, which they receive from the Lord when they are performing uses; and the more they love to serve without recompence, the more noble are the uses over which they are set . . .

6410^e. Activity, with those in Heaven, consists in performing uses—which, to them, is delight from good—and in being wise in truths with the end of uses—which, to them, is the pleasantness from truth.

7038. Elevation into Heaven to perform uses thence. Sig. and Ex.

— The reason 'to serve the Lord' = to perform uses, is that true worship consists in the performance of uses, thus in the exercises of charity . . . The worship of the Lord itself consists in performing uses; and uses are (in this life) that everyone should rightly discharge his function in his station; thus [they consist in his] being of service to his country, to societies, and to the neighbour, from the heart; in his acting sincerely with his associates; and in performing kind offices prudently, according to the quality of each person. These uses are chiefly the exercises of charity; and are those through which the Lord is chiefly worshipped. Frequenting a place of worship, prayers, etc., are also necessary; but without those uses are of no avail; for these things are not of the life; but teach what the life should be. The Angels in Heaven have all their happiness from uses, and according to uses, inasmuch that uses are Heaven to them.

—². That, from Divine order, happiness is according to use (shown from the economy of the human body).

—³. (Thus) uses are the things according to which happiness is given in Heaven; and it is use through which the Lord is principally worshipped. Hence John lay on the Lord's breast . . . because he represented the exercises of charity, that is, uses. 7884.

8253. In a word, the life of charity consists in performing uses. Def.

8378. (In Jupiter) they prepare food not according to the taste, but chiefly according to the use: useful food, to them, is relishable.

8439². Reception is not anything, unless there is application, that is, to use.

8521³. None can see whether the doctrine of their Church is true, except those who are in the affection of truth for the sake of the uses of life. They who have this end are continually enlightened by the Lord . . .

8631². Learned men who . . . had not applied (what they had disputed about) to any use.

8719. The reason the Lord acts mediately through Heaven, is . . . that the Angels may have . . . happiness according to their offices and uses.

9103³. What is useful to him, is, to him, truth . . .

9207⁴. 'Fit neither for the land, nor the dunghill' =

what is not conducive to any use whatever, good or evil.

9224². Therefore the good of charity does not come to apperception, until truths . . . begin to be loved for the sake of good use . . .

9230². All that is called the truth of faith which is as yet without an end of use . . .

9297⁴. For the use of life, which is the end, is the good with him; and all things are formed according to the use of life; (thus) in the other life all are reduced to the state of their own good, or evil, thus to the use of their life, which had been the end . . . The truths, or falsities, which had made a one with this use, remain, and more are associated with them, which . . . complete the use, and cause the use to appear in its own form. Hence it is that Spirits and Angels are forms of their own use; evil Spirits, forms of evil use . . . and good Spirits, or Angels, forms of good use.

9723. Things to be removed after uses. Sig. and Ex.

9756. Truths sufficient for uses. Sig. and Ex.

9757. The goods and derivative truths which support as much as is sufficient for uses. Sig. and Ex.

9828. The Spiritual World is a Kingdom of uses; and the uses there are ends . . .

10309². (Such infernals) also perform a use . . .

10709. (In the Fourth Earth they attend to nothing but use) and, when speaking together, advance, for the most part, to the ninth use. There are some in the universe who in speaking advance to the fifth use; some to the seventh; to the tenth; to the fifteenth; to the twentieth; and even to the fiftieth. Ex. D.3270-3283. 3901.

—². To say 'to the use,' is a formula in use in Heaven. Ex.

H. 64. The reason so many various things in man act as a one, is that there is not anything therein which does not . . . perform a use. The general performs use to its parts; and the parts perform use to the general . . .

—². (So) the consociations in the Heavens are conjoined together according to uses, in a like form; and therefore those who do not perform a use to the general are cast out . . . To perform use, is to will well to others for the sake of the common good; and not to perform use, is to will well to others . . . for the sake of self . . .

96². The influx of Heaven is into the functions and uses of the members; and the uses, being from the Spiritual World, form themselves by means of such things as are in the natural world, and thus present themselves in effect. Hence is the correspondence.

107. For all good is good according to the use.

112. The Kingdom of the Lord is a Kingdom of ends which are uses; or, what is the same, it is a Kingdom of uses which are ends; and therefore the universe has been so created and formed by the Divine, that uses may everywhere be clothed with such things as to be presented in act, or in effect; first in Heaven, and then in the world; thus through degrees, and successively, down to the ultimates of nature. Hence it is evident that the correspondence of natural things with spiritual . . . is through uses; and that the uses conjoin them; and that the forms with which the uses are clothed, are correspondences, and are conjunctions, in proportion as they are forms of uses. In (the three kingdoms of nature) all things which come forth according to order, are forms of uses; or effects formed by use for use; and therefore the things there are correspondences.

[H. 112]. With man, however, in proportion as he lives according to Divine order—thus in proportion as he lives in love to the Lord, and in charity towards the neighbour—in the same proportion his acts are uses in form, and are correspondences, through which he is conjoined with Heaven. To love the Lord and the neighbour, is, in general, to perform uses.

—(g). That all good has its delight from uses, and according to uses; and also its quality: hence, such as is the use, such is the good. Refs. 517(a).

361. The rich in Heaven . . . have an abundance of all things for the uses of life; yet they do not set their hearts on them, but on the uses; these they see clearly, and as in light; but the gold and silver . . . as relatively in the shade. The reason is that in the world they had loved uses; and gold and silver only as means. The very uses, in Heaven, shine in this way; the good of use, as gold; and the truth of use, as silver. Such, therefore, as had been their uses in the world, such is their opulence, and such their delight and happiness.

—². Good uses are, to provide for one's self and one's own the necessities of life; to desire an abundance for the sake of one's country, and the neighbour, whom a rich man can in many ways benefit more than a poor man; and also because he can in this way remove his disposition from an idle life, which is pernicious, for in it a man thinks evilly, from the evil implanted in him. These uses are good, in proportion as they have in them what is Divine; that is, in proportion as the man looks to the Divine and to Heaven, and places his good in them, and in wealth only a subservient good.

—(f). Refs. to passages on the subject of uses. 387(t).

362. Into such (sordid) things are turned not only the riches which are loved as an end, but also the uses themselves, which are that they may indulge in pleasures, etc. Such . . . uses, having nothing spiritual in them, become foul; for what is spiritual in riches and their uses is like the soul in the body . . . and [such riches and uses] therefore become putrid, like a body without a soul . . .

387. As the heavenly Societies are distinct according to goods, they are so according to uses; because the goods with all in the Heavens are goods in act, which are uses. Everyone there performs a use; for the Lord's Kingdom is a Kingdom of uses.

389. In the Heavens those things which are of the general good, or use, are under the custody of the wiser Angels, and so on. They are subordinated, just as, in Divine order, uses are subordinated; and therefore dignity is adjointed to every function according to the dignity of the use; but still the Angel does not claim the dignity for himself, but gives it all to the use; and, as the use is the good which he performs, and all good is from the Lord, he gives it all to Him. And therefore he who thinks about the honour for himself, and derivatively for the use, and not for the use and derivatively for himself, cannot discharge any office in Heaven, because he is looking backwards from the Lord: at himself in the first place, and at the use in the second.

—^e. When use is mentioned, the Lord also is understood, because . . . use is good, and good is from the Lord.

390. (This shows) the nature of the subordinations in the Heavens; namely, that in proportion as anyone loves, esteems, and honours a use, so does he love, esteem, and honour the person to whom that use has been adjointed; and also, that a person is loved, esteemed, and honoured in proportion as he does not ascribe the use to himself, but to the Lord; for in the same proportion is he wise; and in the same proportion the uses which he performs, he performs from good. Spiritual love, esteem, and honour are nothing else than the love, esteem, and honour of the use in the person, and the honour of the person from the use, and not of the use from the person.

—³. So he who regards men from spiritual truth . . . sees one man to be like another . . . and the difference solely in the wisdom; and wisdom is to love use, thus the good of a fellow-citizen, of society, of our country, and of the Church. In this, too, consists love to the Lord, because all the good which is the good of use is from Him; and also love towards the neighbour, because the neighbour is the good which is to be loved in a fellow-citizen, etc., and which is to be performed to them.

391. All the Societies in the Heavens are distinct according to uses, because they are distinct according to goods; and goods are goods in act, that is, the goods of charity, which are uses. (The uses of various Societies enum.)

392. For every general use is composed of innumerable ones, which are called mediate, administering, and subservient uses. All and each are co-ordinated and subordinated according to Divine order, and, taken together, they constitute and perfect the general use, which is the common good.

393³. There are so many offices, administrations, and works in Heaven that . . . those in the world are relatively few; and all [the Angels] are in the delight of their work and labour from the love of use, and no one from the love of self, or of gain . . . from which it is evident that those who have loved themselves and the world more than use, cannot have any lot in Heaven.

402. All the delights of Heaven have been conjoined with and are in uses, because uses are the goods of love and of charity in which the Angels are; and therefore everyone has delights according to the nature of his uses, and also in the degree in which he has the affection of use. That all the delights of Heaven are delights of use (shown from the five senses and their delights).

403. There is no happiness in being quiescent . . . nor without an active life . . . Angelic life consists in performing goods of charity, which are uses; and the Angels have all their happiness in use, from use, and according to use.

405². The uses in the Heavens are in like manner of all variety and diversity; and in no case is the use of one exactly the same as the use of another; and therefore neither is the delight of one the same as that of another. And, what is more, the delights of each use are innumerable, and these innumerable delights are in like manner various . . .

508⁸. The insanity of evil Spirits is (not allowed to go) beyond the limits of use; for some use is performed by every such Spirit. (These uses enum.)

—³. The affection of truth suited to the use is insinuated by various means . . . especially by representatives of uses . . . attended with such delights that they penetrate the Spirit from the interiors of his mind to the exteriors of his body . . . and in this way the Spirit becomes as it were his own use; so that when he comes into his own Society . . . he is in his life when he is in his use.

—^e. It is evident from these things that Knowledges . . . do not cause anyone to come into Heaven; but the life itself, which is a life of use, implanted by means of the Knowledges.

518. Those Spirits who had been in the genuine affection of truth, thus one for the sake of uses separated from bodily and worldly things, which uses, in themselves, are spiritual uses, after instruction, were received into Heaven . . .

557. Heavenly love is to love uses for the sake of uses . . .

563. In their offices they had not looked to the uses, but to themselves, and thus had set self before uses. (Their experience after death.)

564. He who exercises dominion from love towards the neighbour . . . loves nothing more than uses. Ex. . . He rejoices, not for the sake of the dignities, but for the sake of the uses which he can thereby perform in a greater degree . . .

—². But the uses performed by one who exercises dominion from the love of self, are for the sake of his own honour and glory, which, to him, are the only uses.

—³. (The former class) are entrusted with dominion in the Heavens; but it is not they that exercise dominion, but the uses which they love; and, when uses exercise dominion, the Lord does so.

565^e. The end for which wealth is sought, is called its use; and it is the end, or use, from which the love has its quality . . .

J. 69². They had done uses, but not for the sake of uses.

S. 57. Enlightenment . . . exists with those who love truths because they are truths, and make them uses of life. 59^e. 61^e.

F. 14. Good is nothing else than use; and therefore charity, in its first origin, is the affection of use; and, as use loves means, it produces the affection of the means . . . and through these . . . the affection of use comes forth and becomes charity.

16^e. (Thus) the will of producing use by means of the understanding is perpetual . . .

20. In the spiritual sense, good is the neighbour, and, as use is good, use, in this sense, is the neighbour. Ex.

W. 46^e. (This) cannot be seen unless nature is regarded from uses in their series and order, and not from some of its forms . . . for uses are solely from life; and their series and order are from Wisdom and Love; whereas forms are the containants of uses.

58. The conjunction (of the Divine) with all these things is according to their uses. Ex.

61². Their vegetative soul is use, the forms of which they are.

65. That the uses of all created things ascend, through degrees, from ultimates to man, and through man to God the Creator, from whom they are. Gen.art. 170^e.

—^e. The end of all uses is the endeavour to produce uses; and the beginning of them is the force acting from this endeavour. These are of the mineral kingdom.

—². The uses of (plants) are for each and all things of the animal kingdom . . .

66². The six degrees, through which the uses of all created things ascend . . .

—^e. (Thus) the uses of all things are the very recipients themselves of life, and, derivatively, the forms of the uses are.

80. The Divine is also the same in the greatest and in the least of all created things which are not alive; for it is in all the good of their use. The reason these are not alive, is that they are not forms of life, but forms of uses; and the form varies according to the goodness of the use.

[W.] 142°. There is also a love of exercising dominion from the love of doing uses . . . but this love cannot be called a love of exercising dominion, but a love of doing uses.

158°. (Otherwise) earths could not . . . produce forms of uses, which are plants . . .

166. For what is living disposes what is dead . . . and forms it for uses, which are its ends.

171. For out of the Earth, forms of uses are continually raised by the Creator . . .

213. Love is the end, wisdom the instrumental cause, and use the effect; and use is the complex, containant, and basis of love and wisdom; and use is such a complex, and such a containant, that all things of love, and all things of wisdom, are actually in it. It is their Simultaneous. Ex. 214. 215, Ex.

220°. By 'works' are here meant uses which are actually done; for in uses, and according to them, is the all of charity and of faith . . .

230. As the Lord is love itself, and wisdom itself, He is also use itself; for love has use as its end, and produces use by means of wisdom; for love and wisdom, without use, have no boundary or end . . . and therefore they cannot be said to be and come forth, unless there is use in which they may be. These three constitute the three degrees of height in the subjects of life. They are as end . . . cause . . . and effect. 241, Ex.

232. The (celestial) Angels are in love; the (spiritual) Angels are in wisdom; and men in the world are in uses. Ex.

235. There are such degrees (of height) derivatively, in each and all things of uses.

237. The second, or spiritual, degree is opened through the love of uses from the intellectual things; but through the spiritual love of uses, which love is love towards the neighbour.

—². The celestial degree is opened through the celestial love of use, which love is love to the Lord; and love to the Lord is nothing else than to commit to life the precepts of the Word . . .

239. As there are, with man, three degrees of love and wisdom and the derivative use, it follows that there must exist with him three degrees of will, understanding, and . . . determination to use . . .

241°. Therefore, such as is the love with a man, such is the wisdom with him, and such is the use.

251². According to uses, also, the natural man becomes as the spiritual man, which takes place when the natural man feels, from the spiritual, the delight of use.

— . To do truths is to perform uses.

252°. The communication by correspondences (between the natural and the spiritual man) . . . is perceived in the will only by the fact that uses are performed from affection.

253². Good, through truths, opens the spiritual degree; for good, through truths, operates use; and uses are goods of love . . .

258². Love . . . is elevated solely by shunning evils as sins, and, then, through the goods of charity, which are uses, and which the man then performs from the Lord.

296. That there are three things in the Lord which are the Lord: the Divine of love; the Divine of wisdom; and the Divine of use; and these three are presented in appearance outside the spiritual Sun . . . the Divine of use by the atmosphere.

— . The third thing which proceeds . . . is the atmosphere . . . and this proceeds from that Divine of the Lord which is called use.

297. Anyone . . . can see that love has use as its end and aim; and that it produces use by means of wisdom; for love cannot produce any use from itself, but only by the medium of wisdom. Nay, what is love unless there is something to be loved? This something is use; and, as use is that which is loved, and as it is produced by means of wisdom, it follows that use is the containant of wisdom and of love.

—^e. (Thus) these three things: the Divine of love, the Divine of wisdom, and the Divine of use, are in the Lord; and, in essence, are the Lord.

298. That man, regarded as to his exteriors, and as to his interiors, is a form of all uses; and that all the uses in the created universe correspond to these uses, (shows that) God as a Man is the very form itself of all uses, from which form all the uses in the created universe derive their origin; so that the created universe, regarded as to uses, is an image of Him.

—^e. Those things are called uses, which, from the Lord, are in order from creation; but those things are not called uses which are from the proprium of man, because this is Hell . . .

299. As . . . love, wisdom, and use are in the Lord, and are the Lord . . . and as the Lord cannot present Himself such as He is in Himself . . . He therefore presents Himself . . . as to love by heat, as to wisdom by light, and as to use by the atmosphere. The reason the Lord presents Himself as to use by the atmosphere, is that the atmosphere is the containant of heat and light, as use is the containant of love and wisdom. Ex.

302°. As this (condensation from the atmospheres) is the origin of substances and matters, it follows . . . that they have been accommodated to the production of all uses in their forms.

303. It follows (also) that these substances and matters . . . retain within them, from the atmospheres from which they originated, an effort and conatus to produce uses.

307. That all uses, which are the ends of creation are in forms . . . Gen.art.

— . The ends of creation are those things which are produced by the Lord as a Sun by means of the atmospheres from the earths; and these ends are called uses. In their whole extent they include all things of the vegetable kingdom; all things of the animal kingdom; finally, the human race, and the angelic Heaven from it. These are called uses, because they are the recipients of the Divine love and the Divine wisdom, and also because they have regard to God the Creator, from whom they are, and thereby conjoin Him with His great work; and, by the conjunction, cause that they subsist from Him, as they had existed. Ex.

308. That uses are the ends of creation, who does not clearly see, when he considers that by God . . . nothing can . . . be created but uses? and that in order to be use, it must be for the sake of others? and that use for the sake of self must also be for the sake of others; for use for the sake of self is that one may be in such a state that he may be of use to others? (Therefore) use which is use cannot come forth from man; but must be in man from Him from whom everything that comes forth is use.

310. That in earths there is a conatus to produce uses in forms, that is, forms of uses. Gen.art.

—¹. By this (seeds) are in the potency of conjoining themselves with the use from which comes their prolific principle; and then, through conjunction with matters from a natural origin, of producing forms of uses, and then sending them forth as from a womb . . . This conatus is afterwards continuous through the root even to the ultimates, and from the ultimates to the primes, in which the use itself is in its origin. Thus do uses pass into forms; and the forms, in their progression from primes to ultimates and from ultimates to primes, derive from the use—which is like a soul—that each and all things of the forms are of some use. It is said that the use is like a soul, because its form is like a body. It also follows that there is a conatus still more interior, which is the conatus of producing uses for the animal kingdom through vegetable growths . . . It also follows that in these there is an inmost conatus, which is a conatus of performing uses to the human race.

—^e. (Thus) all uses are produced by the Lord from ultimates; and therefore there must be a conatus to them in the ultimates.

313. That in all forms of uses there is some image of creation. Gen.art.

—¹. Forms of uses are of three kinds: forms of uses of the mineral kingdom; forms of uses of the vegetable kingdom; and forms of uses of the animal kingdom. The forms of uses of the mineral kingdom cannot be described, because they do not appear to the sight. (Continued under FORM.)

314. In the forms of uses of the vegetable kingdom, the image of creation appears in this: that they proceed from their primes to their ultimates; and from their ultimates to their primes. Ex. . . The stems covered with barks represent—referunt—the Earth covered with earths, from which earths come forth the creation and formation of all uses.

—². (Moreover) in the whole progression there is the end of producing fruits and seeds, which are uses.

—^e. (Thus) the progression of the creation of the universe was from its First . . . to ultimates, which are earths, and from these, through uses, to its First . . . Also, the ends of the whole creation were uses.

315. It is the (spiritual) heat, light, and atmospheres which bear this image of creation with them, and clothe it with the forms of uses of the vegetable kingdom.

316. In the forms of uses of the animal kingdom, there is a like image of creation. Ex.

—². A like image of creation comes forth in all the several things in man; for there is a like progression of love, through wisdom, into uses . . . Acts and works are the ultimates; and from these, through the delights of uses, there is effected a return to their primes, which . . . are the will and understanding. That the return is effected through the delights of uses. Ex. . . The delights of acts and works are the delights which are called the delights of use.

317. That in all forms of uses there is some image of man. Ex.

—¹. All uses, from primes to ultimates, and from ultimates to primes, have relation to all things of man, and have a correspondence with them . . .

318. That in all forms of uses there is some image of the Infinite and the Eternal. Ex.

319. That, regarded from uses, all things of the created universe have relation to man, in an image; and that this testifies that God is a Man. Gen.art. 326^e.

322^e. This (correspondent) image does not appear when all these things are regarded in their forms; but it appears when they are regarded in their uses. . . When the Angels have seen these things from the correspondence of the uses, they have recognized and seen themselves in them.

327. That all things which have been created by the Lord are uses; and that they are uses in that order, degree, and respect, in which they bear relation to man, and, through man to the Lord, from whom [they are]. Gen.art. 329.

329. From the end of the creation of the universe, it may be evident what use is. Ex.

330^e. Hence it is evident in what order, degree, and respect, uses—which are the mediate ends of creation—bear relation to man; namely, that they are for the sustenance of his body; for the perfecting of his Rational; and for the receiving of what is spiritual from the Lord. (These three classes of uses enum. in order, 331-333.)

331^e. Superfluity does not take away use; but causes the uses to persist.

335. Although it is said that these things are uses, because, through man, they bear relation to the Lord, still it cannot be said that they are uses from man for the Lord's sake, but from the Lord for man's sake; because, in the Lord, all uses are infinitely one, and there are none in man except from Him; for man cannot do good from himself, but from the Lord; and good is what is called use. Ex.

—². (Thus) the uses which the Lord performs for Himself by means of man, are that, from love, He is able to bless—benefacere . . .

—^e. The Lord is with those (only) who do His commandments, thus uses.

[W.] 336. All things which come forth in act are called uses, (both good and evil); the latter, evil uses, and the former, good uses. . . None but good uses have been created by the Lord, and evil uses have originated from Hell. The uses treated of in this article . . . mean all things which appear upon the Earth; as animals and plants of every kind: such of these as perform a use to man are from the Lord, and those which inflict injury on him are from Hell. By uses from the Lord, are likewise meant all things which perfect the Rational of man, and those which cause him to receive what is spiritual from the Lord; whereas by evil uses are meant all things which destroy the Rational, and cause that man cannot become spiritual. The reason why the things which inflict injury on man are called uses, is that they are of use to the evil to do evil, and that they also conduce to the absorbing of malignities; thus also for remedies. Use is spoken of in both senses, as love is . . . and love calls all that use which is done by it.

338. What is meant by evil uses which are upon the Earth. Enum.

339. That all things which are evil uses are in Hell; and all things which are good uses are in Heaven. Ex. and enum.

341. That influx from Hell effects those things which are evil uses in the places where there are things which correspond. Gen.art.

345². It follows that it is the ultimate Spiritual, separated from what is above it, such as exists with those in Hell, which effects these evil uses upon the Earth. III.

346^e. Plants derive from the Spiritual which is their source that they are uses.

348. That all uses, both good and evil, are from a spiritual origin; thus from the Sun. (Shown by an experiment.)

—^e. (Thus) even evil uses are from the spiritual Sun; but good uses are turned in Hell into evil uses. From which it follows that the Lord has not created and does not create any but good uses; and that Hell produces the evil uses.

396². All these things (food, clothing, employment, honours, pleasures, etc., should be sought) for the sake of . . . use.

409². The use of (all things in the universe) has relation to good; and the form of the use, to truth.

414. Love, or the will, cannot be elevated . . . except through the love of use . . .

426. By love towards the neighbour, is meant the love of uses; and by love to the Lord, is meant the love of doing uses. . . The reason these loves are spiritual and celestial, is that to love uses, and to do them from the love of them, is something separate from the love of what is man's Own; for he who loves uses spiritually does not look to self, but to others outside of self, with whose good he is affected.

—². But man does not feel and perceive the love of doing uses for the sake of uses, as he does the love of doing uses for the sake of self; and therefore, while he is doing uses, he does not know whether he is doing them for the sake of the uses, or for the sake of self. But let him know that he is doing uses for the sake of uses in proportion as he is shunning evils; for, in proportion as anyone is shunning these, in the same proportion he is doing uses, not from himself, but from the Lord. For evil and good are opposites; and therefore in proportion as anyone is not in evil, in the same proportion he is in good. . . These things have been said, in order that it may be known, that although a man does not perceive by his feelings, whether the uses he is doing are for the sake of the uses, or whether they are for the sake of self—that is, whether the uses are spiritual, or whether they are merely natural—still he is able to know it from this: whether he thinks evils to be sins, or not; if he thinks that they are sins, and on this account does not do them, then the uses which he does are spiritual; and, when such a one shuns sins with aversion, he then begins to perceive by his feelings the love of uses for the sake of uses, and this from the spiritual delight in them.

431. In Heaven, all who do uses from the affection of use, derive, from the communion in which they are, that they are wiser and happier than others; and, with those there, to do uses is to act sincerely, justly, rightly, and faithfully in the work which belongs to their office. They call this charity . . . and they say that when anyone (is doing this) the community subsists and persists in its good; and that this is 'to be in the Lord'; because all that inflows from the Lord is use; and it inflows from the parts into the community, and from the community to the parts. The parts, there, are the Angels; and the community is a Society of them.

P. 12². In these effects, the uses are of love or of good; and the means to the uses are of the understanding, or of truth.

26. The Kingdom of the Lord, which is over (both) Heaven and Hell, is a Kingdom of uses; and it is of His Providence that there is not anyone or anything there, by whom, or through which, a use is not effected.

183⁴. When the Lord leads man away from (seeking honours and wealth for the sake of self) he introduces him into the love of uses, so that he may regard eminence . . . for the sake of use, and thus that it may be of the uses, and thence of self; and not of self and thence of the uses; and in like manner opulence.

215⁶. The quality of the love of dignities and riches for the sake of use (contrasted with the love of them for their own sake). . . The love of them for the sake of use, is the love of uses, which is the same as the love of the neighbour. Ex. —¹¹.

—¹¹. By uses are meant goods; so that to do uses means to do goods; and to do uses, or goods, means to serve others, and minister to them . . . Dignity and wealth are regarded merely as a means for doing uses. Sig.

— . When uses, or goods, are the ends, or loves, it is not (the rulers) who exercise dominion, but the Lord . . .

—¹². For most of those in dignity and opulence do uses; but do not know whether they do them for the sake of self, or for the sake of the uses; and the less so because there is more of the fire and ardour of doing uses in the love of self and of the world than in those who are not in (these loves); but the former do uses for the sake of reputation, or gain . . . but they who do uses for the sake of uses . . . do not do them from self, but from the Lord.

—¹³. For man is unaware whether he is led by the devil, or by the Lord: he who is led by the devil does uses for the sake of self and the world; whereas he who is led by the Lord does uses for the sake of the Lord and Heaven; and all those do uses from the Lord who shun evils as sins; and all those do uses from the devil who do not shun evils as sins; for evil is the devil; and use, or good, is the Lord: from this (only) is the difference Known. Both appear alike in the external form; but in the internal form they are altogether unlike. Des.

217². Not to set the heart on (dignities and riches) is to love the uses, and not self, in them.

—³. The reason both the evil and the good are promoted to honours and wealth, is that the evil do uses equally with the good; but the evil for the sake of honours and gains for their own person; but the good for the sake of honours and gains to the Thing itself. Ex.

—⁵. Still (the Angels) do not regard the dignity itself as anything, but the uses in the administration and discharge of which they are. They indeed receive the honours . . . but attribute them to the uses themselves; and, as all uses are from the Lord, they attribute them to Him.

—⁶. But (those who) had attributed (dignities and wealth) to themselves, and not to the uses; and (who) had not wanted uses to dominate over them, but themselves over the uses; and (who) had regarded them as uses only in so far as they served for their own honour and glory . . . are in Hell, and are vile slaves there . . . Ill.

220⁴. That the Lord, through His Divine Providence, conjoins Himself with natural things through spiritual things, and with temporary things through eternal things, according to uses. Ex.

—⁵. Uses are the goods which are called the goods of charity.

—⁶. That the Lord conjoins Himself with uses through correspondences, and thus through appearances, according to the confirmations of these by man. Ex.

—⁷. As all the uses, that is, truths and goods of charity, which a man does to the neighbour, may be done either according to appearances, or according to the real Truths in the Word; if he does them according to the appearances confirmed with himself, he is in fallacies; but if according to Truths, he does them as he ought . . .

—⁹. The same dignities and honours are spiritual and eternal, when the man regards himself as to his person [as being] for the sake of the commonwealth and uses; and not these [as being] for his sake.

— (Such) have indeed performed uses and goods, but from self and not from the Lord; and thus have placed themselves in the Lord's place.

—¹⁰. Riches and wealth (also) are spiritual and eternal with those who, in them, regard good uses . . .

In Heaven they live in palaces the useful-utensiles-forms of which are resplendent with gold and precious stones, which, however, they regard merely as external things which are resplendent and transparent from the internal things, which are the uses, and from which they have the very pleasure and delight themselves, which, in themselves, are the happiness of Heaven. (The contrary state des.)

—¹¹. By uses are meant not only the necessities of life . . . for one's self and one's own; but also the good of our country, of the community, and of our fellow-citizen. Mercantile business is such a good when the love of it is the end, and money is a mediate subservient love; provided the man of business shuns and is averse to defraudings and evil arts as sins.

—⁶. This turning about cannot exist in a moment; for the greatest delight of life, which is from the love of self and the derivative dominion, can be lessened, and turned into the love of uses, only successively . . .

252². For the evil do uses equally with the good, and the evil, from their fire, do them more ardently than the good; especially in wars . . .

R. 153⁷. Food is there given to all from Heaven according to the uses they do . . .

—⁹. As all who have confirmed themselves in falsities of faith cannot do works of good use, but of evil use; and as they do not do them faithfully, but only that they may appear, for the sake of honour or gain, they leave their works, and love only to gossip, walk, and sleep . . . and are therefore cast out as useless. (Their further lot des.)

352. 'Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand' = the uses of life, which are of wisdom from celestial love, with those in the Lord's New Heaven and New Church. Ex.

— 'Gad,' in the spiritual sense, = the good of life, which is also use . . . here, the uses of life, because he follows Reuben and Judah; and celestial love, through wisdom, produces uses.

— There are three things which . . . cannot be separated: love, wisdom, and the uses of life. If one of them is separated, the other two go.

— That 'Gad' = the uses of life, which are also called 'fruits.' Ill.

353. 'Of the tribe of Asher were sealed twelve thousand' = mutual love, which is the love of doing the good of use to the community, with those . . . of the Lord's New Heaven and New Church.

— 'Asher,' here, = the love of doing uses which exists with those who are in the . . . Celestial Kingdom, and which is there called mutual love. This love descends proximately from love to the Lord, because the Lord's love is to do uses to the community . . . and He does them through men who are in love to Him.

— c. He was named from 'blessedness'; and, in Heaven, those who are in the love of doing uses to the community and the Society, are in pre-eminent blessedness.

[R.] 354. 'Of the tribe of Naphtali were sealed twelve thousand'=the perception of use, and of what use is, with those . . . in the Lord's New Heaven and New Church.

— 'Naphtali' . . . in the spiritual sense, = temptation and victory . . . but the reason 'Naphtali' here = the perception of use and of what use is, is that he follows in the series after Asher, by whom is signified the love of uses; and moreover there is an interior perception of uses in those who have overcome in temptations; for the interiors of the mind are opened by means of temptations. III.

903^e. To do His commandments, is love towards the neighbour, because to do His commandments, is to do uses to the neighbour.

940^e. For, in Heaven, all uses shine.

M. 5³. They asked the Angel, What, then, is heavenly joy? He replied . . . It is the delight of doing something which is of use to one's self and others; and the delight of use derives its essence from love, and its coming forth into existence from wisdom. The delight of use, originating from love, through wisdom, is the soul and life of all heavenly joys.

—⁴. There are the most delightful social gatherings in the Heavens . . . but . . . after they have done the uses in their employments and works . . . but if you take away this soul or life, the accessory joys gradually cease . . .

6⁵. The Angel . . . taught them (that) in Heaven there are . . . banquets and feasts . . . plays, spectacles, concerts . . . and all in the highest perfection; and they hold such things as joys, but not as happiness; the happiness must be in them . . . and everyone has this happiness from the use in his employment.

—⁶. There is a certain hidden vein in the affection . . . of every Angel which draws on the mind to do something; and through this the mind tranquillizes itself, and satisfies itself; and this satisfaction and tranquillity cause a state of the mind which is receptive of the love of use from the Lord; and from the reception of this comes heavenly happiness, which is the life of all these joys. Heavenly food is nothing but love, wisdom, and use together; that is, use, through wisdom, from love; for which reason food for the body is given everyone in Heaven according to the use which he performs; sumptuous food those who are in eminent use; moderate, but of an exquisite flavour, those who are in use of a middle degree; and common-vilis—those who are in a low-vili-use; but none to the slothful.

7³. Learn, therefore, that 'to reign with Christ' means to be wise, and to do uses; for the Kingdom of Christ, which is Heaven, is a Kingdom of uses. For the Lord loves all, and thence wills good to all; and good is use; and, as the Lord does goods, or uses, immediately through the Angels; and, in the world, through men, He therefore, to those who do uses faithfully, gives the love of use, and its reward, which is internal bliss; and this is eternal happiness. (Further ex. in connection with the high government offices and splendours of Heaven.)

10⁷. As use is the containant of love and wisdom, the state of heavenly life is from the conjunction of these in use. Ex.

13^e. All those receive the influx (of heavenly blessednesses) who are in the love of use; but those who are in the love of glory, and not from use, do not receive it.

—². All these uses have been inscribed on man, and follow in order, one after the other; and, when they are together, the one is in the other. They who are in the first uses, which are spiritual, are also in the sequent ones; and these are wise. But they who are not in the first uses, and yet are in the second, and thence in the sequent ones, are not so wise. . . . They who are not in the first and the second uses, but are in the third and fourth, are not at all wise; for they are satans. . . . And they who are solely in the fourth uses are least wise of all; for they are devils. . . .

—³. Every love has its own delight. . . . and the delight of the love of uses is heavenly delight, which enters into the sequent delights in order. . . . They (then) enumerated the heavenly deliciousnesses which proceed from the love of use; and said that there are myriads of myriads of them; and that those enter into them who enter Heaven.

—^e. That delights follow use, and that they are in man according to the love of use, is evident from the delights of the five senses. . . .

137². (The husband is perfected in wisdom, and the wife loves it in her husband) through the uses, and according to them, which both, by mutual aid, perform in the Society.

—⁴. Heat, with (the Angels) is love; and the light with which the heat is united, is wisdom; and use is as it were the atmosphere which contains both in its bosom. What are heat and light without that which contains them? And in the same way what are love and wisdom without their use?

—^e. No one knows the blessed delights of conjugal love but he who rejects the horrid delights of adultery; and no one can reject these but he who is wise from the Lord; and no one is wise from the Lord unless he does uses from the love of uses.

183². What is meant by the third proceeding Divine essential, which is called use? The Angels replied, Love and wisdom, without use, are merely abstract ideas of thought. . . . but in use these two are collected together, and therein become a one, which is called a real thing. Love cannot rest unless it is doing something. . . . neither can wisdom. . . . and doing is use; and therefore we define use as the doing of good from love through wisdom: use is good itself.

—⁴. As these three, love, wisdom, and use, inflow into the souls of men, it is evident whence it is that it is said that all good is from God; for everything done from love through wisdom is called good; and use also is what is done. . . . What are love and wisdom without use, but a state of the mind? Whereas love and wisdom together with use not only constitute man, but also are man; nay. . . . they propagate man. Ex. . . . This use is the highest and ultimate use of the Divine love through the Divine wisdom.

—⁵. (Therefore) all fructification, propagation, and prolification are originally from the influx of love, wisdom, and use from the Lord. . . . for creation cannot be from any other source than from the Divine love, through the Divine wisdom, in the Divine use; and therefore all things in the universe are procreated and formed from use, in use, and for use.

—⁶. The deliciousnesses of conjugal love, which are innumerable and ineffable. . . . are from the uses of love and wisdom, which may be seen from the fact that in proportion as anyone loves to be wise for the sake of genuine use, in the same proportion he is in the vein and potency of conjugal love. . . . Use effects this. Ex.

—⁸. To this the Angels added that those who are not, from the Lord, in the love of being wise for the sake of use, do not know anything about the variety of the innumerable deliciousnesses of love truly conjugal. Ex.

—^e. The listeners then said, that they perceive that conjugal love is according to the love of being wise for the sake of uses from the Lord; and the Angels replied that it is so.

207⁷. Eternal rest is a rest which dispels (languor, stupor, and drowsiness of the mind and body), and causes the man to live; and this is nothing else than something which elevates the mind; and it is therefore some application and work, by which the mind is excited, vivified, and delighted; and this takes place according to the use from which, in which, and for which it is working. Hence it is that the universal Heaven is regarded by the Lord as a containant of use; and that every Angel is an Angel according to use; the delight of use bears him along as a favourable current does a ship, and causes him to be in eternal peace, and in the rest of peace. This is the meaning of eternal rest from labours.

— That an Angel is alive according to the application of his mind from use, is very evident from the fact, that each one has conjugal love, with its virtue, power, and deliciousnesses, according to his application to the genuine use in which he is.

—^e. When the novitiate Spirits were gone, the maidens sang an ode, in which they expressed. . . . the affection of the works of use, with its pleasantnesses.

220. That men have abundant store according to the love of propagating the truths of wisdom, and according to the love of doing uses. Ex.

—³. Because uses are the goods which truths produce.

happens to those who give themselves up to sloth and idleness. Des.

[M.] 250^o. As to dignities, all in Heaven regard others according to the uses they perform . . .

262. The love of exercising dominion from the love of uses is in the highest degree heavenly. Ex. 266.

—^e. For the love of uses is from the Lord, and is the Lord Himself. (Those in it) regard dignities merely as means to do uses, and they set them far above the dignities . . . 266².

—³. We did indeed seek (these) dignities, but (merely) that we might be able to do uses more fully . . . We feel . . . that the uses we perform are, from the love of them, within us from the Lord; and this love receives its bliss from communication, through uses, with others; and we know from experience, that in proportion as we do uses from the love of them, in the same proportion this love increases, and, with love, wisdom, by which the communication is effected; but that in proportion as we retain the uses in ourselves, and do not communicate them, in the same proportion the bliss perishes; and then the use becomes like food stored (and retained) in the stomach . . . In a word, the whole Heaven is nothing, from primes to ultimates, but a containant of use. What is use but the actual love of the neighbour? and what holds the Heavens together but this love?

—⁴. I (then) asked, How can anyone know whether he does uses from the love of self, or from the love of uses? Every man, both good and evil, does uses; and he does uses from some love. (In) a society of mere devils, and one of mere Angels, I opine that the devils . . . from the fire of the love of self, and the resplendence of their own glory, would do as many uses as the Angels in their society. Who, then, can know from what love, and from what origin, uses are? The two Angels replied, Devils do uses for the sake of self, and reputation, that they may be elevated to honours, or gain wealth; whereas Angels . . . do uses . . . for the sake of the uses, from the love of them. Man cannot discriminate these uses, but the Lord does so. Everyone who believes in the Lord, and shuns evils as sins, does uses from the Lord; whereas everyone who does not believe in the Lord, and does not shun evils as sins, does uses from self and for the sake of self. This is the difference between uses done by devils, and uses done by Angels.

305. Man is elevated into the highest region of the mind, which is called celestial, (and) in which is conjugal chastity in its love, through the love of uses . . .

405. The spiritual love their children from . . . their affection for and application to uses which are of service to society.

426. The spiritual man is that into which a man is introduced through the love of doing uses, which love is called charity . . .

T. 13². (It may thus be seen) that the world is a complex of uses in successive order for the human race . . . 47.

67. Before the creation, God was love itself and wisdom itself, and was these two in the conatus to do uses; for love and wisdom, without use, are only fly-aways of reason . . . Hence it is evident that the universe has been created by God in order that uses might come into existence; and therefore the universe may be called a theatre of uses . . .

— . Love and wisdom, without their third, which is use, may be compared to . . .

—². (As it is with end, cause, and effect, so is it) with love, wisdom, and use; and use is what love aims at, and produces through the cause; and, when the use has been produced, love and wisdom come into existence really, and make a dwelling-place and a seat in it . . . It is the same with a man in whom are the love and wisdom of God, when he is doing uses; and, in order that he may do the uses of God, he has been created an image and likeness, that is, a form of Divine order.

412². For honours are attached to (dignities) according to the uses they perform. Ex.

—³. But the rulers of the present age can do uses . . . and yet not love the neighbour. Ex.

—^e. But those who have promoted uses from love to the neighbour are set as rulers over a heavenly Society . . . (while) those who have done uses from the love of the world and of self, are rejected.

419. Whether it is said use, or good, it is the same; and therefore to do uses is to do goods; and the goods are goods according to the quantity and quality of the use in them.

422. The reason charity itself is to act justly and faithfully in the office, business, and work in which each one is, is that all things which a man does in this way are of use to society; and use is good; and good . . . is the neighbour. Examps.

677. The first use of baptism. Ex.

681. The second use of baptism. Ex.

684. The third use of baptism. Ex.

685. Thus the three uses of baptism cohere together as a one . . .

Ad. 1008. On uses. 1009-1013.

D. 231. (How sadnesses and insanities there, are made to be of use.)

2024°. He received consolation . . . in the degree in which the rays of the sphere of use entered; and was thus taught that nothing should be coveted except from use; and that use ought to excite the affection.

2025. The cupidities of some, of having without use, which they afterwards defend, by feigning uses . . .

2505°. These never aim at any use except for themselves; that is, the use of the commonwealth is null to them; but their own; and therefore they are such as are not led by use, or by the love of use. Des.

2506. In the life of the body, such want . . . to take away the delight of life from others who perform use; and yet do not want to perform anything useful. (A discourse to them on delights and uses.)

2510. That each and all things in the world are for the sake of use; and that the uses of all things in the universe reveal the Creator. Ex.

2512. In use there can be nothing material, when yet use has formed these things, because each and all things are according to use; and as there is nothing material in the use which is as it were the forming [agent], it is evident, from a spiritual idea, that the Divine is that which has formed . . .

2566. At this day the human race regards no other use, and consequently no other end, than self. Ex.

2922a. That no one [exists] except for the sake of use, even evil Spirits; and indeed to perform use to . . . those whom they hate. Ex.

3144. For it is a law that there is nothing without a use.

3147. That in the other life everyone must perform a use; and must have happiness from the use. Ex.

3574. That all things have been created by use, and for use. Gen.art.

3577. It is evident, therefore, that, in the universe, use can never be separated from organic things . . . and therefore the uses of the ultimate things in nature flow from the uses of the exterior organic things. Use, separated from organic things, does not exist in the created universe; thus it is necessarily from the Lord. But, that all use is first seen from ultimate things, has happened because man is so born as to be instructed through sensuous things . . .

3900. They become Spirits almost devoid of sensation, serving such uses (as the bones, anns, etc.). 4282. (See 4461, below.)

4038. (Such) are vastated, so that they may serve for uses. Ex. 4111.

4173. The Spirits are indignant that so much is said about use; but they were told that there is nothing in the world without a use; in a kingdom the question is, What use is it? and about a man, What is he useful for? and if he is not useful, he is rejected . . . What therefore must be the case in the Lord's Kingdom, whence comes all use? There was represented . . . a sphere as an aura of uses . . . and in it [one of them] began to flee, saying that he could not breathe.

4182. On uses.—My mothers said that my father . . . had often been absent . . . and had always returned in delight, from which it was perceived that he is sent forth by the Lord for various uses among men, now hither, now thither, because his delight consists in an active life . . . It is evident from this that Spirits are sent forth for various uses.

4267. The thought and speech (of the Angels) are solely of ends, and consequently of uses.

4268°. Yet (the Spirits are acted upon) so that their reigning state of life may be bent to some use.

4461. That some are taken out of Hell into the World of Spirits for vile uses. Ex. 4471.

4548. On those who live without use, and their Hell. Ex.

5155. All the joy, bliss, happiness, and delight, in the Heavens, are in the affection of use for the sake of use. Ex. 5158, Ex.

5606. There are four kinds of men . . . The first attend to the uses in the Word . . . thus is it read by the celestial . . .

5792c. For they who are delighted with good use . . . are in spiritual delight . . .

5831. They who do uses . . . do not know what it is to look around and down . . . 5902.

5839. Some have cultivated arts of looking down into the houses . . . being such as have not been delighted with any use for the sake of use; but had done some use for the sake of food, honours, gain, etc. . . And they who love idleness more than use gather together evils into their spirit; for they do not determine the mind to use, but to such things as are in the world, thus to filthy and evil things of every kind; from which they are well withheld if they are delighted with uses.

6072. Idleness is the devil's pillow . . . because man inclines (to impure things); and . . . the love of uses alone repels them, for it holds the lower mind in its delight, so that it regards all other things as being outside itself. Examp.

D. Min. 4637. The delight of honour and dignity not for the sake of use, is the worst ground; and so is the delight of riches not for the sake of use. Such as the use is, such is the delight.

4678. Such a sphere—altogether contrary to the Divine sphere, which is of uses—was present; and it took away . . . from me the delight of use . . .

4741. Those who learn languages, etc., without use . . . Such are rejected after death, because they are of no use, because they had been of no use.

4805. That there is no joy in Heaven without use. Ex.

E. 790⁹. In general (these) are called uses.

825². Uses are his delights . . .

826². When they come forth into existence they are called uses . . .

828. By 'the neighbour' (the celestial Angels) understand uses, which indeed are works; but, with them, uses are all things which take place among them from the Lord. Enum. —².

837². Into the uses from which, in which, and according to which, the members and viscera have been formed.

943. Man has the affection of good when he loves good uses, and is averse to evil uses.

951⁸. In proportion as they regard uses in the first place, and self in the second, they are good . . .

952². Not from the delight of uses . . .

975². Works are more, or less, good, according to the excellence of the uses, for works must be of use; the best are those done for the sake of use to the Church; to these succeed those done for the sake of use to our country; and so on. The use determines the goodness of the works.

990². The delights of the love of adultery derive what they are from the delights of doing evil uses . . . and the delights of the love of marriage, from the delights of doing good uses . . .

1082⁸. The effect is use.

1138⁶. The effect in which the end presents itself is use.

1139⁶. In doing the commandments, which are uses,

1144. In the spiritual sense, the love of the neighbour is the love of uses; but when the uses are for the sake of self, there is no love of uses, but the love of self.

1190². To love wisdom is to love uses which are true uses; and to love knowledge is to love the Knowledges of good and truth for the sake of these uses. When uses are loved more than self and the world, and the Knowledges of good and truth for the sake of uses, then uses are in the first place, and eminence and opulence in the second.

1191². Every least thing (in the palace) down to the smallest particulars, are for use; and everyone who enters sees for what use they are; and perceives it as if from a transpiration of the uses through their images . . .

— . The wisdom (of the subordinate governors) is according to the degree of their love of uses. Such (magnificent things) exist not solely with these, but also with the inhabitants, all of whom love uses, and perform them by means of various works. But few of them can be described. Ex.

1193². Something shall now be said about the uses by means of which a man and an Angel has wisdom. To love uses is nothing else than to love the neighbour; in the spiritual sense, use is the neighbour. Ex.

— . The reason use is the neighbour, is that every man is esteemed and loved . . . from the uses which . . . he performs or is able to perform. Hence a man of use is a man according to his use; and a man not of use is a man not a man . . .

—². Man, therefore, is such as his use is. But uses are manifold; in general, they are heavenly and infernal. Heavenly uses are those which are of service, more or less, to the Church, our country, society, and our fellow-citizen . . . for their own sake, as ends; whereas infernal uses are those which are of service solely to one's self and one's own; and if to the Church, etc., it is . . . for the sake of self as the end.

—⁴. When a man loves uses by doing them, in the first place, and the world and self in the second place, then the former is his Spiritual, and the latter his Natural; and the Spiritual rules, and the Natural serves. This is meant by . . . 'Seek ye first the Kingdom of the Heavens, and its righteousness, and all things shall be added unto you' . . . because, when use is in the first place, the Lord . . . is in the first place . . . and gives whatever contributes to eternal life and happiness . . .

1194². As man has been created to perform uses, and as this is to love the neighbour, therefore all whatever who come into Heaven must do uses. All their delight and bliss are according to uses, and to the love of uses . . . No idle person is tolerated even in Hell. . . The difference is that in Hell uses are done from fear; but in Heaven from love. . . Recreations are also uses.

—^e. It has been revealed (to me) that everything in (Heaven, the world, and the human body) both great and small, has been created from use, in use, and for use; and that the part in which the ultimate, which is for use, ceases, is separated as harmful, and is cast out as damned.

1214². That the origin (of animals and plants) is use, is because affections relate to uses. Use is the subject of all affection; for man cannot be affected except for the sake of something; and this something is use. Now as all affection presupposes use, and the plant soul, from its spiritual origin, is affection . . . therefore it is also use. It is for this reason that in every plant there is a use; a spiritual use in the Spiritual World; and a spiritual and also a natural use in the natural world. The spiritual use is for the various states of the lower mind; and the natural use is for the various states of the body. Ex.

—³. In the Heavens, the external spiritual use from plants is the recreation of their lower minds; and the internal use is the representation of Divine things in them, and in this way also the elevation of the lower mind. Ex.

— . In a word, from the soil in the Heavens nothing else blooms forth but use, because use is the plant soul. —⁴.

—⁴. By the uses which alone bloom forth in the Heavens, is meant all good in act which is from the Lord through love to Him and through love towards the neighbour.

— . Every plant there represents a form of use; and whatever appears in it, from its prime to its ultimate, and from its ultimate to its prime, that is, from its seed to its flower, and from its flower to its seed, exhibits the progression and extension of its affection and at the same time of its use, from end to end. Those who are skilled in the art of botany, chemistry, medicine, and pharmacy, come after death into the knowledge of spiritual uses from the plants there . . .

1226². For the universe has been so created . . . that the Lord is in primes and in ultimates, and in the centre and in the circumferences; and uses are the things in which He is. Gen.art.

— . In the Spiritual World (lands, gardens, and plants) come into existence in a moment) and when these are surveyed by one who is wise, they are found to be correspondences of the uses in which the Angels are . . . To the Angels are also given houses full of useful and ornamental things according to the uses [in which they are]; also garments according to the uses; and in like manner esculent and palatable foods according to the uses; besides delightful social intercourse, which also are uses, because they are recreations. All these things are given gratuitously, but still on account of the uses which they perform. In a word, the universal Heaven is full of uses, insomuch that it is to be called the Kingdom of uses itself.

—³. On the other hand, those who do no use are sent into the Hells, where they are driven to works by a judge. Des.

— . But those who cannot be driven are cast out into deserts . . . and as they perform no uses, the lands where they are are so barren that a grassy sod is rarely seen upon them. In the deserts and Hells I have seen many of noble descent, who in the world had given themselves up to idleness, or had sought offices, and had discharged the duties of them, not for the sake of the use, but the honours and gains, which, to them, had been the only uses.

—⁴. The uses performed in the Heavens, and the tasks done in the Hells, are in part like those done in the world; but still for the most part they are spiritual uses, which cannot be described in natural language, and . . . do not fall into the ideas of natural thought.

— . (So) in the whole world with its Earths, nothing has been created except for use . . . and [all] for the human race, that this may serve the Lord for the doing of use to the neighbour.

—⁵. When the life of man is surveyed from the creation of all things in it, no part will be found which is not for use. Ex. and enum.

—⁶. That in like manner every man has been created and born for use. Ex.

— . A life of the love of use is a life of the love of the public [good], and also a life of the love of the neighbour, and a life of the love of the Lord; for the Lord does uses to man by means of man. Hence a life of the love of use is a Divine spiritual life; and therefore everyone who loves good use, and, from the love of it, does it, is loved by the Lord, and is received by the Angels into Heaven with joy. (Contrasted with a life of the love of idleness.)

—⁷. [Shown] from the essences of uses. The essence of uses is the public good. Ex.

— . Everyone who takes delight in the use of his function for the sake of use, loves his country and fellow-citizens; but he who does not take delight in it for the sake of uses, but does uses merely for his own sake . . . at heart does not love his country and fellow-citizens, but only himself and the world. Ex.

—⁸. As, therefore, each and all things in the world were created in the beginning for use; and as all things in man have also been formed for use; and as, from creation, the Lord regarded all the human race as one man, in which everyone in like manner is for use, or is a use; and as the Lord Himself is the life of this man . . . it is evident that the universe has been so created that the Lord is in its primes and in its ultimates, and in its centre and its circumferences, that is, in the midst of all things; and that uses are the things in which He is. The Lord's omnipresence and omniscience may also be comprehended from these things.

J. (Post.) 170. For the Lord leads through the affection of use . . .

D. Love iv. That this form (in which is the life which is the Divine love) is a form of use in the whole complex. Ex.

—². This life does not apply itself to man, but only to the uses in men. Regarded in themselves, uses are spiritual; while the forms of use, which are the members, organs, and viscera, are natural; but still these are series of uses, insomuch that there is not a particle . . . in any member, organ, or viscus, which is not a use in form. The Divine life applies itself to the uses themselves in every series, and thereby gives life to every form.

v. And the common use, which is the common good, regards each smallest singular . . .

—⁴. (The conclusion is,) Man is the complex of all uses (in both worlds); and every use, from the idea of the universe in it, is as a man; but such a man as is the use . . .

vi. In the Lord's view, the whole human race is as one man . . . It is not the men themselves who so appear; but the uses with them. Those who are good uses, that is, those who do uses from the Lord, appear as a perfect and beautiful man. These are they who do uses for the sake of uses; that is, who love uses because they are uses for the house, city, province, kingdom, or the whole world. But they who do uses not for the sake of uses, but solely for the sake of self or the world, also appear before the Lord, (but) as an imperfect and ugly man.

[D. Love vi.]. (Thus) the Lord views the men of the world each singly and severally from his use; and concretely from the uses joined together into the form of a man. By uses are meant the uses of each person's function, which are those of his office, study, or work. In the Lord's sight these uses are good works themselves.

—². (It follows that) each nation (appears before the Lord as one man) according to its uses. Those persons in each of the kingdoms who love the uses of their offices because they are uses, appear together as an Angel man; and those who love the uses of their offices for the sake of mere pleasures separated from the uses, appear together as a devil man. (This applied to traders.)

— For to love mere wealth, and not any use from it . . . is avarice. These men are indeed useful to the kingdom; but only when they die. . . The usefulness accomplished by this wealth is usefulness to the kingdom; but not to their souls.

viii. It can be seen from the creation . . . that the Divine love . . . is in the form of forms of all uses, which form is a Man. For, from creation, nothing exists upon the Earth which is not for use. Enum. . . In a word, every point . . . is a use; nay, is in a . . . series from the use in the primes to the use in the ultimates; thus from use to use, continually; a manifest indication that the Creator . . . is an infinite complex of all uses . . .

ix. That there are as many affections as there are uses. Gen.art.

— For (affections) . . . produce uses in forms; and, in these uses advance from the primes of the uses to their ultimates . . . (Thus) affection is love in its essence; and use is love in its form.

—². It results that the objects or ends of affections are uses, and therefore the subjects of affections are uses . . .

— (Thus) affection . . . becomes something by being in use; and the affection of use is nothing but an idea unless it is in a form; and the affection of use in a form is nothing but a potency; but affection becomes something when it is in act. This act is the very use which is meant, which, in its essence, is affection. Therefore, as affections are the essences of uses, and as uses are the subjects of affections, it follows that there are as many affections as there are uses.

x. That there are genera and species of affections, and differences of species to infinity; and in like manner of uses. Gen.art.

— For every Angel is an affection, and is also a use.

—². The love of self involves evil uses a quo . . . and the love of the world involves evil uses ad quem . . .

— There are like distinctions of affections in the human body; and in like manner of uses . . .

— As these things (in the human body and in Heaven), in general and in particular, are uses; and as uses live from the life which is love, their life cannot be called anything but the affection of use.

xi. That there are degrees of affections and of uses. Gen.art.

xii. That each use draws its life from the common [good]; and that from this [common good] inflow the necessary, useful, and delightful things of life, according to the quality of the use, and the quality of its affection. Gen.art.

— In the Spiritual World, uses are laid bare, and their origin is revealed, and their place in the spiritual man which is the Lord in the Heavens. There everyone is remunerated according to the excellence of his use; and at the same time according to his affection for use.

—². As, in Heaven, there is a communication . . . of the affections of use . . . and as all there are affected and delighted with uses, the necessary, useful, and delightful things of life flow back and abound from the common [good] into [each person's] use; and, as a usufruct, into the one who does the use. —³. Ex.

—⁴. For the man who is in the affection of use, from use, that is, for the sake of use, is a Heaven in the least form. Ex.

—^e. (Thus) every use is a representative of all the uses in the whole body; and therefore there is in each use an idea of the universe, and thereby an image of a man. It is from this that an Angel of Heaven is a man according to use; nay, to speak spiritually, it is from this that a use is an Angel man.

xiii. That in proportion as a man is in the love of use, in the same proportion he is in the Lord, in the same proportion he loves Him, loves the neighbour, and is a man. Gen.art.

— To love the Lord means to do uses from Him and for His sake. To love the neighbour means to do uses to the Church, our country, human society, and our fellow-citizen. To be in the Lord means to be a use. And to be a man means to perform uses to the neighbour from the Lord for the Lord's sake. (These statements fully explained, in order.)

— For uses, which are goods, are from the Lord, and consequently are Divine; nay, they are the Lord Himself with man; and these are what the Lord can love. He cannot be conjoined in love with any man except through His own Divine things . . . for man cannot love the Lord from himself; the Lord Himself must draw him . . . and therefore to love the Lord as a Person, and not to love uses, is to love Him from self, which is not to love Him.

— The (celestial) Angels are not aware that to love the Lord is anything else than to do goods, which are uses; and they say that uses are the Lord with them. By uses they mean the uses and goods of ministry, of administration, of function, as well with priests and magistrates as with traders and working men. The good works which do not flow from their occupation they do not call uses; but alms, benefactions, and gratuities.

—². (Thus) to love the Lord is to do uses a quo

(or with regard to their source); and to love the neighbour is to do uses ad quem (or with regard to their object) . . . and love thus returns to Him from whom it is. Ex.

—³. For the Church and Heaven are, from the Lord, as one man, whose forms . . . are made up of all who love uses by doing them; and the uses themselves are what compose this man, because it is a spiritual man, which does not consist of persons, but of the uses with them. Still, all who receive from the Lord the love of uses, are there; and these are they who do uses for the sake of the neighbour, for the sake of the use, and for the sake of the Lord. . . It follows that all these are in the Lord.

—⁴. For every use, which is in any way of service to the common good . . . is a man, beautiful and perfect according to the quality of the use, and of its affection. The reason is that in each thing of the human body, there is, from its use, an idea of the whole. Ex.

— . That every least thing in man is, from its use, a man, falls . . . into a spiritual idea. In a spiritual idea a man is not a person, but a use. Ex.

—^c. An Angel appears in face according to the use in which he is; and the affection of it makes the life of his face.

xiv. They who love themselves and the world (above all things) can do good uses . . . but the affections of use, with them, are not good. Ex.

xv. That a man is not of sound mind, unless use is his affection or occupation. Gen.art.

—³. On the other hand, all who in the world have loved uses . . . think sanely in their spirit. Ex. . . The affection of use has kept their mind in itself . . .

xvii. That a man has eternal life according to his affection of use. Gen.art.

—². The affection of use is, in general, of two kinds: the spiritual affection of use, and the natural affection of use. These are opposites. Ex.

—³. With some, these (selfish) ends so enkindle the affection of doing uses, that sometimes they perform more excellent uses than those who are in the spiritual affection of use. III. —⁴.

—⁵. But the spiritual affection of use is internal and at the same time external. Ex.

— . The spiritual affection of use . . . is acquired by shunning evils as sins. Ex.

—^c. If, by combat against evils, a man has acquired anything spiritual . . . he is saved, and his uses afterwards grow like a grain of mustard seed . . .

xix. That to love, in the Word, is to do uses. Gen.art.

D. Wis. ii⁴. It is a universal law of correspondences that what is spiritual adapts itself to the use which is its end, and actuates and modifies the use through heat and light, and clothes it by provided means, until there results a form subservient to the end; in which what is spiritual acts as the end; the use as the cause; and what is natural as the effect. In the Spiritual World, however, what is substantial takes the place of what is natural. All things in man are such forms.

iii. 2. The forming Divine is in them spiritually . . .

for it is in their uses; and, regarded in themselves, uses are immaterial . . .

ix. (Thus) the Divine love is called the Divine good from its effect, which is use; and the Divine wisdom is called Divine truth also from its effect, which is use . . . For every effect is a use; and use is what is called good and truth; good being the essence of use, and truth being its form.

— . What is good in effect without use? . . . But it becomes something in use; consequently, love comes into existence in use. And in like manner wisdom. Ex.

x. ⁷. As love has formed the understanding for the use of thought and speech, so it has also formed all the other functions of life for their uses. Enum.

xi². That the love of uses is charity. Ex.

— . The use is the effect in which the end comes into existence. The Lord is the end a quo, because from His Divine love He perpetually . . . wills to do uses, that is, goods, to the human race. Man is the cause per quem, because he is in the love of uses, or can be, and in this love he . . . wills to do uses; and the uses are the effects in which the end comes into existence; and uses are what are called goods. Hence it is evident that the love of uses is the charity which a man must have towards the neighbour.

—^c. As the Lord is the end, He is the all in the love of uses . . . with a man; and, derivatively, He is the all in the uses done by him, that is, in the uses done by his means. . . It follows, therefore, that to do charity is to do uses, that is, the goods which are uses; thus, that the love of uses is charity.

3. That love to the Lord comes into existence in charity, because in use. Ex.

— . Thus the conjunction of the Lord with man is in use; and is such . . . as is the love of use; for the Lord is in use as in the good which is from Him; and the man who is in the love of use, is in use as if of himself; but still acknowledges that it is . . . from the Lord. Ex.

4. That use is to discharge one's office and to do one's work, rightly, faithfully, sincerely, and justly. Ex.

— . These uses (giving to the poor, etc.) are not meant by 'fruits,' 'works,' and the goods of charity, in the Word; but what is meant is to discharge one's office, business, and work rightly, faithfully, sincerely, and justly. Ex. . . For when this is done, everyone . . . is doing uses daily. Examps. That such uses are meant by the goods of charity, and 'works,' is evident from the government of the Lord in the Heavens, where all are in some function, ministration, office, or work . . . In the Heavens, such things are called goods of charity, works, and uses. Ex.

5. That there are general uses, which also are uses of charity. Ex.

— . The proper and genuine uses of charity are the uses of each one's function and administration . . . But besides these uses there are other general uses: to love the married partner faithfully; to bring up the children rightly; to manage the home prudently; to deal justly with the servants. These works become works of charity when they are done from the love of use; and in reference to a married partner, when they are done from mutual and chaste love. These uses are the household uses which are of charity.

[D. Wis. xi. 5]. There are still other general uses, such as contributing . . . to the support of the ministry of the Church; which . . . become uses of charity in proportion as the Church is loved as the neighbour in a higher degree. Among general uses may be included also the expenditure of means and labour for the building and maintenance of orphanages, refuges, schools, and the like. To give aid to the needy, to widows, orphans . . . and beggars, solely because they are such, are uses of external charity . . . but are not uses of internal charity except in proportion as they are derived from use itself and the love of it.

6. That uses do not become uses of charity with anyone else than he who fights against evils . . . Ex.

7. (As) all the uses which, in their essence, are uses of charity, are from the Lord, and are done by Him through men; and as the Lord then conjoins Himself with the man in the use; (ill.) . . . the uses done by a man who has not fought, or is not fighting, against evils . . . are contrary to love to the Lord and to charity towards the neighbour. Ex. . . These uses are such within the man who does them; and yet outside the man they are still uses, and are excited by the Lord with the man for the sake of the common and the particular good; but they are not done by the Lord; and therefore these uses are not recompensed in Heaven; but they are recompensed . . . in the world.

8. That the uses which have one's Own good for their first and last end, are not uses of charity. Ex.

— . Thus his use becomes a use in appearance, but not in essence . . .

4a. That truths teach how . . . the Lord does uses through man. Ex.

— . From himself, man . . . cannot do any use which is use in itself; for use is good; from which it follows that the Lord does all the use which is good, through the man.

xii. 5. That souls of life, and living souls, and plant souls, are animated by life from the Lord through uses and according to them. Ex.

— . The influx (from the Lord into the universe) takes place into uses, and from these into the forms of them.

C. 13. That the second of charity is to do goods because they are uses. Gen.art.

78. That a society, smaller or larger, is the neighbour according to the good of its use. Ex.

126. That man has been born in order that he may become charity, which is impossible unless he is perpetually doing the good of use to the neighbour from affection and delight. Gen.art.

127. That the common good comes into existence from the goods of use which individuals perform; and that the goods of use which individuals perform subsist from the common good. Ex.

— . They are called the goods of use, because all the goods which are of love towards the neighbour . . . are uses; and all uses are goods; and therefore they are called, in one word, the goods of use. They are also called the fruits of use.

128. It is known that every man has been born in order that he may do use, and that he may do uses to others; and he who does not do this is called a useless member, and is cast off. He, also, is useless who does uses for himself alone, although he is not called so. And therefore in a well constituted commonwealth provision is made that no one shall be useless; and if useless, he is compelled to some work . . .

129. Infants and children, so long as they are under nurses and masters, do not indeed do the goods of use; but still they learn to do them, and must have them as the end; and in this way the good of use is in the end.

134. That ministries, functions, offices, and various works are the goods of use which individuals perform, and from which the common good comes forth. Ex.

137. That all offices and employments, regarded as to the goods of use, constitute a form which corresponds to the heavenly form. Ex. (And also to the human form. 143.)

149. That in this form each individual is a good of use, according to the extension of his office or employment. Ex.

— . Charity is nothing else than the affection of truth from good; and (this) is the affection of use. Ex.

154. That man . . . cannot become a charity, unless he perpetually does the good of use to the neighbour from affection and its delight. Ex.

157. A man may also do the good of use from the affection of glory, honour, and gain . . . In this case he is . . . a concupiscence; and . . . is a form of Hell; for even in Hell everyone is compelled to do good work . . .

158. Therefore, when a man sincerely, justly, and faithfully performs the work that belongs to his office or employment, from affection and its delight, he is continually in the good of use, not only to the community . . . but also to individuals . . . But this is not possible unless he looks to the Lord, and shuns evils as sins. Ex. . . And the goods which he does are the goods of use, which he does every day; and, when he is not doing them, he is thinking of doing them; for there is an interior affection which . . . longs for it. Hence it is that he is perpetually in the good of use, from morning to evening, from year to year, from his earliest age to the end of his life. Examps., 160. 161. 162. 163. 164. 165. 167. 168. 171.

170. The work (of masters of vessels) is a greater good of use than many others. Ex

'To put upon a brother usury of silver' = to lend truths, or instruct, for the sake of gain. 'To put on him usury of food' = to lend the goods of truth for the sake of gain . . . The reason it was allowed to put usury on foreigners, was that by 'foreigners' are signified those who do not acknowledge and receive anything of good or truth, thus who do good solely for the sake of gain; and these serve man.

—⁵. 'He that giveth not his silver upon usury . . . shall never be moved' (Ps. xv. 5). 'To give silver upon usury' = to teach for the sake of mere gain; thus to do what is good for the sake of recompense. Further ill.

9211. 'Ye shall not put usury upon him' (Ex. xxii. 25) = that it is not on account of the consequent gain. For 'to put usury upon anyone' = to do what is good for the sake of gain. . . (This law) ceased when the Lord came into the world. The interior things of this law are, that good ought to be done to the neighbour from the heart; and that we should believe that there is nothing of merit in the deeds wrought from self; but solely in those which are wrought from the Lord with them . . . (and) he who is led by the Lord thinks nothing about recompense, and yet does good to the neighbour from the heart. These are the interior things from which descended the law of usuries among the Israelitish . . . nation. And when a man is in the interior things, this law . . . ceases.

4236². Balaam gave forth an Enunciation - enuntiatum. Quoted.

5576⁴. 'By every utterance of the mouth of Jehovah doth man live' (Deut. viii. 3; Matt. iv. 4) = in general, the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord; thus all the truth of wisdom; in special, the Word, in which and from which are the things of wisdom. (= the good and truth which proceed from Him. 5915².) E. 146⁴. 730²⁶.

6516^e. All the words (in the Word) involve spiritual things . . . and they are perceived in the Spiritual World from . . . the affection which results from the utterance of them. Ex.

6982. (The Divine truth) thus becomes speech, which speech is uttered by the Spirits . . .

6987. Utterance. Sig. and Ex.

— As 'mouth' = voice, it = utterance. . . 'The mouth' of man = the active or speaking thought, thus utterance.

6988. Non-utterance. Sig. and Ex.

— By utterance, here, is not meant the utterance of the voice, that is, speech; for this utterance is natural; but by utterance is meant the confession of the Lord, and the preaching of faith in Him; for this utterance is spiritual.

7004. That the things which he utters proceed from the Divine Human. Sig. and Ex.

— But 'to put in the mouth,' when predicated of the Lord, = to proceed; for the Word which is uttered by a Spirit or Angel, proceeds from the Lord's Divine Human. For 'Aaron' represents the doctrine of good and truth, which is uttered. Ex.

— Hence it is that it is said that the things which are uttered, proceed from the Divine Human.

8920². The form of truth Divine, that is, its perception, thought, and utterance, in the Third Heaven, so transcends that in the Second, that in the latter it cannot be apprehended . . . for it contains innumerable things which cannot be uttered in the Second Heaven . . . and the form of truth Divine in the Second Heaven in like manner transcends that in the First Heaven . . . Hence it is that the things which are uttered in those Heavens are such as no human mind has ever perceived, or ear heard.

9049^e. Hence the things of the mouth, as the jaws, lips, throat, tongue, = such things as belong to the utterance of truth.

9416. The things written on those tables . . . were uttered before all the Israelitish people in a living voice by the Lord, (which) = immediate Divine inspiration in all the other things (of the Word) also.

H. 237. It is impossible for the Angels to utter a single word of human language; it has been tried, but they could not; for they cannot utter anything but what is in complete accord with their affection. Ex.

T. 28². It is vain to want to Know . . .

577. (This) is a vanity of vanities.

580. Everyone can be regenerated according to his state . . . in one way those who from infancy have entered into the vanities of the world, and in another way those who earlier or later have withdrawn from them.

627^e. The imputation of this faith is vain.

D. 3568. To name the Lord from proprium is to take=sumere—His name into what is vain.

E. 237. This (falsification of the truths of the Word) is . . . meant by 'the vanities' which the prophets see, and 'the lies' which they speak.' 624¹³.

—'. 'Vanities'=such things as are of no account; and 'lies'=falsities.

340²⁶. 'He that offereth frankincense, blesseth vanity' (Is.lvi.3)=to worship God from such things as represented spiritual good, and yet to love evil and falsity and imbue them. . . 'Vanity'=evil, and the falsity of evil.

411²⁸. The falsities from which is such worship, are signified by 'they have burnt incense to vanity' (Jer. xviii.15): 'vanity'=falsity.

587⁶. 'Vanities' (Jer.x.8)=falsities.

—¹². 'Vanities of strangers' (Jer.viii.19)=falsities of religion.

654⁴¹. 'Egypt, a vanity and emptiness' (Is.xxx.7)=the Sensuous and the Natural, which, regarded in themselves, are devoid of good and also of truths.

J. (Post.) 243. All the rest are in vain=in vanum.

Valley. Vallis.

A. 1292. 'They found a valley in the land of Shinar' (Gen.xi.2)=that their worship became more impure and profane. . . 'A valley'=what is lower than the mountains; thus what is lower, or exterior, in worship. —², Ex.

—². In the Original, 'valleys' are designated by certain names, by which are signified, when mentioned in this sense, things less or more profane in worship. Ill.

[A.1292]³. 'The valley of vision' (Is.xxii.1)=phantasies and reasonings whereby worship is falsified and at last profaned.

—'. 'The valley of Hinnom'=Hell, and also the profanation of truth and good. 659²⁵.

—⁴. 'A valley'=worship in externals. III.

—'. But when the worship has not yet become so profane, it is expressed by the word for valley in Is. xli.18, where it treats of those who are in ignorance . . . and yet are in charity; 'valley,' here, stands for them; and in like manner in Ezek.xxxvii.1.

1666. 'At the valley of Siddim' (Gen.xiv.3)=in the unclean things of cupidities. Ex. 1688.

1723. 'At the valley of Shaveh; this is the king's valley' (Gen.xiv.17)=the state of the External Man as to good and truth at that time. . . 'The valley of Shaveh'=the goods of the External Man; and 'the valley of the king'=the truths of the same. The external man is called 'a valley,' from the fact that it is below; for that which is exterior is also lower.

3417. '(Isaac) encamped in the valley of Gerar, and dwelt there' (Gen.xxvi.17)=that He betook Himself to lower rational things, that is, from interior appearances to exterior ones. . . For 'a valley'=lower, or, what is the same, exterior things.

3424. 'To dig in the valley' (ver.19)=to seek lower down according to truths as to where they are; for . . . 'a valley'=what is lower.

3527³. 'Every valley shall be filled' (Luke iii.5). 'A valley'=what is lowly.

4715. 'He sent him out of the vale of Hebron' (Gen. xxxvii.14)=from the Divine Natural and Sensuous; for 'a valley'=the things which are below.

—³. That 'a valley'=the lower things of the Church. III.

—'. 'The valley of vision' (Is.xxii.1)=phantasies about spiritual things from sensuous ones; thus from lower things.

—'. 'The choice of the valleys' (ver.7)=goods and truths in the natural or external man.

—'. 'Every valley shall be exalted' (Is.xl.4): 'valley'=lowly things. E.405³⁶. Ex.

—⁴. 'See thy way in the valley' (Jer. ii. 23): 'valley'=scientific and sensuous things, which are lower things through which they pervert truths.

—'. 'The inhabitress of the valley' (Jer.xxi.13)=faith in which is not charity.

—'. 'Thou shalt not glory in the valleys; thy valley hath flowed away, perverse daughter' (Jer.xlix. 4): 'valley'=the external things in worship, which are also the lowest things.

—⁵. 'The valley of shadow' (Ps.xxiii.4)=lower things, which are relatively in shade.

—⁶. As the valleys were between the mountains and hills, and under them, by 'valleys' are signified the lower or exterior things of the Church, because by 'hills' and 'mountains' were signified its higher or interior things . . . and, as by 'the Land of Canaan' is signified the Lord's Kingdom and His Church, it is said, 'a land of mountains and valleys, that drinketh the waters of the rain of heaven' (Deut.xi.11).

—^e. The reason Joseph is said to have been sent 'from the valley of Hebron,' comes from his having been sent to those who were teaching about faith; for those who are in faith and not in charity are in lower things . . .

6390^e. 'In the valley under his feet' (Judg.v.15)=to serve in the lowest things.

9262⁴. 'A barren valley which is neither cultivated nor sown' (Deut.xxi.4)=the natural mind not cultivated, in consequence of ignorance, with the truths and goods of faith.

—⁶. That 'a valley'=the lower mind, which is called the natural mind. Refs.

10261^e. 'The cleaving of the mountain towards the east and towards the sea, in a great valley' (Zech.xiv.4)=the separation of Heaven and Hell.

10438. In the valleys (in the Spiritual World) are those who have not as yet been carried up to the good of love and of faith . . . thus to Heaven.

10609⁶. 'The valley of Achor' (Is.lxv.10)=the external (where is celestial good).

H. 429. The World of Spirits appears like a valley between mountains and rocks, which here and there winds up among them. 583.

E. 304³⁷. 'Watercourses and valleys' (Ezek.xxxvi.6)=the truths and goods which are the ultimates of the Church.

374⁷. Exterior truths are said to spring 'out of the valley' (Deut.viii.7) because 'a valley'=the lower and exterior things, where such truths are.

376³¹. The head of the valley of the fat ones' (Is. xxviii.4)=the intelligence of the natural man.

405²¹. 'The mountains ascend, and the valleys descend to the place which Thou hast founded for them' (Ps.civ.8)=that in place of natural loves and the evils from them there are inserted celestial loves and the goods from them; and in place of falsities general truths are admitted.

—²². 'Between the mountains' = truths from goods; for the valleys which are between the mountains = lower truths, which are the truths of the natural man.

—²³. 'Then shall ye flee through the valley of My mountains' (Zech. xiv. 5) = that then those who are in truths from good will be rescued. . . 'The valley of the mountains' = where those are who are in the Knowledges of truth, and thence in truths from good; for those dwell in the valleys who are in the Knowledges of truth.

—³⁸. 'Channels and valleys' (Ezek. vi. 3) = exterior or natural things.

—⁴². 'Valleys' (Micah i. 4) = the derivative falsities.

41¹⁷. 'The valley of vision' = falsity of doctrine confirmed by the sense of the letter . . .

—²⁰. 'The inhabitress of the valley' . . . = those in the ultimates of the Word who do not permit themselves to be enlightened . . .

48³. 'In the midst of the valleys' (Is. xli. 18) = in the exterior man. 518³.

518¹³. 'As the valleys are they planted' (Num. xxiv. 6) . . . = the intelligence of the natural man; whereas 'gardens' = the intelligence of the spiritual man.

644⁶. 'A land of mountains and valleys' (Deut. xi. 11) = the higher and lower things of the Church, that is, its internal and external things . . .

727². 'When I walk in the shady valley' (Ps. xxiii. 4) = an obscure understanding to which truths do not appear by their light.

730²⁴. 'Fountains in the midst of the valleys' (Is. xli. 18) = intelligence from natural truths.

—²⁸. 'The valleys are covered over with corn' (Ps. lxx. 13) = the natural mind receiving natural truth.

Vary, To. Variare.

A. 690. There is an accordant and harmonious variety of all (the Societies); and the varieties have been so ordained by the Lord that they conspire to one end, which is effected through love and faith in Him.

—^c. As are the varieties of love and faith, so are the Heaven and the joy in them.

1285². All (the Societies in Heaven) are various, but still one, for all are led by the Lord as a one. Refs. and Ex. (under ONE).

—³. Mutual love and charity cause them to be one, although they are various; for they make a one from the variety-various. . . The varieties of doctrinal things and of worships are like the varieties of the senses and of the viscera in man, which contribute to the perfection of the whole . . .

1627. The variations (in the decorations) may perpetually succeed one another . . . continually with a new harmony . . .

1762. This was done by variations about the region of the lips . . .

2333³. (The Angels perceive) these significations with variety according to the series of things in the Word.

2739. There are ineffable varieties (of loves in the Heavens), all of which derive their origin . . . from the union of good and truth . . .

2746. A certain Spirit . . . who in the bodily life had lived lasciviously, and had been delighted with variety. Des. De Conj. 122.

2889^e. With delight . . . thus with inmost joy, and this with ineffable variety to eternity.

3343. Spiritual things . . . are effected by modifications of heavenly light, in which are affections, which are wonderfully varied in innumerable=indefinitis—ways; and celestial things . . . are effected by variations of heavenly flame, or heat.

3350². Many choirs exhibited various things representatively . . . yet (the choirs) acted as a one; for from the form of the various things there resulted a one, in which was heavenly beauty. Ex.

3743^e. (Just as) the light of the sun . . . is varied as it passes through . . . various forms, whence are colours . . .

3744. (And so) the varieties in Heaven as to the life of good and truth, are innumerable . . . and are in a relation to each other such as is that in which are the organs, members, and viscera in man; all of which are forms in perpetual variety recipient of life from their soul . . . and yet, although they are in such variety, they together constitute one man. 3745, Ex.

3890^e. But the variety (in the Lord's Kingdom) arises, not from the influx, but from the reception.

3986². The goods with men, both within and without the Church, are altogether various, and so various, that the good of one man is not exactly like that of another. The varieties arise=existunt—from the truths with which the goods are conjoined . . . The varieties arise also from the affections of each person's love.

—³. For a one formed of many is never constituted of single things which are the same, or exactly alike; but of various things harmoniously conjoined . . . It is so with the goods and truths in the Spiritual World, which, although various—insomuch that they are not exactly the same with one as with another—still make a one from the Divine through love and charity; for love and charity are spiritual conjunction, and their variety is heavenly harmony, which makes such a concord that they are a one in the Divine . . .

—⁴. Moreover, the good of love to God, and the good of charity towards the neighbour, however various may be the truths, and the affections of truth, are still receptible of genuine truth and good. Ex.

4043. In interior things . . . nothing is perceived (except) by states and their variations and changes . . . In the Heavens, such things are presented by means of variations of heavenly light and of heavenly flame . . .

4149². Regarded in itself, good is one, but it is made various through truths. Ex. . . Hence it is that good . . . is so various with everyone that it is never exactly the same with one as it is with another; and hence, too, it is, that the truth of one can never subsist in the good of another . . .

—⁶. Hence it is . . . also, that the universal Heaven consists of angelic forms which are in perpetual variety, and which, being disposed by the Lord into the heavenly form, act as a one; for every one is composed of various things in a form, which make a one according to the form; and never of the same things.

4206². The reason such various things of the Lord are represented, is not because there are various things in the Lord, but because His Divine is variously received by men. This is like the life in man, which inflows and acts into various sensory and motor organs of the body, and into its various members and viscera, and everywhere presents variety (Des.); but still it is one life which actuates them all so variously; and not because the life itself acts in different ways, but because it is differently received . . .

4225. Various disorders and diseases.

—⁶. Each one there is a centre of all the influxes . . . according to the stupendous form of Heaven . . . and thus with all variety.

4263⁶. Every one consists of things various, and this through heavenly harmony and concord.

4742. 'A coat of various colours' (Gen. xxxvii. 23) = the appearances of truth. Ex. . . The light of Heaven is varied with everyone according to the reception. Ex.

5147². Intellectual things may be compared to forms which are being continually varied, and voluntary things to the harmonies which result from the variation; consequently, truths may be compared to the variations, and goods to the derivative delights.

5598. According to the varieties of good from truth, and of truth from good, in this birth, are the brotherhoods . . . in Heaven; for in Heaven there are perpetual varieties; but the varieties are so disposed by the Lord as to bear relation to families, in which there are brothers, sisters, etc. In general, however, all are disposed into such a form that together they make a one, like the varieties in the human body . . .

5962². But still the Lord makes a one from the various things.

— . It is a general canon, that every one in which there is any quality comes forth—existat—from things various, which, by means of the agreement of harmony, are reduced into such unanimity that they all appear as a one.

6232³. (Thus) there is an innumerable—indefinita—variety of all things, and there never exists one thing the same as another; and this variety is more innumerable in the truths and goods of the Spiritual World, because one thing in the natural world corresponds to thousands and thousands in the Spiritual World; and therefore the more interior they are, the more innumerable they are.

6337². Hence arise innumerable, nay, infinite variations (of significations). Ex. See D. 4140.

6427. The truth of faith in the . . . Spiritual Church is various. Ex.

6472. The Divine truth is received variously in man, namely, according to his quality.

6685². This Divine truth . . . is the life itself which fills Heaven and the universe . . . but it is varied in the subjects according to their form. Ex.

7236². From (this) it is evident how manifold and how various good is; for it is so various that no one is ever in the same good as another . . . That there is a perpetual variety, is because every form consists of various distinct things . . .

—³. That which makes good so various is truth . . . The reason truth is so manifold and various that it can vary good so much, is that there are innumerable truths . . . As therefore truths are so innumerable, it is evident that, by means of conjunctions, so many various things arise—existant—that no one thing can ever be the same as another. This is clear to him who knows that from only twenty-three various [letters], there can come forth, by different combinations, the words of all languages, and this with perpetual variety even if there were thousands of languages. What then may not come forth from thousands and myriads of various things, such as there are of truths!

7297. For the things which flow from order are not changed by abuse.

7343². The light of the sun is white, but is varied according to the forms into which it flows . . .

8042. Although the truths in Churches are so various, still by willing and doing them they become goods.

9002². There cannot be one thing in the universe which is exactly like another . . . it must be various, that is, different from every other, for it to be anything by itself. Refs.

[A.]10334². The universal Heaven consists in variety as to good; by this variety one Angel is distinguished from another; for if a number had the same good there would be no distinction: but these various goods are so ordained by the Lord that they together constitute one general good. It is to be known that the Divine good is one, because infinite; but that with Angels, Spirits, and men, it is varied in quality and quantity by its reception in truths . . .

H. 20. As in Heaven there are infinite varieties . . . —(d), Refs.

—(d). That the varieties in the Heavens are varieties of good. Refs.

41. Goods, in the Heavens, are in infinite variety.

47. Likenesses in general, and variations in particular. Ex.

56. The variety of the worship of the Lord, from the variety of good in one or other of the Societies, does no harm, but is an advantage; for the perfection of Heaven is from it. (This must be explained by showing) how a one which is perfect is formed from things various. Every one comes forth from things various; for a one which is not from things various is not anything: it has no form, and therefore no quality. But when a one comes forth from things various, and the various things are in a perfect form in which each thing adjoins itself to another in a series in friendly agreement, then it has a perfect quality. Heaven, too, is a one from various things ordained in a most perfect form; for the heavenly form is the most perfect of all forms.

—². That this is the source of all perfection, is evident from all beauty, pleasantness, and delight . . . for these come forth . . . from no other source than the agreement and harmony of a number of concordant and consentaneous things . . . Hence it is said that variety is charming; and it is known that the delight is according to the quality of the variety. From this it may be seen, as in a mirror, how perfection exists from things various, even in Heaven.

71. For variety disposed in a heavenly form makes perfection; and variety exists where there are a number.

190. The houses in which the Angels dwell . . . are also varied a little according to the changes of the state of their interiors.

204. It is to be known that, with everyone, intelligence and wisdom are varied according to the communication. Ex.

269. The words are varied in infinite ways . . .

469². For every Thing can be varied infinitely, and thus be enriched by means of things various . . .

486. The delights of everyone are, in special, of infinite variety . . .

489⁴. The trees and flowers are varied daily.

588². Every evil is of infinite variety, like every good . . .

N. 26. (Refs. to passages on the subject of variety.)

J. 12⁴. Every form consists of various things: a form which does not consist of things various is not a form, because it has no quality, nor any changes of state: the quality of every form is from the ordination of the various things therein among themselves, and from their mutual relation, and from their consensus to a one; it is from this that every form is considered as a one. Such a form is the more perfect in proportion as there are more things ordained in it in this manner; for each thing . . . confirms, strengthens, conjoins, and thus perfects it.

13. The cause of there being such an infinite variety in each and all things, is derived from the origin of all things from the Divine, which is infinite . . .

W. 125. As the quarters (in the Spiritual World) are various receptions of love and wisdom by the Angels, the variety from which this appearance arises shall be explained. Ex.

155. The diversity in created things arises from the fact that there are infinite things in God Man, and consequently things innumerable in the Sun . . . From this it is that no one thing can anywhere be the same as another. From this comes the variety of all things which is presented before the eyes . . . and it is a variety of both generals and particulars.

228. Things abstract, being universals, are often better comprehended than things applied; for these are of perpetual variety, and variety obscures.

300². This one only substance, which is the Sun, proceeding by means of the atmospheres, according to continuous . . . and at the same time according to discrete degrees, presents the varieties of all things in the created universe.

318². There is another image of the Infinite and Eternal in the varieties, in that there can never be a substance, state, or thing . . . the same as any other . . . to all eternity. This is plainly to be seen in the variety of faces . . . P. 56², Ex.

P. 24. In every Thing, from the greatest to the least of it, there must be variety-varium; and when there is variety-varium—also in its opposite from its least to its greatest, and there is equilibrium between them, then there is relation according to degrees on both sides; and the perception and sensation of the Thing either increase or diminish.

57. The variety of (human affections and perceptions) is also infinite and eternal.

190. For things various cannot have existence except in things constant, stated, and fixed. For example: the varied things of vegetation would not be possible unless the rising and setting of the sun, and the resultant heat and light, were constant. Harmonies [of sound] are of infinite variety, but they would be impossible unless the atmospheres were constant in their laws, and the ears in their form. The varieties of sight, which are also infinite, would be impossible unless the ether in its laws, and the eye in its form, were constant . . . It is the same with thoughts, words, and actions, which are also of infinite variety: these would be impossible unless the organic forms of the body were constant. Must not a house be constant in order that various things may be done in it by man; or a temple, that in it there may be the various things of worship . . . ?

—³. As to the varieties themselves which take place in things constant, stated, and fixed, they advance to infinity, and have no end; and yet there is never possible one exactly the same as another . . . nor can there be to eternity. Who so disposes these varieties going on to infinity and eternity that they may be in order, but He who created the constant things to the end that the varieties might come into existence in them? And who can dispose the infinite varieties of life in men, but He who is life itself, that is, love itself and wisdom itself?

279^a. That the thoughts . . . are mere changes and variations of (the organic substances of the mind); and that the memory is the permanent state of these changes and variations. Ex. 319, Ex.

—^a. It is (therefore) evident that the affections . . . are changes and variations of the state of the purely organic substances of the mind . . .

— . All changes and variations of state in the organic substances are of such a character that once imbued they are permanent . . . and can be reproduced.

— . These changes and variations are infinitely more perfect in the organics of the mind than in those of the body.

R. 66. The Church in the whole complex, in itself, is one, but is various according to the reception; and these varieties may be compared to the various jewels in a king's crown; and also to the various members and organs in a perfect body, which still make a one. The perfection of every form arises from varied things placed fitly in their order. Hence it is that the universal New Church with its varieties—variis—is described . . . by 'the seven Churches.' 73.

M. 324. That the varieties and diversities of these (repeated) marriages exceed all number. Ex.

— . There is an infinite variety of all things, and also an infinite diversity. By varieties are here meant [the differences] between the things of one genus, or one species; and also those between genera and species: whereas by diversities are meant [the differences] between things which are opposite to each other. (For example,) the angelic Heaven . . . is in an infinite variety. (Des.) But by diversities, we mean the things opposite to these varieties, which exist in Hell; and Hell, made up of these, is held together as a one by means of varieties which, in their relation to each other, are utterly contrary to the varieties in Heaven; thus by means of perpetual diversities. . . It is the same with marriages, so that there are infinite varieties with those who are in conjugal love, and infinite varieties among those who are in scortatory love; thus there are infinite diversities between the latter and the former.

362. Both (the love of good and truth, and the love of evil and falsity) are of infinite variety. Ex. It is the same with zeal.

454. That the lust of committing fornication is more grievous in proportion as it verges to the desire of varieties. Ex.

506. On the lust of varieties. Gen.art. 507, Ex.

524. Everyone has a life proper to himself . . . for there is a perpetual variety. Ex.

—². (Otherwise) there would be no Heaven . . . for its form is solely from the varieties of souls and minds disposed into such an order as to make a one . . .

— . In general, every form is from things various, and is such as is their harmonious co-ordination and disposition into a one. Such is the human form.

T. 32. This infinite variety cannot possibly arise—existere—except from the infinity of God the Creator.

763. It is according to order that a prime should proceed to its ultimate, in both general and particular, in order that there may arise—existat—a variety of all things, and, through varieties, every quality; for quality is perfected by the relative differences of things more or less opposite. Examps.

D. 1399. That there are innumerable—indefinitae—varieties in the other life. Ex. 2975.

2014. That there is a variety of all things. Ex.

—^e. An unlimited variation of varieties to eternity.

3127. Variations of affections without ideas of thought. Ex.

3146. On variations of state. Ex.

3635. That the objects of sight and hearing are variations of the vessels. Ex.

3941. That some representations, and many things besides, are variations of Societies. Ex.

4087. This translation and progression . . . is according to the variations of the idea . . . and consequently of the corresponding Societies . . .

4140. How ideas are variously attached to Things. Ex.

4182^e. Thus Spirits are sent forth for various uses.

4535. Hence [there being] many worships and varieties, matters little if there is charity in all.

E. 674³. The variations and changes of the affections which originate from this communication and its extension, arise—existunt—from the influx of affections from other Societies . . .

1010⁴. The delights of varieties, even with harlots, are delights of adultery; for the delight of variety destroys the delight of marriage.

1080². The variations of the face . . . correspond to the affections of the lower mind. Ex.

C. 190. So the mind (becomes dull) if kept from day to day in the same ideas, without variety.

—^e. Every form delights by its varieties—variis. . . Hence it is that the rainbow is more charming than the light itself.

De Conj. 95. There are some in the excrementitious Hells who have been addicted to variety, and have thereby extinguished what is conjugal.

Variegation. Variegatio.

Variegate, To. Variegare.

A. 1053. These colours are . . . from the variegation of spiritual light.

[A.] 3341. The two origins of all the variegations of light and shade there. Ex.

3862. Their speech . . . consists of variegations, that is, modifications, of heavenly light, in which is heavenly heat.

3993⁶. The derivative variegations are what are called colours.

—e. Thus (evils and falsities) are variegated (by goods and truths). . .

4005. 'Ring-straked' (Gen. xxx. 35) = truths which are strewed and mixed with evils. —², Ex. 4020. 4022. 4080.

4328³. Around the column was a lucidity which was variegated by something shining white, presenting colours, by which was signified the state of the Spiritual Church. . . (It)=the Intellectual in which there is a new Voluntary from the Lord.

4742. All the thought of the Angels is effected through the variegation of that light, as is also the thought of man . . .

4922. The variegations or modifications of the light of Heaven are thus the variegations, and, so to speak, the modifications, of wisdom and intelligence, and consequently of good and truth. . . That colours . . . are variegations and modifications of that light, and consequently of intelligence and wisdom. Refs. 9833². 9868².

5922⁹. Hence the cloud variegated by the fire yields wonderful aspects. Ex.

9467². Therefore the modifications of that light and flame are variegations of truth and good, thus of intelligence and wisdom.

H. 269². From the tone, variegated by the ideas in the words, the interior Angels perceive the ruling love.

356². The planes of this light, in which come forth the variegations as of colours, are the interiors of the mind; and the confirmations of Divine Truths by such things as are in nature . . . produce these variegations.

D. 4293. As (Spirits) have light, they have also the variegation of light, which presents colours. Light without variegation is not possible, for it is to them shade: hence they have colours . . .

D. Min. 4620. Ideas are formed (there) by means of ineffable varieties . . . by shade and lights, by their determinations, and by other variegations.

E. 195⁷. 'Thou didst make to thee high places adorned with divers colours—excolta variegata' (Ezek. xvi. 16)=truths falsified.

395⁵. King's daughters arrayed in cloaks of various colours—frustatim variegatis (2 Sam. xiii. 18). 863¹⁵.

J. (Post.) 267. The colours (there) are variegated more than (here); and there are variegations of their light which correspond to their love or good, and to their wisdom or truth.

—². They showed that the colours are nothing else than variegations of the flaming light and the shining white light, in objects, in accordance with the forms of these.

Vastation, Devastation. Vastatio, Devastatio.

Vastate, Devastate, To. Vastare, Devastare.

Devastator. Vastator.

Waste. Vastitas.

See DEVASTATE; and also under DESOLATE, and PRT.

A. 18. The 'depths of the sea' (are said to be) 'dried up,' or 'laid waste,' before man is being regenerated. . . . The same involves, in general, the vastation (or laying waste) of man which precedes regeneration: for before man can know what is true, and be affected with good, the things which hinder and oppose must be removed.

19. Remains . . . never come into the light of day until the external things have been vastated.

153. 'Wastes,' in the Word, = evils; 'desolations,' falsities.

239. Their curse and vastation are described (in Gen. iii. 18) . . . (by 'the thorn and the thistle.' 272.) 273, Ill.

406. 'Lamech' = vastation, or no faith. Ex. 428.

407. When there is no faith, the Church is said to be vastated (or laid waste). . . At the time of the Lord's advent, the Jewish Church was so vastated that they did not know anything about the Lord . . . And so the primitive Church . . . is at this day so vastated that there is not any faith. Yet there always remains some nucleus of a Church, which those who have been vastated as to faith do not acknowledge . . .

408. When a Church has been so vastated that there is no longer any faith, it commences anew . . . The reason the new light does not come until the Church has been vastated, is that the things of faith and charity have been commingled with things profane. Ex.

409. So with the heresy called 'Cain,' which in course of time was vastated. Ex.

410. Vastation is of two kinds: the first is that of those who know and do not want to know . . . Such was that of the Jews, and such is that of Christians at this day. The second is that of those who know . . . nothing, as the gentiles . . . When it is the last time of vastation with those who know and do not want to know . . . the Church rises anew . . . with those they call gentiles. Ex.

411. That the last time of vastation must come before a new Church can rise, is often declared in the Prophets, where that which regards the celestial things of faith is called 'vastation' (or 'laying waste'); and that which regards the spiritual things of faith is called 'desolation,' and also 'consummation,' and 'cutting off.' Ill. 431.

488^o. 'The day of Jehovah' = vastation.

530. When (Churches decline) until nothing remains of the goods and truths of faith, (they) are called, in the Word, 'vastated' (or 'laid waste').

613. 'The wastes of an age' (Is. lviii. 12) = the celestial things of faith.

698. In addition to the Hells, there are vastations, of which much is said in the Word. For a man takes with him into the other life, from actual sins, innumerable evils and falsities . . . and before such can be elevated into Heaven, their evils and falsities must be dissipated. This dissipation is called vastation. There are many kinds of vastations; and there are longer and shorter periods of vastation.

699. That I might witness . . . the vastation of those who are in the Lower Earth, I have sometimes been let down thither. . . I heard piteous lamentations, such as, Oh God! Oh God! have mercy upon us! and this for a long time. I was permitted to speak to those wretched souls . . . They especially complained of evil Spirits, who desired and burned to torment them. They were in despair, and said they believed their torment would be eternal; but it was granted me to comfort them. D. 228.

728. 'In yet seven days' (Gen. vii. 4) = not only the beginning of the temptation (of the man called 'Noah'), but also the end of the vastation (of the fallen descendants of the Most Ancient Church).

—. Every coming of the Lord . . . is a beginning to those being regenerated; and the end of those being vastated. . . As when the Lord came into the world—the Church was then in its last vastation, and it was then made new. Further ill.

793. 'Desolation' is predicated of spiritual, 'vastation' of celestial things.

1106. (General article on vastations.)

—. From simplicity many have (here) imbued falsities . . . yet have had a species of conscience . . . and have not lived in hatred, revenge, and adultery. In the other life these . . . are kept for a time in the Lower Earth, to throw off their false principles. The time they remain there is longer or shorter according to the nature of the falsity and the life contracted from it, and according to the confirmation of their principles. Some suffer there severely; some not severely. These sufferings are what are called vastations, of which there is frequent mention in the Word. When the period of vastation is completed, they are taken up into Heaven, and are instructed as novitiates in the truths of faith . . .

1107. Some are quite willing to be vastated, and thus put off their false principles . . . for no one can put off his false principles in the other life, except by a lapse of time, and by means provided by the Lord. While such remain in the Lower Earth, they are kept by the Lord in the hope of deliverance, and in the thought of the end in view . . .

1108, 1109. Some are kept in a middle state between sleep and waking, and think very little . . . and in this way are vastated. They are under the left foot . . . Those who have quite confirmed themselves in false principles are reduced to complete ignorance . . . But after some time they are as it were created anew . . .

1110. Those who have placed . . . merit in good works . . . seem to themselves to cut wood. Des. . . There appears to be something of the Lord under the wood . . . but when this begins to disappear, their vastation is drawing to an end. At last they can be admitted into good Societies; but they waver for a long time . . . The Lord takes great care of them, because they have lived a pious life . . .

1111. They who have lived a good moral and civil life, but have persuaded themselves that they merit Heaven by their works, and have believed that it is sufficient to acknowledge one only God the Creator of the universe . . . seem to themselves to cut grass. Des. . . These, because they have performed good works, are among those who are vastated . . .

1113. Girls who have been enticed into whoredom . . . and in other respects have been well disposed . . . are attended by an instructor, quite severe, who chastises them whenever, in thought, they break out into such wantonnesses. They are in great fear of him, and in this way they are vastated. But adult women who have been harlots, and have enticed others, do not undergo vastation; but are in Hell.

1273². These also change their Societies who are taken up from vastation among the Angels. Des.

1306². Of Tyre, and its vastation. Tr.

1366. The Church cannot come into existence anew in any nation, until it has been so vastated that nothing of evil and falsity remains in its internal worship. Ex.

1666². Vastation is described by 'saltiness.' Ill.

—⁴. 'Sulphur' = the vastation of good; 'salt,' the vastation of truth . . . 2455².

1825². The time or state of the Church even to the last, when it is vastated, or desolated. Tr. —^c.

1917. In temptations there are vastations and desolations, etc.

1992². The very word 'Shaddai' means vastation, thus temptation; for temptation is a species of vastation.

2240. In the Prophets, when 'vastation' (or 'laying waste'), and 'desolation' are treated of, it is said that [people] 'howl and cry'; and this = that goods and truths have been vastated. Ill.

—⁷. The vastation of good and truth. Tr.

2242². By 'visitation' is signified either vastation—which is either of the Church, or of the individual—or deliverance.

2353⁶. As in Egypt (at the time of the Exodus) there was represented the vastation of good and truth within the Church . . . it was commanded that they should go out in the middle of the night (Ex. xi. 4 : xii. 12, 29, 30).

2354. Here (Gen. xix. 5) is described the first state of a vastated Church, that is, when there begins to be no faith because there is no charity. Ex.

2455. 'She became a pillar of salt' = that all the good of truth had been vastated. . . Truth is said to be vastated, when there is no longer any good in it: the vastation itself is signified by the 'salt.' . . 'Salt,' in the opposite sense, = the vastation of the affection of truth, that is, of the good in truth. Ill.

[A.2455]³. 'A place abandoned to the nettle'=good vastated; 'a pit of salt'=truth vastated.

—'. 'Parched places'=goods vastated; 'a salt land'=truths vastated.

—⁴. 'A fruitful land turned into a salty one'=the vastation of the good in truth.

—'. 'To be given to salt'=to be completely vastated as to truth.

2694². Those who can be reformed . . . are led into this state of reformation, in which (this state) is well known, and is called vastation, or desolation. . . They who are in such vastation or desolation are reduced to despair; and . . . then receive comfort and aid . . . The reason for this vastation and desolation is chiefly that the Persuasive which they have conceived from what is their Own may be broken . . . and also that they may receive the perception of good and truth . . . These are the causes of vastation or desolation, besides many others. Examps.

—⁵. Hence it is evident why those being reformed . . . are reduced into the state of vastation or desolation which is treated of in the preceding verses.

2699². In the other life, those who have been in vastation or desolation, after being comforted by the hope of help, are taken up . . . into Heaven; thus from a state of shade . . . into one of light . . . Tr. 2702².

2704. The third state of those who come out of vastation, or desolation. Tr.

2708². Those who are in vastation as to good, and in desolation as to truth. Sig.

—⁵. That 'a desert'= . . . those who are in vastation as to good, and in desolation as to truth. Ill.

—'. The journeyings and wanderings of the Israelitish people in the wilderness, represented the vastation and desolation of the faithful before reformation, and consequently their temptation; for indeed when they are in spiritual temptations, they are in vastation and desolation. Ill.

—⁸. 'The desert of the sea'=truth vastated through scientifics and the derivative reasonings.

2799. 'Sword'=the vastation of truth. —⁷, Ill.

—⁷. 'Famine'=the vastation of good.

2831⁹. '(A lion) maketh the land a waste' (Jer.iv.7) =vastates the Church.

2851⁷. 'The gate' is said to be laid waste' (Is.xxiv.12) when only evils and falsities reign.

2928². 'The land'=the Church itself, which is said to be 'laid waste,' as to good; and to be 'desolate,' as to truth (Ezek.xii.20).

2959. 'Four hundred'=vastation.

—'. Vastation is of two kinds; one, when the Church is altogether perishing, that is, when there is no longer any charity or faith, for it is then said to be 'vastated' or 'waste-vasta'; and the other when those who are of the Church are being reduced to a state of ignorance, and also of temptation, in order that the evils and falsities in them may be separated and as it were dispelled. They who emerge from this kind of vastation are they who are, in special, called 'the redeemed,' for they are then instructed . . . and reformed and regenerated . . .

—². That 'four hundred years'=the duration and state of vastation. Ill.

—³. The sojourning of the sons of Jacob in Egypt =the vastation of the Church, the state and duration of which are described by the number '430 years'; for '30'=the state of the vastation of the sons of Jacob, that it was null, because they were such that they could not be reformed by any state of vastation . . . and '400 years'=the general state of vastation of those who are of the Church: and therefore those who go forth from this vastation are those called 'the redeemed.' Ill.

3033³. If there is anything of natural good in (those who are in mere knowledges) they are vastated until they know nothing of truth; and then there is insinuated into the remaining good something of truth . . .

3104². (In Ezek.iv.) it treats of the vastation of good and truth . . . The state of vastated good is signified by their 'eating food and bread by weight'; and the state of vastated truth, by their 'drinking water by measure.'

3268³. (In Jer.xlix.28,29) it treats of the vastation of the Spiritual Church. Ex. (Also in Is.xxiv.6,7, 3580³.)

—⁷. 'To pass the night in the forest of Arabia'=to be vastated as to truth.

3448⁸. (Dan.xi.13,25,26) is a prophetic utterance concerning the vastation of the Church.

3470⁸. Of itself, natural good is not willing to obey rational good . . . and in order that it may be reduced to a state of compliance . . . it is harassed by states of vastation and temptation . . .

3542⁴. 'To put the neck under the yoke of the king of Babel . . .'=to be desolated as to truth, and vastated as to good. That 'Babel'=that which vastates; and that they are vastated lest holy things be profaned. Refs.

3651⁶. By these words of the Lord (about 'the abomination of desolation' foretold by Daniel the prophet,' Matt.xxiv.15-18) is fully described the state of vastation of the Church as to the goods of love and the truths of faith. (This vastation occurs when the Lord is no longer acknowledged, and consequently when there is no love and no faith in Him; and also when there is no longer any charity towards the neighbour, and consequently no faith of good and truth. When this is the case in the Church—or rather in the region where the Word is—that is, when men are such in the thoughts of the heart, even if not such in the teaching of the lips, then there is 'desolation,' and the things just mentioned are its 'abomination'; and therefore the words, 'When yeshall see the abomination of desolation,' means when anyone observes such things. What is then to be done, follows in verses 16-18. 3652.)

3652². Vastation is much treated of in the Prophets, and, in the sense of the letter, it=the vastation of the Jewish and Israelitish Church; but in the internal sense, the vastation of the Church in general; thus also the vastation which is now existing.

—³. 'Standing in the holy place'=vastation as to all things which are of good and truth. Ex.

3900⁶. Vastated truth is signified by 'the wilderness'; and vastated good, by 'the secret chambers.' . . . For, when the Church has been vastated, that is, when there is no longer any truth Divine in it, because no good . . . it is called 'a wilderness' . . .

3901⁸. Vastation is signified by 'marching into the breadths of the land' (Hab.i.6).

3941². 'The devastators have come' (Jer.xii.12). . . 'The wilderness of solitude'=the vastation of the Church; 'the devouring sword'=the vastation of truth. Refs.

—⁴. 'The field is laid waste, the ground hath mourned because the corn has been laid waste . . .' (Joel.i.10). That the state of the vastated Church is here described, is evident to everyone.

—⁶. (Rev.vi.5,6) treats of the vastation of good and truth.

4058. In what precedes (in Matt.xxiv.) it has treated of the successive vastation of the Church, namely, that first they began not to know what good and truth are, but to contend about them; secondly, that they despised them; thirdly, that they did not acknowledge them at heart; fourthly, that they profaned them.

4197⁴. That 'the beast from the abyss' . . . will 'kill them'=the vastation of good and truth within the Church.

4289. The representative of a Church could not be instituted among (the posterity of Jacob) until they had been completely vastated (in Egypt), that is, until they had no Knowledge of internal things; for if they had had a Knowledge of internal things, they might have been affected by them, and would thus have profaned them. Further ex.

4334³. 'As it was in the days before the flood'=the state of vastation of those of the Church, compared with the state of vastation of the Most Ancient Church . . .

4424². Such are almost all who are within a vastated Church; for they have external things, but no internal things. Sig. and Ex.

4499. 'Sword,' in the opposite sense,=falsity combating, and consequently the vastation of truth.

4728. Those who go into the places called 'pits' are such as must be in vastation. . . Beneath the Lower Earth are the places of vastation, which are called 'pits'; and below them, and round about them for a considerable extent, are the Hells. Ill.

4744. 'Babel'=those who vastate, that is, deprive others of truths.

4843³. The falsity from evil in which the Church is . . . when it is vastated. Tr.

—⁴. For spiritual temptations are nothing else than vastations of the falsity and evil in a man. . . For temptations are nothing but vastations, or removals, of falsity and evil; and therefore both temptations and vastations are signified and described by inundations of water . . .

5037. For all that region next under the sole of the foot, and round about, is called 'the prison house,' where those are kept who are in vastation, that is, those who have been in principles of falsity, and yet in good as to their intentions. Ex.

5044⁷. The desolation and vastation of truth are signified by 'the line of emptiness, and the plumbline of wasteness' (Is.xxxiv.11).

5113¹². The vastation of the Spiritual Church as to the good and truth of faith, thus as to the Intellectual. Ill.

5120¹⁰. As falsity from evil vastates or destroys the Church, it is said 'the cup of devastation and desolation' (Ezek.xxiii.33).

5124². As by ('those bound in prison,' or 'in a pit') were represented those who are in vastation under the Lower Earth, therefore by 'to lift up their head' was signified their deliverance; for they are then elevated or lifted up out of vastation to heavenly Societies . . .

5291^e. Unless such things were stored up in man by the Lord, there would be nothing to uplift him when in a state of temptation and vastation . . .

5319⁵. Hence they who are taken up into Heaven out of a state of vastation, appear clad in bright white.

—^e. This last state of a Church, which precedes the state of a new Church, is properly meant and described in the Word by 'vastation,' and 'desolation'; and by the same is also described the state which precedes man's regeneration, which state is here signified by 'the seven years of famine.'

[A.] 5376³. This desolation is called 'wasteness,' etc. —⁴.

5561. These remains make this little of spiritual life, after the vastations of many ages.

5562. They who come out of vastations, and serve the uses of the bones, have not any determinate thought. Ex.

5759. They who do what is true and good, and from ignorance or simplicity attribute it to themselves, are not damned, but are delivered in the other life by a mode of vastation.

5895^e. 'Ploughing,' in the opposite sense, = the evil which obliterates good, thus vastation.

6000^s. The vastation of adulterated good. Tr. The vastations are said to take place 'in the night,' because then truth is obscured, and falsity enters.

6109². As the reduction of scientifics into order under a general principle can be effected in no other way than through vastations of good, and desolations of truth, soon followed by supportings, therefore these are treated of (in Gen. xlvii.).

6141. 'That the ground be not laid waste' (ver. 19) = that the mind will be cultivated with the scientifics of the Church. . . 'To be laid waste' = to be without visible truth; here, without the scientifics of the Church.

6589. 'The land of Egypt' . . . = a vastated Church.

6595. As the man of a vastated Church thinks nothing about what is internal . . . it cannot be injured by him. Ex.

—^e. That the interior things of the Church are not revealed until the Church has been vastated, because they are then not believed, and therefore cannot be profaned. Refs.

6745^e. The Spiritual Church vastated (is described in Lam. iv. 3, 4).

6767². 'The day of slaughter' (Jer. xii. 3) = the time of the vastation of the Church, when there is no longer any faith, because no charity.

7102. There are four kinds of vastations and punishments mentioned in the Word: 'the sword,' 'famine,' 'evil beasts,' and 'pestilence'; and 'the sword' = the vastation of truth, and the punishment of falsity; 'famine' = the vastation of good, and the punishment of evil; 'the evil beast' = the punishment of evil from falsity; and 'the pestilence' = the punishment of the evil which is not from falsity, but from evil. Ill.

—⁴. For the vastation of truth is without; and the vastation of good within.

—¹⁰. 'The death that wasteth at noonday' (Ps. xci. 6) = the evil which is open.

7250. As (these Spirits of Venns) can be saved, they are in places of vastation, and are there reduced to the extreme of despair; for evils and falsities of this kind cannot be removed in any other way. Des.

7264. It treats (in the history of the plagues of Egypt) of the vastation, and, finally, of the damnation, of those who are in falsities and evils . . . 7378.

7265. In (Ex. vii.) it treats of the first three degrees of vastation. Enum.

7313^e. The state in which are those of the Spiritual Church at this day who are being vastated as to falsities. Rep.

7378. In (Ex. viii.) it treats of the fourth and fifth degrees of the vastation of those who are in falsities, and who infest the upright in the other life. Enum.

7474³. They who are in vastation are kept in such a state (of infestation) until they have imbued the truths of faith, and, by degrees, more interior truths . . .

—⁴. From this it is evident what is the nature of the vastations in the other life in which are those who are in the good of faith. These vastations are vastations of falsity. But the vastations with those who have not been in the good of faith, but in some truth of faith as to the mere knowledge of it—scientific, and in a life of evil, are vastations of truth. They who are vastated as to falsities, successively imbue the truths and goods of faith and charity; whereas they who are vastated as to truths, successively put off truths, and put on the evils which had been of their life. From this it is evident what is meant in the Word by 'vastations,' and 'desolations.'

7495. In (Ex. ix.) it treats of the sixth, seventh, and eighth state or degree of the vastation (of those who infest the men of the Spiritual Church). 7502, Sig. and Ex. 7505, Sig. and Ex.

7502. For the degrees of the vastation of those who were infesting were punishments.

7554². (The terrible vastation of those who have belonged to the Church and have lived in evil. Sig. and Ex.)

7556. For the good and truth which have not been joined to evils and falsities are not vastated (even with the evil). Sig. and Ex.

7568. When any change of state is taking place with the evil who are being vastated . . . it is effected by a more present influx of the good and truth from Heaven; for the nearer Heaven approaches them, the more are the interior evils and falsities in them excited. Sig. and Ex.

7577². There is here described the state of those who belong to the Church and infest the upright in the other life, after they have been vastated. (Sig. by 'the hail,' and 'fire.')

7601². (These two verses) treat of the truths and goods which have been destroyed and vastated, and of those which have not been destroyed and vastated . . . For when the evil are being vastated—that is, when they are being separated from truths and goods, and left to their evils and falsities—they are vastated as to those truths and goods which are in the exterior Natural, and which are joined to the evils and falsities there . . . but the truths and goods of the interior Natural are not vastated, but are drawn inwards, and are there reserved for use. Ex.

7604². If the goods and truths (which are in the exterior Natural) with the evil, were not vastated, those in the interior Natural would inflow, and would conjoin themselves with those in the exterior Natural, and (would) perish. Ex.

7628. In (Ex.x.) it treats of . . . the ninth and tenth state or degree of their vastation . . .

7679^o. 'To pursue the east wind'=to multiply vastation. A state of vastation and temptation is called 'the day of the east wind.'

7710^o. Being cast into Hell, is the last of the degrees of vastation.

7766. 'One plague more upon Pharaoh and Egypt'=the end of vastation, which is damnation. Ex.

—³. Therefore, when a man after death is vastated as to the externals, his quality becomes evident . . . To this state is every evil person reduced by degrees of vastation; for all vastation (there) advances from externals to internals.

7796. That these vastations, and the consequent proofs that they were in evil, were effected through truth from the Divine. Sig. and Ex.

—². But it is to be understood that . . . what is Divine vastates no one; but that it is the evil person who vastates himself by his obstinate opposition to truth Divine . . . 7879, Ex.

7926². When the infernals introduce themselves to where the Lord is present . . . they cast themselves into the evils of vastation . . .

VOL. VI.

8096². Those signified by 'the Philistines' (there) infest the well-disposed . . . for they retain the principles they had received (here) until they have been vastated, that is, until they are deprived of all knowledge of the Knowledges of faith . . .

8313³. (Jer. vi. 22–24) treats of the vastation of truth with those who are in evil. —⁴.

8364⁵. 'Pestilence'=the vastation of good and truth.

8622³. To this end . . . these Genii are vastated as to all the Intellectual.

10609⁴. The Church then vastated, that is, that there was no longer the good of love, nor the good of faith. Tr.

H. 510². They do not appear to fall headlong, as they do when they have been fully vastated.

513². Some (good Spirits) are first vastated, which is effected in places under the soles of the feet, which are called the Lower Earth, where some of them suffer severely; namely, those who have confirmed themselves in falsities, and yet have lived a good life.

—(z). (Refs. to passages on the subject of vastation.)

551^o. Every evil Spirit is reduced into this state before he is cast into Hell; and this is called being vastated as to truths and goods. Vastation is nothing but being let into the internals, thus into what is proper to the spirit, or into the spirit itself.

L. 15². For the Church, which was then among the Jews, was completely devastated, and it was devastated by this, that they had perverted all things of the Word . . .

S. 84. 'Waste' is predicated of good, or of evil; 'solitude,' of truth, or of falsity.

F. 53². 'Jehovah will lay waste the Philistines' (Jer. xlvii. 4) = their destruction.

R. 51². 'The earth' which will be 'made a waste' = the Church; and when it is vastated, the Knowledges of good and truth in the Word do not appear.

658. The devastation of the Church, and its end then. Sig. and Ex. 709, Sig. and Ex.

—². It is this end which is signified by 'consummation,' and which is called 'devastation,' in the following passages. Ill.

676³. In the Spiritual World, devastation and consummation are effected in this way. From those who are in falsities as to doctrine, and thence in evils as to life, all the goods and truths which they had possessed solely in the natural man . . . are taken away, and, when these are taken away, they have been separated from Heaven and conjoined with Hell, and they are then distributed into Societies in the World of Spirits according to the varieties of their concupiscences, which Societies afterwards sink down. The goods and truths are taken away from them by an influx from Heaven . . . by which they are tormented . . . and they therefore reject the goods and truths of Heaven . . . and when this has been done they enter into their own evils and falsities, and are separated from the good. These are the things described in Rev. xvi. by the casting down of the vials in which were the seven last plagues. Ex.

T. 755². 'Vastation,' 'desolation,' and 'decision' = the same as 'consummation'; but 'desolation' = the consummation of truth; 'vastation,' the consummation of good; and 'decision,' the full consummation of both.

D. 189. On the cupidity of evil . . . Spirits to vastate and torment man.

437. A mild kind of vastation. Des.

662. When a Spirit confesses that he cannot help doing evil, he is so tempered by modes of devastation that he can desist . . . 2306a.

692^e. In this way they are at last devastated, and can be admitted . . . This sometimes lasts very many years . . . for the vastation of some lasts a long time.

854^e. These are vastated very slowly. Des.

1039. On the difference between punishments and vastations. Ex.

— In themselves, all punishments are vastations, because they devastate evils by causing the acquisition of the faculties of speaking truth and doing good . . .

1041. But some vastations take place without any reluctance, and with consent . . .

1042. But whether there is any vastation of evil without any sense of pain, or of what is unpleasant, I do not as yet know . . .

1054^e. If the Angels then suffer themselves to be seduced . . . they undergo suitable kinds of vastation, and are afterwards again admitted. 1218. 3224^e.

1070^e. The times of vastation in solitudes is longer or shorter (according to the nature of the sin).

1125. Immediately after vastation (the celestials) love nothing more than serious thoughts. Des.

1218. That the power (to become Angels) is obtained solely through vastations. Ex.

1370a. On the penalty of vastation of those who are of elated mind, and trust in themselves . . . They are wrapped up in a kind of a cloth. Des. (This vastation by the veil was inflicted on a certain Spirit ten times. 1377). See 1386.

1402. On a state of vastation in darkness. Ex.

1435. The Spirits of our Earth are grosser and slower, and are defiled with corporeal cupidities, which must be vastated before they can apprehend interior things; and they must be utterly vastated, so that aversion is felt for them . . . before they can be delighted with interior things.

1467. On the penalties of vastation of those who assume hypothetical things in spiritual and celestial things, and confirm them. Ex.

1511. There are some who, when vastated, have received somewhat of capability for good, and who, while . . . the trouble of vastation is felt by them . . . are taken up a little into Heaven . . .

2305^e. Thus all . . . kinds of vastation are for the sake of good.

2579. The evil who are in this sphere of intentions are not vastated like those who are evil in externals; for the more interiorly a man is evil, the more grievous and prolonged is the punishment. Thus there remains for them a hell most grievous and prolonged, and a vastation until almost nothing of them remains . . .

2959. When love perceives what is good, it willingly permits vastation. Ex.

3904^e. (This state of obscurity, to which they are reduced) is a species of vastation. Ex.

3912². (These Spirits) are antediluvians, who, having been vastated, can serve for Subjects . . . for those of the antediluvians who are vastated . . . become like skeletons . . .

3914. Their vastations recur quite frequently, so that they become like skeletons, as is the case with others with whom vastations recur by turns, in order that they may be initiated into their services . . . for in the other life they are initiated into uses, which is what vastations regard, or have as their end.

3920². It is therefore only a detention from evil which is induced by vastations . . .

3944. Still, such Spirits, since they lose nothing of their previous life, after they have been reduced by vastations into this bony state, can be restored; (and) until they are able, in this way, to serve these uses, they are vastated by alternations.

4038. Spirits remain in the state in which they had been (here); but the filthy things, and the falsities of the corporeal memory, and of the interior ideas, are subdued by vastations and punishments, so that they become as it were dead, and the Spirits perform services . . . so that in the other life they are not reformed, but they are vastated, so as to be able to serve for uses. (Thus) the adulterers who are cruel become excrements, and sit like dead stocks, and afterwards serve as such Subjects, in whom there is but little life; [but] conscience is not given them, but all that is effected by the vastations is that the things which hinder their being of use are taken away.

4051. They who are in such a life of persuasion are vastated differently from those who are in a life of the will, or of cupidities. The life of persuasion is vastated so that the person is reduced into complete ignorance . . . and then into confusion, so that when he thinks about his persuasions, he is so confused as to be almost tortured. Des.

4111. Such penalties last a long time—for years, and ages . . . and are attended with vastation; but still the last vastation follows, in that the person is dissociated . . . and sits in darkness, and in torment, having but little life, until he becomes of such a character that he can serve for some use.

4281. On those who are vastated until they have but little life left. Gen.art.

— I was brought to a place . . . which was darksome, and where there were very many Souls flitting about, who had lived two, three, or four thousand years ago, and had been vastated. They were of those who from being of the Church had become idolaters. Des. . . They are able to serve for some use, such as for . . . the sphincter of the anus . . . 4282.

4308^e. Unless a Spirit is amended before he comes (into that more subtle sphere) his evil is continued there . . . and therefore Spirits who are being vastated are not permitted to come into that sphere until they have been vastated . . .

4753. That the devastation of the evil is from themselves. Ex.

4900. On total devastation: Charles xii.

— He who is to be devastated—that is, deprived of goods and truths, and thus let into Hell—is devastated successively from head to foot, which takes many years, because all things of him are obsessed with evils. This befell Charles xii. who was at length devastated down to the soles of his feet, and to his fingers. Des.

5040. These (Swedish magicians) are vastated more quickly.

5047. Such must be cast down into Hell immediately after death . . . in order to be devastated there; for hitherto most have been devastated in the World of Spirits, and this during many years, for all devastation is effected from head to heel.

— With some, vastations last a long time, according to the quantity and quality of the good or of the evil. They usually last some years; and, when persons are vastated, they are vastated from the head down to the heel; for in this way has the good, or evil, transcribed itself upon the body.

5072. There are vastations which last only a few moments . . . These vastate the externals which had been of the world . . . Those who in the world have thought about nothing but themselves and the world, after vastation have but little left, and are stupid. But those who have had interior things for the sake of use to the neighbour, when they have been vastated there, put off worldly things, and rejoice that they have been so vastated. But only those who have been for some time previously in the other life, and have thereby perceived an unpleasantness in earthly and worldly things, are admitted into this kind of vastation . . .

5108. On the vastation of those who are let down into Hell.

— Those (of the evil) who bring with them (into the other life) such things as are of truth and good, by which they communicate with the well-disposed Spirits who are in the lowest Heaven, and, through them, with the interior Heavens . . . are on this account vastated, which is effected by the closing of their interiors. This is not done in a moment, but by degrees. Des. (The reverse happens with the good. Ex. 5110.)

5109. But the deceitful are vastated in a different way . . .

5111. The reason the evil can be vastated in this way, and thus have their interiors closed, is that in this way they turn themselves to their loves. Ex.

5132. Concerning the vastation of some of those who go to Hell.—It has been said that some are led about, and in this way their interiors are closed, and so they are vastated. But there are others who are not led about, and yet are vastated. Ex. 5133^e. 5148, continued.

5184. Concerning vastation; thus concerning Hell and Heaven.

— That whole plain (full of evil Spirits) was overturned . . . and then a plain that was beneath it was disclosed, and a multitude of other Spirits there, who had been in vastation there, and who were well-disposed.

5185. I saw still more vastations. Des. 5202. 5323.

5197. Continuation concerning vastation.—I saw also the vastation of those in Christendom who had confirmed themselves in favour of polygamy . . . They, together with that whole region, were overturned, and cast into Hell.

5198. General vastations take place when the whole

[social] body has been destroyed . . . The last consummation is that of the feet, which are externals that correspond to the internals; then comes vastation. Hence it is that in particular [also], all vastation ceases in the feet.

[D.] 5200, 5201. On the ultimate vastation, and the Hell where it takes place.—There are some who cannot be amended by any penalties whatever, because they have imbedded hatred, revenge, and the like from their childhood . . . They are therefore at last sent into a Hell where they lie like corpses . . . for 10, 50, 100, 1000, 2000 years, until such a ferine and utterly inhuman nature has been eaten away; and in the meantime they undergo by alternations horrible torments. (Further des.) After they have undergone this [vastation] they are as it were idiotic, and go about bereft of understanding, but with a difference according to their life: if they have had any rationality, it is preserved; and whatever religion they have had which has not been profaned, remains. See also 5499.

5479. Such . . . are vastated for two days, and . . . go about like idiots. (The case of Lagerberg des.)

5496. They who . . . have been poisoners, assassins, and murderers, are carried at once into Hell, and are vastated. Des.

5509. Evil Spirits are permitted to do evil . . . These are temptations with the good, and vastations with the evil. Ex.

5510. Vastations and purifications are going on continually; but the Last Judgment only at the end of the Church.

5527. On the state of those who are in Hell and in Heaven, (as compared with that of those) who have not as yet been vastated. Ex.

— The east, with Spirits, is their life's love . . . and when [evil Spirits] are in this, they have been fully vastated, and are in Hell.

5529. But those not yet vastated, that is, who are not as yet in Heaven or Hell, do not turn themselves constantly to their reigning love . . . so that there are rotations . . . With some this lasts only a week; with some, months; with some, years, up to fifty, entirely according to the use there, for they attend on man, and serve the rest as Subjects. Such are said to be in the World of Spirits; and, if cast into Hell, they return; whereas those who have been vastated and have once been in Hell, do not return . . .

5598. As there are a large number of those called 'Babel' who are not yet vastated, but roam free in the World of Spirits, as many as some hundreds of thousands, which hundreds of thousands are vastated successively, as fast as new ones arrive from the Earth, they are permitted to do as they did before . . .

5695. All vastations are effected by the separation of evils from goods, and of goods from evils—for all the evil with a man has a communication—and this separation is effected in very many ways . . .

5731. On the vastation of those who are in no charity. (Fully quoted under LAST JUDGMENT.)

5935. On vastation.—After a Spirit has completed his time in the World of Spirits, he finally comes to the last of it, which is his vastation. He then for the most part appears such as he had been in the world, and he is let out to go wherever he pleases, and so he comes to a place where conjunction with anything spiritual is taken away, so that he becomes like an idiot, and casts himself into Hell.

E. 784. When evil Spirits who have not yet been vastated—that is, have not been determined to their reigning love—enter any angelic Society . . . they are direfully tormented.

131^r. The vastation of the Church as to truth. Tr.

257^r. 'The devastator at noonday' (Jer.xv.8)=the vastation of that Church, however much it may be in truths from the Word.

326^v. 'The wastes (of Zion)' (Is.li.3)=a lack of truth and good from the absence of Knowledge.

365⁴¹. 'Wasting and breaking shall be no more' (Is. ix. 18)=that there shall no longer be evils and falsities.

372⁶. 'The whole land shall be a waste' (Jer. iv. 27)=that the good and truth in the Church will perish. 'Yet will I not make a consummation'=that still something of good and truth will remain. 730⁷.

374⁵. The Church and its vastation treated of. 'The hills in the desert upon which the devastators have come' (Jer. xii. 12)=that all the good of charity has perished through evils and falsities. . . 'The devastators'=evils and falsities through which good and truth perish. —⁴.

388. Evils of life . . . which vastate all things of the Church with man. Sig. and Ex.

—¹¹. 'How is she become a waste' (Zeph. ii. 15)=that there is nothing of truth there.

—¹⁸. At vastness and famine thou shalt laugh (Job. v. 22)=that to him there shall be no lack of good.

—¹⁹. The desolation of all truth, and the vastation of all good in the Church. Tr. . . 'Those who are in wastes shall die by the sword' (Ezek. xxxiii. 27)=that those who are in scientifics will perish through falsities; for the scientifics of the natural man devoid of light from the spiritual are here meant by 'wastes.'

397⁹. This (last) state of the Church, when there is no longer any faith because no charity, is called in the Word 'vastation,' and 'desolation,' and, by the Lord, 'the consummation of the age.'

401¹². 'To make the earth a waste' (Is. xiii. 9)=that there is no longer any good in the Church.

405³⁷. The desolation and vastation of the Spiritual Church. Tr. . . Its 'desolation and vastness' (Ezek. xxxiii. 28)=the last state of this Church, which was that there was no longer any truth because no good, or, when there was no faith because no charity; 'desolation' is predicated of the truth of faith; and 'vastness' (or 'vastation') of the good of charity.

—⁵⁰. That there is no good or truth whatever, is meant by 'they have been laid waste, so that no man passeth through' (Jer. ix. 10).

419¹⁸. 'Lying'=falsity; and 'vastness' (Hos. xii. 1)=the dissipation of truth.

433¹³. 'Egypt shall be for a waste, and Edom for a desert of a waste' (Joel iii. 19)=that false principles, and evils of the love of self, both from the natural man, will be destroyed. (=that the natural man will be devoid of truths, and thus in mere falsities; and that he will be devoid of goods, and thus in mere evils. 654⁷².) 730²⁰.

—²⁰. That the falsities which destroy the Church will be shaken off, is meant by 'I will raise up the wastes thereof' (Is. xlv. 26).

474². In a word, those who are to come into Heaven are vastated as to falsities; and those who are to come into Hell are vastated as to truths; that is, falsities are taken away from (the former), and truths from (the latter).

—^e. The temptations which those undergo with whom falsities are to be shaken off . . . are called 'vastations,' etc.

601¹². 'They reduce his land to a waste' (Jer. ii. 15)=the destruction of the Church by evils.

633⁶. The vastation of the Church among the sons of Jacob . . . in Egypt. Sig.

637⁹. Their perdition, that is, the vastation of the Church, is meant by 'the waster (or devastator) shall suddenly come' (Jer. vi. 26).

654⁵³. 'That the land of Egypt may become a solitude and a waste' (Ezek. xxix. 9)=that the natural man is devoid of all truth and of all good.

659². 'To pass the night in the wastes' (Is. lxxv. 4)=to remain and to live in falsities; 'wastes'=where there are no truths.

680. Lamentation over the ultimate vastation of the Church, now certainly at hand. Sig. and Ex.

721¹¹. 'Jehovah will comfort all the wastes of Zion' (Is. li. 3); 'wastes'=truths destroyed; and 'to comfort'=to restore the Church.

727⁴. 'The devastator of Moab hath come up against thee' (Jer. xlviii. 18)=the adulteration of the Word as to its literal sense.

730⁴. 'Desert,' 'solitude,' and 'waste' are mentioned in many places in the Word, and by these expressions is signified the state of the Church when there is no longer any truth in it because no good.

—⁷. 'The whole land shall be a waste' (Jer. iv. 27)=that the Church will be devoid of good, and consequently of truths.

—⁸. 'Devastators in the desert' (Jer. xii. 12)=evils because of there being no truths.

—¹⁴. 'A desert of vastness' (Joel ii. 3)=no understanding of truth from good, and the consequent insanity from falsities which are from evil.

750²². 'To reduce to a waste' (Jer. vi. 8)=lest the Church be desolated as to all truth.

783³. It is from this that those who are in falsities are called 'devastators,' etc.

914. A manifestation by the Lord concerning the devastation of the Church as to Divine truth such as it is in Heaven. Sig. and Ex.

—³. The devastation of the Church as to Divine truth is wrought by the falsification of the Word; for when the Word is explained to favour earthly loves, and to confirm falsities of doctrine, the Church is being vastated; but it is not being vastated when the Word is understood in simplicity according to the sense of the letter; but it is being vastated when it is explained so as to destroy the Divine truth in Heaven; for by this Heaven is closed; and when Heaven is closed there is no longer any Church with man. Ex.

1100¹⁴. The devastation of the Church, treated of. 'The habitations laid waste, so that no man passeth through' (Jer. ix. 10)=the doctrinals of the Church which had been from the Word, and in which there is now not any good or truth. . . The vastation of the Church as to doctrine, further des.

—¹⁵. The devastation of the Church as treated of in Hos. iv. Ex.

1129². 'The devastator' (Jer. vi. 26)=the deprivation of truth and good, and thus the end of the Church.

J. (Post.) 247. After death every man is attached to as many Societies as he has had loves; but after vastation he comes into the Society where his reigning love is . . .

Coro. 6. The third (change of state in every Church) has been its decline, when has been its evening, or vastation; and the fourth has been its night, or consummation. Ex.

23^e. 'Wasteness,' and 'emptiness'=the lack of the two essentials of the Church—the good of life, and the truth of doctrine. Ill.

29. The third state of the Most Ancient Church . . . called evening and vastation. Sig. and Ex. Also that of the Ancient Church. 41³. And that of the Israelitish Church. 54.

55. What vastation is. 56, Ill.

57. Vastation and consummation differ from each other as do the shade of evening, and the thick darkness of night; for vastation is recession from the Church, but consummation is complete separation from it. Vastation, therefore, is as when anyone descends from Heaven, but not so far as Hell, but tarries in the middle, standing at one side in regard to both. . . Vastation, also, takes place when a man regards the holy things of the Church from falsities and falsified truths; but consummation, when he lives in evils, or in adulterated goods. (The difference ill. by comparisons.)

Vault. Crypta.

See CELLAR, and under CHAMBER—camera.

H. 488. All (such) . . . hurry into vaults (or subterranean places) which, at their entrances, appear very dark.

—². These, too, are in vaults, and enter chambers—cameras—so dark, that they cannot see one another.

J. 58². The ecclesiastics hid (the treasures) in the cells and subterranean vaults of that city.

M. 514^e. When they feel anything from conjugal love, they flee into subterranean places. . .

T. 124². At the mere perception of Divine truth, infernal Genii . . . creep into subterranean places, to hide themselves.

E. 410³. What is signified by 'caves,' 'caverns,' 'vaults,' 'holes,' etc. Ex.

Vaulted. Fornicatus. M. 103³.

Vegetable. Olus.

A. 55³. 'When it is grown, it is greater than all pot-herbs' (Matt. xiii. 32) . . . At last, as faith is being conjoined with love, it becomes greater, thus a 'pot-herb' (or 'vegetable').

58. His Natural is here signified by 'the wild animal of the earth,' and 'the bird of the heavens,' to which the vegetable and 'green of the herb' is given for food.

59. Why only the vegetable and the green of the herb is for food to the natural man. Ex.

— . In time of combat, evil Spirits . . . leave him no other food than that which is compared to the vegetable and the green of the herb.

524. Vessels like those for braying vegetables.

996. That 'the vegetable'=the low things of delights, is evident . . . They are called 'the vegetable of the herb' (Gen. ix. 3) because they are only worldly and corporeal, or external. Ex.

—². As 'creeping things'=both the pleasures of the body and the pleasures of sensuous things, of which 'the vegetable of the herb' is predicated, the word, in the Original Language, is one which means both 'vegetable,' and 'green'—'vegetable,' relatively to the pleasures of the things of the will, or of celestial affections; and 'green,' relatively to the pleasures of the things of the understanding, or of spiritual affections.

—³. That 'the vegetable of the herb,' and 'the green of the herb'=low things. Ill.

— . 'The vegetable of the grass' (Is. xxxvii. 27)=what is very low.

—^e. 'A garden of vegetables' (Dent. xi. 10)=what is low.

A. 1632. There is nothing in the vegetable kingdom on Earth which does not in some way represent the Lord's kingdom. . . All the beautiful . . . things in the vegetable kingdom derive their origin from the Lord through Heaven . . . and the vegetative soul or life is from this. 2993.

2231³. Plants—vegetata—torpid in winter.

3220. When the Angels discourse about the things of intelligence and wisdom, and about perceptions and Knowledges, the influx from it . . . falls into representations of such things as are in the vegetable kingdom, such as paradises, vineyards, forests, meadows with flowers in them . . . Hence it is that the things of intelligence and wisdom are described in the Word by (these things).

3610³. So in the vegetable kingdom: in every tree and in every plant there lies inmost concealed the conatus of producing fruits or seeds; but this conatus cannot manifest itself until it has first produced all the means, namely, branches, leaves, and flowers.

3648. There is an influx from the Lord through Heaven also into the subjects of the vegetable kingdom, as into trees of every kind, and into their fructifications, and into plants—plantas—of various kinds, and their multiplications. Unless a spiritual principle from the Lord within continually acted into their primitive forms, which are in the seeds, they would never vegetate and grow in so wonderful a manner and succession. But the forms there are such that they do not receive anything of life . . .

4180². Wintry light . . . does not penetrate towards-the interiors, because there is no heat in it, and hence no vegetation.

5115. He who is being born a man, is compared in the Word to the subjects of the vegetable kingdom, especially to trees; and this because the whole vegetable kingdom . . . represents such things as are in man, and consequently such as are in the Lord's Kingdom.

5116². That such things come forth in the vegetable kingdom, is from the influx of the Spiritual World . . . Such endeavours—conatus—could never have existed in everything in the vegetable kingdom, unless the Divine continually flowed in . . .

5704². The things of light in the world, such as vegetable forms, are also disposed into order by the heat which proceeds from the sun's fire and is in its light.

6128². What influx is, is evident from . . . the influx of heat from the sun into all things of the Earth, whence comes vegetative life . . .

6405. Like the light of the sun, which inflows by heat into the subjects of the vegetable kingdom—as into trees, plants, and flowers, and causes them to grow and blossom—but not immediately; for when light inflows without heat, as in winter, nothing grows and blossoms.

H. 104. The things in the vegetable kingdom are correspondences in the second degree, because they only grow. . . The correspondences in the vegetable kingdom are all things which grow and blossom in gardens, forest, fields, and plains. III.

289^e. A vegetative odour . . .

479⁵. Like spongy and porous wood, which imbibes such fluids as conduce to its vegetation . . .

567³. So the subjects of the vegetable kingdom derive their germinations from the influx from that World; the natural heat . . . only disposes the seeds . . .

569. The heat . . . produces vegetation . . .

W. 3. The sun's heat is . . . as it were the common life of all the vegetations of the earth. Des. 5^e.

60. The marvellous power in every seed of producing its own vegetable form—vegetabile—in perfect order . . .

—^e. Earthy matters, out of which come plants—vegetabilia.

61². The relation to man [which appears] from each and all things of the vegetable kingdom. Ex.

—^e. The conatus (in minerals) towards vegetating. Ex.

62. As there is a conatus in minerals to vegetate themselves, so there is a conatus in plants to vivify themselves; whence come insects of various kinds that correspond to the odours which exhale from the plants. This is not from the heat of the sun of this world, but is from life [operating] through it according to the recipients.

65. Soil from vegetable and animal [matter] . . .

158^e. Unless they had been encompassed (with what is spiritual) the earths could not have . . . produced the forms of uses, which are plants. 310, Ex.

185². (Without a knowledge of these degrees) nothing can be known . . . of the differences among the forms of the vegetable kingdom.

223. There can be nothing so minute . . . in any plant . . . as not to have in it (degrees of both kinds). 190^e.

313, 314. Forms of uses are of three kinds . . . In the forms of uses of the vegetable kingdom the image of creation appears in this—that from their primes they proceed to their ultimates, and from their ultimates to their primes. Their primes are seeds, their ultimates are stems covered with bark, and through the bark . . . they tend to seeds . . . The stems covered with barks have relation to the Earth clothed with earths, from which comes forth the creation and formation of all uses. That vegetation is effected through the outer and inner barks and coatings, by a climbing up, by means of the coverings of the roots—which are continued around the stems and branches—into the beginnings of the fruit, and in like manner through the fruits into the seeds, is known to many. . . In the whole progression there is the end of producing fruits and seeds, which are uses.

315. The heat, light, and atmospheres of the natural world contribute nothing whatever to this image of creation. It is only (those) of the Sun of the Spiritual World which do this; for they bear this image with them, and clothe it with the forms of uses of the vegetable kingdom. (Continued under SEED.)

316. The progression (in the animal kingdom) is like that of the forms of uses of the vegetable kingdom. Ex.

331. The uses created for the nourishment of the body, are all things of the vegetable kingdom which are suited for food and drink. Enum.

338². The evil uses of the vegetable kingdom. Enum.

344. Sir Hans Sloan was thus convinced that nature contributes nothing whatever to the production of plants and animals; but solely that which inflows from the Spiritual World into the natural. Ex.

346. That there are two forms into which operation by influx takes place: the vegetable form, and the animal form. Ex.

— (The parallelism between the animal and vegetable kingdoms.)

—^e. The perfect subjects of the vegetable king- dom are fruit trees; the less perfect are vines—arbores vini—and shrubs; and the imperfect are grasses. From the Spiritual which is their source, plants derive [the fact] that they are uses; but animals, that they are affections.

[W.] 347°. (Thus) although the more imperfect, and the noxious, animals and plants, originate through immediate influx from Hell, they are afterwards propagated mediately by seeds, etc.

P. 190. (Among things constant are) the vegetative faculty in the vegetable kingdom; and both the vegetative and the prolific in the animal kingdom.

M. 183°. All fructification, etc. are . . . from a still more mediate influx into the inmosts of plants . . .

189°. This may be illustrated by . . . the sports of heat with light in plants. Ex.

222°. There is (a marriage) in all the subjects of the vegetable kingdom, from olives and palms down to the small grasses.

225. With plants (the conjugal sphere) is devoid of life . . .

238. What is analogous to (the propagative faculty) in the subjects of the vegetable kingdom. Ex. . . This propagative or plastic force in seeds in the vegetable kingdom, and in souls in the animal kingdom, is from . . . the conjugal sphere . . .

389°. Analogues of this love (of children) exist also in the vegetable and in the mineral kingdom; in the vegetable kingdom, in that the seeds are guarded by shells or husks as by swaddling clothes; or are in fruit as in a house, and are nourished with juice as with milk.

397. All that proceeds from the Lord goes through the universe in an instant . . . not only to animals, but also beyond, to plants and minerals; and also into the earth itself, which is the mother of all plants and minerals. For the earth, in the spring time, is in a prepared state for the reception of seeds, as it were in the womb; and, when it has received them, it as it were conceives, cherishes, gestates, brings forth, suckles, nourishes, clothes, brings up, guards, and as it were loves, the offspring from them . . .

—°. As the earth is the common mother of plants, so there is a common mother of bees in each hive.

T. 44°. (Representations, or types, of the Divine love as seen even in the inanimate subjects of the vegetable kingdom.)

63. (Spiritual) heat and light . . . produce also the vegetative life in every sprig.

78. How animals and plants of every kind were produced (in the beginning) by God. Shown.

106°. The two states (of regeneration) as represented in the subjects of the vegetable kingdom. Des.

308. The sun is as a common father, and the earth as a common mother, from whose marriage comes forth all the vegetation—germinationes—which adorns the surface of the Earth. It is from the influx of (the Divine heavenly sphere of love) into the natural world that come forth these wonderful progressions of vegetation—vegetationum—from seed to fruit, and to new seed. It is from this also that many kinds of shrubs as it were turn their faces to the sun . . . and also that there are flowers which open at the rising of the sun . . .

366°. That everyone receives life from God according to his form, may be illustrated by comparison with plants of every kind. Enum. . . And this not only with those of good use, but also with those of evil use.

470°. (Otherwise) no worms could be procreated from . . . the exhalations from plants with which the atmospheres are impregnated.

585. In trees and all the other subjects of the vegetable kingdom, there are not two sexes . . . but every one of them is male; the earth, or soil alone, being the common mother, and thus as the woman; for it receives the seeds of all plants—fruticum, opens them, gestates them as in the womb, and then nourishes them; and it brings them forth . . . and afterwards clothes them, and supports them. When the earth first opens a seed, it begins from the root, which is like a heart, and from this it emits and transmits sap, like blood, and so makes as it were a body provided with members; its body is the stem, and the branches and twigs are the members. The leaves which it puts forth immediately after the birth, are in place of lungs; for as the heart without the lungs does not produce motion and sensation, and by these cause the man to be alive, so the root without the leaves does not cause to vegetate—vegetat—tree or shrub. The flowers which precede the fruit are means for straining the sap, its blood, and of separating its grosser from its purer parts; for forming in their own bosom, for the influx of these, a new little stem, through which the strained sap may inflow, and thus begin, and, successively, form, the fruit—which may be compared to a testicle—in which the seeds are perfected. The vegetative soul—which reigns inmost in every particle of sap, that is, its prolific essence—is from . . . the heat of the Spiritual World, which, being from the spiritual Sun, aspires to nothing but generation, and thereby to a continuance of creation; and, as it aspires essentially to the generation of man, it induces upon whatever it generates some likeness of man.

—°. Lest anyone should wonder . . . that the subjects of the vegetable kingdom are only male . . . (take) bees . . . as there is only one common mother for these . . . why not for all plants—fruticibus? Further ex.

D. 1714. Hence is the existence and subsistence of all plants . . .

2830. The animal kingdom and the vegetable kingdom correspond to each other in such a way, that when a man is thinking about one of them, Spirits and Angels may, at the same time, think and speak about the other. Ex.

4105°. As nothing can vegetate without the vernal and summer heat . . .

E. 1139². From heat the subject has the life of vegetation . . .

1196². On the life of animals, and the soul of plants.

1204. How the Spiritual inflows and acts upon plants, and produces such a conatus, effort, and act. Fully ex.

1206². When (the Spiritual acts upon the Natural) it causes it either to as it were live, or else to derive something of the appearance of being alive—ex vivo; the latter in plants, the former in animals.

1208². That there are two general forms, the spiritual and the natural: the spiritual is such as belongs to animals, and the natural is such as belongs to plants. Ex. D. Love xxi. Gen., art.

—⁵. But the second form, which is the natural form, and that in which are all plants, derives its origin from the conatus and derivative flow of natural forces, which are the atmospheres, and are called the ethers, in which this conatus is present from the determination of the spiritual forces—which is into the animal form—and from the continual operation of these forces into the natural forces, which are the ethers, and through these into the matters of the Earth, of which plants are composed. That this is its origin is evident from (the fact) that a certain semblance of the animal form appears in them.

—^e. That all things of nature strive after this form, and that the ethers have impressed upon them . . . the effort to produce it, is evident from . . . the universal vegetation on the surface of the whole Earth; and also from the vegetation of minerals into such forms in mines . . . and from the vegetation of cretaceous substances into corals . . . and even from the forms of the parts of snow, which emulate those of plants.

1209⁴. The formative force . . . is the force of producing animals and plants from the ultimate matters of nature. Ex.

1210². That from the Spiritual, by means of these forces, come forth plants, and also animals, both those which appear in Heaven and those which are in the world. Ex.

—^e. The ultimate of the Spiritual is in the Earth, in its earths and waters; and from this ultimate the Spiritual produces plants of every kind—from a tree to grass—remaining in which the Spiritual manifests itself only in a certain likeness to animals.

1211². Concerning plants in Heaven. . . There are plants there of every genus and species, and also plants which are not on earth; for there are composites of the genera and species with infinite variation. . . The genera and species of the plants there differ as do those of the animals.

—³. (The plants of the three Heavens enum. seriatim.) Nothing is born there from sown seed, but from created seed, and the creation there is instantaneous; and the duration is sometimes long, and sometimes only for a moment. Ex.

1212². That animals and plants have the same origin, and thus the same soul, the difference being only in the forms into which the influx flows. Ex.

— The origin of animals is spiritual affection such as man has in his Natural; and that plants have the same origin is evident from the plants in the Heavens, in that they appear according to the affections of the Angels, and also represent them, inasmuch that the Angels see their own affections in them . . . and also in that they are changed as the affections change; but this occurs outside of the Societies. The only difference is that the affections appear as formed into animals by the Spiritual in its mediates, and into plants in its ultimates, which are the earths there. For the Spiritual which is their source is alive in its mediates, but not so in its ultimates. In its ultimates the Spiritual retains no more of life than is sufficient to produce a resemblance of what is alive.

—³. That the vegetative soul has the same origin as the soul of beasts . . . birds . . . and fishes, appears at first sight not to be the case, from the great difference that the one is alive and the other not alive; but still it is plainly evident from the animals and plants which appear together in the Heavens, and also from those which appear together in the Hells. Ex. . . The agreement with the affections of the Angels and of the Spirits is so complete that an animal can be changed into the concordant plant, and a plant into the concordant animal. Further ex. —⁴.

—⁵. The difference, therefore, between the plants in the Spiritual World and those in the natural world, is that in the Spiritual World both their seeds and their growths come forth in a moment according to the affections of the Angels and Spirits there; whereas in the natural world the origin is implanted in the seeds. (Further ex.) Hence it is that from the earths there . . . plants are born in a moment, and also disappear in a moment. But this occurs only when the Angels go away: so long as they do not go away the plants are permanent.

1214². As all affection involves use, and as the vegetative soul is, from its spiritual origin, an affection, it is also a use. It is from this cause that there is a use in every plant; a spiritual use in the Spiritual World, and a spiritual and also a natural use in the natural world. The spiritual use is for the various states of the lower mind; and the natural use is for the various states of the body. These uses enum. —³.

[E.1214]⁴. As use is the vegetative soul, in those places there called deserts . . . there appears no grass or herb of any kind . . .

—^e. Those skilled in botany, chemistry, medicine, and pharmacy, come after death into the knowledge of spiritual uses from the plants there, and they also make use of exercent—this knowledge, and find the greatest delight in it.

Ath. 26. The reason there are plants also, is that their prime substances are in nature, and therefore they are destitute of life.

D. Love viii. The whole vegetable kingdom is full of uses. Ennum.

x^e. In the vegetable kingdom also there are two universal [divisions]; in one, fruit trees; and in the other, seed plants—plantae.

D. Wis. viii⁵. Thus everything in the animal kingdom, like everything in the vegetable kingdom, from its first rises to its last, and from its last rises again to its first from which it was. The same in man, but with the difference that the first of an animal and of a plant is natural, and therefore, when it has risen, it relapses into nature . . .

4883. 'She removed her veil from her' (ver.19)=that what was obscure was dissipated.

Veil. Velum.

Veil, To. Velare, Circumvelare, Obvelare.

Sail management. Velificatio.

A. 955. There are penalties under veils, etc.

963. One of the frequent punishments is the casting over of the veil . . . By phantasies impressed upon them they seem to themselves to be under a veil which is extended to a great distance. It is like a closely clinging cloud, which is made dense according to the phantasy. They run about beneath it, at various speeds, and the desire to break forth from it is kindled, until they are quite wearied out. This usually lasts an hour, more or less, and is accompanied with torment proportionate to the degree of the desire to extricate themselves. The veil is for those who, although they see truth, are yet unwilling to acknowledge it, from the love of self . . . Some, when under the veil, feel such anxiety and terror that they despair of ever being delivered. D.435, Further ex.

964. There is another kind of veil, which consists in their being rolled up as it were in a cloth, so that they seem to themselves to be bound, hand, foot, and body, and a burning desire to unroll themselves is injected into them. As he has been rolled up in one fold, the Spirit supposes that he will easily become unrolled; but when he begins to unroll himself, the veil stretches out in length, and the unrolling goes on continuously until he despairs. D.1371-1376, Further des.

2356. Such (introductory) things were represented by the door and the veils of the Tent, and also of the Temple.

—⁵. From this it is evident what is signified by 'the veil of the temple being rent in twain' (Matt. xxvii.51; Mark xv.38; Luke xxiii.45); namely, that the Lord had entered into the Divine Itself, all appearances being dispersed; and that at the same time He had opened an approach to the Divine Itself through His Human made Divine.

—⁶. The second veil (is described in Ex.xxvi.36, 37; xxxvi.37,38). By this hanging were represented appearances of good and truth which are lower or more external than the former, that is, the middle appearances of the Rational, in which are the Angels of the Second Heaven . . .

—⁷. The third veil (is described in Ex.xxvii.16,17; xxxviii.18,19). By this hanging were represented still lower or more external appearances of good and truth, which are the lowest appearances of the Rational, in which are the Angels of the First Heaven . . .

4772². Thus when the externals of the Ancient Church, and also of the Jewish Church, are unfolded and as it were unwrapped, the Christian Church is disclosed. This also was signified by the veil of the temple being rent in twain.

5044¹². 'To cover-obvelare—the face' (Ezek.xii.12)=that truth should not be seen at all. (Compare A.6848.)

6849³. The great danger the Angels would be in if they were looked at by the Divine without the veiling over—obvelatione—of a cloud. Ex.

8788. A veiling over of the interiors so that they may appear in the holiness of faith . . . Sig. and Ex.

—². Unless the internals (of the Israelites) had been veiled over—obvelata, they would have appeared in plain view, and then the Representative would have perished. Ex. . . Thus 'to sanctify'=a veiling over of the interiors. . . 8806. 8838.

8838. Hence even the Angels are veiled over with a cloud. H.120, Des.

8946^a. And therefore all who are in Hell are veiled over with dense clouds; for such clouds=falsities.

9592. In (Ex.xxvi.) . . . there is represented the medium which unites the Second Heaven and the Inmost Heaven by the veil between the Habitation and the ark of the testimony. 9596², Ex.

9670. 'Thou shalt make a veil' (ver.31)=the medium uniting (these two Heavens), thus spiritual good with celestial good. Ex.

—². The intermediate angelic Societies which . . . were represented by 'the veil.' Des. . . They correspond to the cardiac and pulmonary plexuses . . . and also to the medulla oblongata . . .

—⁴. The veil of the temple being rent in twain . . . signified the glorification of the Lord; for, while in the world, He made His Human Divine truth, but when He went out of the world He made His Human Divine good . . . and the Divine good is the Holy of Holies.

—⁵. The glorification of the Lord's Human even to Divine good . . . is also described by the process of expiation when Aaron entered into the Holy of Holies within the veil (Lev.xvi.); and by the same process there is described, in the representative sense, the regeneration of man even to celestial good. Ex.

—^e. (Thus) the veil between the Holy and the Holy of Holies also=the medium which unites the Divine truth and the Divine good in the Lord.

9671. (For) those in Heaven who relate to the uniting medium which is represented by 'the veil,' have the goods of love and the goods of faith conjoined together in them; for, through the goods of love they are conjoined with the celestials in the Inmost Heaven, and through the goods of faith with the spirituals who are in the Middle Heaven . . . (These Angels) are called celestial spiritual and spiritual celestial Angels; the former being represented by 'Joseph,' and the latter by 'Benjamin.'

9683. 'Thou shalt set the table outside the veil' (ver.35)=influx through the celestial things of love; (for) 'outside the veil'=outside the uniting medium through which is mediate influx . . .

9785. 'From without the veil which is over the Testimony' (Ex.xxvii.21)=where there is communication, and, through the uniting medium, conjunction with the Lord in the Inmost Heaven; for 'the veil'=the medium which unites the Inmost and the Middle Heavens; thus where there are communication and conjunction. 10005³.

10005^e. The neck corresponds to the medium which unites the Inmost and the Middle Heavens; in like manner as does 'the veil' in the Tent.

10195. 'Thou shalt put (the altar of incense) before the veil . . .' (Ex.xxx.6)=in the interior Heaven where it is conjoined with the Inmost Heaven. Ex.

[D. 434]. In the other life, when the Jews wish to protect anyone . . . they are wont to throw a veil over him . . . and then no violence can be inflicted on him. Some Christians . . . when under this veil, complained that they could not breathe . . . Jews are safer when quite obscured, and are in a dense cloud, than those who are in the light of Truth, and yet deny; and therefore, even in life, they are kept continually under a veil.

1088³. (These) holy things could not be called holy and a sanctuary until they had been covered with curtains and veils; for without these coverings they would have stood under the naked sky, exposed to showers and storms, to the birds of heaven and the wild beasts of the earth, and also to robbers . . . 7246. On the inhabitants and Spirits of the planet Venus. Gen.art. U.105. D.1441.

— In the planet Venus there are two kinds of men, of contrary disposition; one being rude and almost ferine, and the other gentle and humane. (The former) appear on the side of the planet which looks this way; (the latter) on the opposite side. Ex. (The former kind fully des. 7248. 7249. D.3346. 3347.) (Their state after death. 7250. D.1449, Des.)

7249. The inhabitants of Venus are for the most part giants, those of our Earth reaching only to their middle. D.1450.

7252. The inhabitants and Spirits of Venus who appear on the other side of that Earth . . . and are gentle and humane . . . in the world acknowledge our Lord as their only God . . . and see Him walking among them . . . D.1453.

7253. These latter Spirits (of Venus) relate, in the Grand Man, to the memory of material Things which corresponds to the memory of immaterial Things.

T. 159⁵. See APOLLO, here.

D. 1449^e. Some of the Spirits from this side of Venus who had undergone extreme vastation were elevated into Heaven, and were received there with so much tenderness that they drew tears from my eyes . . .

1450. The inhabitants of Venus . . . do not associate together by day, but by night, on account of the great heat; wherefore they have lived in darkness, yet they see.

1451. The Spirits of the inhabitants of this side of Venus . . . said to me that they were solely goat-herds . . .

1452. They are very simple in Venus; but observe that these simple and stupid ones are represented on this side of Venus; and the situations merely signify their minds; for they are not all such.

1453. Those who appear on the other side of Venus are worshippers of the Lord . . . acknowledging our only Lord . . . and they represented Him walking among them, almost to the life. They said that they were solely shepherds of flocks—pecudum.

1558a. The inhabitants of the Earth Venus and of our Earth constitute corporeal things, and their appetites, thus earthly things, and also the lower worldly things; thus they rule the external senses.

See CUP, JAR, etc.

A. 814². He carried a vessel (of poison) in his hand.

1183². 'The vessels of the house of God' (Dan.i.2)= holy things (profaned).

1408². Scientifics are general vessels . . . (Thus) the vessels are one thing, and the essentials in the vessels are another ; the vessels are natural things, and the essentials in the vessels are spiritual and celestial things. So also the historicals of the Word, and also all the several words in it, are general, natural, nay, material vessels, in which are spiritual and celestial things.

1435. Therefore scientifics are vessels of spiritual things ; and affections from the good pleasures of the body are vessels of celestial things.

1458^e. By means of Knowledge, the way is opened for the internal man to the external, in which are the recipient vessels, which are as many as are the Knowledge of good and truth. Celestial things inflow into these Knowledge as into their vessels.

1460. For in the external man there are recipient vessels, which are called the things of the memory. These vessels are formed by means of Knowledge . . .

— . But with the Lord the interiors were celestial, which adapted the vessels for the reception of Knowledge, and so that the Knowledge might afterwards become vessels for the reception of the Divine.

1462². Scientifics, that is, natural Truths, are vessels for spiritual Truths.

1469. Scientifics and Knowledge . . . are not truths, but are only the recipient vessels ; just as whatever is in the memory . . . is by no means truth . . . but truth is therein, as in vessels. These vessels were to be formed, or rather opened, by the Lord, by means of instruction in Knowledge from the Word . . .

1472. The knowledge of Knowledge is merely something instrumental . . . that they may serve celestial and spiritual things as vessels. Ex.

1476. The Scientific in general then becomes the ultimate vessel ; or, what is the same, scientifics in special and particular become the ultimate vessels, which correspond to rational things . . .

1495². As the way is opened, or, what is the same, as the vessels are opened, there inflow, in order, from celestial and spiritual things, rational things ; into these, celestial spiritual things ; and into these, celestial things. These latter are continually . . . preparing for themselves, and forming, the vessels which are being opened. Ex.

1496. The truth learned from childhood, regarded in itself, is merely a vessel so adapted that what is celestial can be insinuated into it. Ex.

1775. For revelation, or the Word, is a general vessel recipient of spiritual and celestial things.

1776. Thus the most tender vessels (of little boys and girls) are almost heavenly . . .

1832. Thus do (spiritual things) form their vessels or recipients in man. Most of these appear like truths, but are not ; such as the things of the literal sense . . . and some are even falsities, which, however, can serve as vessels and recipients. But with the Lord there are none but truths which are essentially so, and therefore no parallelism and correspondence are possible ; but still they can be so adapted as to serve the celestial things of love and charity as vessels.

1874². Yet (these apparent truths of the literal sense) can serve as general vessels to contain spiritual and celestial things. Ex.

1900. Man's life itself is from the internal man, and it can have only a very obscure communication with the external man, until the recipient vessels of the memory have been formed, which is done by means of Knowledge and knowledge. Ex.

—². But this life becomes gradually more distinct as the vessels of the memory are formed by means of Knowledge, and the vessels of the interior memory by means of rational things. Ex.

—³. (Truths) are the genuine vessels in the organic forms of both memories, to which can be adapted the celestial things of love and the spiritual things of faith. Ex.

[A.] 1980^e. For the things in the memory and the affection of man are recipient vessels, in which the ideas are varied and received representatively according to their variations of form and changes of state.

2063³. For all truths are vessels recipient of good . . . 2261^e. 5212.

2269³. The more genuine and pure a truth is, the better can the good which is from the Lord be fitted to it as its recipient vessel . . . Goods cannot possibly be insinuated into falsities, nor evils into truths, as their recipient vessels. Ex.

2454². 'His vessels in the house' (Luke xvii. 31) = the truths which are of good. 'To go down to take them away' = to turn away from good to truth.

2466³. 'Vessels of adorning of gold and silver' (Ezek. xvi. 17) = Knowledges of good and truth from the Word.

2468¹. 'To be emptied from vessel to vessel' (Jer. xlviii. 11) = (not to be reformed). . . The good itself is called the 'vessel in which there is no pleasure' (ver. 38).

2967³. 'Vessels of brass' (Ezek. xxvii. 13) = the natural goods which receive the life from the Lord.

3068. 'A pitcher' is a vessel which contains water, as a scientific is a vessel which contains truth; for every scientific is a vessel for truth; and every truth is a vessel for good. A scientific without truth is an empty vessel; and so is truth without good; whereas a scientific in which there is truth, or a truth in which there is good, is a full vessel. 3079.

3079. That vessels in general = things which are for receptacles . . . Ill.

—. The vessels of the Temple and of the altar were holy on account of this their signification . . . and it was for this reason that when Belshazzar . . . drank wine out of them . . . and praised the gods . . . the writing appeared on the wall. 'The vessels of gold and silver' here = the Knowledges of good and truth, which were profaned. Ex.

—³. That 'vessels' = the externals of spiritual things. Ill.

—. 'An offering in a clean vessel' (Is. lxvi. 20) is a representative of the external man in relation to the internal man . . . for 'a clean vessel' = a concordant external; thus the things in the external, which are scientifics, Knowledges, and doctrinals.

—⁴. 'Empty vessels' (Jer. xiv. 3) = Knowledges in which there is no truth; and also truths in which there is no good.

—^e. That the wise virgins 'took oil in their vessels' (Matt. xxv. 4) = that there was good in the truths, thus charity in the faith.

3091. Submission of the recipient [vessels]. Sig. and Ex.

3164. 'The servant brought forth vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and garments' (Gen. xxiv. 53) = truth and good and their adornments. . . 'Vessels' are mentioned because they are predicated of the affection of truth . . . for, regarded in itself, truth is nothing but a vessel or recipient of good. 'Vessels of silver' = in special, scientifics, for these are recipients of truth; 'vessels of gold' = in special, truths, because these are recipients of good.

—³. As, therefore, these vessels, which are to be varied according to forms, are in a contrary situation . . . it is evident that they must be reduced to a situation which accords with the life. This is impossible so long as the man is in the state in which he was born . . . because they are obstinately resistant . . . Therefore they must be softened, (which) is effected through temptations . . . And when the vessels are somewhat tempered and subdued . . . they begin to become yielding and compliant to the life of the Lord's love which is continually flowing in.

3365^e. (Thus) doctrinal things are merely appearances of truth Divine, that is, they are merely celestial and spiritual vessels, in which is what is Divine . . .

3387. For the good from the Lord . . . can inflow only into truths; for truths are vessels for good.

3391. For Knowledges, being of the natural man, are vessels recipient of rational things.

3665³. The Knowledges learned in early childhood are as it were most general vessels, which ought to be filled with goods, and the man is illustrated in proportion as they are so filled. If the vessels are such that genuine goods can be in them, the man is illustrated by the Divine which is within them . . . But if they are such that genuine goods cannot be in them, he is not illuminated . . .

3676^e. Knowledges are not in themselves truths, but are so from the Divine things in them . . . and meanwhile they are only as it were general vessels, by means of and in which truths can be received.

3762⁴. 'Vessels' = the truths of faith, and scientifics. Refs.

4166. 'The vessels of his house' (Gen. xxxi. 37) = his Own truths.

4205. Therefore all truths are recipient vessels.

4247². For truths are vessels for good. The Divine good cannot be applied to any other vessels than genuine truths . . . When man is in the affection of truth . . . good continually inflows, but as yet has not vessels—that is, truths—to which it may apply itself . . . for at the beginning of regeneration the man is not as yet in Knowledges.

4638³. The 'vessels' (in the parable of the virgins) = the doctrinal things of faith.

4744. 'Empty vessels' (Jer.xiv.3)=truths in which there is not truth from good.

4783. For the sense of the letter . . . has generals, which are like vessels that can be filled either with truths or with falsities.

5487. 'They filled their vessels with corn' (Gen.xlii.25)=that the scientifics were endowed with the good which is from truth.

5618. 'Take of the song of the land in your vessels' (Gen.xliii.11)=the choice things of the Church in the truths of faith.

5726. As death is from . . . sin . . . evil closes all the least and altogether invisible vessels, of which the next larger ones, also invisible, are composed; for the vessels which are the smallest of all . . . are continued from man's interiors . . . Hence comes the first and inmost impurity in the blood, which, when it increases, causes disease, and finally death. But if man had lived a life of good, his interiors would have been open . . . to the Lord; and so also would have been the least . . . vessels -vascula. The traces of the first tissue-staminum-may be called vessels-vascula, on account of the correspondence. Thus man would have been free from disease . . .

5948. 'Household stuff' (or 'vessels')=things instrumental.

— In the Word, instrumental things are called 'vessels' . . . and essential things are called 'Things.'

6222. For the things of the literal sense of the Word are general vessels, which receive truths; and the quality of these vessels does not appear until they have received the truths . . .

6669⁵. 'The vessel of the potter' (Jer.xviii.4)=the truth of faith.

6723. 'Vessels of rush' (Is.xviii.2)=the receptacles of the lowest truths.

6917. 'Vessels of silver' (Ex.iii.22)=the scientifics of truth; 'and vessels of gold'=the scientifics of good. Scientifics (or memory-knowledges) are called 'vessels,' because they are generals, and are able to contain within them innumerable truths and manifold goods. 7770.

7131. The stem which is beneath (the seeds)=a general vessel for truth, thus memory-scientificum-truth. For the scientifics of faith and charity are . . . general truths, and thus are vessels recipient of particular and singular truths. Examps. 7144.

3753. Two small snow-white vessels=vascula—used for tea. (Fully quoted under SPIRIT.)

3759. That men are vessels. . . There are vessels in man's memory, and as the ideas of Spirits are terminated in them, they sometimes cannot speak except according to the vessels. These vessels are directed by good Spirits, these by Angels, and all by the Lord, and also by Him immediately; and therefore the Spirits cannot speak except according to the direction of the vessels; for they determine their ideas thither, and they terminate there. Moreover, Spirits are vessels, and in this case they excite the man to speak . . .

3840. Such Spirits pervert the vessels, or the ideas . . . 4098.

811⁶. 'To bring out the vessels of removal through the wall in darkness' (Ezek.xii.7)=that all the truths of doctrine from the Word have been cast out.

—¹¹. 'Their vessels of desire' (Dan.xi.8)=natural truths.

1146. 'Every vessel of ivory, and every vessel of precious wood' (Rev.xviii.12)=profaned rational truths and goods.

— . The reason 'a vessel'=memory-knowledge—scientificum, is that all the truth in the natural man is called memory-knowledge; and the reason this is signified by 'a vessel,' is that the memory-knowledge of the natural man is the containant of rational and spiritual Truths; for when these have been cogitated and perceived, they are laid up in the memory, and are called memory-knowledges (or scientifics).

Vex. Vexare.

A. 5173. There are many methods of vexations (there) . . . The purifying of the blood, and of the chyle . . . represents these vexations, which are effected by various castigations . . . After Spirits have been vexed, they are commonly let into a tranquil state . . . D. 1015. 1015a.

5174. The food in the stomach is vexed in many ways . . . and it is further vexed in the intestines. Such vexations are represented by the first vexations of Spirits. Des.

5182³. This cleansing is effected by vexations, which are . . . temptations of various kinds.

5187. Vexator Spirits (of the gall-bladder) distressed him miserably . . . The vexator Spirits were of those who despised virtue and piety . . . One kind of vexation there consisted in forcing a Spirit to speak faster than he thought. Ex. D. 1014, Des.

5189². (Another class of Spirits who vex evil Spirits. Des.) D. 3835.

1033. That vexations and therefore purifications are innumerable. Gen.art. 1741².

1034. As many vexations as viscera . . .

2797. The good Spirits underwent vexation . . .

3168^o. This is why Souls must, through sufferings, put off all that is not in equilibrium.

4329. After many vexations, they contract fear and horror . . .

4552^o. After they have long been vexed by such, they . . . come among the upright.

Vial. Phiala.

A. 420⁵. 'Golden vials full of incense' (Rev. v. 8) = the goods of faith. (= the confession of the Divine Human of the Lord from spiritual goods. . . 'Vials' = the same as the incense in them. R. 277.) (= confession from spiritual goods; for 'golden vials,' called also 'censers,' and incense-boxes, = truths from good; for 'vials,' like all vessels, = truths; and the 'gold,' of which they were made = good. E. 324.)

R. 672. 'The seven vials' (Rev. xv. 7) = the same as 'the seven plagues'; for they are containants, and containants = the same as the contents . . . The reason vials were given to the Angels, is that the subject treated of is the influx of truth and good into the Church in order that evils and falsities may be disclosed; and naked goods and truths cannot inflow, because they are not received, but clothed truths, such as are in the sense of the letter. Moreover, the Lord always operates from innoscs through ultimates . . . This is why there were given to the Angels vials, by which are signified containing truths and goods such as are those of the sense of the letter . . . through which falsities and evils are disclosed. (= all falsities and evils; for they = the same as 'the seven plagues' . . . The reason 'vials' are mentioned instead of 'plagues,' is that vials are the containants, and plagues the contents. E. 954.)

673. It is said that 'the vials were full of the anger of God' (id.) because they were full of the plagues, by which are signified the evils and falsities of the Church; but still they were not full of these, but were full of pure and genuine truths and goods from the Word, by means of which the evils and falsities of the Church would be disclosed; nor were they actually vials, with truths and goods in them; but by them is signified influx from Heaven into the Church. Further ex. E. 954.

676. 'Go and pour out the vials of the anger of God into the earth' (Rev. xvi. 1) = influx into the Church of the Reformed where are those who are in faith separated from charity as to doctrine and as to life, to take away truths and goods from them, and to open the falsities and evils in which they are, and thus to separate them from those who believe in the Lord, and who, from Him, are in charity and its faith. . . This is a summary of what is contained in this chapter. . . 'To pour out the vials' = influx. . . 'The seven vials full of the seven last plagues' = their devastation and consummation. Des. . . In the vials there were not the evils and falsities signified by 'the plagues'; but there were genuine truths and goods, the effect of which was such as is described. (=the state of the devastated Church. Ex. E.960.)

[R.] 677. 'To pour out a vial'=influx. (=the influx of truth and good from the Lord. 680.) (=influx from the Lord by truths and goods. 683. 690. 694. 699. 708.)

T. 761³. 'The vials of the anger of God poured into the earth' (Rev.xvi.)=the Falsities which should then inundate and destroy the Church.

E. 960². The reason 'vials' are mentioned, is that vials are vessels; and vessels=the same as their contents. Enum. and III.

961. 'To pour out a vial upon the earth' (ver.2)=a manifestation of the state of the Church in general.

965. 'An Angel pouring out a vial'=the state of the Church manifested. 969. 981.

1031. 'There came one of the seven Angels who had the seven vials' (Rev.xvii.1)=the state of the Church with the Papists manifested. Ex. R.718.

Vibratory. Vibratorius.

Vibratile. Vibratilis.

A. 1646. The speech of the Angels sometimes appears (below) as a vibration of light . . .

1761. There are Spirits who inflow . . . by vibrations . . . as it were in lines, more or less sharp. Ex.

2301. Infants of a spiritual genius speak and act (with) a kind of vibratile fluttering as of wings. H.339. (Compare D.3544.)

10379. (The Spirits of the Third Earth act) with a kind of vibration of an undulation into the left knee. D.1686.

H. 241. The speech of the spiritual Angels is a little vibratory and discrete.

248^e. The speech of an Angel or a Spirit . . . slightly vibrates the tongue (of the person spoken to).

T. 348². Like a torch waved about—vibrata.

D. 1057. Spiritual (as distinguished from celestial) things, are represented by things sharp which vibrate, etc.

3741. (These Spirits) acted by an undulatory vibration, by which they also spoke . . . towards the left knee. Ex.

3750. (This Spirit) spoke (with) a broad tone which vibrated as a vibratile aerial . . . something is wont to do.

3866. The influx was reciprocally quick, and vibratory . . .

4136. The beating of the heart of the spiritual was quick, and vibratory . . . That of the celestial is slow . . . and not vibratory.

4208. The speech of the angelic Spirits . . . was as it were a bright vibration.

A. 418². Spiritual choirs, from their vibratory (or fluttering, like wings) singing tone . . . are very different from the celestial ones. (See also A.2301.)

4760. They who have a . . . more interior insight, see confirmations.

—⁴. In this way they destroy in themselves, the insight from what is higher or more interior.

4783⁶. They who are in faith separated . . . have no interior insight; for they who are not in the affection of clarity are in external sight-visu-only; that is, in a lower mental view (or insight), from which no one can possibly see higher things.

4844¹. Hence no one (now) knows from mental view, thus not from perception, whether truth be really truth; but only from doctrine.

4911. (Such) cannot elevate the mind's view . . . except from self.

4946². (These things) effect a higher insight with the spiritual man, by which he can see, and also perceive, whether a thing is true or not.

4997². He turns the attention-intuitiones-of all to himself . . .

5094. It was not the Sensuous things themselves that were rejected . . . but the mental views, or thoughts, from them.

5253². In speech, the directing of the attention to person narrows . . . the idea.

5278. What a man thinks about is directly under his view . . .

5287. In proportion as (thought and speech) are determined . . . abstractedly to Things . . . the insight becomes higher, and consequently more universal.

5302. Man is man from this . . . that when he thinks what is true and wills what is good, he can contemplate the Divine, and receive it perceptibly.

5432. Truths . . . remain as scientifics until the man begins to consider (or view) them with his own sight . . .

5987. The more there are who direct their mental look into one Subject, the stronger is his power . . . His force is augmented in proportion to the plurality of the concordant mental looks.

6068. For the things which are directly under the mental view are in the middle . . . (Compare 6084².)

—². The internal sight is determined to those things which afford the greatest delight . . . and it fixes a direct view upon them . . .

—^e. For scientifics fall under the spiritual view.

6089. At last there comes into existence from the internal a mental view of these (truths), that is, reason and understanding.

6125. The Intellectual in man . . . consists in the mental view of Things from such things as are of experience and knowledge; and also in the mental view of causes from effects, and of things consequent from the connection of the causes.

6468³. The Lord is, in Heaven, the Centre of the mental regards of all.

6598^e. They are in a pre-eminent faculty of understanding and perceiving, according to the degree of their insight from what is interior.

6849. 'For he feared to look upon God' (Ex.iii.6) = lest they should be injured by the presence of the Divine Itself. . . 'To look upon God' = the presence of the Divine Itself, because the Lord is presented as present before man . . . by an internal looking, which is effected by means of the faith which is from charity.

6865^e. They who are in the light of Heaven, . . . before confirmation, apperceive, by a mental view looking at the scientifics which are beneath . . . whether a truth is to be confirmed or not.

9034³. Afterwards, the Things laid up in the external memory are subjected to the sight or view of the internal man . . .

9035. Lest (memory truth) be extinguished under his mental view. Sig. and Ex.

—'. 'Under his hand'=under his mental view ; for 'the hand'=the power which belongs to spiritual truth, thus which belongs to mental view ; for mental view is effected from this truth, and is apperception ; for the truths of the literal sense . . . stored up in the natural memory, form there as it were a field for the mental view of the internal man . . .

9210². When such are in the mental view of what is just and good . . .

—'. Such do not see what is just and good, because they are in regard for self and gain.

9256³. For falsities . . . form the natural mind itself, and its insight as to the things of the Church and Heaven.

9405^e. They keep their mental view fixed on themselves and the world.

10551⁵. Some of the learned, by a looking into their own thoughts . . . have observed . . .

H. 183². This general idea . . . is annihilated when it is placed under the view in the midst . . .

196. For the things which man views intensely in thought are presented before him.

270⁵. The view (of the celestial Angels) does not stop at such things as are before their eyes ; but they see -vident- the interior things . . . to which they correspond . . .

312^e. (Such) cannot be elevated into the light of Heaven, and view the Things of the Church which are beyond its doctrinal things.

351². True intelligence and wisdom consist in seeing and perceiving what is true and good, and thence what is false and evil . . . from interior insight and perception.

353. Their erudition does not rise beyond such things as appear in the world . . . which they keep in the memory, and view almost materially.

—². They regard -spectant- the things of the Word just as others do matters of mere memory knowledge, and do not make them Things for thought, nor for any insight of an enlightened rational mind.

355. Man takes with him all the natural memory ; but the things in it are not under his view . . . as while he lived (here).

356². For the interior mind of man looks into the Things of the natural memory . . .

Virgin. Virgo.

Virginity. Virginitas.

Virgin. Virgineus.

See under MARY.

A. 54^e. The Church itself, from the affection of good, is called . . . 'virgin.' 253.

828. On those who desire nothing more than to deflower virgins, and to whom virginities, and thefts of virginities are the greatest delight. (Their frightful punishment des.) D.2704, Gen.art. De Conj.126.

— For it is the first flower of love which introduces virgins into chaste conjugal love, and conjoins the minds of the married partners.

1414. He was born of a virgin mother, and by birth He derived infirmities from the virgin mother . . . 1428.

1644^e. The speech of angelic Spirits was represented by a virgin . . .

2296. Infants seen with their virgin educatresses.

2362^d. The Celestial Church, being from love to the Lord in love towards the neighbour, is likened to an unmarried daughter, or virgin . . . as in 'These are they who have not been defiled with women, for they are virgins . . .' (Rev.xiv.4). And that this might be represented in the Jewish Church, it was enjoined upon the priests that they should marry . . . virgins (Lev. xxi.13-15; Ezek.xliv.22).

2735. Genuine conjugal love . . . is represented by a virgin of inexpressible beauty encompassed with a bright cloud . . .

2753. There are some who are possessed by the cupidity of seducing virgins . . . (Their lot.)

2762^d. The virgins (of Parnassus) were knowledges. 4966^e. 7729^e. (=Knowledges and knowledges of every kind. M.182². De Verbo 7³).

3079^e. '(The ten) virgins'=affections.

3081. 'A virgin, and a man had not Known her' (Gen.xxiv.16)=pure from everything false.

— 'A virgin,' in the Word, =the Lord's Kingdom, and also the Church, and therefore everyone who is a Kingdom of the Lord, or a Church; and this from the conjugal love which is in chaste virgins. Ill.

—³. In the proper sense, those are 'virgins' who are in love to the Lord, that is, the celestial; and thus those who are in the affection of good. Those, also, are called 'virgins' who are in charity towards the neighbour, that is, the spiritual, thus those who are in the affection of truth. Ill.

—⁷. The term 'virgin' is used in distinction from 'damsel' to express innocence. 'Virgins' are so called from conjugal love, and thus mean those who are in innocence . . .

3164². 'A betrothed virgin'=the truth of the Church about to be conjoined with good.

3325^e. 'Virgins'=the good of love to the Lord and of charity towards the neighbour; thus those who are in innocence.

4638. (The parable of the ten virgins)=the last time of the old Church, and the first of the new. . . 'The ten virgins'=all in the Church, both those in good and truth, and those in evil and falsity. (The parable fully ex.) 8989^e. S.17, Fully ex.

4844¹⁶. The 'virgins' whom the priests were to marry =the affection of truth.

4966^e. The three virgins called the Graces=affections of good; and the virgins called Heliconidae and Parnassidae [or the Muses]=affections of truth.

5391. The chaste virgins of the renal capsules. Des. D.970.

6742. 'A virgin'=the good which is of the Celestial Church; but 'a girl,' the truth of good, which is of the Spiritual Church. Ill.

7668^d. 'Beautiful virgins' (Amos viii.13)=the affection of truth. (=those in affections of good. 8568.) (=affections of truth from good. E.386¹.)

8337³. 'The virgin of Israel' (Jer.xxxi.4)=the Spiritual Church.

9182. 'If . . . a man shall persuade a virgin who is not betrothed' (Ex.xxii.16)=good not conjoined with truth. Ex.

9369. Those in persuasive faith . . . are meant by 'the five foolish virgins, who had no oil in their lamps.'

H. 368^e. 'A virgin,' and 'a woman,' in the Word, =the affection of good.

S. 17³. As 'virgins'=those who are of the Church, there are so frequently mentioned in the Prophetic Word 'the virgin,' and 'daughter,' 'of Zion,' 'of Jerusalem,' and 'of Israel.'

23. The images of virgins (with the Ancients) signified affections of truth.

26⁵. The modest virgins (seen in a representative vision) signified affections of truth.

P. 328^e. They who have acknowledged truths with the lips, but not with the heart, are like the foolish virgins, who had lamps but no oil . . .

R. 620. 'Those not defiled with women, for they are virgins' (Rev.xiv.4)=that they have not adulterated the truths of the Church, and defiled them with falsities of faith; but that they have loved truths because they are truths . . . thus from spiritual affection. . . The reason these are meant by 'virgins,' is that 'a virgin'=the Church as a bride, which wants to be conjoined with the Lord, and to become a wife; and a Church which wants to be conjoined with the Lord, loves truths because they are truths; for the conjunction is effected by means of truths when they are lived.

Hence it is that Israel, Zion, and Jerusalem . . . are called 'virgins,' and 'daughters.' (=because they are in the affection of truth for the sake of truth. E.863.)

[R. 620]². That all such in the Lord's Church . . . are meant by 'virgins.' Ill.

—³. Like affections are signified by 'virgins' in other passages, where 'young men' are mentioned with them, because 'young men'=truths; and 'virgins,' the affections of them. Ill.

M. 20². Six virgins (seen at a wedding in Heaven).

21². (No men stood beside the bridegroom, because on the wedding-day the men) are numbered 'among the virgins. . . Virgins=the Church, which is of both sexes; and therefore men, as well as women, as to the Church, are virgins. Ill.

22. (The six virgins could not endure the close approach of the visitors.) Ex.

—². The Angel said, In Heaven we love virgins for their beauty and the grace of their manners, and we love them very much, but chastely.

42°. When (the angelic pair) came near their Heaven, virgins came to meet them, received, and introduced them.

44². In Heaven there are virgins and youths, virgins of such beauty that they may be called beauties in beauty's own form . . . and the beauties of the virgins, and the moralities of the youths, correspond to each other . . . 355². 381.

—⁴. All novitiates, on ascending into Heaven . . . are introduced into the company of virgins, the beauties of Heaven, who perceive from their tone of voice, speech, faces, eyes, gestures, and outpouring sphere, of what quality they are in respect to the love of the sex. Des.

—⁵. Within the enclosure of the heart, and above it, the morality of a youth is delicatized with the beauty of a virgin with the deliciousnesses of the chaste love of the sex . . .

—⁶. Love truly conjugal comes into existence when a youth sees a virgin who has been provided by the Lord, and the virgin sees the youth . . .

55. (Wives and virgins heard singing in Heaven.) Des.

155³. Whether those who have . . . vowed perpetual virginity are received into Heaven. Ex.

187². There then arises the conjugal inclination, which is that of a virgin for a youth, and of a youth for a virgin; and, as the virgins in Heaven, equally as on earth, from innate prudence conceal their inclination to marriage, the youths there (suppose) that they affect the virgins with love . . .

199. Thus is a virgin formed into a wife. Ex.

207°. Some of these are called . . . the sports of the virgins of the fountain, because virgins=the affections of knowledges; and everyone has intelligence according to his affection of knowledges.

—°. There (then) came some virgins with pieces of embroidery and knitting, the works of their own hands, which they gave (the three strangers). And after they were gone, the virgins sang an ode . . .

293°. The little boy said, Read this before these virgins of the fountain. . . I asked them, Why did he call you the virgins of the fountain (seeing that they were wives)? They replied, We are called virgins when we are sitting by this fountain, because we are the affections of the Truths of the wisdom of our husbands; and the affection of truth is called a virgin.

384. In the virgins (of Heaven) there is only the brightness—nitior—of beauty; but in the wives its splendour.

460. Provided (the pellicacy) is not with a virgin . . .

—°. For, with women, conjugal love acts as a one with their virginity . . . and therefore to solemnly promise and surrender that virginity to any man, is to give a pledge that she will love him to eternity; and therefore a virgin cannot bargain it away with any rational consent, except with the solemn promise of the conjugal covenant. It is also the crown of her honour. Therefore, to take it from her without the covenant of marriage, and then discard her, is to make a harlot of some virgin who might have become a bride and a chaste wife, or to defraud some other man. . . Therefore he who joins to him a virgin as a mistress, may indeed cohabit with her, and thus initiate her into the friendship of love; but with the constant intention . . . that she shall become his wife.

477°. Virgins, who were beauties, because images of heavenly affection, were brought to (the novitiate Spirit) . . . but on seeing them he returned into his internals, and . . . they vanished. Ex.

502. On the state of a virgin . . . before marriage, and after it. Ex.

503. That virginity is the crown of chastity, and the pledge of conjugal love. Ex.

504. Some adulterers are possessed with the desire of deflowering virgins . . .

—°. When (their) potency has failed, they boast of the number of virginities . . .

—°. If (such marry) they have nothing in mind but the virginity of their future consort; and, when they have sipped this, they loathe both bed and chamber.

T. 106. The first state (of regeneration) is represented by . . . that of every virgin before she becomes a wife.

719°. Those who only understand and speak truths and goods, are like the foolish virgins . . . But those who also will and do them, are the prudent virgins . . .

D. 1070. On whoremongers who with deceit allure virgins to whoredom.

2704. On those who are possessed with a cupidity for virginities. Gen.art.

3017. A (representative) virgin seen. Des.

3597°. Such are represented, also, by a bright virgin . . .

3896. Spirits who, in life, had burned for the innocent, such as chaste virgins. Des.

4377. A tranquil combat of the virgin—virginei—sex against the evil. Ex.

4756. Those who have ruined virgins . . . are sent into such cities. Des.

5160. Daughters and virgins as seen in the Celestial Kingdom. Des.

5601^e. The virgins are admonished by changes of beauty in their faces.

5618. On some virgins who read daily in the Word. Des.

5660. How virgins are brought up in the other life, and in Heaven. Gen.art.

6042^o. These are like the five (foolish) virgins . . .

6110⁵². Virgins who have imbued piety to the extent of becoming somewhat melancholy, make sad wives, and cannot be among the happy in Heaven. . . Thus [is it] with those who have lived in nunneries.

D. Min. 4810. In a dream, I saw a virgin in a room . . . She appeared like an angelic virgin; (but) she communicated with Societies of adultery. (She represented the [selfish] love of friendship.)

E. 187⁴. 'The ten virgins' = all who are of the Church; 'five' = some of them. . . 'The five wise virgins' = those who are in love and the derivative faith; and 'the five foolish virgins' = those who are in no love, but in faith alone. 212⁴. 250⁷. 252⁸. Fully ex. 375⁴. 548³. 675⁶. 840³. 860.

219^o. 'The virgin of Israel' = the Church. 555⁴. (= the Church from the affection of truth. 863¹².)

270². 'Virgins' = the affection of truth and good. —⁵. 315⁷. 637¹¹.

—⁴. 'Virgins' = the spiritual affection of truth.

275⁴. 'Young men' = truths; 'virgins,' goods. 721³.

406¹¹. 'Young men' = affections of truth; 'virgins,' affections of good.

655⁶. 'The virgins in the cities of Judah' (Lam.v.11) = affections of truth from the good of love.

811³. 'A virgin' = the affection of truth.

863. 'Virgins' = those affections of truth which are called spiritual affections of truth. Ex. . . Those in these affections love truths because they are truths . . . and those who love truths in this way, love the Lord; because the Lord is in man in the truths which are from good . . .

—². The reason those in the spiritual affection of truth are called 'virgins,' is based on the marriage of good and truth, from which comes conjugal love . . . for as virgins love to be conjoined with men—who have the understanding of truth—they = the affections of truth. Fully ill.

—⁸. 'Young man, and virgin' (Jer.li.22) = the understanding and the affection of what is false.

—¹³. As the Church is the Church from the spiritual affection of truth . . . the expressions 'virgin of Israel,' 'the virgin daughter of Zion,' 'the virgin daughter of My people,' 'the virgin daughter of Zidon,' 'the virgin daughter of Egypt,' and also 'the virgin daughter of Babylon,' are frequently used in the Word.

—^e. Thus 'virginity' = the inviolate affection of truth. Ill.

1006². There are excrementitious Hells for those whose delights have been debauchings of virgins.

VOL. VI.

1009^e. Virgins (seen there) who had accounted whoredom wicked because contrary to the Divine law; and also virgins who had not accounted them wicked, but still had abstained from them on account of the disrepute, which would repel suitors. These latter virgins I have seen encompassed with a dusky cloud in their descent to the lower regions; and the former with a bright light in their ascent to the higher regions.

1029¹⁸. Every Church at its beginning is like a virgin; but in process of time it becomes a harlot. Ex.

1193². Approach ten maidens in order to choose one for a wife; and will you not first examine their quality . . .

188⁶. For, by the Human of the Lord, Jehovah God . . . has made Himself visible before the eyes of men, and thus accessible; in like manner as He made Himself visible . . . to the Ancients, but then through an Angel.

296². In the second and third stories (of the mental house) are they who acknowledge and believe in one God under a visible human form . . .

339. We ought to believe . . . in God the Saviour Jesus Christ, because this is to believe in a visible God in whom is the invisible; and faith in a visible God, who is at the same time both Man and God, enters into man. Ex.

538. Therefore He came into the world, and made Himself visible, accessible, and conjoinable. 786^e, Ill.

647². Whereas the faith of the New Church is in a visible, accessible, and conjoinable God, in whom—as the soul is in the body—is the invisible, inaccessible, and unconjoinable God.

787. The reason this New Church is the crown of all the Churches . . . is that it will worship one visible God, in whom is the invisible God, as the soul is in the body. The reason why the conjunction of God with man is possible in this and in no other way, is that man is natural. Ex.

—Conjunction with a visible God illustrated by comparisons.

—For all conjunction of God with man must be reciprocal, (which is impossible) except with a visible God.

—2. That God was not visible before the assumption of the Human. Ill.

—That there is conjunction with the invisible God through Himself visible, thus through the Lord. Ill.

D. 3869. They made their ideas visible near me. Ex.

5742. They did not want to know anything about a visible God, but about an invisible one. They were told that the Lord also is an invisible God; for He is one with the Father, and in the Sun, and He is invisible in this world ever since His ascension from the sepulchre . . . but they were all unwilling [to hear] this . . .

Vision. Visio.

Visionary. Visionarius.

A. 125. The men of the Most Ancient Church . . . were instructed by means of (most delicious and paradisaical) visions and dreams. 597, Ex. (And there was insinuated into them what they signified. 1122.) 2179³.

1532. The visions of the prophets were . . . openings of their interior sight. Enum. 1619. 1626.

1584. The external man . . . is then illuminated by the internal, and is then in the Divine vision here treated of. . . The Lord, when a boy, was, as to His external man, very often in such Divine sight . . .

1784. 'Vision' (Gen. xv. 1) = inmost revelation, which is that of perception. (For) visions are according to the man's state. A vision presented before those whose interiors have been closed, is very differently circumstanced from a vision which is presented before those whose interiors are open. Examps.

—There are many kinds of visions . . . The more interior the visions are, the more perfect they are. With the Lord they were the most perfect of all, because He had, at the time, a perception of all things in the World of Spirits and in the Heavens; and He had an immediate communication with Jehovah. This communication is represented . . . by 'the vision' in which Jehovah appeared to Abraham.

1882–1885. Two extraordinary kinds of vision, called 'being withdrawn from the body,' and 'being carried by the spirit to another place.' Des. H. 440. 441.

1885. But the things ordinarily seen (by Swedenborg) were not visions; but were things seen in the highest wakefulness of the body.

1968. Enthusiastic Spirits . . . have visions about things to be believed. Ex.

1970. By genuine visions are meant the visions or sights of the Things which really exist in the other life . . . and which appear to a man when his interior sight is opened by the Lord. . . Such were the visions of the prophets. Des.

1971. The visions which take place before good Spirits, are representatives of the Things which are in Heaven. Ex. . . Such things are perpetual with good Spirits.

1972. The visions, or rather sights, which appear before the eyes of the spirit . . . are more and more interior. Des.

1973. The kinds of vision are too numerous to mention.

—Two visions des. by way of illustration. 1974. See also 1977.

1975. (Representative) dreams inflow from Heaven equally with visions, but with the difference that dreams do so when the body is asleep, and visions when it is not asleep.

2162⁴. A vision of Daniel ex. E. 316¹⁶. 594³.

3301². 'A vision' = truths; here (Zech. xiii. 4) falsities.

4715³. 'The valley of vision' (Is. xxii. 1) = phantasies from sensuous things about spiritual things.

6000. 'God said to Israel in the visions of the night

(Gen. xlv. 2) = an obscure revelation. . . For revelations took place either by dreams, by visions of the night, by visions of the day, or (in other ways).

[A.] 6836. 'I will turn aside and see this great vision' (Ex. iii. 3) = reflection upon this revelation. . . 'A vision' = revelation. It is called 'a great vision,' because, in the supreme sense, by 'the flame in the bush' is signified the Divine truth united to the Divine good in the Lord's Human.

9248. 'A vision of vanity' (Ezek. xii. 24) = a false revelation.

—². By 'to see,' or by 'a vision,' when predicated of the prophets, is signified a revelation which regards doctrine; and by 'to divine' is signified a revelation which regards life.

10042. The prophetic visions of the Word. Ex.

10833^e. (In the Sixth Earth) a Divine vision is distinguished from a vision which is not Divine (by the appearing of an Angel); for in a vision not Divine no Angel appears.

H. 249². Such are visionaries and enthusiasts. Des.

456³. As they wondered that this has not been manifested to man by means of visions . . . they were told from Heaven that it could have been done . . . but still (such) would not have believed; and besides that it is dangerous to confirm anything by visions with those who are in falsities, because they would first believe, and afterwards deny, and would thus profane the truth . . . P. 282, Ex.

C. J. 35. I asseverate that these things are not visions: but sights in complete wakefulness.

90. The sensation (which the Moravians feel) is from visionary Spirits.

L. 52. We read of the prophets that they were 'in vision'; and also that 'Jehovah spoke to them.' When they were in vision, they were not in their bodies, but in their spirit, in which state they saw such things as there are in Heaven . . . In their state of vision the eyes of their spirits were opened, and the eyes of their bodies were closed; and they then also seemed to themselves to be carried from place to place, the body remaining in its own place. In this state were, sometimes, Ezekiel, Zeehariah, Daniel, and John when he wrote the Apocalypse; and it is said, then, that they were 'in vision,' or 'in the spirit.' Ill. R. 36. 945².

P. 134. That no one is reformed by means of visions . . . because they compel. Ex.

—, Visions are of two kinds: Divine, and diabolical. Divine visions are effected by means of the representatives in Heaven; but diabolical visions by means of the magical things which are in Hell. There are also fantastic visions, which are the deceptive mockeries of an abstracted mind. Divine visions . . . are such as were those of the prophets, who, when in them, were not in the body, but in the spirit; for visions cannot appear to any man in wakefulness of the body; and therefore when they appeared to the prophets it is said that they were 'in the spirit' Ill.

—⁴. Such were the visions which appeared from Heaven before the sight of their spirits, and not before that of their bodies. Such visions do not happen at this day, for if they did they would not be understood, because they are effected by means of representatives . . .

—, Diabolical visions, however, have sometimes happened, being induced by enthusiastic and visionary Spirits, who, from the delirium in which they were, called themselves the Holy Spirit. But these Spirits have now been collected together by the Lord, and cast into a Hell separate from the Hells of others.

R. 7. The things which John saw were only visions . . . These see in John's visions arcana . . .

36. The spiritual state in which John was when in the visions. Sig.

—^e. But the Word was not revealed in a state of the spirit, that is, in vision . . .

229^e. The things which John saw were visions which were representative . . .

449. 'I saw the horses in the vision' (Rev. ix. 17) = that . . . the reasonings . . . were imaginary and visionary. Ex. (= the falsification of the understanding of the Word. E. 575.)

451. 'Their heads' = imaginary and visionary things about faith alone, which are called phantasies.

—². What are faith in act, and faith in state . . . but visionary things? . . . What is the remission of sins and the consequent instantaneous Salvation but a thing of visionary thought? (Other examp. of these visionary things of faith alone.)

M. 233^e. All such are in posterior vision, and not in any prior sight.

268. The visionary concupiscence, or phantasy, of possessing all wealth. Des.

T. 157. By being 'in the spirit' . . . is meant a state of the mind in which it is separate from the body; and as, in this state, the prophets saw such things as come forth in the Spiritual World, it is called 'the vision of God,' Ex. and ill. This is the state in which I have been for twenty-six years, with this difference: that I have been in the spirit and at the same time in the body . . .

345⁷. A visionary and absurd faith . . . is falsity appearing like truth from ingenious confirmation. 346^e.

D. 651. (Of the four kinds of spiritual sight) the second, is vision with the eyes closed. Des. 2951.

1752. On visions which are illusions. Gen. art. 1755.

1756. Unless a man is in faith in the Lord, he may easily be led to believe that such (illusory) visions are from Heaven, when yet they are of the devil; for they cannot be distinguished from true visions . . . except by those who are led by the Lord. But at this day such things are forbidden . . .

1934. I saw direful visions . . . but still even in this injected terror, I felt secure.

2244. (A Spirit who could produce visions which gave delight; but he afterwards inflicted injury.)

2445. A vision concerning the interiors of the Word. Des.

2498. (This) was shown me by a vision. Des.

3015. A representative vision about the Quakers. Des.

3135. A vision about the more subtle magicians. Des.

4575. On a vision of a house and the Spirits there, and also of a city and buildings. Des.

4663. I was in a waking vision. Des. 4773. 4784.

4772. Where there is enlightenment, there must also be a vision of the contraries.

5144. I was in a nocturnal vision, or dream. Des.

5806. This has been shown me in a vision of the night. Des.

5896. They said to him that these things were visions, and not real. He replied that he knew they were visions, but as he saw them with his eyes, and felt the pain . . . it must be real.

D. Min. 4647. (This) is perceived by interior vision.

4693. The man supposes that (this) is an illusion, or vision. Des.

E. 1777. That they have completely deprived themselves of truths, and immersed themselves in falsities, is described by, 'They said to the seers, See not; and to those that have vision, See not for us right things, speak unto us smooth things; see illusions' (Is. xxx.10).

2366. The Intellectual of those of the Church . . . is enlightened when the Word is read; and therefore it is said . . . 'I will multiply vision' (Hos. xii.10). 'Vision' = the truths of doctrine.

2373. 'A vision from the prophet' (Ezek. vii.26) = doctrine; here, doctrine of what is false. (=the understanding of the Word. 624¹⁷.)

3696. John was with these (lowest Angels) when in the spirit, that is, in vision.

3722. That (these) will see evils, and divine falsities, is signified by, 'It shall be night unto you for vision, and darkness . . . for divination' (Micah iii.6).

375¹⁸. 'To seal up vision and the prophet' (Dan. ix. 24) = to close up and fulfil the things said in the Word about the Lord. (=the end of the external (representative) Church, and the beginning of an internal, spiritual, Church. 'Vision and the prophet' = the falsities of doctrine. = also that the Lord will fulfil all things foretold of Him in the Word. 624²⁰.)

411¹⁷. By 'the valley of vision' is signified falsity of doctrine confirmed by the sense of the letter . . .

4626. This was a prophetic vision, which is such that the things seen are significative. 471.

575. 'To see in vision' (as distinguished from 'in the spirit') = what is from fallacies.

—². The visions which, and from which, a man or the spirit of a man sees, are of two kinds—real, and not real. Real visions are visions of such things as really appear in the Spiritual World, which correspond exactly to the thoughts and affections of the Angels . . . Such were the visions with the prophets who prophesied truths; and such were the visions which appeared to John . . . The visions which are not real appear in the external form like real visions, but not in the internal form: they are produced by Spirits by means of phantasies: such were the visions with the prophets who prophesied vain things, or lies. All these latter visions, because not real, are fallacies, and therefore they = fallacies. (These two kinds of visions fully ex. —³.)

624⁸. 'To see visions' (Joel ii.28) = to perceive revelation.

—¹⁴. 'Night unto you for vision' (Micah iii.6) = the understanding of what is false instead of that of what is true.

684²¹. 'Thou hast spoken in vision to thy Holy One' (Ps. lxxxix.19) = a prophetic arcanum concerning the Lord.

701³². 'To make a vision with Hell' (Is. xxviii.15) = divination, as if prophetic, from Hell.

1037. Into a place appearing in vision which corresponded to the state of that religiosity. Sig. and Ex.

—'. 'In the spirit' = in vision; for what John saw in the spirit, he saw in vision. To see in vision is to see such things as come forth with the Angels in Heaven, which are representative . . . of spiritual things. Ex.

1051. An amazing vision, in which there were arcana of Heaven that were unknown to him. Sig. and Ex.

1155⁴. If man could be reformed by means of miracles and visions, all in the world would be reformed. . . This way (of man's regeneration in freedom) is closed by miracles and visions. —⁵, Ex.

1156². What those who want miracles and visions are like. Ill.

Visit. Visitare.

Visitation. Visitatio.

A. 1850. 'I will judge' = visitation and Judgment.

1857⁴. Visitation does not come until the evil (of the Church) has been consummated; that is, when there is no longer any good of charity and truth of faith. 2141.

2242. 'I will go down, and see' = visitation.

—'. The last time of the Church in general, and that of each person in particular, is called in the Word 'visitation,' and precedes the Judgment; thus 'visitation' is nothing else than an examination of quality.

—⁴. By 'visitation,' as mentioned in the Word, is signified either vastation . . . or deliverance; thus the examination of the quality. Ill.

2318. 'There came two Angels to Sodom in the evening' = the visitation which precedes the Judgment.

—'. In this chapter (Gen. xix.) there is described the act of visitation itself, and then the Judgment.

2323. 'Evening' = the time of visitation. Ex. and Ill.

[A.]2345. The first time of the visitation. Sig. and Ex.
2616. 'Jehovah visited Sarah' (Gen.xxi.1)=the presence of the Divine Celestial in the Divine Spiritual. . . . 'To visit'=to be present.

2906³. The same time is called 'the year of visitation.' Ill. (And 'the day of visitation.' 5360².)

6588. 'God in visiting will visit you' (Gen.l.24)=that the last time will come . . . that is, the last time of the old Church, and the first of the new. This last time is called in the Word 'visitation,' which is predicated . . . both of the new Church which is being born, and of the old Church which is expiring; and, in particular, both of a man of the Church who is being saved, and of one who is being condemned. Ill. 6591.

—⁴. 'To visit'=to deliver.

—⁵. 'The day of visitation' (Luke xix.44)=the advent of the Lord, and enlightenment then; but, relatively to the Jewish nation . . . the last time of the representatives of the Church with them.

—^e. 'Visitation'=retribution, thus condemnation. Ill.

6895. 'Visiting I have visited you' (Ex.iii.16)=His advent to those of the Spiritual Church; for 'to visit'=the advent of the Lord, which precedes the last time of the Church, which time, in the Word, is called 'the Last Judgment.' Ill.

—^e. Thus 'in visiting to visit'=deliverance from falsities, and thus initiation into the things of the Lord's Church and Kingdom.

7066. 'Jehovah hath visited the sons of Israel' (Ex. iv.31)=that those of the Spiritual Church were delivered and saved by the advent of the Lord: for 'to visit'=deliverance by means of the advent of the Lord into the world; thus also Salvation.

7273. Their condemnation (there) does not take place until they have been visited, that is, examined.

7284. The state and quality of the Law from the Divine, with those of the Spiritual Church, at the first time of visitation. Sig.

SS76. 'To visit the iniquity of the fathers' (Ex.xx. 5)=the proliferation of evils.

10509. 'In the day of My visitation, I will visit upon them their sin' (Ex.xxxii.34)=their last state in particular and in general when is the Judgment; for 'the day of visitation'=the last state of the Church in particular and in general; and 'to visit sin'=to be judged and condemned. It is said in particular and in general, because the day of visitation happens to everyone . . . when he comes into the other life . . . and also to the Church in general, when it ceases to be . . .

10622. At the consummation (of the Church) its visitation takes place; and when visitation is effected, all who are in evil are rejected, and all who are in good are received. Visitation takes place in the other life, where all are together . . .

10623. 'Visiting the iniquity of the fathers . . . ' (Ex.xxxiv.7)=the rejection and condemnation of evils . . .

—³. The reason 'visitation'=casting out and dannation, is that this follows the consummation of evils, and precedes the condemnation itself which is meant by 'the Last Judgment'; for 'visitation' is the examination of the quality of the man; but it takes place in the other life . . .

10810^e. (A visitation in the World of Spirits.) Des.

J. 54². The 'writing on the wall,' and the death of Belshazzar=visitation and destruction . . .

61. After visitation, destruction took place; for visitation always precedes. Visitation is the examination of their quality, and is also the separation of the good from the evil, the good being taken away, and the evil left.

C. J. 23. On the signs and visitations before the Last Judgment. Gen.art.

26. Visitations were made by Angels; for visitation always precedes the perishing of any badly ordered Society. The Angels exhorted them to desist . . . and examined them to see whether any good [Spirits] were intermingled among them: these they separated. The crowd attacked the Angels, just as at Sodom.

5667. Preachers visit the maidens there, and examine them.

E. 144. That if not, when visitation comes, they will be dispersed. Sig.

—^e. 'To come quickly'=visitation, because the advent of the Lord into the world=visitation. Visitation is the examination of man after death to [determine] his quality, before he is judged.

173. Steadfastness in a state of the good of love and of faith, even to visitation. Sig.

—^e. 'Till I come'=visitation.

391²⁹. It is said 'to visit' (Amos iii.14) instead of 'to judge,' because visitation always precedes Judgment.

401³⁰. 'To visit' (Is.xxiv.21)=to destroy, because visitation precedes Judgment . . .

419¹². The visitation which precedes the Last Judgment. Sig.

624¹². 'The days of visitation,' and 'of retribution' (Hos.ix.7)=the days of the Last Judgment, when the evil suffer penalties, which is the 'retribution' that is always preceded by 'visitation.'

627. The mode of visitation, that is, of the exploration of the quality of the Church as to truth and as to good. Sig. and Ex.

—^e. The reason 'a reed'=visitation, is that visitation is the exploration of the quality of the men of the Church; and because visitation precedes the Last Judgment. The nature of this visitation or exploration is evident from the visitation in Sodom. Ex.

—³. 'A reed'=Divine truth in the ultimate of order . . . by (which) and its power all visitation, or exploration, is effected. Ex.

654⁴⁸. The visitation of the natural man from Divine truth spiritual natural. Sig. For visitation is examination into what a man is, and the examination is effected by means of Divine truth.

910. Announcement after exploration or visitation. Sig. and Ex. 917.

—, Visitation is mentioned in many passages, and it=an exploration of what the state of the Church is before the Judgment. Not that such visitation actually occurs. Ex.

W. 93. The spiritual Sun by its heat vivifies spiritual beings . . .

100⁶. God . . . through this Proceeding, vivifies and enlightens Angels and men . . . Therefore, vivification and enlightenment are said to be effected through the Spirit of Jehovah.

R. 200. The Word, from this life, vivifies the affections of the will of the man who reads it holly. Sig.

475. He who vivifies all in Heaven and the Church, and each and all things with them. Sig. and Ex.

510. That these two essentials of the New Church . . . are vivified by the Lord with those who receive them. Sig. and Ex.

M. 256. Plays, music, etc., are sweetnesses, because they are vivifications.

T. 40. The life which is the light that proceeds from the spiritual Sun . . . as it illumines, so it also vivifies, the understanding of man.

142. That the Divine virtue and operation meant by 'the Holy Spirit,' are, in general, reformation and regeneration; and, according to these . . . vivification, etc. Gen.art. 149.

—². Through Divine truth from Good, that is, through faith from charity, man is . . . vivified, etc.

364. Thus God, from His life, vivifies every man; and that, without this vivification, man would be, in flesh a mere sponge, and in bones a mere skeleton . . .

—². The Divine love as heat, and the Divine wisdom as light, inflow into human minds . . . and vivify them according to the quality of the form . . .

385². This quickening (of vegetation in the spring) may be seen to the life in the Spiritual World.

618^e. By the conjunction of (spiritual light and heat) the Lord vivifies and regenerates man.

A. 219. 'The voice of Jehovah God . . .' (Gen.iii.8)=a dictate . . . (for) in the Word, 'the voice of Jehovah' stands for the Word itself, the doctrine of faith, conscience or internal advertence, and also the consequent reproof; and therefore even thunderbolts are called 'voices of Jehovah.' Ill.

—². 'A voice'=revelation. Ill.

220. 'The voice of one crying' (Is.xl.3)=the annunciation of the Lord's advent; in general, for every (such) annunciation, as with the regenerate, who have a dictate.

374. 'The voice of thy brother's bloods' (Gen.iv.10)=violence inflicted on clarity. In the Word, 'voice' stands for everything that accuses.

375. 'A voice crying,' and 'the voice of a cry,' is a wonted formula of the Word, and is applied to any case in which a noise, tumult, or disturbance, and also in which anything happy, occurs. Ill.

448. I have spoken with many (Spirits) in as clear a voice, although internal, as with friends here.

1395. There is an image of the deceit in every tone of the voice.

2240⁶. 'The voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying' (Is.lxv.19)=that there shall not be evil, nor falsity. 2351.

2689. 'She lifted up her voice and wept' (Gen.xxi.16)=a further degree of grief. For 'to lift up the voice and weep'=the last degree of grief, because weeping with an uplifted voice is nothing else.

2691. 'God heard the voice of the boy' (ver.17)=aid then. Ex.

3563. 'The voice is the voice of Jacob' (Gen.xxvii.22)=that in this case the Intellectual of truth was within . . . thus in inverted order. For 'voice' is predicated of truth.

3849. Voice (or a word) without affection, is like the voice of an automaton, thus is only sound without life; but in proportion to the degree and the quality of affection there is in it, in the same proportion is the degree and the quality of the life in it.

3893. For Spirits and Angels have, among themselves, a sonorous voice; and are heard by one another as well as a man is heard by a man; but human singing is not to be compared, in sweetness and harmony, with theirs.

4060⁸. 'He shall send forth His Angels with . . . a great voice' (Matt.xxiv.31)=election; not that this is done by . . . great voices, but by the influx of . . . holy truth . . . 'A trumpet and a great voice'=evangelization.

4311³. It matters not from whom the voice of good and truth proceeds . . .

5121². But those who are not in good and truth can have no revelation from perception, but by a living voice heard in them . . . This revelation is external.

5313⁶. 'The voices,' etc. which proceeded out of the throne (Rev.iv.)=the terrors caused by the Divine truth with those who are not in good.

5933. 'The voice was heard in Pharaoh's house' (Gen.xlv.16)=that this inflamed the universal Natural; for 'a voice' which is heard elsewhere, and at a distance, when predicated of influx,=to infill; for as a voice which is heard infills, so does that which inflows.

6616. When I heard Spirits speaking to me, I could perceive, merely from the tone of voice of the speech, whether they spoke from what was simulated, etc.

6832⁶. 'The voice of Jehovah' (Ps.xxix.7)=the Divine truth.

6971. 'If they do not hear the voice of the former sign' (Ex.iv.8)=if they do not obey what is announced from the Word. . . 'A voice'=what is announced from the Word. —³, Ill.

—³. 'A voice' is often predicated of . . . things which do not belong to a voice. Ill.

—⁴. 'A voice'=annunciation; and, in a good sense, annunciation from the Word, which voice is called 'the voice of Jehovah.' Ill.

—^e. 'A voice'=Divine truth, thus the Word, and annunciation from it. Ill.

6985. That voice and speech from the Divine are neither heard nor perceived. Sig. and Ex.

—'. 'Mouth'=voice . . . because it is the organ of the voice (whereas the tongue is the organ of speech). The difference between voice and speech is evident to everyone; and also that to be heard is predicated of voice, and to be perceived, of speech.

6996². The last mediation (by which the Divine truth passes to man) is by a Spirit with the man, who inflows either into his thought, or by a living voice.

7573. 'Jehovah gave voices' (Ex.ix.23)=the recession and separation of the communication with those who are in good and truth; for 'the voices,' which were those of thunders,=the Divine truths which enlighten and perfect those who are in Heaven, and terrify and devastate those who are in Hell; and, as they devastate these, they (have the above signification). 7592. 7597.

—². That the 'voices,' which are those of thunders =the truths Divine which enlighten and perfect those who are in Heaven, and terrify and devastate those who are in Hell. Ill.

8313³. 'Their voice resounds like the sea' (Jer.vi.23)=the derivative reasoning.

8360. 'If . . . thou wilt hear the voice of Jehovah thy God' (Ex.xv.26)=faith in the precepts of the Lord. . . 'The voice of Jehovah'=what is enunciated from the Word, thus the precept of the Lord.

8764⁴. 'Its voice as the voice of wheels, and as the voice of Shaddai' (Ezek.i.24, etc.)=(the quality of Divine truth in Heaven); for . . . 'voice' is attributed to Divine truth; and it is therefore said 'the voice of great waters,' because 'waters'=truths; and 'the voice of the wheels,' because 'wheels'=the truths of doctrinal things; and also 'the voice of God Shaddai,' because 'God Shaddai'=truth chiding in temptation and afterwards consoling. Refs.

8766. 'If . . . ye will hear My voice' (Ex.xix.5)=the reception of truth; for . . . 'the voice of Jehovah'=the Word, thus truth Divine. Refs.

8813. 'There were voices and lightnings' (ver.16)=a Divine state in which there was revelation; for 'voices' which are the sounds of thunders,=truths Divine. Ill. 8914.

8823. 'The voice of the trumpet' (ver.19)=heavenly or angelic truth conjoined with Divine, thus what is general of revelation. Ex. 8915.

8824. 'God answered him in a voice' (id.)=the Divine truth a quo.

9234^e. 'The voice (of the Spirits of the moon) was emitted from the abdomen . . .

9307. 'Hear His voice' (Ex.xxiii.21)=obedience to the precepts which are from the Lord; for . . . 'a voice,' when predicated of the Lord,=truths Divine, thus the precepts which are from the Lord . . . and therefore also the Word and doctrine from it, are 'the voice of Jehovah.' Refs.

[A.] 9384. 'All the people answered with one voice' (Ex. xxiv.3)=reception in the understanding by those who are truly of the Church; for . . . 'voice' = the confession which comes forth from the understanding; for the things which belong to the mouth . . . correspond to the intellectual part . . .

9406^o. Truth Divine, or the Lord in ultimates, is meant (also) by 'the voice of His words like the voice of a multitude' (Dan.x.6).

9741^o. 'The voice of the wings' (Ezek.x.)=the truth of faith from good.

9926. 'His voice shall be heard' (Ex.xxviii.35)=the influx of truth with those in the Heavens and on earth; for . . . 'a voice,' when predicated of Aaron, by whom the Lord is represented, =Divine truth; for 'a voice'=the annunciation of it, and . . . it is therefore with those in the Heavens and on earth; for the Divine truth infills all things of Heaven, and makes all things of the Church. Such an annunciation was represented by 'the voice from the bells of gold' . . .

—². That 'voice,' in the Word, =the Divine truth which is heard and perceived in the Heavens and on earth. Ill.

—³. 'The voice of strangers' (John x.5)=falsity.

—⁸. The sound from the bells is (here) called 'a voice'; and in other passages the sounds from trumpets, and also from thunders, are called 'voices,' and by these in like manner are signified Divine truths . . .

10182^o. 'The voice of Jehovah'=the Divine truth which proceeds from His Divine good. Ill.

10240^o. 'Thou hearest the voice thereof' (John iii.8) =that these things come to perception in the external or natural man; 'voice'=what is annunciated from the Word. See E.419^o.

10455. 'There is a voice of war in the camp' (id.)=an assault on truth and good . . . by falsities and evils . . . For 'a voice'=thought and affection, which are the interior things of the voice, thus the quality of the interiors.

10456. 'It is not the voice of a shout—clamoris—for victory, and it is not the voice of a shout for a Thing that is lost' (ver.18)=that Heaven acts on one side, and Hell on the other; thus falsity against truth, and truth against falsity; for 'the voice of a shout' . . . =the quality of the interiors of that nation.

10457. 'The voice of a miserable shout do I hear' (id.)=the lamentable state of their interiors . . . for what is lamentable is expressed in the Original Language by 'a voice,' which=a shout, an affection, and misery; thus 'a miserable shout'; and, as 'a voice'=the quality of the interiors, 'the voice of a miserable shout'=the lamentable state of the interiors.

S. 18^o. 'The voice of Jehovah,' which, in this case

(Ps.xxix.3-9) is thunder, =Divine truth, or the Word, in its power.

R. 37. 'I heard behind me a great voice as of a trumpet' (Rev.i.10)=a manifest perception of Divine truth revealed from Heaven. 'A great voice,' when heard from Heaven, =the Divine truth. Ill. (Why it was heard as a trumpet. Ex.) E.55.

50. 'His voice as the voice of many waters' (ver.15) =Divine truth natural. (=Divine truth in ultimates. E.71.)

—². Thus the 'voice of many waters'=the Lord's Divine truth in the Word. Ill.

218. 'If anyone shall hear My voice' (Rev.iii.20)=him who believes in the Word. . . 'To hear the voice'=to believe in the Word; for the Divine truth of the Word is 'the voice of Jehovah.' (=him who pays attention to the Lord's precepts . . . for 'My voice'=the truths of the Word, of doctrine, and of the derivative faith, thus the precepts. E.249.)

226. 'The first voice which I heard was like that of a trumpet speaking to me' (Rev.iv.1)=the Divine influx . . . and the consequent manifest perception. (=a revelation now of future things, clear and manifest. E.261,262.)

—². Voices like trumpets are heard in Heaven when convocations and disposings in order are taking place.

236. 'Voices (out of the throne)' (Rev.iv.5)=instruction from the Lord. Ex. (=the perception of the Divine truth in the Heavens from the Lord. E.273.)

258. 'A mighty Angel proclaiming with a great voice' (Rev.v.1)=Divine truth from the Lord inflowing deeply into the thought of Angels and men . . . 'A great voice'=Divine truth from the Lord in power. (=exploration by the influx of the Lord into Heaven. E.302.)

288. 'Saying with a great voice' (ver.12)=confession from the heart. (=acknowledgment in the heart. E.337,Ex.)

368. 'Crying with a great voice' (Rev.vii.10)=acknowledgment from the heart. (=adoration from the good of truth, and the consequent joy of heart. E.459.)

396. 'Voices' (Rev.viii.5)=reasonings about faith alone. Ex. E.498.

416. 'Saying with a great voice, Woe, woe, woe' (ver.13)=the deepest lamentation. . . 'The rest of the voices of the trumpet of the three Angels . . . '=the exploration and manifestation of the state of the Church and of life . . . E.530. 531.

437. 'The voice of their wings' (Rev.ix.9)=reasonings. E.558.

443. 'I heard a voice' (ver.14)=a command from the Lord. (=a revelation from the Lord. E.567.)

471. 'He cried with a great voice as when a lion roareth' (Rev.x.3)=a grievous lamentation that the Church has been taken away from Him. (=a testification of severe grief on account of the desolation of Divine truth in the Church. E.601.)

472. See THUNDER, here.

520. 'There were great voices in Heaven' (Rev.xi.15) = celebrations by the Angels. (=enlightenment and joy in the higher Heavens. Ex. E.682.)

553. 'I heard a great voice saying in Heaven' (Rev.xii.10)=the joy of the Angels of Heaven. E.744.

614. 'I heard a voice from Heaven as the voice of many waters' (Rev.xiv.2)=the Lord speaking through the New Heaven from Divine truths. . . For when a voice is heard from Heaven, it is from the Lord. III. (=a Glorification of the Lord from the Divine truths which are from Him. Ex. E.854.) R.615. 616. E.855. 856.

628. 'Saying with a great voice, Fear God' (ver.7)=an admonition that they should not do evils, because they are contrary to the Lord. (=an exhortation. E.873.)

639. 'I heard a voice from Heaven saying unto me' (ver.13)=a prediction from the Lord. (=consolation by the Lord after temptations. E.897.)

645. 'Crying with a great voice to Him that sat on the cloud' (ver.15)=a supplication of the Angels of Heaven to the Lord. (=an annunciation after exploration or visitation. . . For 'a voice' involves the things that are said. E.910.)

676. 'I heard a great voice out of the temple' (Rev.xvi.1)=an influx from the Lord from the inmost of Heaven. Ex. (=a manifestation by Divine truth from the Word. E.959.)

709. 'There came a great voice out of the temple of Heaven from the throne' (ver.17)=a manifestation by the Lord from the inmost of Heaven. E.1013.

710. 'Voices, lightnings, and thunders' (ver.18)=reasonings, falsifications of truth, and argumentations, from the falsities of evil in the Church with those in faith alone. . . E.1014.

760. 'I heard another voice from Heaven' (Rev. xviii.4)=an exhortation from the Lord to all, both those in that religiosity and those not in it. (=an exhortation to those who are in truths and the good of life, to beware of such. . . 'A voice from Heaven' being heard, means from the Lord through the Word; for all things which man imbibes from the Word are 'a voice from Heaven.' Further ex. E.1106.)

792. 'The voice of harpers, etc. shall be heard in thee no more' (ver.22)=no spiritual affection. . . 'Voice' means sound, and all sound corresponds to affection. . . (=no longer any joys. . . E.1185.)

794. (Nor) 'the voice of a mill' (id.)=no searching for, investigation, or confirmation of, spiritual truth. . . (=no understanding of truth from the will of good. E.1187.)

797. (Nor) 'the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride' (ver.23)=no conjunction of good and truth. . . 'Voice,' here, =joy, because it is that of the bridegroom and bride. (=not any joy from the conjunction of good and truth. E.1189.)

809. 'A voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God. . .' (Rev.xix.5)=an influx from the Lord into Heaven, and thus the unanimity of the Angels that (these) should worship the Lord. . . E.1209.

811. 'I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunders, saying, Alleluia. . .' (ver.6) =the joy of the Angels of (the three Heavens). . . 'A voice'=the joy of the worship, confession, and celebration of the Lord. Ex. (=a Glorification of the Lord by all in the Heavens, a Glorification of Him from truths, and a Glorification of Him from the goods of love. . . E.1214-1216.) R.803. E.1196.

816². When Angels speak to a man, they never speak to him from Heaven, but the voice which is heard thence is from the Lord through Heaven. . .

831. 'The Angel. . . cried with a great voice' (ver. 17)=the Lord calling together (all such) from Divine zeal. For 'a voice,' or an influx from the Lord from the Divine Love, is from Divine zeal. . .

882. 'I heard a great voice out of Heaven saying' (Rev.xxi.3)=the Lord, from love, speaking and evangelizing. . . By 'a great voice' is meant speech from love; for 'great' is predicated of love.

M. 11. A voice was (then) heard from Heaven. . . 55³.

446. When the voice begins to become masculine.

Ad. 3/7535. Voices heard coming from the hoofs of horses, from animals, etc. D.330. 1770.

D. 3701. The voice (of the Sirens) was heard as if from a Society of the good. 4598.

5672. Man cannot be enlightened by a living voice from Heaven. Ex.

E. 261². 'Voice'=the proceeding Divine, which is the Divine truth. —³. 644¹⁹.

262. A voice which is heard from Heaven with those who are in the spirit, is wont to be heard like a human voice; but this was heard like a trumpet speaking, because it was clearly perceived by the Angels. . .

283¹³. 'Voice' is predicated of truth. 304⁵⁰, III. 419¹³.

353. For the voices which descend from the Inmost Heaven into the hearing of a man, are heard (as thunder); for they fill the whole brain, and propagate themselves thence towards the hearing. . . It is different with the voices which descend from the Middle Heaven, which, being attended with enlightenment, are heard. . . like voices (or words) of speech. Ex.

355¹⁸. 'The voice of the horseman and the bowmen' (Jer.iv.29)=reasoning. . .

422⁸. 'Voice'=influx.

424. 'He cried with a great voice' (Rev.vii.2)=a Divine command. R.346.

498. Such (reasonings, etc.) are heard in the Spiritual World as the voices of a murmuring, clashing, threatening, and fighting multitude; and, at a distance, where they are not heard, they appear as thunder and lightning. . . As these things originate from the flowing down of the Divine good and truth. . . the voices, thunders, and lightnings, when heard and seen by the good, =the Divine truth as to perception and enlightenment. . .

[E.] 604. 'I heard a voice from Heaven saying unto (Rev.x.4)=a command from the Lord.

614. 'The voice which I heard from Heaven again spoke to me and said' (ver.8)=the exploration of the men of the Church as to the quality of their remaining understanding of the Word . . . for (this) voice from Heaven' involves these things.

650⁷. 'A voice in the window' (Zeph.ii.14)=the preaching of falsity.

668. 'They heard a great voice from Heaven saying to them' (Rev.xi.12)=the Lord's Divine Providence . . . For by 'a voice from Heaven' is signified all that proceeds from the Lord, which, in general, is called the Divine truth; and, with us in the world, the Word; thus, in special, every precept and commandment in the Word. This is called 'a voice from Heaven' because it has descended from the Lord through Heaven . . . That it is the Lord's Divine Providence which is here signified by 'a voice from Heaven,' is because it is treating of the state of Heaven and the Church at its end . . . R.512.

702. 'Voices' (ver.19)=reasonings. R.530.

864⁴. 'To know and hear the Lord's voice' (John x. 4,27)=to do His commandments.

884. 'A great voice' (Rev.xiv.9) = exhortation. R.633.

Vowel.* Vocalis.

See A, E, I, O, and U.

A. 793². In (Hebrew words of the spiritual class) the first three vowels are usually dominant; in those of the celestial class, the last two vowels.

H. 241. The speech of the celestial Angels has much of the sound of the vowels u and o, and that of the spiritual Angels of the vowels e and i; for the vowels are for sound; and in sound there is the affection . . .

—¹. As the vowels do not pertain to language, but to the elevation of its words by means of sound to various affections according to the state of each person, the vowels have not been expressed in the Hebrew language, and they are variously pronounced. By this the Angels Know the quality of a man in respect to his affection and love.

—². The speech of the celestial Angels . . . rarely passes from consonant to consonant except by the interposition of a word which begins with a vowel; and hence it is that in the Word the particle 'and' is so often interposed; (for) in the Hebrew this particle is soft, and sounds from a vowel both ways—utrinque.

261. In the angelic language . . . by the vowels they express affections.

S. 90². In the Third Heaven . . . the vowels are for the sound, which corresponds to the affection; and in that Heaven they cannot utter the vowels i and e; but, instead of them, y and eu; and the vowels a, o, and u are in use among them, because they give a full sound. De Verbo 4².

R. 26². In the Spiritual World . . . a vowel, because it serves for sound,=something of affection or love. T.19².

D. 1645. That the celestial . . . prefer vowels. Ex.

2631. Hence, (in the Hebrew) there have been no vowels, so that the sense of the letter was known from the interior sense . . . and therefore he who perceives the sense of the letter from the interior sense, understands better what is written in the Hebrew without vowels than with them.

4866. Especially are the vowels of service (to Spirits), with much variety in the case of each person. Examp.

5112. When the spiritual Angels speak, their words . . . have an affinity with the vowels e and i; and when they use a, there is still something of e or æ therein; and when they use u, there is something of i or y . . . Whereas the words of the celestial Angels have an affinity with a, o, and u, and therefore [their speech] falls into such words as contain these vowels. On this account, when a man is speaking to them, he is bent from words which contain e and i, to those which contain a, o, and u.

* The vowels named in this article are of course to be sounded as on the continent of Europe.

[D.] 5620^e. The celestial Angels said—as I too have often perceived—that they have not the vowels i and e; but a, o, and especially u; and that y is intermediate between what is celestial and what is spiritual; and as they . . . merely serve for sound, there are no vowels in the Hebrew language as in other languages; but they are added by means of marks above and below.

5622. See HEBREW LANGUAGE, here.

—^e. In place of a (the celestials) use [a vowel] intermediate between a and o; in place of i they have what is almost y; and instead of æ they have eu.

5787. The vowels are according to the nature of things—a, e, i, o, u—as is evident from the celestial Angels: u involves all things; and so on.

5964^e. (In Heaven) arcana are involved in a word by the vowels in respect to sound, and by the consonants in respect to the meaning.

6063². (In the Spiritual World) all the vowels= something that conjoins, as with, in, and so on. I, there, = that which is from what is interior; and so on.

D. Wis. vii. 5^e. (In Heaven) each vowel letter is an affection; and the vowel letters are not written, but pointed.

A. 1651. The wars described in Gen. xiv. = the Lord's combats of temptations. 1659². 1663. 1664.

1659³. In the Most Ancient times, many things were represented by wars, which were called 'the wars of Jehovah,' which = the combats of the Church, and of those who belonged to the Church, that is, their temptations, which are nothing but combats and wars with the evils in one's self, and consequently with the diabolical crew which excites the evils, and endeavours to destroy the Church and the man of the Church. By 'the wars,' in the Word, nothing else is signified . . . 1664, Fully ill.

1664⁸. That it is the Lord alone who sustains all the combat, and who overcomes . . . is everywhere represented by the wars which the sons of Israel waged against the nations. Ill. . . For the wars there . . . all represented the Lord's combats with Hell; and consequently those of His Church, and of the men of the Church. Further Ill.

—¹¹. For the same reason the descendants of Jacob called their wars the wars of Jehovah. And the same was the case in the Ancient Churches, among whom were books called 'The wars of Jehovah' (Num. xxi. 14, 15); which were written in a manner not unlike that in which the wars are treated of in this chapter; but the wars of the Church were signified. 2686. 2897. 3268⁷.

1788. As 'war' = temptations, so all the weapons of war = some specific thing of temptation, and of defence against evils and falsities. Examps. 2686². 2799⁵. 3448.

3353². 'Wars and rumours of wars' (Matt. xxiv. 6) = debates and disputes about truths, which are 'wars' in the spiritual sense.

4599⁵. 'To make war' (Luke xiv. 31) = to fight from truths; for temptations are treated of.

6656. 'Wars' (Ex. i. 10) = combats concerning truths and falsities, or spiritual combats. 7351².

8054³. This is meant by, 'There was war in Heaven . . . ' 8295².

8096. 'To repent when they see war' (Ex. xiii. 17) = to decline from truth in consequence of assaults. Ex.

8117^e. When I wanted to say that in this Earth there are wars, etc. (the Spirits of Jupiter) turned away . . .

8273. 'Jehovah is a man of war' (Ex. xv. 3) = that the Lord will protect against all the evils and falsities which are from the Hells . . . for the Lord alone fights for man . . . The Lord is called 'a man of war' chiefly from the fact that when He was in the world, He, alone, that is, from Himself, fought against the Hells . . . and since then (from the fact) that having thus conquered the Hells, and been made justice, He from His Divine power protects men, and this continually, especially in the combats of temptations. Ill.

—⁴. When 'war' is mentioned in the Word, there is meant spiritual war, which is against falsities and evils, or, what is the same, against the devil, that is, the Hells.

— . Of the wars, or combats, of the Lord against the Hells, it treats in both the historical and prophetic things of the Word; and in like manner of the wars and combats of the Lord for man. With the Ancients

... 'The Book of the Wars of Jehovah' (treated of) the Lord's combats and victories over the Hells when He was in the world; and also of His subsequent perpetual combats and victories in favour of man, His Church, and Kingdom. Ex. 9942⁵. R.11.

[A.] 8295². On wars in the other life. See COMBAT, here.

8313³. 'Prepared as a man for war' (Jer.vi.23)=the cupidity of assaulting truth.

8624. 'Jehovah Nissi'=the Lord's continual war and protection against those who are in the falsity of interior evil. Ex. 8626, Ex.

9182⁶. 'War'=spiritual combat. Refs.

9391¹⁶. 'He hath scattered the peoples that long for wars' (Ps.lxviii.30)... The desire to attack and destroy the Church with its truths is meant by 'to long for wars.' (=reasonings against truths. E.627¹³.)

9393³. 'Man of war' (Ezek.xxxix.20)=truth fighting against falsity.

9396¹¹. 'Wars'=combats concerning truths. Refs.

9642⁷. The alternations which the Church would undergo until it would perish, are described by the various successes of the 'war' (in Dan.xi.).

10455. 'There is a voice of war in the camp' (Ex. xxxii.17)=an attack on the truth and good which are of the Church by the falsities and evils which are from Hell.

—. For 'war'=the combat of truth from good with falsity from evil; and, in the opposite sense, the combat of falsity from evil against truth from good. (For 'war,' in the spiritual sense, is nothing else; and such combats are signified by 'the wars' in the historicals of the Word, and also by 'the wars' in the propheticals. Ill. —³.)

10540⁶. 'No strength in war' (Is.iii.25)=not any resistance against evil and falsity.

L. 5. 'The day of war,' etc.=the advent of the Lord to Judgment. Ill.

14⁹. As the Lord alone conquered the Hells, with no aid from any Angel, He is called 'a Hero,' and 'a Man of wars' (Is.xlii.15)... 'a Hero of war' etc. (Ps. xxiv.8).

—¹¹. In the historicals of the Word, like things are represented by the wars of the sons of Israel with various nations; for... everything written there is written about the Lord.

S. 103. 'The Wars of Jehovah,' in the Ancient Word, as in ours, are meant and described in reference to the Lord's combats with Hell, and His victory over it, when He should come into the world; and the same combats are meant and described in many places of the historicals of our Word, as in the wars of Joshua with the nations of the land of Canaan, and in the wars of the judges and kings of Israel. T.265. 279.

F. 50. For all the wars described in the Word, involve and signify, in the spiritual sense, spiritual wars.

P. 251. That the worshipper of self and nature confirms himself against the Divine Providence when he thinks that wars are permitted... Gen.art.

—. It is not of the Divine Providence that wars take place, because they are united with homicide, depredation, violence, cruelty, and other enormous evils which are diametrically contrary to Christian charity; but still they cannot but be permitted, because, since the time of the Most Ancients... the life's love of men has become of such a nature that it wants to exercise dominion over others, and at last over all; it also wants to possess the wealth of the world, and at last all of it. These two loves cannot be kept in bonds, for it is according to the Divine Providence that everyone be allowed to act from freedom according to reason; and without permissions man cannot be led by the Lord from evil... for unless evils were permitted to break forth, man would not see them... and therefore could not be led to resist them. Hence it is that evils cannot be prevented by any Providence; for they would remain shut in, and... would spread and consume all that is vital in man... It is for this reason that there are lesser and greater wars; lesser, between the possessors of farms or estates and their neighbours, and greater between monarchs of kingdoms and their neighbours. Whether a war be lesser or greater makes no difference, except that a lesser one is kept within limits by the laws of the nation, and a greater one by the laws of nations; both the lesser one and the greater one want to transgress, but the lesser one cannot, and the greater one can, but still not beyond what is possible.

—³. That the greater wars... are not prevented by the Lord, at the beginning, or in the course of them, but only at the end, when the power of the one or the other party has been so weakened that it is in danger of destruction, there are many reasons for, which are stored up in the treasury of the Divine wisdom. Some of these have been revealed to me, among which is this: that all wars... are representative of states of the Church in Heaven, and are correspondences. Such were all the wars described in the Word, and such also are all wars at this day... When the Sons of Israel, who represented the Church, fell away from the precepts and statutes into the evils represented by these nations (enum.)... they were punished by the nation (which represented the particular evil into which they had fallen). Examps.

—⁴. Like things are represented by wars at this day, wherever they are; for all things which take place in the natural world correspond to spiritual things in the Spiritual World; and all spiritual things concern the Church... There are kingdoms in Christendom which answer to (the several nations with which the Israelites carried on wars). But the quality of the Church on earth, and what the evils are into which it falls, and on account of which it is punished by means of wars, cannot be at all seen in the natural world... but it is seen in the Spiritual World, where... all are conjoined according to their various states. The conflicts of these in the Spiritual World correspond to the wars [which take place]... .

—⁵. That the wars which take place in the world are ruled by the Divine Providence... is acknowledged by a spiritual man, but not by a natural man... .

—⁶. The Divine Providence which is called Fortune is in the smallest particulars of even trivial things . . . and most certainly in the affairs of war. Moreover, successes and affairs in war which are happily carried out, are called . . . the Fortune of war; and this is the Divine Providence, acting especially in the plans and meditations of the general . . .

252². The evil (also) perform uses . . . and with more ardour than the good, especially in wars, because an evil man is more crafty . . . and, from the love of glory, is in the delight of killing and plundering . . . his enemies; (whereas) a good man is prudent and zealous only to defend, and rarely . . . to invade. Further ex.

R. 52. 'Wars,' in the Word, = spiritual wars, which are those of truth against falsity, and of falsity against truth; and therefore by the weapons of war are signified such things as are used to fight with in these wars. Examp.

—³. That 'wars,' in the Word, = spiritual wars, which are assaults on truth, and are waged by means of reasonings from falsities. Ill.

548. 'There was war in Heaven . . .' (Rev.xii.7)=the falsities of the former Church fighting against the truths of the New Church. Ex. (=a combat of falsity against truth, and of truth against falsity. Ex. E.734.)

— 'War'=spiritual war, which is that of falsity against truth, and of truth against falsity.

586. 'It was granted to him to make war with the saints' (Rev.xiii.7)=that they assaulted the Divine truths of the Word. 'War'=spiritual war, which is that of falsity against truth, and of truth against falsity; hence 'to make war'=to assault. (=a combat with those who are in truths from good. E.802.) R.704.

833. 'The beast and the kings of the earth gathered together to make war with Him that sat on the horse . . .' (Rev.xix.19)=that all (such) will attack the Lord's Divine truths . . .

858. 'Gog and Magog, to gather them together to war' (Rev.xx.8)=those in merely external worship . . . excited against those who have worshipped the Lord.

T. 407^e. Wars which have as an end the protection of our country and Church, are not contrary to charity; the end from which [they are waged] declares whether there is charity [in them] or not.

315⁶. 'Their young men smitten with the sword in war' (Jer.xviii.21)=truths destroyed by the assaults of falsity.

355². 'Ye shall be satiated . . . with every man of war' (Ezek.xxxix.20)=with the truth from good which destroys falsity. 617²⁵. 650⁴⁸.

—²⁸. 'As a horse of glory in war' (Zech.x.3)=the understanding of Divine truth fighting against evils and falsities, which it will destroy.

357⁴. 'God teacheth my hands war' (Ps.xviii.34). By 'war,' here, is signified war in a spiritual sense, which is war against evils and falsities. This is the war that God teaches.

—⁸. 'The grievousness of war' (Is.xxi.15)=an assault.

—²⁸. 'Jehovah maketh wars to cease even to the extremity of the earth' (Ps.xlvi.9)=[that He will cause to cease] all combat and all dissension from the primes to the ultimates of the truth of the Church. . . 'Wars'=spiritual combats, which, here, are those of falsity against the truth and the good of the Church.

—³⁰. 'I will break the bow, and the sword, and war, from the earth' (Hos.ii.18)=that because of conjunction with the Lord there shall exist no combat of falsity against truth. . . 'War'=combat.

386¹⁶. 'The hands of the sword in war' (Job v.20)=temptation as to the understanding of truth; 'war'=temptation, or combat against falsities. 388¹⁸.

395¹⁰. 'Men returning from war' (Micah ii.8)=those who have shaken off falsities; 'war'=the combat of truth against falsity. (=those who have been in temptations, and have fought against falsities. 555⁸.)

403¹². 'Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more' (Micah iv.3)=that in the (Celestial) Kingdom there shall be no disputation about truths. . . For such have truths inscribed on their hearts, and therefore do not dispute about them.

433³³. 'To take away the strong man and the man of war' (Is.iii.2)=to take away all resistance against evils and falsities. 727¹², Ex.

538¹⁰. 'The men of war' (Ezek.xxvii.27)=those who defend.

573¹². The collision and combat at the end of the Church are described by (the 'war' between the kings in Dan.xi.).

652⁸. 'Men of war'=truths fighting against falsities; and that there will be no defence of truth against falsities, is signified by, 'All the men of war shall be cut off' (Jer.xlix.26; l.30).

[E.] 654⁶⁵. 'Where we shall see no war' (Jer.xlii.14)=that there will then be no infestation by falsities and evils, and no temptations; 'war'=infestation and combat by falsities and evils.

684³⁹. 'Even unto the end of the war desolations are determined' (Dan.ix.26)=even until there is no combat between truth and falsity . . . 'War'=combat between truth and falsity; and 'desolation,' the last state of the Church, when there is no longer any truth, but mere falsity.

768. 'He went away to make war with the remnant of her seed' (Rev.xii.17)=thence from a life of evil an ardent endeavour to assault the truths of doctrine of the New Church. (=to attack and assault by means of reasonings from falsities. R.565.)

817⁶. All the wars which the sons of Israel waged with the Philistines represented the combats of the spiritual man with the natural man, and thus the combats of truth conjoined with good with truth separated from good, which in itself is falsity.

C. 164. On charity in a Commander-in-chief . . . He does not love war, but peace; even in war he continually loves peace. He does not go to war except for the protection of his country . . . but when the war has commenced, he is the aggressor, when aggression is defence.

2332. 'Wash ye your feet' (Gen.xix.2)=application to the Natural of it.

3147. 'Water to wash his feet' (Gen.xxiv.32)=purification there. Ex.

— (On the washing of feet. See FOOT, here, and at 3148. 5669.)

—³. These things were signified by the washings in the Ancient Church; and the same were represented in the Jewish Church. . . The (former) did not believe that they were purified by the washing, but by the washing off—ablutionem—of the unclean things of the natural man . . . But (the latter) believed that they were purified by the washing.

—⁴. That 'washing'=the washing off—ablutio—of these uncleannesses. Ill.

—⁵. (Thus it is evident) that to wash one's self involves something special and peculiar, namely, spiritual washing; that is, purification from the uncleannesses which cleave to man inwardly; and therefore they who knew this, and thought about the purification of the heart—that is, the removal from the natural man of the evils of the love of self and of the love of the world—and who diligently strove to effect it—these observed the rite of washing merely as an act of external worship which was to be done because it was commanded; whereas they who did not know this . . . worshipped this rite in an idolatrous manner. Ex.

3693. Good and angelic Spirits, who fall into a state of the love of self and from that into a state of falsity, are remitted a little into their natural . . . state, and are there imbued with Knowledges . . . which apply to that condition of things. 6377. 'He washes his clothing in wine' (Gen.xlix.11)=that His Natural is the Divine truth from His Divine good: for 'to wash'=to purify.

6730. 'To wash at the river' (Ex.ii.5)=worship from what is false; for 'to wash'=purification from uncleannesses as spiritually understood; and therefore it=worship; because worship is for the sake of purification.

7442⁹. 'To wash'=to purify.

7601⁶. 'The washing of the feet'=purification from sins, which is effected by means of the truths of faith; for by these man is taught how he should live.

8245. On this account (the inhabitants of Jupiter) wash and cleanse their faces very much.

8789. 'Let them wash their garments' (Ex.xix.10)=the purification of truths; for 'to wash'=purification from spiritual uncleannesses.

8902¹⁶. 'The washing of the hands over the heifer at a rapid river' (Deut.xxi.6)=purification from this evil, because it had been done from the immoderate zeal of one who is ignorant of truth. 9262³.

9088². Man is regenerated by means of the truths of faith, and this was signified by the washings by which, in ancient times, they were cleansed; and the same is now signified by the waters of baptism.

9572⁹. 'Washing'=the purification of the internal man.

9670⁶. By (Aaron's) 'washing of his flesh' (Lev.xvi.4) is signified that the purification (of good) is effected by means of the truths which are from good.

9959³. All the expiation which was effected by means of washings, burnt-offerings, and sacrifices, represented the purification of the heart from evils and falsities, thus regeneration . . .

10002. 'Thou shalt wash them with waters' (Ex.xxix.4)=purification by means of the truths of faith. 10243, Sig. and Ex.

10047⁶. 'Washed'=purified and regenerated.

10049. 'Thou shalt wash the intestines' (ver.17)=the purification of the lowest things. . . The purification which was represented by 'the washing,' is purification from evils and falsities; for these are uncleannesses in the spiritual sense. 10235. 10237, Sig.

10050. 'To wash the thighs' (id.)=the purification of the natural man.

10239. 'Aaron and his sons shall wash out of it'

(Ex.xxx.19)=a representative of the purification and regeneration of man by the Lord. Ex. 10240, Ex.

[A.] 10243. (The washing of the disciples' feet by the Lord (John xiii.) fully ex.)

—². 'To wash the head, hands, and feet'=regeneration; and so also does 'he that is washed.' Thus 'to wash the feet'=to purify the Natural of man; for unless this is purified and cleansed with a man while he lives in the world, it can never be purified afterwards. Ex.

—³. That he who has been regenerated is not to be purified except as to the Natural, is meant by, 'he that is washed needeth not to be washed except as to the feet, and is clean every whit.' And that all purification is effected by the Lord alone, is meant by, 'If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me.'

10386. For the washing of baptism is nothing but spiritual washing, which is regeneration. L.184. T.670, Gen. art.

N. 209². (Refs. to passages on the subject of washing.)

—⁴. That a total washing . . . by immersion in the waters of Jordan, =regeneration itself, the same as baptism. Refs.

P. 151². By the 'washing' (of the disciples' feet) is meant spiritual washing, which is purification from evils. 'To wash the head and the hands'=to purify the internal man; and 'to wash the feet'=to purify the external man. That when the internal man has been purified, the external man is to be purified, is meant by, 'he that is washed needeth not to be washed except as to the feet.' That all purification from evils is done by the Lord alone, is meant by, 'If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me.'

—⁵. Among the Jews, washing represented purification from evils; and this is what is signified by 'washing,' in the Word . . .

R. 19. 'That loveth us, and washeth us from our sins in His own blood' (Rev.i.5)=who, from love and mercy, reforms and regenerates men by means of His Divine truths from the Word. It is evident that 'to wash us from sins'=to purify from evils, and thus to reform and regenerate; for regeneration is a spiritual washing. E.30.

378. 'And have washed their robes' (Rev.vii.14)=who have cleansed the things of their religion from the evils of falsity. 'To wash,' in the Word, =to cleanse one's self from evils and falsities. (=the removal of falsities by means of temptations. E.475.)

T. 670. The washings which were commanded to the Israelites. Ex. 671, Ill.

—⁶. The Lord retained . . . baptism instead of the washings.

671². That the washing of the spirit of man was meant by the washing of his body. Ill.

673. (Thus) washings, and baptizings also, (are useless) unless the internal of the man be purified from evils and falsities. Ex.

D. 6005. The Lord conjoins good with truth in the spiritual mind . . . and this comes to man's perception only obscurely; but it becomes more and more manifest as the man studies the good of life, which is done in the natural man. This is what is meant by . . . 'he that has once been washed, needeth not to be washed except as to the feet;' for in proportion as a man does goods, a conjunction is effected of spiritual good with natural, and this is done by means of a moral life . . . and this is done as often as the man thinks and wills what is good as of himself.

E. 71³. 'The washings' (among the Israelites) merely represented purifications from evils and falsities by means of the truths of faith and a life according to them. Refs. 275²².

239¹⁹. 'Wash thyself in the pool of Siloam. . . He went and washed himself, and came seeing' (John ix.7) . . . 'The pool of Siloam'=the Word in the letter; and 'to be washed there'=to be purified from falsities and evils. 475¹⁷.

240⁴. 'I washed thee' (Ezek.xvi.9)=to purify from evils. 329²⁴. 375²⁷, Ex. 475⁹.

— That 'to wash'=to purify from evils and falsities. Refs.

391¹². 'I wash my hands in innocence' (Ps.xxvi.6) =to be purified from evils and falsities.

475². In ancient times . . . washings represented purifications from falsities and evils; for the reason that 'waters'=truths, and 'uncleannesses,' falsities and evils; and all purification from falsities and evils is effected by means of truths. This was why washings were instituted by command among the sons of Israel . . . Ill.

—⁴. 'To wash the hands and feet' (Ex.xxx.19)=to purify the natural man; and 'to wash the flesh' (Lev.xvi.4)=to purify the spiritual man.

—⁷. 'He that is washed' (John xiii.10)=one who is interiorly clean; 'needeth not save to wash his feet'=that then he is to be cleansed exteriorly. 666², Ex.

—¹³. That 'to wash'=to purify from falsities and evils, is evident from, 'Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before Mine eyes; cease to do evil' (Is.i.16). . . 'Wash thine heart from wickedness, O Jerusalem, that thou mayest be saved' (Jer.iv.14). . . 'Wash me from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin . . .' (Ps.li.2,7). Ex.

—¹⁵. 'To wash the hands in innocency' (Ps.lxxiii.13)=to bear witness that one is innocent, and pure from evils and falsities; for the washing of the hands was a testification of innocence. Ill.

—¹⁸. Naaman washing in the waters of Jordan seven times (2 Kings v.10)=complete purification from falsified truths (by means of introductory truths). 724⁵.

951³. The washing of the disciples' feet, represented purification from evils and falsities by the Lord by means of the Divine truth.

—'. 'Waters'=truths, in special, natural truths, which are Knowledges from the Word. III.

—². When it is known that by 'waters,' in the Word, are meant truths in the natural man, it is evident what was signified by the 'washings' . . . and by baptism, etc.

384. 'He shall lead them to living fountains of waters' (Rev.vii.17)=that He will lead by means of the truths of the Word to conjunction with Himself. (=in Divine truths. E.483.)

409. '(The star) fell upon a third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters' (Rev.viii.10)=that by it all the truths of the Word have been completely falsified. E.518.

410. 'A third part of the waters became wormwood' (ver.11)=all the truths of the Word falsified by self-intelligence. E.520.

411. 'Many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter' (id.)=the extinction of spiritual life with many, caused by the falsified truths of the Word. E.521,522.

497. 'They have Power over the waters to turn them into blood' (Rev.xi.6)=that those who avert themselves from the two essentials of the New Church, falsify the truths of the Word. (=that with such, truths are turned into falsities from evil. E.645.)

563. 'The serpent cast out . . . water as a flood' (Rev.xii.15)=reasonings from falsities in abundance. E.763.

685. 'The Angel of the waters' (Rev.xvi.5)=the Divine truth of the Word. (=the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom. E.971.)

700. 'The water thereof was dried up' (ver.12)=that the falsities of these interior reasonings have been removed. E.996.

719. 'The great harlot that sitteth upon many waters' (Rev.xvii.1)=that religiosity . . . living in the truths of the Word adulterated. (=that rules over all things of the Word, and thus over the holy things of the Church. E.1033.)

811. 'I heard as it were . . . the voice of many waters' (Rev.xix.6)=the joy of the Angels of the Middle Heaven. (=the glorification of Him from truths. E.1215.)

889. 'I will give unto him that is athirst, of the fountain of the water of life freely' (Rev.xxi.6)=that to those who long for truths for any spiritual use, the Lord will give, from Himself, through the Word, all that conduce to that use.

932. 'A pure river of the water of life, clear as crystal' (Rev.xxii.1)=the Divine truth of the Word in abundance translucent from its spiritual sense, which is in the light of Heaven.

956. 'Let him that willeth take the water of life freely' (ver.17)=that he who from love wills to learn truths, and to appropriate them to himself, will receive them from the Lord without any labour of his own. . . 'The water of life'=Divine truths from the Lord through the Word.

M. 231. Shouts heard as if they bubbled up through water. Ex.

293⁷. She sprinkled it with the water of the fountain.

I. 20². Water=natural truths.

D. 363. 'Drawers of water-aquarii'=those who suppose that they merit Heaven. Ex.

1002. They desire to punish . . . by tepid or hot water.

1043. When walking beside waters, (evil Spirits try to throw me in).

3177⁶. (Why Charles xii. was made to drink water only.)

3618. On impure and filthy water: its correspondence with self-glorying. Ex. 3619.

4589. An aqueous appearance seen in a certain Hell: it represents what is exteriorly sincere.

4653. They then appear encompassed as with waters. 4679⁶. 5827.

4788. Water which was seen to overflow something on fire=falsities.

E. 71². That 'waters'=the truths of faith, and also the Knowledges of truth. Ill. 118³. 281². 283⁴. 433³. 483².

179⁷. 'The waters issuing out from under the threshold of the house towards the east' (Ezek.xlvii.1)=Divine truth proceeding from the Lord, and inflowing with those who are in the good of love to Him. Further ex. 342⁷. 422¹⁵. (=Divine truth reforming and regenerating. 513⁷.) 629⁸.

239⁷. 'Waters'=truths. 304⁵⁰. 372⁷. 388²⁸. 401²¹. 405⁶. 419¹³. —14. 422⁸. 433¹³. 453¹². 455⁶. 518³. Ill. 537¹¹. 632⁴. 644¹⁷. 650³⁶. 730¹⁷. Coro.34.

261³. 'Waters'=Divine truths in ultimates. 419¹¹.

275¹⁷. 'Its waters cast up mire and dirt' (Is.lvii.20)=the falsities from which come evils of life and falsities of doctrine.

283¹³. 'Waters'=truths and the perception of them.

304⁶. 'Mighty waters' (Is.xxviii.2)=the falsities of evil.

—17. 'Waters'=the truths of the Church. —51.

342⁸. 'Water'=truth from a spiritual origin.

355²⁵. 'Waters'=falsities. 401¹⁷. 405²¹. —42. 638¹⁵.

364⁶. 'The water of separation'=the truth of the natural man.

372⁴. 'The great waters' (Ezek.xxxi.15)=truths which savour of good and derive their essence from it.

374⁷. '(A land of) rivers of water' (Deut.viii.7)=of the doctrinal things of truth.

375²⁷. 'I washed thee with waters' (Ezek.xvi.9)=to reform and purify by means of truths.

—34. 'He will lead me to waters of rest' (Ps.xxiii.2)=the truths of Heaven.

376⁴. 'Come ye to the waters' (Is.lv.1)=the Word where truths are. (=truths from the Word for those who desire them. 840².)

—29. The Lord's 'making the water wine' (Johnii.)=that He made the truths of the external Church into truths of the internal Church. . .

386²¹. 'He turneth the desert into a lake of waters' (Ps.cvii.35)=that where there is ignorance of truth there shall be abundance of it.

411⁵. 'The waters' out of the rock (Num.xx.)=the Divine truth. 444⁹.

—28. 'The strange cold waters flowing down' (Jer.xviii.14)=falsities in which there is no good.

455⁷. 'That he may dip the tip of his finger in water' (Luke xvi.24)=in truth from the Word. . . Thus, 'to cool his tongue with water'=to allay the thirst and cupidity of perverting truths, and of confirming falsities by their means.

—20. 'In the wilderness shall waters break out' (Is.xxxv.6)=that truths shall be opened where they were not before.

475¹⁷. 'The waters' of the pool of Siloam=the truths of the Word.

481². 'A tree planted by the waters' (Jer.xvii.7)=a man in whom there are truths from the Lord. 518¹².

483¹². 'The water that I shall give' (John iv.14)=the Divine truth. . . in which there is life.

484³. In both weeping aloud and shedding tears there comes out water which is bitter and astringent, which is caused by an influx. . . from the Spiritual World, where bitter water corresponds to a lack of truth because of falsities, and to the consequent grief.

504²⁴. 'When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee' (Is.xliii.2)=that falsities shall not enter.

513³. 'Their fish shall rot because there is no water' (Is.i.2)=no longer any living Scientific, because no truth.

514¹². 'That do business in many waters' (Ps.cvii.23)=those who study the. . . truth of the Word.

518⁷. 'I will pour out waters upon him that is thirsty' (Is.xliv.3)=to instruct in truths those who are in the affection of truth.

—19. 'The voices of many magnificent waters' (Ps.cxciii.4)=Divine truths.

—21. Divine truth from the Lord, the reception of which confers intelligence, is signified by 'the waters from the rock in Horeb' (Ps.lxxviii.15,16,20; cv.41). 'The rock'=the Lord; and 'the waters that flowed out'=the Divine truth from Him.

—34. 'Waters out of the north' (Jer.xlvii.2)=the falsities of doctrine which are from self-intelligence.

—35. 'Then the waters had overwhelmed us. . . then the waters of the proud had gone over our soul' (Ps.cxxiv.4,5). 'The waters of the proud'=the falsities which favour and confirm the love of self, and also the falsities of doctrine which are from self-intelligence. . . 'The waters that had overwhelmed them'=falsities, and the consequent destruction of the spiritual life which man has by means of truths and a life according to them. (=the falsities which inundate. . . a man when he is in temptations. 556¹⁴.)

—38. 'Whose waters are tossed' (Jer.xlvi.7,8)=falsities themselves.

—39. That temptations are signified by 'inundations of waters.' Ill.

532⁸. 'To drink waters' (Amos iv.8)=to learn truths.

538. The quality of the falsity (there) is Known from the waters themselves; (thus) falsities which are from grievous evils appear over those Hells like thick and black waters; and falsities from the evils of the love of self, like red waters. . . Truths also appear (there) like waters, but like limpid and pure waters. (For) . . . those in whom only the first degree has been opened are in an atmosphere which is as it were aqueous, [but] limpid and pure. . . (For) an atmosphere which is as it were aqueous, corresponds to natural thought and perception; but one which is limpidly aqueous, to the spiritual natural thought and perception in which are the Angels of the Ultimate Heaven; whereas one which is thickly and densely aqueous, and which verges to black or to red, corresponds to that natural thought in which there is nothing spiritual. . . This is why such Hells are called 'seas,' and 'deeps.'

587¹⁴. 'I will sprinkle clean waters upon you' (Ezek. xxxvi.25)=to purify. . . by genuine truths.

594¹⁰. 'He layeth the beams of His chambers in the waters' (Ps.civ.3)=that the Lord forms the Heavens and the Church from Divine truths.

[E.] 618³. 'The waters of Marah'=truths adulterated. Ex.

629⁸. How intelligence increases through the reception of the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord, is described by 'the waters' which the prophet passed through (Ezek.xlvii.3-5): 'the waters to the ankles'=such intelligence as is possessed by the sensuous and natural man; 'the waters to the knees'=such as is possessed by the spiritual natural man; 'the waters to the loins'=such as is possessed by the spiritual man; and 'the waters that could not be passed through'=celestial intelligence, which is called wisdom, and is such as is possessed by a celestial man, or an Angel of the Third Heaven; which, being unspeakable, is said to be 'a river that could not be passed through'; and because it is far above the natural man, the waters are called 'waters to swim in.' Further ex.

644¹¹. 'Waters'=truths of doctrine.

650²⁷. 'His branches were multiplied because of many waters' (Ezek.xxxi.5)=an abundance through spiritual truths which are from the Knowledges of truth from the Word.

654⁴⁹. 'The waters shall fail in the sea' (Is.xix.5)=that there will be no truths in the natural man.

677⁷. 'To go into waters' (Ezek.vii.17)=to weep (thus grief).

695¹⁰. 'To give a cup of cold [water]' (Matt.x.42)=to (act) from obedience; for 'water'=truth in affection; and 'cold [water]'=truth in obedience.

—²². 'Waters'=falsities of faith.

701¹². 'He will bless their bread, and their waters' (Ex.xxiii.25)=the fructification of good and the multiplication of truth. . . 'Waters'=all the truths of this good.

727¹². 'The staff of water'=the truth of the Church.

—¹³. 'To drink waters by measure'=a lack of truth.

730²⁴. 'I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land into springs of waters' (Is.xli.18)=to fill with truths the spiritual man and the natural man where before there were no truths.

—³⁵. 'Waters out of the rock of flint' (Deut.viii.15)=the truths of this good from the Lord.

741²². 'The channels of waters appeared' (Ps.xviii.15)=the truths of the Church overturned.

822³. When a man is in the exercise of charity, the sphere of all his affections and the derivative thoughts appears around him like limpid water. . .

1033². 'O thou that dwellest upon many waters' (Jer.li.13)=the truths of the Word, and thus the holy things of the Church. Ex.

1035³. The falsities which are not from evil, may be compared to waters which are not pure, but which when drunk do not lead to drunkenness. . .

1076. 'The waters which thou sawest, where the harlot sitteth' (Rev.xvii.15)=the doctrinal things from the Papal Consistory in general. Ex. (=those under the Papal dominion, but in the truths of the Word variously adulterated and profaned. Ex. R.745.)

1145³. 'We drink our waters for silver' (Lam.v.4)=the lack of the Knowledges of truth.

Coro. 34. In the opposite sense, by 'waters' are signified falsities; but by impure waters, such as are those of marshes, of bad smelling tanks, of urine, and, in general by all hurtful and death-dealing waters, and therefore by the waters which cause death by inundating.

Water, To. Irrigare.

Watered. Irriguis.

A. 107. 'To water the garden' (Gen.ii.10)=to give intelligence. E.518⁴.

1586. 'Well-watered' (Gen.xiii.10)=that goods and truths can grow there.

5694⁴. 'To water the mountains' (Ps.civ.13)=to bless those who are in love to the Lord and towards the neighbour.

9050⁸. 'Their soul shall be as a watered garden. . . I will water the weary soul, and every soul that is sorrowful' (Jer.xxxi.12,25). . . 'To be watered'=to be instructed. (=that such have intelligence and wisdom from this source. E.374³.)

E. 405²¹. 'He watereth the mountains from His chambers' (Ps.civ.13)=that all goods [come] through truths from Heaven. 'To water' is predicated of truths, because 'waters'=truths.

433¹³. 'A fountain shall go forth from the house of Jehovah, and shall water the stream of Shittim' (Joel iii.18)=that out of Heaven from the Lord there will be truth of doctrine which will enlighten those who are in knowledges.

644¹³. 'To water the earth, and to make it bring forth and bud' (Is.lv.10)=to vivify the Church, that it may bring forth the truth of doctrine and of faith, and the good of love and charity.

—¹⁷. 'To water its furrows. . .' (Ps.lxv.10)=to fill with the Knowledges of good and truth.

—²¹. 'To water the earth' (Hos.vi.3)=to fertilize the Church, which is said to be fertilized when truths are multiplied, causing an increase of intelligence; and when goods are fructified, causing an increase of heavenly love.

Watercourse. Aqueductus.

A. 795³. 'Rivers and streams of waters=ductus aquarum' (Is.xxx.25)=the truths of faith.

E. 518¹⁵. 'She sent out her watercourses unto all the trees of the field' (Ezek.xxxi.4)=the multiplication of the Knowledges of truth.

3068. See JAR, here. 3079.

9394³. 'Waterpots,' etc.=scientifics. Ex.

T. 350. (Like) the water in a pitcher.

E. 376²⁹. 'There were six waterpots of stone set there according to the cleansing of the Jews' (John ii.6)=all these truths in the Word, and thence in the Jewish Church and its worship. Ex.

Water-serpent. Serpens aquea.

A. 7295. 'Aaron's . . . rod became a water-serpent' (Ex.vii.10)=that mere fallacies and the derivative falsities reigned with them. . . 'A water-serpent'=fallacies and the derivative falsities. 7298.

Wave. Under AGITATE, and BROOD.

Wave. Fluctus.

A. 953. A sea heaving with great billows, seen.

9755⁷. 'The sea is come up upon Babel; she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof' (Jer. li. 42). 'The sea'=falsity from scientific; and its 'waves'=reasonings from these, and the consequent denials. (=falsities. E.275¹⁴.)

—⁹. 'Who stirreth up the sea, that the waves thereof are in uproar' (Jer.xxxi.35)=to dispel the falsities of scientifics, from which come reasonings about truths.

—¹⁵. In the opposite sense, 'the sea'=memory-knowledge—scientificum—which pays regard to the world; and its 'waves'=reasonings from worldly things about Divine things.

D. 3531. There rose up a roll or billow of people: in the other life such waves—undae—or rolling masses—volumina—are people.

5651. Earthquakes which appeared like huge billows of the sea, seen.

E. 275⁸. 'Thou rulest in the uprising or the sea; when it lifteth up its waves' (Ps.lxxxix.9). 'The sea'=the natural man . . . and 'the waves it lifts up'=falsities.

419²³. 'The waves of the sea lifted up' (Ps.cvii.25)=temptations . . . Deliverance from these is signified by 'He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still' (ver.29). Ill. 514²³. Ex.

511². Relatively to its waves, the sea=the disputation and reasoning which is carried on by means of scientifics.

538⁵. 'Israel . . . shall smite the waves in the sea' (Zeeh.x.11)=that those who are in truths from good (are protected by the Lord) against reasonings from falsities against truths.

—¹². 'Billows,' and 'waves—undae'=evils and falsities. Ill.

706²³. 'Who stilleth the uproar of the seas, the uproar of their waves' (Ps.lxv.7)=(the Lord's Divine power over) the disputations and reasonings of those who are beneath the Heavens, and are natural and sensuous.

Wave. *Unda.Wave, To. *Undare.Streaming, A. Undatio.

See UNULATION.

A. 2733. A gentle influx as it were waving . . .

6200. The material ideas of thought appeared in the midst of a kind of wave. Ex.

6853⁶. Immersion in falsities appears there like one immersed in waves. Des.

8733⁶. With the celestial . . . what is of their will rolls itself . . . into what is like a wave . . .

9297⁶. From the sphere that streams from them.

H. 240⁶. The particulars—singula—of the thought and speech of the Angels . . . appear like a limpid stream or atmosphere . . .

E. 342³. See SEA, here.

822³. This spiritual sphere manifests itself . . . as a streaming.

Wax. *Cera.Waxen. Cereus.

A. 3263⁹. 'Camels carrying wax, resin, and stacte' (Gen.xxxvii.25)=the interior goods of such. (Compare 4748.)

5621. 'Wax, and stacte' (Gen.xliii.11)=the truths of good of the interior Natural; for 'wax,' here, aromatic wax,=the truth of good. . . By 'wax,' here, is not meant common wax, but aromatic wax, such as storax. It is this kind of wax which is meant by the (Hebrew) word here used, which also means spice. From this it is evident why this aromatic wax=the truth of good; for all spices, because sweet scented=the truths which are from good. Ex. (See STACTE, here.)

H. 108. Bees . . . build cells of wax . . . The wax serves the whole human race for lights. W.356. T.13³.

W. 355. They gather wax from flowers for a home.

T. 645. Have stopped their ears as with wax.

D. 3410⁶. They are rather waxen lights, because there is in them more of sulphur than of tallow.

E. 405¹². Of these evils . . . it is said that they are melted 'as wax before the fire' (Micah i.4).

Way. Via.

A. 519. See WALK, here.

521. Perception (is) by an internal way . . . doctrine, by an external way . . .

627. 'All flesh had corrupted its way upon the earth' (Gen.vi.12)=that the Corporeal of man had destroyed all the understanding of truth. . . 'Way'=the understanding of truth, or the Truth itself. Ill.

795⁵. 'Way,' and 'paths'=the truths of faith. 1298⁶. 2761.

1495². Instruction is merely an opening of the way . . .

1635⁶. Speech enters by an external way; but that of Spirits . . . by an internal way. H.248.

1884⁶. When being 'carried by the Spirit' there is no reflection upon the way . . . and the man is led through ways he is ignorant about.

1901². Intellectual truth . . . inflows through an internal way . . .

1902². Scientifics and Knowledges . . . inflow by an external way . . . 2632.

1928. 'In the way to Shur' (Gen.xvi.7)=the things which proceed from scientifics. . . 'A way'=that which leads to truth, and that which proceeds from truth.

[A.] 1993^e. 'Way'=truth. 3923^e. 9144^e.

2231. 'To keep the way of Jehovah' (Gen.xviii.19)=the doctrine by which they are instructed, (and which) is from Him.

2234. That 'way'=doctrine, is evident from the signification of 'a way.' 'A way,' in the Word, is predicated of truths, because truths lead to good, and proceed from good; and, as 'a way' is predicated of these, 'a way'=doctrine, because doctrine comprehends in one complex all the things which lead to good, that is, to charity.

2333. 'Ye shall . . . go on your way' (Gen.xix.2)=confirmation in truth. Ex. and III.

2516². The Lord is doctrine itself, and therefore is called 'the Way,' etc. 2531¹.

2557². These things are effected by the way of the body, that is, by an external way . . .

2632². His Divine Rational was not born by an external way, which is that of the senses, as His former Rational was; but by an internal way from the Divine Itself.

—^e. When man is regenerate, the Lord inflows by an internal way, that is, by the good of conscience.

2701. This ('opening of the eyes') is effected by an influx . . . through the way of the soul, or the internal way, unknown to the man. This is his state of enlightenment . . .

2826^e. 'Him shall He teach in the way that He shall choose' (Ps.xxv.12)=in the truth.

2851^e. For there are two ways which lead into the rational mind . . . a higher or internal way, through which there enters good and truth from the Lord; and a lower or external way, through which there comes up evil and falsity from Hell; and the rational mind itself is in the middle position to which the two ways tend. H.430. (Compare E.208³, below.)

—⁸. 'The ways of Zion do mourn' (Lam.i.4)=that there are no longer any truths from good. (=that Divine truths are no longer sought. E.863².)

2875. The good of life, or the affection of good, is insinuated by the Lord through an internal way, unknown to the man; but the truth of doctrine, or faith, through an external way . . . into the memory. 309S. 3324. 3995². 6269².

3101. 'To know whether Jehovah had prospered his way, or not' (Gen.xxiv.21)=inquiry concerning Divine truth. 'Way'=truth.

3123. 'I being in the way' (ver.27)=in a state of the conjunction of truth in the Rational . . . for this is the subject here treated of. 'Way'=truth. And a person is said to be 'in the way,' when he is advancing to where he intends to go.

3128². All good inflows by an internal way, or by the way of the soul . . .

3142². 'Prepare ye the way of Jehovah' (Is.xl.3) (and other similar passages)=to prepare one's self for the reception of truth. Ex.

3175². Man has to learn all truth by an external way—that of the hearing and sight;—through this way must truth be insinuated . . .

3177. 'Jehovah hath prospered my way' (Gen.xxiv.56)=that all things were now provided . . . as to the truth that was to be conjoined with good; for 'way'=truth.

3310². 'Some fell on the hard way' (Luke viii.5)=into falsity. (See Life 90, below.)

3477. There were represented . . . a broad way which led to Hell, and a narrow way which led to Heaven. Des. . . The Spirits were asked which way they wanted to go. They said, The broad way. But their eyes were suddenly opened, and they saw the serpents in the broad way, and the Angels in the narrow way . . . D.4216.

3502^e. Doctrinal things, or the Knowledges of good and truth, cannot be communicated to the natural man except by means of delights . . . accommodated to it; for they are insinuated through an external or sensuous way.

3527³. 'The rough ways shall become smooth' (Luke iii.5)=that the falsities of ignorance [shall be turned] into truths.

3708⁵. 'They wandered in the wilderness, in a solitude of a way' (Ps.cvii.4)=those who are in ignorance of good and in ignorance of truth. (=in a penury of the Knowledges of truth and good. E.223³.)

—²². When man suffers himself to be illuminated by the Word . . . an internal way is opened, and thus an influx . . . from the Lord; (otherwise) the internal way is closed . . .

4010. 'He set a way of three days' (Gen.xxx.36)=completely separated. 6904, Ex.

4123. 'A way of seven days' (Gen.xxxi.23)=what is holy of truth.

4387. 'Way'=truth in will and act.

4454². In the Most Ancient Church . . . the Lord inflowed by an internal way into the good of their will, and through this into their . . . truth. 4489².

4489³. But with the Ancient Church, the Lord could not inflow by an internal, but by an external way . . . 4493².

4489⁴. To see goods by an internal or prior way (as in the Most Ancient Church) is like seeing in the day . . . whereas to see by an external or posterior way (as in the Christian Church) is like seeing in the night . . .

4581. They who are led . . . to good by an internal way, are in the good of love; but they who are led by an external way, are in the good of faith.

4628. These (spiritual) odours inflow by an internal way.

4641^e. The good which Esau represents, inflowed by an internal way . . . but that which Jacob and Israel represents, inflowed by an external way . . .

4652². The speech of Spirits inflows into my ear by an internal way; but human speech, by an external way.

4867. 'The way' (Gen.xxxviii.16)=falsity. 4891.

4891. 'Way' is predicated of truth; and, in the opposite sense, of falsity.

4977². For truth inflows by an external or sensuous way; but good, by an internal way; and that which inflows by an external way is felt by the man; but—until he has been regenerated—not that which inflows by an internal way.

5081. (Intelligence and wisdom) are effected in man . . . by an internal way and by an external way; the Divine inflows by an internal way, and what is of the world by an external way; and they meet in the man . . .

5135¹². As evil closes the way, and prevents the influx of good and truth . . .

5201³. 'To pasture upon the ways' (Is.xlix.8)=to be instructed in truths. 6078².

5280³. In so far as man suffers himself to be regenerated, there is insinuated by the Lord, into the Natural, by an internal way, the light of truth from good.

5490. 'To give them provision on the way' (Gen.xlii.25)=support for the truths they had. . . 'Way'=truth: but here, 'on the way'=so long as they were in that state; for 'to be on the way'=a state of truth conjoined with good.

5960. 'By the way' (Gen.xlv.23)=meanwhile.

6398. 'Dan a serpent on the way' (Gen.xlix.17)=their reasoning about truth . . . 3923².

7041. 'In the way' (Ex.iv.24)=what is instituted. Ex.

7756. Thus the way by which the good of charity enters is called an internal way; and the way by which the truth of faith enters, an external way; and that which enters by an internal way is not perceived . . . 7910⁶.

8028. When Angels are about to come, a Spirit is sent to prepare the way . . . So John the Baptist 'prepared the way.' D.1656.

8078³. Faith merely natural is . . . insinuated by an external way . . . But spiritual faith is that which is insinuated by an internal and an external way at the same time. Insinuation by an internal way causes it to be believed, and then that which is insinuated by an external way causes it to be confirmed. . . The insinuation of faith by an internal way is effected by the reading of the Word, accompanied by enlightenment from the Lord . . .

8093. 'The way of the land of the Philistines' (Ex. xiii.17)=a passing to the truth of faith which is not from good. . . 'Way'=truth; here, to pass to it.

8098. 'The way of the wilderness' (ver.18)=to undergo temptations, thus to confirm the truths and goods of faith.

8107. 'To lead them in the way' (ver.21) being said of Jehovah's leading, = Providence, and the Divine auspices.

8439⁶. The man with whom the Divine influx goes (down to the ultimate of order) may be called a way of Heaven.

8495³. 'Not doing thine own ways' (Is.lviii.13)=not acting from proprium. (=not to favour the falsities of evil. 10362.)

8670. 'All the travail that had come upon them by the way' (Ex.xviii.8)=labour in temptations . . . For 'the way' (here) is the wilderness.

8707. 'Thou shalt make known to them the way wherein they must walk' (ver.20)=the light of intelligence, and the derivative life; for 'way' is predicated of the understanding of truth; here, in an interior degree . . .

8753³. That the truths of faith had failed and been perverted, is signified by, 'the ways ceased, and the travellers walked through crooked ways' (Judg.v.6).

8910³. 'The belly' corresponds to the way towards Hell.

9034³. The truth of the literal sense . . . is received by an external way, that is, through the hearing . . . and the internal man chooses and calls forth from it the truths which agree with the good which inflows from the Lord by the way of the soul . . .

9212⁶. 'The multitude spread their garments in the way' (Matt.xxi.8) because by 'a way' is signified the truth by means of which the man of the Church is led.

9224². For the truths of faith enter by an external way—namely, through the hearing—and store themselves in the memory . . . But the good of charity inflows by an internal way—namely, through the internal man—from Heaven . . .

9227². The external way is through the hearing (and sight) into the memory, and from the memory into its understanding . . . The truths which must be of faith enter by this way, to the end that they may be introduced into the will . . . The good which inflows from the Lord by the internal way, inflows into the will . . . and there meets the truths . . . 9995³. 10047³.

9272⁷. 'This is the way, walk ye in it' (Is.xxx.21)=in the truth of doctrine, and the good of life. (= instruction and obedience. 'Way'=truth leading. E.600¹¹.)

9304. 'To keep (or guard) thee in the way' (Ex. xxiii.20)=His Providence and guardianship from the falsities of evil. . . 'Way,' here,=falsity, as well as truth, because it is said 'to guard,' and he who leads in truth also guards from falsity . . . and it is the falsity of evil which infests and assaults truth.

9341⁴. 'Way'=truth seen and revealed. Refs.

—⁵. 'To lead in the way' (Jer.ii.17)=to teach truth. See E.654⁶⁰.

10422. 'They have departed quickly from the way which I commanded them' (Ex.xxxii.8)=that they had removed themselves from Divine truth.

—². That 'a way'=truth, is derived from the appearance in the Spiritual World; for there, also, there appear ways and paths; and as Spirits go only to those with whom they have been consociated by love, their quality as to truth is known from the way in which they go; for all truth leads to its own love . . . Hence it is that even in common speech, a way means truth . . . And hence also it is that, in the Word, by 'way,' 'path,' 'track,' 'street,' are signified truths; and, in the opposite sense, falsities. Ill. H.496^e. D.5485.

[A.] 10565. 'Make known to me Thy way, that I may know Thee' (Ex.xxxiii.13)=instruction about the Divine as to its quality . . . 'The way of Jehovah'=the Divine truth leading.

H. 195. The way (there) is lengthened or shortened according to the desire, although it is the same. W.74.

396. These loves, with their delights, inflow from the Lord . . . by an internal way, which leads from above . . . whereas the other loves, with their delights, inflow from the flesh and the world by an external way, which leads from below. 400³.

428^e. There is no approach to any heavenly Society, except by a narrow way, the entrance to which is guarded.

429. To every heavenly Society . . . there is one way from the World of Spirits, which branches into a number as it rises.

479^e. Ways appear in the World of Spirits, some of which lead to Heaven, and some to Hell; each way leads to some Society. Good Spirits walk in those ways only which lead to Heaven, to that Society which is in the good of their love, and they do not see ways which lead elsewhere; whereas evil Spirits walk in those ways only which lead to Hell, to that Society which is in the evil of their love, and do not see ways which lead elsewhere; or, if they see them, they do not want to go in them. Such ways there are real appearances, which correspond either to truths or to falsities; and therefore in the Word, 'ways'=these. 590². W.145. P.60. R.176.

519. After (this) instruction, the Spirits . . . are brought to a way which leads upwards to Heaven, and are delivered over to the Angel guards there . . . Afterwards each one is led by the Lord into his own Society, and this too through various ways . . . The ways through which they are led are known to no Angel, but to the Lord alone.

520. There are eight ways (which lead to Heaven from the places of instruction), two from each place; one ascends towards the east, and the other to the west. They who come into the Celestial Kingdom are introduced by the eastern way; and they who come into the Spiritual Kingdom, by the western way. The four ways which lead to the Celestial Kingdom appear adorned with olives and other fruit trees . . . and those which lead to the Spiritual Kingdom, with vines and laurels. Ex.

534. There was (seen) a broad way tending to the left, or north, with many Spirits going on it, and which terminated at a large stone, from which two ways diverged, one to the left, and one opposite, to the right, the former being narrow, and leading through the west into the south, and thus into the light of Heaven; and the latter broad, and leading obliquely downwards towards Hell. At first all seemed to go on the same way, until they came to the great stone . . . where the good turned to the left . . . but the evil fell over the stone . . . and then ran on in the broad way. (This representation fully ex.) D.5798, Ex.

—³. Those thoughts of man which proceed from intention or will, are there represented by ways . . . and everyone walks in accordance therewith.

— (This shows) what is meant by . . . 'broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there are who walk by it; and narrow is the way . . . that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it' (Matt. vii.13,14). The reason the way that leads to life is narrow, is not because it is difficult, but because few find it.

590². This is why 'ways,' in the Word, =the truths which lead to good; and, in the opposite sense, the falsities which lead to evil.

J. 48^e. In the Spiritual World, the ways in which anyone walks, are the actual determinations of the thoughts of his mind; and hence it is that 'ways,' 'walkings,' and the like, in the Word, =the determinations and progressions of spiritual life.

C. J. 11. All enlightenment . . . enters man by an internal way.

46². He was then seen to wander through ways in thought . . . but whenever he arrived at the end of the way, his eyes were opened, and he saw that he was wandering . . . I saw him so wandering for two years.

Life 90. 'Some seed fell upon the way' (Luke viii.5) =with those who do [not] care for truth. (=Divine truth received solely by the corporeal sensuous. E.632^e.) (=received in the memory only. 740⁶.)

P. 60. Heaven is given to those only who know the way to it, and walk therein. This way may in some measure be known from a Knowledge of the quality of those who constitute Heaven . . . In the Angelic there is a Knowledge of the way from walking in it, and a walking in the way through the Knowledge of it.

—². In the Spiritual World . . . every person sees his own way as of himself; the reason of which is that there are ways there for every love, and the love opens its own way, and leads to its consociates. No one sees any other ways than the one of his love; from which it is evident that Angels are nothing but heavenly loves; for otherwise they would not have seen the ways which lead to Heaven. 319^e.

131^e. The Lord enters man by no other way than an internal way, which is through the Word, and doctrine and preachings from it; and miracles close this way.

197^e. The three then entered together the way of self-prudence, which leads into Hell. (Compare M.354^e.)

R. 153¹⁰. Their eyes are then opened, and they see a way which leads to some cavern.

501. See STREET, here.

611. Their eyes are then opened, and they see a way which leads to some Society in Heaven. They enter this way, and ascend, and in the ascent there is a gate, and a guard at it, who opens the gate, and they pass in . . . T.622.

664. 'Just and true are Thy ways' (Rev.xv.3)=that all things which proceed from Him are just and true. . . 'Ways'=truths which lead to good. (=that all the truths of Heaven and the Church are from Him. . . For, when predicated of the Lord, 'ways'=all the truths of Heaven and the Church. E.940.)

700. 'That the way of the kings from the rising of the sun might be prepared' (Rev.xvi.12)=those who, from the Lord, are in truths from good. . . 'To prepare the way'=to prepare for introduction. (=that the Divine truth might inflow from the Lord. For 'way'=influx, because all influx from one Society to another—thus from the Lord—is through ways opened in the Spiritual World. E.997.)

M. 10⁶. When (Spirits) have been prepared, they see ways opened to them to Societies of their like . . . and they then enter these ways with delight, because they are the ways of their love.

42^e. (The angel husband and wife) were conveyed in a chariot by a paved way between flower-beds . . .

78². The way was shortened and anticipated by the changes of state induced on our minds in accordance with the genius of the inhabitants through whom we passed.

T. 11^e. The faith of God enters man by a prior way, which is from the soul into the higher things of the understanding; whereas Knowledges about God enter by a posterior way, because they are imbibed from the revealed Word by the understanding through the senses of the body; and in the middle of the understanding there is a meeting of the influxes . . .

79⁸. At last (these Spirits who were in merely natural loves) came to a way in which the delights of these loves breathed on them, and they said, Let us go this way. They did so, and descended, and at last came to those who were in the delights of the like loves . . . and became demons.

160². I saw in the north a paved way, crowded with Spirits . . . and I had heard that this is the way through which all pass who depart from the natural world . . . This way is terminated in the middle (of the World of Spirits). Ex.

D. 899. There are two ways into the human understanding: a way through the senses . . . and a way through Heaven from the Lord. Ex.

1110. That those who want to injure the innocent . . . quickly betake themselves to a way at the back, towards Hell. Ex.

2209. Brutes have a sense not possessed by man, namely, of knowing the way. Ex.

5583. See WALK, here. 5863. E.97.

5786b. They induce ways and streets by phantasies . . .

5792. Ways both without and within (between the upper and lower cities). Ex.

5798. That the way which leads to Heaven is the same way (for all) as far as the corner stone. Ex. . . I spoke with the Angels about its being believed that it is difficult to go the way to Heaven . . . and therefore it was shown by a way. (See above, at H.534.)

5871. All Spirits, after vastation, are now led through ways which lead to the Societies of their life . . . and are not allowed to stray from them. 5872.

5986. Spirits are allowed to go along the ways which they see, and each one sees a way in accordance with his affection and the derivative thought; yet many ways are stopped up with bars, because if they walked in them those below and those above would suffer . . . for the lower and higher things have been so ordained . . . that there is a mediate influx also from the higher ones into the lower.

5991. How Spirits are explored by the ways in which they go.

5998. Spirits are led through various ways . . . before they come to their own corresponding place . . .

E. 97². That 'ways,' in the Word,=truths, or falsities. III.

140⁴. 'The ass turned three times out of the way' (Num.xxii.)=that an enlightened understanding did not accord with the thought of a sorcerer, which is meant also by what the Angel said . . . 'I went forth to withstand thee, because thy way is evil before me' (ver.32). By 'way' is signified that which a man thinks from intention.

167³. 'To give every man according to his ways' (Jer.xvii.10)=[according to] his truths that are of faith.

208³. Two ways lead to the Rational of man; one from Heaven, and the other from the world. Good is introduced through the way from Heaven, and truth through the way from the world. In proportion as the way from Heaven has been opened in a man, in the same proportion he is affected with truth, and becomes rational, that is, in the same proportion he sees truth from the light of truth. But if the way from Heaven has been closed, the man does not become rational. Ex. . . To think aright about the Lord and the neighbour opens the way from Heaven; but to think not aright about (them) closes this way.

[E.] 223⁵. 'He led them also into a straight way' (Ps. cvii.7)=into genuine truth. 730³⁷.

280⁵. See PATH-semita, here. 405⁹. 412²². 555¹⁸. 652⁶. 734². 781¹⁵.

365²². 'The way-farer hath ceased' (Is. xxxiii.8)=no longer any truths of faith.

388⁷. 'That your ways may be laid waste' (Lev. xxvi.22)=that they will be deprived of truths; for 'ways'=the truths which lead to good.

417⁷. See PASS THROUGH, here.

444¹². 'Ye have turned aside out of the way' (Mal. ii.8)=that the Israelitish Church has perverted the truths of the Word. 'Way'=the truths of doctrine. (=to live contrary to Divine truth. 701⁹.)

447⁴. 'The stars from their courses fought against Sisera' (Judg.v.20)=combat by means of the Knowledges of truth and good which come from the Lord through Heaven; 'the stars'=these Knowledges, and 'courses' (or 'ways')=truths.

518⁶. 'I will even make a way in the wilderness' (Is. xliii.19)=that there shall be truth where there was none before.

696¹². 'Teach me Thy way, O Jehovah; I will walk in Thy Truth' (Ps. lxxxvi.11)=teach truth according to which we must live . . .

—13. 'Blessed is everyone that . . . walketh in His ways' (Ps. cxxviii.1)=that lives according to Divine truths.

—18. 'I will give them one heart and one way, to fear Me' (Jer. xxxii.39)=one will and one understanding to worship the Lord. . . 'Way'=the truth of the understanding leading.

721²⁰. 'Go ye not in the way' (Jer. vi.25)=that at such a time . . . the things of doctrine are not to be consulted when taking counsel for one's self.

727²⁰. 'The way of Egypt' (Is. x.26)=the scientifics of the natural man, from which reasonings are effected.

730¹⁸. 'Upon the ways hast thou sat, as an Arabian in the wilderness' (Jer. iii.2)=to insidiate lest anything of truth should come forth and be received. 'Ways'=the truths of the Church.

780¹⁰. 'As a leopard will I watch upon the way' (Hos. xiii.7)=the falsification of truth through reasonings from the natural man; 'way'=truth leading to good; and 'to watch-observe'=the intention to pervert it.

811¹⁹. 'I will make straight all his ways' (Is. xlv.13)=the truths which proceed from good.

1155². For these (internal means of reformation) enter by an internal way, and cast out evils and falsities . . . But external means enter by an external way, and do not cast them out, but shut them in. Ex.

D. Wis. i⁵. Two ways were presented to my view; one was called the way of wisdom, and the other the way of folly. Des. (Out of three hundred of the learned) two hundred and sixty entered the way of folly; and only forty the way of wisdom. Des.

xi. 3a. (Otherwise) a man sees no way of egress from Hell, and no way of entrance into Heaven; for truths must teach these . . . And as the way to Heaven or to Hell is from the world, and as man's life is in the world . . . it follows that this life is the way which the truths teach; and therefore if the man's life is in accordance with the truths of the Word, the way to Hell and from Hell is closed, and the way to the Lord and from the Lord is opened. . . This is what is meant by, 'I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life' (John xiv.6). But if the man's life is contrary to the truths of the Word, the way from Heaven and to Heaven is closed, and the way to Hell and from Hell is opened, and the man's life becomes . . . death.

De Verbo 13. Enlightenment through the Word takes place by an interior way; but enlightenment by immediate revelation, by an exterior way. The interior way is through the will into the understanding; the exterior way is through the hearing into the understanding.

(Compare E.357³, where these 'weapons'=falsities.)

9954³. The reason the weapons of war were anointed, was that they=truths fighting against falsities; and truths from good are those which prevail against them, but not truths without good; and therefore the weapons of war [when anointed] represented the truths which proceed from the good which is from the Lord, thus the truths by means of which the Lord Himself fights in men, for them, against falsities from evil, that is, against the Hells. E.375¹¹.

E. 131¹⁸. 9182¹⁰. 'Can the sons of the wedding-chamber-nuptiarum (Greek, numphonos) mourn, so long as the bridegroom is with them?' (Matt.ix.15; Luke v.34). Those are called 'sons of the wedding-chamber' who are in the truths of the Church and receive good; for the good which is from the Lord is 'the bridegroom.' The reason the sons of the wedding-chamber do not mourn so long as the bridegroom is with them, is that they are in a blessed and happy state—and thus with the Lord—while they are in truths conjoined with their good.

10109⁴. That 'a priest's daughter married to a stranger was not to eat of the heave-offering...' (Lev.xxii.12)=that the holy things of the Church cannot be appropriated to good which is not conjoined with the truths of the Church.

382a². In the Heavens the wedlocks are spiritual, and should not be called wedlocks, but conjunctions of minds from the marriage of good and truth. But on earth they are wedlocks, because they are not of the spirit only, but also of the flesh. And, as there are no wedlocks in the Heavens, the two consorts are not called husband and wife . . . From this we may know how the Lord's words about wedlocks, in Luke xx.35, 36, are to be understood.

These are possible on earth, but not after death, thus not in the Heavens, as is said of the five foolish virgins, who also were invited to the nuptials, but could not enter, because they had not the marriage of good and truth; for they had no oil, but lamps only. 306. That when the period of betrothal is completed, the wedding ought to take place. Ex.

— Among customary rites (which are both formal and essential) are weddings (or nuptials); (for) 1. The wedding constitutes the end of the precedent state—which had been inaugurated by the betrothal, and which is chiefly a state of the spirit—and the beginning of the subsequent state which is to be inaugurated by marriage, and which is a state of the spirit and the body together . . . and therefore on that day they put off the state and name of bridegroom and bride, and put on those of married partners . . . 2. The wedding is an introduction and entrance into a new state, which is, that a virgin becomes a wife, and a youth a husband, and both, one flesh . . . 3. The wedding is the entering upon the complete separation of the love of the sex from conjugal love . . . 4. It appears as if the wedding constitutes merely an interposition—interstitium—between these two states, and that it is therefore only a formality which may be omitted; but still there is also in it this essential thing—that the above-mentioned new state is to be entered upon by a covenant; that consent is to be declared in the presence of witnesses; and is also to be consecrated by a priest; besides other things which establish it. As there are essential things in weddings, and as a marriage does not become legitimate until after them, nuptials are celebrated in the Heavens also.

Week. Septimana.

A. 395. As ('seven' = what is sacred) both the greater and the lesser intervals of time were distinguished into sevens, and were called 'weeks.' Ill. 728². —⁴.

1670. The time of seven days, or of one week, = the beginning of temptation; and 'fourteen,' or that of two weeks, = the same.

1825. The last time of the Church is signified by 'the third day,' 'the third week,' etc.

3845. 'Fulfil this week' (Gen. xxix. 27) = a further succession of the study or earnest diligence; (for) 'a week' = a state, and also an entire period; here, therefore, the sequent state and period, consequently, what is successive. . . . When 'a week' is mentioned in the singular, it = the end of a prior state and the beginning of the sequent one, thus a new state, to 'fulfil' which, is [to do so] from beginning to end. The reason 'a week'—like all times in special—is a state, also a period, is that all states have their periods, that is, their beginning, succession, and end; yet, in the other life, these are not perceived as times, but as states and their successive developments. In this instance it is evident that . . . by 'a week' the ancients understood any period that was distinguished into seven parts, whether it was one of days, years, or ages . . . for it here means a period of seven years. And as, with them, 'seven' = what is holy, 'a week' = a holy period, and also what is holy of a period.

7346. 'Seven days were fulfilled' (Ex. vii. 25) = the end of that state . . . For 'seven days' = an entire period from beginning to end, thus a full state, like a 'week.' 7890. 8421.

9228³. 'Seven weeks even to Messiah the Prince' (Dan. ix. 25) = that the Lord will come in the fulness of time; thus an entire period is signified.

—^e. 'A week' = what is full.

9741^e. 'Forty-two months' = the same as six weeks; and six weeks = the same as the six days of one week . . . and 'a week' = an entire period, greater or smaller.

Life 97. Let people resist evils in intention even once a week, or twice in a month, and they will perceive a change.

R. 10². Hence it is that 'a week,' in Daniel and elsewhere = an entire period from beginning to end, and is predicated of the Church.

489². Six weeks = what is complete even to the end; for 'six' has this signification; and 'a week' = a state; and 'seven weeks,' a holy state, which is the state of a new Church, when the Lord commences His Kingdom.

E. 20. 'Seven' = the beginning and the end, thus an entire period, and a full state, like 'a week.'

633. 'Forty-two' = the end of the former Church and the beginning of the new one . . . because this number means six weeks, which = the same as the six days of one week, namely, a state of combat and labour, and thus the end when the Church has been completely devastated, or when evil has been consummated; and 'the seventh week,' which then follows, = the beginning of the new Church. . . 'Six weeks' also = what is plenary and complete.

664. In the Word, all times, as 'weeks,' = states. 673.

684³⁴. 'Seventy weeks are decreed upon thy people' (Dan. ix. 24) = the time and state of the Church which then existed among the Jews.

—³⁶. 'Seven weeks' (ver. 25) = a full time and state.

—³⁷. 'After sixty-two weeks it shall be restored . . . ' (id.) = the full time and state after His coming . . . —³⁸.

—⁴⁰. 'He shall confirm a covenant for one week' (ver. 27) = the time of the Reformation, when the Word was again read and the Lord acknowledged, that is, the Divine in His Human . . . The time of the Reformation is signified by 'one week.'

—'. 'But in the midst of the week, he shall cause the sacrifice and meat-offering to cease' (id.) = that still interiorly with those who were reformed there would be no truth and good in the worship . . . 'The midst of the week' does not signify the middle of that time, but the inmost of the state with the Reformed . . . 'a week' = the state of the Church.

Weep. Flere, Deslere.
Weeping. Fletus.

A. 2240⁶. 'The voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her' (Is. lxxv. 19) = that there shall not be evil.

2689. '(Hagar) lifted up her voice and wept' (Gen.

xxi.16)=a further degree of grief; for 'to lift up the voice and weep'=the last [extremity] of grief, because weeping with an uplifted voice is nothing else. It is a state of the desolation of truth, and of far removal from truths, with those who are becoming spiritual, that is described in this verse.

4354. '(Esau and Jacob) wept' (Gen.xxxiii.4)=the effect of joy on account of the conjunction of good with truths through love.

4565. 'Allon-bacuth' (Gen.xxxv.8) means 'the oak of weeping'; and 'an oak'=the lowest of the Natural . . . and 'weeping' a last farewell; from which it was customary to weep for the dead . . .

4786. 'His father wept for him' (Gen.xxxvii.35)=interior mourning; for 'to weep'=the last extremity of grief and sorrow, thus interior mourning. . . Wailing and weeping over the dead was a representative external in the Ancient Churches, by which was signified interior mourning. Ill.

5480. '(Joseph) wept' (Gen.xlii.24)=mercy; for 'to weep,' when predicated of the Lord, =to have mercy, because mercy is love grieving. Ill.

—^e. 'Jerusalem' over which 'Jesus wept' (Luke xix.41) that is, which He had mercy on, and over which He grieved, =the Church, the last day of which, when there would be no charity and consequently no faith, is meant; and on this account, from His mercy and grief, He wept.

5693. '(Joseph) sought where to weep' (Gen.xliii.30)=the effect of mercy from love.

5873. '(Joseph) uttered his voice in weeping' (Gen.xlv.2)=mercy and joy; for 'to weep'=the effect of mercy; and also of sorrow. As it also=the effect of love, it=joy.

5927. '(Joseph) wept' (ver.14)=the effect of mercy; for 'to weep'=what is from mercy, thus the effect of it.

5928. 'And Benjamin wept upon his neck' (id.)=reception and thence what is reciprocal.

5930. '(Joseph) wept over them' (ver.15)=the effect of the affection; for 'to weep'=the effect of mercy; here, of affection.

6500. '(Joseph) wept over him' (Gen.l.i)=sorrow. Ex.

6507. 'The Egyptians wept for him' (ver.3)=the sadness of the scientifics of the Church; for 'to weep'=the deepest sadness, and is representative of internal mourning.

6566. 'And Joseph wept when they spake unto him' (ver.17)=reception from love; for 'to weep'=what is significative of both sadness and love.

6736. 'Lo the child wept' (Ex.ii.6)=sadness.

— That 'weeping'=grief of heart, is evident from the fact that weeping bursts out of the heart, and breaks out into lamentations through the mouth. And that 'the shedding of tears'=grief of mind, is evident from the fact that it comes out from the thought through the eyes. (Continued under WATER.) This shows why it is that, in the Word, when 'tears' are mentioned, 'weeping' is also mentioned. Ill.

617²⁶. Lamentation because truth is destroyed, is signified by 'weeping' (Is.xxii.12); and because good is destroyed, by 'wailing.'

630¹⁴. 'To weep between the court and the altar' (Joel ii.17)=a lamentation over the vastation of Divine truth and Divine good in the Church.

Well. Puteus.

See under BEER, BEERSHEBA, ESEK, FOUNTAIN, and PIT.

A. 1688. 'The valley of Siddim was pits, pits,' or 'full of pits,' 'of bitumen' (Gen.xiv.10)= what is unclean of Falsities and cupidities. . . 'Pits' = Falsities. . . Falsities are called 'pits' from the unclean water in them.

2702. 'Hagar saw a well of water' (Gen.xxi.19)= the Word of the Lord from which are truths; for 'a well of water,' and 'a fountain' = the Word, and also doctrine from the Word, and consequently truth itself.

— . As the Spiritual Church is here treated of, 'a well' is mentioned, and not 'a fountain.'

— . 'The wells,' in these passages, = the doctrinal things about which they contended . . .

—². 'A well' = the Word, or doctrine, in 'They journeyed to Beer: this is the well whereof Jehovah said unto Moses, Gather the people together, and I will give them water. Then sang Israel this song: Spring up, O well; answer ye from it. The well which the princes digged, the willing of the people digged it, in the Lawgiver, with their staves' (Num.xxi.16-18). (= the Word of the Ancient Church. 3424³.)

2720⁴. 'Because of the well of water which Abimelech's servants had taken away' (Gen.xxi.25) = (the Lord's indignation on account of) the doctrine of faith, which the scientifics wanted to attribute to themselves.

—7. 'That I have digged this well' (ver.30)=that the doctrine is from the Divine.

3053. 'By the well of waters' (Gen.xxiv.11)=for the receiving of the truths of faith.

3096. 'She ran again to the well to draw' (ver.20)=a lower affection of truth; for 'a well'=truth, but truth which is lower. . . 'A fountain' (that is, a spring) is mentioned when a purer and when a higher truth is treated of; but 'a well,' when a truth not so pure, and a lower truth; as in this chapter, in which sometimes 'a fountain,' and sometimes 'a well' is mentioned. Natural truth is lower truth.

3412. 'All the wells which his father's servants had digged . . . the Philistines had stopp'd them up' (Gen. xxvi.15)=that those who were in the [mere] knowledge of Knowledges did not want to know the interior truths which are from the Divine, and so obliterated them. . . 'Wells,' here = interior truths which are from the Divine, because . . . they are said to have been digged by his father's servants 'in the days of Abraham his father,' and 'Abraham'=the Divine Itself of the Lord. 3420.

3413. 'And had filled them with dust'=by earthly things, that is, the loves of self and of gain.

3419. 'Isaac . . . digged again the wells of waters which they had digged in the days of Abraham his father' (ver.18)=that the Lord opened those truths which [had existed] among the Ancients. . . 'Wells of waters'=the truths of Knowledges; 'wells'=truths, and 'waters,' Knowledges.

3422. Thus the names given to fountains and wells=the Things which were understood by them, and which belonged to truth.

3424. 'The servants of Isaac digged in the valley, and found there a well of living waters' (ver.19)=the Word as to the literal sense, in which is the internal sense. For . . . 'a valley'=what is lower; and 'a well of living waters'=the Word in which are truths Divine, thus the Word as to the literal sense in which is the internal sense. . . The reason the Word is called 'a well' (as well as 'a fountain') is that the sense of the letter is relatively such, and also because, relatively to the spiritual, the Word is not a fountain, but a well. —³, III.

3428. 'They digged another well, and strove over that also' (ver.21)=the internal sense of the Word—whether there is such a thing. Ex.

3432. 'He digged another well, and over that they strove not' (ver.22)=the literal sense of the Word. Ex.

3445. 'There the servants of Isaac digged a well' (ver.25)=doctrine therefrom. For 'a well'=the Word; and, as the Word is doctrine itself, and therefore all the doctrine of the Church is from the Word, 'to dig a well'=the doctrine from it; that is, from the literal sense of the Word, because this is here treated of.

3464. 'And they showed him concerning the causes of the well which they had digged; and they said, We have found waters' (ver.32)=interior truths thereby; for 'a well'=the Word; and 'waters,' truths from the Word . . . There are interior truths in all the doctrinal things which are drawn from the literal sense of the Word, because (this) is like a well in which there is water, for in everything of the Word there is an internal sense . . .

3765. 'Behold, a well' (Gen.xxix.2)=the Word. . . The Word is here called 'a well,' because the Natural is treated of, which, regarded in itself, apprehends the Word only as to the literal sense . . .

3768. 'For out of that well they watered the droves' (id.)=that the knowledge is from the Word.

3769. 'There was a great stone upon the mouth of the well' (id.)=that the Word was closed. Ex.

3771. 'They rolled the stone from upon the mouth of the well' (id.)=that they unclosed the Word. 3789.

3798. 'Jacob . . . rolled the stone from upon the mouth of the well' (ver.10)=that the Lord, from natural good, uncovered the Word as to its interiors.

4050. There appeared a well from which came forth a bright white mist. It represented the infundibulum of the brain. Ex.

6774. '(Moses) dwelt near a well' (Ex.ii.15)=studious application in the Word. Ex. 6776.

—, When the Word is called 'a well,' it = the Word as to the literal sense . . .

9086². 'An ass or an ox fallen into a well' (Luke xiv. 5). . . 'A well,' here, = the same as 'a pit,' that is, falsity.

R. 421. 'The key of the pit of the abyss' (Rev.ix.1)=their Hell opened. 422.

—². That pit, which is like the mouth of a furnace. Des. B.89.

D. 1557. Joseph put into a pit, and drawn out. Ex.

1588. This Earth called a stinking pit.

5458. They were all cast into a very deep and dark pit. . . 5460a^o.

E. 535. 'The pit of the abyss'=the Hell where and whence are falsities of evil. 536. 537.

537¹¹. As 'pits-foveae' have nearly the same signification as 'wells'; for they are like wells, I will quote some passages in which they are mentioned. (Continued under PIT.)

539. 'There went up a smoke out of the pit' (Rev.ix. 2)=dense falsities from . . . the Hell where are those who have falsified the Word. 541.

Coro. 33². Like one who digs a pit, and covers it with boards. . .

A. 1453. 'Bethel on the sea,' i.e. 'on the west' (Gen. xii.8)=(an obscure state as to Knowledges) . . . for, in the Word, 'the west'=what is obscure.

1605. 'The west' (Gen.xiii.14)=those who are to come; and also those who are not in love.

[A.] 3708. 'Thou shalt break forth to the sea,' i.e. 'to the west' (Gen.xxviii.14) = good as yet obscure, thus in its commencement.

—¹³. See EAST, here. 3900⁹. 9668³. H.151^e. E.239¹⁰. 340²². 422³. —⁴.

—¹⁸. That 'the west,' in the opposite, = evil. Ill.

9642⁹. See CORNER, here.

—^e. 'The west' = the good of love in its setting. 9648.

9653. 'The west,' or 'sea' = a state of good in obscurity; for the reason that 'the sun' = the Lord as to the good of love . . . and therefore its setting = good from Him in an obscure perception. And, as a man . . . has obscure perception when he is in exterior things . . . the west is called also 'the sea.' Ex. 9755-10189.

9755². The west, for the Heavens, is (at the back), opposite the Sun. H.141. 142. W.129, Gen.art.

10179^e. In Heaven . . . they who are in obscure perception of good are in the west. H.148.

H. 149. So in each Society . . . those in a less degree (of love and charity) dwell in the west.

150. Hence, the west, in the Heavens, = love and its good in obscure perception.

520. They who come to the Spiritual Kingdom, are introduced by the western (of the two ways from each of the places of instruction).

558². The evil Spirits between the north and the west. Des.

563. The Spirits in the western quarter towards the south. Des.

—². They advanced further into the western quarter.

587². Hence the Hells in the western quarter are the worst of all . . . Those in them des.

—⁴. The direfulness of the (other) Hells increases according to their proximity to the western quarter . . .

596. The infernal kingdom opposite to the Celestial Kingdom is in the western quarter; and those there are called Genii.

J. 48. The Swedes appeared towards the west; the Danes in the west.

— . Most of (the Papists) appeared in the western quarter . . . (Compare 58².)

— . All the Mohammedans appeared in the west towards the south. C.J.68.

58^e. In the west, dwelt, in front, those of (the Papists) who had lived in the dark ages. Des.

61⁹. Lastly, the Judgment was executed upon those (of the Papists) who dwelt more remotely in the western quarter . . .

C. J. 42. In the western quarter (of the spiritual London) dwell those who profess faith. At the right in this quarter is the entrance to this city, and the exit from it (for those who live evilly).

F. 67. 'The west' (Dan.viii.4) = the evil of the natural man.

W. 121. Those (Angels and Spirits) who are in a lower degree of love, dwell in the west.

144. Therefore the Spirits who are in the love of dominating from the love of self . . . look with their eyes to the west of that World . . .

R. 238^e. Hence, in the Hebrew, 'the sea' is 'the west.'

901. 'On the west three gates' (Rev.xxi.13) = introduction into the New Church for those who are . . . less in the love or affection of good; (for) 'the west-occusus' = the love and affection of good in a lower degree.

—^e. They who are less (in love to the Lord and thence in affection, dwell) in the west.

M. 3³. The third company, which was the first of the wise ones from the western quarter (deliver their sentiments concerning heavenly joy and eternal happiness).

—⁴. The fourth company, which was the second from the western quarter (do the same).

14. The prince entered by a wider door, from the west.

77. The Heaven-dwellers in the west, (or those in the Copper Age) visited.

—⁵. Adulterers are cast into the fires of the west, (which are) evil loves. 79^e.

79². We proceeded through the south to the region bordering on the west. Des. We entered the western tract of this region. Des.

268². Those in the phantasy of possessing all wealth (were found) looking to the west and the north.

T. 160². On the left, towards the west (of the World of Spirits) are the Societies formed of those who are against love to God and towards the neighbour.

476. In the west are those who are in evil.

D. 4923. When a state of sunset (or of west) comes to (the celestial Angels) their mountains appear to sink down . . . according to the state of sunset at the time . . .

5233. Those in the east had been in the greatest delight of exercising command . . . Those in the west, had been in such [delight] obscurely-tali obscuro.

5246. The Mohammedans who become Christians (in Heaven) . . . ascend higher and higher even to the west . . .

5346. (The Babylonians) in the west were those who were in the greatest love of self, having the exercise of command as the end; those in the east were in the delight of the love of exercising command . . .

5481. In the western quarter towards the south dwell those who are cunning and malicious, and who want to lead others towards the north [-west], where are those who are dull. See 5482.

5503. See LAST JUDGMENT, here. 5535.

5535a. They are explored by this: that when let into the general or common state of their life, they turn themselves to the west; or if to the east, they spring back to the west . . . For to be turned to the west is to be turned to the world. (Continued under EAST.)

5676. To the west (in the other life) are those who are in the love of self, and in interior thick darkness.

5692. Most of the cunning and deceitful dwell in the western quarter, partly upon lofty mountains, and partly in a plain . . .

5892°. He went remotely into the west, nearest the north, to the most wicked. . . He then went further, in the same line, and there stayed. There were evil ones there, but not so wicked as those at the front.

5895. On those who are most remotely in the west. Beyond the most wicked of the Babylonish nation in the west, there are Hells . . . in which the wickedness is lessened by degrees, until you come to the Mohammedans and gentiles; and this for the reason that there may be equilibrium.

6016°. The places of (those who have been cruel, and after long vastation are devoid of perception) are in the extremity of the west, above the lands there.

E. 316¹⁶. 'A he-goat came from the west' (Dan. viii. 5)=faith separated from charity originating from evil of life.

401²⁸. Those who dwell in the west are those who are in the obscure good of love. 417². 422³. J.(Post.)12.

406¹. When 'the sea' means 'the west,' it=what is natural; because, in the Spiritual World, those who dwell in the western quarter are in natural good.

418². Into the east and the west, the Lord inflows with Divine good more powerfully than with Divine truth . . . consequently, these are more in love and charity . . .

422³. Therefore 'the west,' in the Word,=the good of love in obscurity. 724²⁰, Ill.

439³. 'O Naphtali . . . possess thou the west and the south' (Deut. xxxiii. 23)=the derivative affection of truth and enlightenment. (=the subservient good of love, and the light of wisdom. R. 354².)

449¹². The tribes of Ephraim, Manasseh, and Benjamin . . . pitched 'on the west' (Num. ii. 18-24), because in Heaven those dwell at the west, and at the north, who are in obscurity of good, and in obscurity of truth, thus who are in natural good and truth.

652². They who are in the obscure affection of the good of love dwell in the western quarter (of the cities there); and also walk there . . .

971. The Heavens (of the Celestial Kingdom) are in the eastern and western quarter.

J. (Post.) 268². In the west (of the spiritual London) re those who are in the obscure affection of good: those who are there are timid at opening their thoughts.

Whale. Balaena.

See WHALE=cetus, and LEVIATHAN.

A. 819. Still further to the left (in the Hells of hatred) there appear great fishes, monstrous whales, which swallow a man and vomit him out again. See D. 1382.

6015⁷. Pharaoh is compared to 'whales in the seas' (Ezek. xxix. 3), because 'a whale=balaena seu cetus'=the generals of scientifics. 6693¹. E. 513⁵.

7293. 'A water-serpent' (Ex. vii. 9)=mere fallacies and the derivative falsities . . . for, in the Original, 'serpent' is here expressed by the same word as 'a whale,' which is the largest fish of the sea; and 'a whale'=memory-knowledge=scientificum, in general. Ill.

—⁸. As 'whales'=scientifics which pervert the truths of faith, they also=reasonings from fallacies, whence come falsities. Ill.

—⁴. As 'whales'=reasonings from fallacies which pervert truths, 'water-serpents'=the falsities themselves from the fallacies from which come reasonings, and by which are effected perversions. Ill. . . The same things are signified by 'dragons,' but 'dragons'=reasonings from the loves of self and of the world, thus from the cupidities of evil, which pervert not truths only, but also goods. Ill.

9755¹. 'Thou hast broken the heads of the whales upon the waters, Thou hast broken the heads of leviathan' (Ps. lxxiv. 13). This treats of the knowledges which destroy the truths of faith; 'the whales whose heads will be broken'=scientifics in general; and in like manner 'leviathan.' E. 483¹⁶.

M. 76². Chariots carved into the form of whales, etc. seen, (which were) appearances of the rational intelligence of the men of the Silver Age.

T. 186°. They draw in falsities as whales do water.

D. 441. (Men who are worshipped as saints and as gods and goddesses) represented by great jaws as of whales, into which spiritual images were cast . . . and thus it was turned into a whale, or into a dragon, when it had swallowed so many that its belly could be formed. (See also 442.)

1391. Similar (representations) exist also in the world . . . as that Jonah was swallowed by a whale, which was actually done in the world.

4672. What is signified in the Prophet by 'the great crooked serpent,' and 'Leviathan.'

342⁵. Like things are signified by 'seas,' and 'by the things there, which are called 'fishes,' and 'whales,' Ill. . . 'A whale'=memory-knowledge=scientificum-in general.

—¹⁰. (Thus) 'seas'=the generals of truth; and 'whales,' and 'fishes,'=the affections and thoughts of those who are in the generals of truth.

388²⁵. 'Praise Jehovah from the earth, ye whales and deeps' (Ps. cxlviii. 7)=the goods and truths in man from which he worships God. . . 'Whales and deeps'=scientifics and Knowledges in general, or in the whole complex. 650¹².

455¹⁸. 'A whale,' which is meant by 'leviathan,' =the natural man as to scientifics.

Whale. Cetus.

See WHALE=balaena.

A. 42. 'God created great whales' (Gen. i. 21) . . . =the generals of scientifics under which and from which are the particulars; for there is nothing in the universe which is not under some general in order that it may exist and subsist. 'Whales=ceti aut balaenae' are mentioned in the Prophets, and there=the generals of scientifics. 'Pharaoh' . . . by whom is represented human wisdom or intelligence, that is, knowledge in general, is called 'a great whale.' Further Ill.

[A.42]⁶. The Knowledges of faith . . . were thus swallowed up, as the whale swallowed Jonah, where 'the whale'=those who possess the generals of faith as scientifics, and act in this way.

6385⁸. 'A whale'=the generals of scientifics . . . and therefore it is said, 'they that go down to the sea with ships, these have seen the works of Jehovah, and His wonders in the deep' (Ps.evii.23,24).

E. 275³. 'The whales in the sea' which shall be 'slain' (Is.xxvii.1)=scientifics in general.

538¹¹. That Jonah was 'in the whale three days and three nights' represented that the Lord was so 'in the heart of the earth' (Matt.xii.40); and the words of Jonah (beginning, 'Out of the belly of hell have I cried . . .') describe the Lord's direful temptations. Fully ex. (Compare 706⁶.)

714²¹. 'A whale' (Jer.li.34)=the like as 'a dragon,' the same word being used for both in the Original.

—²⁶.
—³⁰. In these passages, the word translated 'dragons' is the same as that by which are meant serpents in general, and also the whales in the sea; and all these have a like signification, namely, the Natural of man in general, which is the Sensuous, so that (Jer.xiv.6) might be translated, 'they panted for the wind like whales.'

What ? Quid ?

A. 8083. 'What is this?' (Ex.xiii.14)=an inquiry why it is so.

D. 3751. (The Quakers) say, what's this? what's this?

Wheat. Triticum.

A. 1002. Bread from wheat (in the most ancient time).

3332². The more noble species of good are signified by 'wheat' and 'barley.' Ill.

3941. 'Reuben went in the days of wheat-harvest' (Gen.xxx.14)=faith as to its state of love and charity . . . for 'wheat'=love and charity.

—². That 'wheat'=the things which are of love and charity. Ill.

—⁴. 'Wheat' (Joeli.11)=celestial love; 'barley,' spiritual love. (=interior and exterior good. 7602.)

—⁶. 'A measure of wheat for a penny' (Rev.vi.6)

=that love is so rare. (=the estimation of good . . . almost none at all. R.315.) (=the genuine good of the Church of no account. E.374.)

—⁶. 'Gather the wheat into my barn' (Matt. xiii.30)=the goods. (=those interiorly good. J.70². C.J.10⁶.)

7605. 'The wheat and the rye' (Ex.ix.32)=the good of the interior Natural, and its truth. ('Were not smitten'=were not destroyed. 7606.)

—¹. For 'wheat'=the good of love and of charity; and, as it is a more noble kind of corn than barley it =the good of the interior Natural.

9295². Wheat and barley=goods. 10303².

9781². 'Wheat'=good; and 'fine flour,' its truth.

9995. 'With fine flour of wheat shalt thou make them' (Ex.xxix.2)=the truth which is from Divine good, from which these things are. . . For 'wheat'=the good of love; thus, in the supreme sense, the Divine good.

10184⁶. The seed of wheat, or of barley=states of good.

10669. Wheat and barley in the ear=good receiving and also received.

—⁴. 'Wheat'=the good of love of the internal man.

10770. Seeds like the grains of Chinese wheat (seen in the Fifth Earth).

R. 315. The reason 'wheat and barley'=good and truth; here, the good and truth of the Church from the Word, is that all things of the field and vineyard =such things as are of the Church . . . 794. E.374². Further ex.

—². That 'wheat and barley'=the good and truth of the Church. Ill. E.374.

778. '(No) wheat' (Rev.xviii.13)=no . . . worship from celestial good. (=profaned worship from the goods which are from a spiritual origin. E.1153.)

M. 148⁶. Like wheat in a winnowing shovel.

161⁶. As when wheat . . . is thrown to the dogs . . .

T. 784⁶. 'The wheat' (in the parable of the tares)=the truths and goods of a new Church. (=the good of truth, and therefore those who are in good through truths. E.374¹⁵.) 397². 426³. 624³.

E. 304¹⁰. 'They have sown wheat, and have reaped thorns' (Jer.xii.13)=to take truths of good from the Word and turn them into falsities of evil. (=that instead of the goods of truth there are evils of falsity. 374⁵.)

314⁷. 'The fat of the kidneys of wheat' (Deut.xxxii. 14)=genuine good. (=all good in general. 374¹⁰.)

365³⁶. 'He satisfieth thee with the fat of wheat' (Ps.cxlvi.14)=with all good of love and with wisdom; 'fat'=the good of love; and 'wheat'=all things which are from the good of love; in special, the truths of Heaven and the derivative wisdom. 374¹².

374. 'Wheat'=the good of the Church in general. (See BARLEY, here.)

—³. 'Wheat' (Jer.xxxi.12)=the good of the natural man.

—¹¹. 'I would feed them with the fat of wheat' (Ps.lxxi.16)=with good of every kind from celestial good . . . For 'fat'=celestial good; and 'wheat,' good of every kind. (=the delight of spiritual good. 619¹⁰.)

—¹⁴. 'He will gather the wheat into the garner' (Matt.iii.12)=good of every kind that is from a heavenly origin which He will preserve to eternity.

375. 'Wheat'=the good of the Church in general, thus that which is in the sense of the letter. (Continued under BARLEY.)

433²². 'Wheats of Minnith and Pannag' (Ezek. xxvii.17)=truths and goods of the Church of every kind.

740¹². As a faith of falsity is like chaff before the wind, it is said . . . that '(Satan) might sift them as wheat' (Luke xxii.31); 'wheat'=the good of charity separated from the chaff.

911¹³. 'Were ashamed, and howled . . . for the wheat and for the barley' (Joel i.11)=grief on account of the devastation of good and truth.

1182. 'Wheat'=good: and 'fine flour,' its truth.

—'. 'Wheat'=the good of love; and 'fine flour,' the truth from this good.

Wheel. Rota.

Rotate, To. Rotare.

A. 956. The Spirit is then rotated on high . . .

2686³. 'His wheels like a whirlwind' (Is.v.28)=the doctrine of (natural truths). (=the powers of perverting and destroying truths. 8215³.) (=the ultimates of truth such as are in the sense of the letter, and the confirmations of falsity thereby. E.355²².)

5188². In their (punishment of) whirling-circum-rotation—they tried to draw others . . . into their whirl-rotam, and thus into destruction.

6015⁴. 'At the noise of his wheels' (Jer.xlvii.3)=the sensuous things and their fallacies which advance (the false doctrine).

6978². 'The voice of the sound of the wheel' (Nahum iii.2)=the defence of falsity by means of fallacies.=reasonings from falsities and evils. E.355²³.)

7729⁴. 'The wheels' of a chariot=the falsities of doctrine. Ill.

8215. 'He took off the wheel of their chariots' (Ex. xiv.25)=that the power of injecting falsities was taken away. . . 'A wheel'=the power of advancing. Ex. . .

As this power belongs to the intellectual part of man, 'a wheel' (of a chariot)=the Intellectual as to the things which belong to doctrine. 8216. (=the faculty of reasoning. E.654⁴⁵.)

—³. Thus 'a chariot wheel'=the power which belongs to the Intellectual; for, as a chariot has its motion and advance by means of wheels, so the truths which belong to doctrinal things have their advance by means of the Intellectual. Ill.

—⁴. 'The wheels' (in Ezek.i.and x.)=the Divine intelligence, that is, foresight; and therefore it is said that 'the wheels went together with the living creatures,' and that 'their rings were full of eyes;' and also that 'the spirit of the living creature was in them,' that is, the truth of wisdom. 8764⁴. See E.283¹³.

—⁵. 'His wheels as burning fire' (Dan.vii.9) . . . 'His wheels'=the things which are of wisdom and intelligence, thus truths Divine; and 'burning fire'=which are of love and charity. (=the doctrine of celestial love. E.504³.)

—⁶. 'The wheels' (1 Kings vii.33)=intellectual powers, by means of which there is progression. Compare 10236⁵.

8764⁴. 'Wheels'=the truths of doctrinal things, from the fact that 'chariots'=the doctrines of truth. Rels. E.283¹³.

9872. 'The wheels' of the cherubs (Ezek.i.16; x.9)=the like as do the arms and feet with man, namely, the power of acting and advancing which belongs to truth from good. Hence it is that 'their aspect was like that of a beryl stone;' for 'a beryl'=truth from spiritual good, which has power.

10236⁶. 'Wheels,' as those of a chariot=the faculty of growing wise when all things enter from Heaven; for thus all things progress according to order; for 'the wheels' of a chariot=the faculty of making progress, thus of learning.

P. 279. Like a wheel driven round by the hand.

T. 57². Like two wheels with opposite motion acting against each other . . . 62.

576². As a mill [is in motion] from its wheel.

D. 255. I saw a kind of soft volution . . . into which I was raised . . . From this volution, 'wheels' are ascribed to the cherubs. Des.

3790. In the same kitchen was seen a miserable wheel driven by water. . . This wheel=the spiritual things of (the Quakers).

3821. Evil Spirits have often wanted to throw me under carriage wheels.

4272. (Influx is) like a wheel . . .

4696. He changed his mind, like a revolvable wheel, into the opposite.

D. Min. 4819. A wheel like a disk—orbiculum rotularem . . .

A. 3923³. 'Dan is a lion's whelp' (Deut.xxxiii.22) . . . =the first of truth, which is affirmation and acknowledgment.

[A.] 6367. 'Judah is a lion's whelp' (Gen.xlix.9)=innocence together with innate forces; for 'a lion'=the good of love and the derivative truth in its power, so that 'a lion's whelp'=innocence with forces... The reason 'a lion's whelp'=innocence, is that 'a lion'=the good of celestial love; and its 'whelp' is as it were its infant, and thus=innocence. E.278².

9348⁴. 'The mother of the princes of Israel' is 'a lioness'; one of her whelps has learned to seize the prey' (Ezek.xix.1,2,5,6) treats of the successive profanation of truth through the allurements of falsities from evils... 'A lioness'=falsity from evil perverting the truths of the Church; 'a lion's whelp'=evil in its power. (=the primary falsity of their doctrine. E.280¹.)

M. 505^e. (These deflowerers) appear at a distance like dogs of indulgences, that is, whelps of deliciousnesses.

I. 14⁵. Like an eagle which... swoops down on and devours the young of sheep. T.590.

E. 601¹. The burning cupidity (of 'Babel') to destroy Divine truth by means of falsities of evil, is signified by, 'They shall roar together like lions, they shall growl like lions' whelps' (Jer.li.38).

Whence. Unde.

A. 1932. 'Whence camest thou, and whither goest thou?' (Gen.xvi.8)=instruction - informationem - concerning the state.

3776. 'Whence are you?' (Gen.xxix.4)=from what origin.

E. 472. 'Who are these, and whence came they?' (Rev.vii.14)=what their quality is and what their quality has been. Ex. See R.376.

617¹⁸. That to read the Word, and be instructed from it, is of no avail for salvation, unless we live according to it, is signified by, 'I know ye not whence ye are; depart from Me, ye workers of iniquity' (Luke xiii.27).

Where. Ubi.

A. 4719. 'Where they feed their flock' (Gen.xxxvii.16)=in what state they were... For 'where'=the state; because all places=states.

Wherefore. Quapropter.

A. 5754. 'Wherefore speaketh my lord such words as these?' (Gen.xliv.7)=a reflection why such a thing inflows... Reflection is involved in the word 'wherefore,' which is a word of questioning with one's self.

Whether. Num.

A.192. To search whether the things of faith in the Lord are so, is signified by 'to eat of the tree of knowledge.'

2588⁹. In the other life they are easily known by the fact that in relation to all things of faith they reason whether it is so... to eternity.

2718⁴. The man (of the Spiritual Church) keeps his mind in this: whether it is so... 3241³. 3385².

— So long as men debate whether a thing is, and whether it is so, they cannot advance into anything of wisdom. Ex. 5658^e. D.5684.

—². Modern learning scarcely goes beyond these limits, namely, whether a thing is, and whether it is so, and therefore men stand excluded from understanding truth. Examps. 3677^e. 3747^e. 3833².

—³. Such men believe themselves to be wise in proportion as they can the better debate whether a thing is so... The simple have a common sense of apprehension of truth, but these have extinguished this sense by first wanting to discuss whether-an-it is so. Sig.

4417. There are Spirits called reasoners, because they reason about all things as to whether it is so, and are for the most part in obscurity as to all Truth.

4448^e. The men of the Ancient Church had no perception of the truth of faith... and therefore they then began to investigate about truth, as to whether it is so.

4653. The Spirits who correspond to the ear... are those in simple obedience, that is, who do not reason whether a thing is so; but believe it because it is said by others...

4925. The old dispute as to whether good or truth is the first-born.

—². For it is good through which the Lord inflows, and bestows... a perception as to whether a thing is so, or is not so.

4946². In every idea there are innumerable things which inflow from the Spiritual World, which, with a spiritual man, cause a higher insight, by which he can see and perceive whether a thing is true, or not.

5432². They who... have not looked into the truths of the Church from their own sight, and seen whether they are true... retain them solely in their natural memory...

5556. The Societies which constitute the scarf-skin are those who reason about all things as to whether it is so, or is not so, and advance no further. Des. D.4154.

5937². What perception is. With every man there is a faculty of perceiving whether a thing is so, or is not so. Ex.

6222². The Intellectual of the Church consists in perceiving and seeing, before any dogma is confirmed, whether it is true, or not, and then, in confirming it.

7298². No one ought to be instantly persuaded of a truth . . . Therefore when any truth is presented . . . before good Spirits, something opposite is presently presented, which causes doubt; and in this way it is given them to think and consider whether it is so . . . This causes an extension of spiritual sight in respect to that truth, even to its opposites.

8516³. Whereas if (the Angels) were to think and act from truth (as distinguished from good) they would be thinking whether a thing ought to be done so, or not, and would stick fast in everything, and obscure the light they have, and at last would act according to what they themselves love . . .

H. 25(k). That the spiritual Angels reason about the truths of faith as to whether they are so, or not. Refs.

P. 168. Interior illustration (or enlightenment) from the Lord, consists in a man's perceiving at the first hearing whether what is said is true, or not.

—². By interior illustration from the Lord, a rational man perceives at once, as soon as he hears them, many things, as to whether they are true, or not. Examps.

219³. 'Yea, yea; nay, nay' is the discourse of all in the Third Heaven; for they never reason about Divine things, as to whether it is so, or is not so; but see in themselves, from the Lord, that it is so, or is not so. And therefore to reason about Divine things, as to whether they are so, or not so, arises from the reasoner's not seeing them from the Lord, and wanting to see them from himself; and that which a man sees from himself is 'evil.' But still the Lord wills that man should not only think and speak about Divine things, but should also reason about them, to the end that he may see that a thing is so, or is not so; and this, . . . provided the end is to see the truth, may be said to be from the Lord in the man; but it is from the man until he sees and acknowledges the Truth. 4657. To speak in the ear so that no one should hear . . . is not proper in the other life, because it shows that they have been whisperers, and have become imbued with the nature of whispering; very many of whom . . . observe the faults and vices of others, and . . . H. 488². Those whose delight has been to insidiate, and machinate . . . whisper in the ears in the corners of dark rooms. The delight of their love is turned into this.

M. 16. They whispered (or murmured) a votive praise to the Lord.

A. 1042². See COLOUR, here. 3993⁶. 9467. W. 380. D. 6064.

— In spiritual things . . . the snowiness or white is the truth and good which a man supposes that he does from himself, which reflects and rejects from itself the rays of light.

1126. A tall man clad in white, seen. The whiteness was intense. It=those called 'Noah,' who were the first of the Ancient Church.

2015⁹. 'The white horse.' See HORSE, here. 5319⁶. 6534. S. 12. R. 298. 820. 826. E. 355.

2576⁴. In (these things) the red=the goods of love; and the white, its truths.

2576¹⁰. The Holy itself of His Divine Human was 'the raiment' which appeared as 'the light,' and as 'white glistening' (Luke ix. 29).

2699². See BRIGHT-candidus, here. 3812⁴. D. 1057.

3301⁶. 'His hairs were white as clean wool' (Rev. i. 14) = the Divine Natural as to truth. In the Word, and in the rituals of the Jewish Church, truth itself was represented by white . . . the reason of which is that truth is of light.

3993⁵. Speckled and spotted are from black and white . . . and, in the internal sense, white=truth, properly, the Lord's righteousness and merit, and hence (these) in man. This white is called bright-candidum, because it shines from the light which is from the Lord. But in the opposite sense, white=man's own righteousness, or merit; for truth without good is attended with such merit.

—⁶. As the white and black exist there from the light in which are intelligence and wisdom, and the shade in which these are lacking, it is evident that they (have these significations).

3994². The white among the lambs=the merit which is placed in goods.

—². 'Teeth whiter than milk' = righteousness. E. 364⁴.

— To 'become whiter than snow' (Ps. li. 7) = to be purified from sins by the reception and putting on of the Lord's righteousness. (Compare E. 196².)

—⁴. In all these passages, 'white' = the truth of faith . . . But this is not possessed by those who believe that they have faith from themselves, and are therefore wise from themselves; but by those who believe that they have it from the Lord; for it is to these that faith and wisdom are given . . . This is to 'put on white garments,' and to be 'made white in the blood of the Lamb.' Further ex.

4015. 'Jacob peeled white peelings in them, to the laying bare of the white that was upon the rods' (Gen.

xxx. 37) = the disposing of the interior power of truth. . . . For 'white' = truth.

5433³. 'White garments' (Rev. iii. 18) = spiritual truths. (=genuine truths of faith from good. 9960⁷.)

— That 'white' is predicated of truth, because it is from the light of Heaven. Refs.

5954². Those (Spirits and Angels) appear in white garments who are in truths of faith through which is good; and those in resplendent bright-white-candidis-garments who are in truths of faith which are from good . . .

—³. 'Raiment white as snow,' and 'fine white linen' = holy truths; for 'whiteness' and 'bright-whiteness'-candor—are predicated of truths, because they the most closely approach light . . .

6380. 'His teeth are white with milk' (Gen. xlix. 12) = that the Divine Natural is nothing but the good of truth; for 'white' is predicated of truth. (=that His Sensuous was Divine truth from Divine good. E. 556²¹.)

7601³. In Heaven, those in truth of the Natural appear clad in white; and this white appears like that of linen.

8458. Truth is there presented to view as white.

9166⁷. 'To make one hair white' (Matt. v. 36) = to say, from self, that truth is truth.

9212³. The Angels and Spirits who are in genuine truth, appear clad in white garments; and those who are in truths from good, in resplendent ones.

9870. Blue from white. See BLUE, here.

10536². The whiteness of their garments is from the light of Heaven, which is Divine truth.

H. 178⁶. The less intelligent (Angels) have bright-white-candidae, and white garments devoid of resplendence. And the still less intelligent have party-coloured garments.

W. 380. The colour white corresponds to wisdom.

—⁶. In the Heavens where wisdom reigns, the light is bright-white-candida, and the Angels there are clad in white linen garments.

R. 121. 'I will give him a white stone' (Rev. ii. 17) = truths favouring and united to good. . . . For 'white' is predicated of truths. (=wisdom and intelligence. E. 147.)

167. 'They shall walk with Me in white' (Rev. iii. 4) = that they will live with the Lord in His Spiritual Kingdom, because they are in truths from Him. . . . 'In white' = in truths; for, in the Word, 'white' is predicated of truths, because it derives its origin from the light of the sun. (=their spiritual life, which they have through the Knowledge of truth and good from the Word. 'In white' = in truths . . . and therefore 'to walk with Me in white' = spiritual life, because this is the life of truth, that is, according to truths. E.196.)

198. 'Shall be clothed in white garments' (ver.5) = become spiritual through truths. (=intelligence and wisdom according to truths and their reception; for 'white garments' = truths Divine. E.198.)

212. ('I counsel thee to buy of Me) white garments . . .' (ver.18) = the genuine truths of wisdom. Ex. E.243.

231. The colour white derives its origin from the light of the Sun in Heaven, and thus from spiritual light, which is bright-white-candida. . . And the spiritual Angels, being in the truths of wisdom from the Lord, are in that bright-white light, and therefore they are clothed in white.

234. 'Arrayed in white garments' (Rev.iv.4) = from the Divine truths of the Word. (=all the truths from good in the lower Heavens; for 'white garments' = the truths which are to be put on, and which, in special, are memory truths and Knowledges, and the lower Heavens are in these truths. E.271.)

328. 'White robes were given to each of them' (Rev. vi.11) = communication with the Angels who were in Divine truths. (=Divine truth from the Lord with them, and protection. . . For 'white' is predicated of the truths which are from the Lord; for whiteness-album - is of light, and the light which proceeds from the Lord as a Sun is, in its essence, Divine truth. E.395.) See below at E.395².

367. 'Clothed in white robes' (Rev.vii.9) = communication and conjunction with the higher Heavens. (=that they are then in truths, and in protection against falsities; for 'white robes' = the reception of Divine truth, and protection against falsities. E.457.) R.376. E.472.

379. See WHITE, TO MAKE, here.

642. 'Behold, a white cloud' (Rev.xiv.14) = the Word in the sense of the letter such as it is interiorly . . . because 'white' is predicated of truths in the light; and, interiorly in the sense of the letter there are spiritual truths, which are in the light of Heaven. E.905.

865. 'I saw a great white throne' (Rev.xx.11) = . . . a universal Judgment . . . from Divine truths. —2.

962. The seats of the third (or lowest) row, were covered with white cloth.

M. 55³. In the midst of the Spirits were some Angels in white.

T. 686. They who have been regenerated by means of the Divine truth of faith, in Heaven wear white fine linen garments, and are called spiritual Angels.

Ad. 3/1472. The 'fine twined linen' was of a snowy colour (which) = what is entire and complete, and consequently corresponds to light, from which comes that bright-whiteness-candor . . . and consequently to Truths themselves, which are likened to the rays of light. It is from this that a white colour derives the fact that all colours are in it in a becoming and fit manner; just as in the form of Truth, in which all colours must be as it were interwoven, otherwise truth can have no existence . . .

D. 432. In the other life, Moors, or negroes, like [other] Africans, do not want to be black, but white. After they have been prepared, they esteem whiteness as beauty, because all the Angels . . . are white-candidi; and the interior ones love to be clad in white garments. (These Africans detest the blackness of their bodies; for they know that their souls are white-candidae . . . 453⁶.)

1333. On those who love white underclothing-indusia. . . They incited me to buy (such), by which is signified that they are those especially who suppose they merit Heaven by their own righteousness.

1393. But a white colour (unlike a black one) does not receive the rays of light, but reflects them; and in like manner do those who justify themselves, and place merit in works . . .

E. 196². The reason why, in the Word, 'white' is predicated of truths, is that Divine truth is the light of Heaven, and whiteness-album et candidum - is from the light of Heaven. III.

364⁵. 'The Nazarites were whiter than snow, they were whiter-candidi - than milk' (Lam.iv.7) = the truth of the good of celestial love. (=a representative of Divine truth and Divine good in its perfection. 372⁵.)

372. The reason 'white' is predicated of truth, and signifies it, is that white derives its origin from the whiteness-candore - of light; and 'light' = truth.

695¹⁴. 'The fields are white already for the harvest' (John iv.35) = (that a new Church, which is from the Lord, is at hand).

905. The 'cloud' appeared 'white' (Rev.xiv.14) from the shining through of the Divine truth in the Heavens . . . For all whiteness that appears in the Heavens comes forth from the light of Heaven, which, in its essence, is Divine truth. Hence it is that the Angels, because in Divine truth, are clad in white-albis et candidis - garments.

R. 379. 'They have made their robes white in the blood of the Lamb' (Rev.vii.14)=that they have purified (their religious things) from falsities of evil by means of truths, and thus have been reformed by the Lord. . . (These words are used) because 'white' is predicated of truths, so that they mean that they have purified falsities by means of truths. (=the implantation of Divine truth by the Lord; for 'to make the robes white'=to put off falsities and put on truths; for 'white,' and 'to whiten-albari' are predicated of truths. It is said 'to make the robes white,' because, in the Spiritual World, the garments of those who are in falsities appear dark and also spotted, and the garments of those who are in temptations appear dirty and neglected; but as soon as they emerge from the temptations, white-albac et candidae-garments appear upon them, because they have then been imbued with Divine truths. Hence it is that 'they have made their robes white'=that they have put off falsities and put on truths. E.476.)

E. 403⁶. 'The branches thereof are made white' (Joel i.7)=that there is no longer anything spiritual.

659¹⁰. Those who think evilly about God and the neighbour, and yet speak well about them; and those who think insanely about the truths of faith and the goods of love, and yet speak sanely about them, are inwardly like sepulchres which are whited outside, according to Matt.xxiii.27. 842°. 1045°.

—³. That the submission must be total, is evident also from the first (great) commandment (Mark xii.30). Thus, as love to the Lord does not come from man, but from the Lord Himself, 'the whole heart, the whole soul, the whole mind, and all the forces,' being recipients, must be the Lord's, consequently there must be a total submission.

Wicked. Scelestus.

Wicked, The. Scelerati.

A. 4327². Anciently (those who constitute the general involuntary sense) were the most celestial of all; but at this day they are the most wicked of all; and this mostly from the Christian world. There is a great number of them, and they appear under the occiput . . .

4925². From this error (it is inferred) that even the most wicked are received into Heaven, if in their dying moments they make confession of such things as are of faith.

8164. The wicked-scelerati—are sometimes in these griefs (or natural temptations) and they grieve the more in proportion as they love themselves and the world . . .

D. 3682. David, being a wicked one, and a subject of wicked ones, the wicked things of whom there is no need to make mention . . .

E. 6547⁰. 'Thus hast thou commended the wickedness of thy youth' (Ezek.xxiii.21)=the love of what is false implanted from the earliest age.

A. 2362⁴. Why the priests were not to marry widows. (See VIRGIN, here.)

2417⁸. They called those in good, widows, etc.

[A.]3703¹⁹. 'Widows' (in the Word)=those who are in a state of good and not so much in truth; and those who are in a state of truth, and not so much in good; and who yet long to be in (truth and good, respectively).

4835³. The brother (of the deceased husband) represented a kindred good with which might be conjoined the truth that was represented by the wife who was a widow . . .

4844. 'Remain a widow in thy father's house' (Gen. xxxviii.11)=an alienation from himself. Ex.

—². 'A widow'=the truth of the Church without its good. Ex. . . That is, those who are in truth without good, and still long to be in good, consequently, who love to be led by means of good; a husband=the good which should lead. In the Ancient Church, such persons were understood, in a good sense, by widows, whether they were women or men. For they distinguished the neighbour into classes . . . and when they spoke of widows, they meant such persons as are in truth without good, and still long to be led by means of good.

—⁵. That by 'widows,' in a good sense, are signified those persons who are in truth without good, and still long to be led by means of good. Ill.

—⁶. 'Widows' (Ps.lxviii.5)=those who as adults are in truth, but not yet in good, whose 'judge' is said to be 'the Lord,' because He leads them, and this by means of good into truth, that is, into the truth of intelligence. . . (For) truth without good, which is the 'widow,' becomes the truth of intelligence by means of a life of good.

—¹⁰. 'To devour widows' houses' (Matt.xxiii.14)=to deprive of truths those who long for them, and to teach falsities.

—¹². 'The widow in Zarephath' (to whom Elijah was sent) (1 Kings xvii.) represented those outside the Church who long for truth. —¹³. 9198⁷, Fully ex.

—¹³. But 'the widows' in the devastated Church, to whom Elijah was 'not sent' (Luke iv.25,26)=those persons who are not in truth because not in good: for where there is no good there is no truth.

—¹⁴. They who are in such (separated and empty) truth, and also they who are in falsity, are signified by 'widows' in the opposite sense. Ill.

—¹⁵. As by 'widows' were signified those who are not in truth because not in good, it was reproachful for Churches . . . to be called 'widows.' Ill.

—¹⁶. As 'a widow' represented . . . the truth of the Church without its good . . . therefore, in the ancient Churches . . . the priests were forbidden to marry a widow who was not the widow of a priest (Lev.xxi.13,14; Ezek.xliv.22). . . 'The widow of a priest' represented the affection of truth from good . . . and therefore it was also allowed the widows who were the daughters of a priest, who were childless, to eat of . . . the holy things (Lev.xxii.12,13). (For this=the appropriation of good after the things not of the Church had been removed . . . 10109⁴.)

4858. 'She removed from upon her the garments of her widowhood' (Gen.xxxviii.14)=a simulation of truth from good; for 'a widow'=those in truth without good, yet long to be led by means of good; and 'the garments' with which widows were clothed represented such truth . . . so that 'to remove' them=to put off the representation of a widow . . . and, as she 'covered herself with her veil,' to simulate truth from good.

4884. 'She put on the garments of her widowhood' (ver.19)=intelligence; for 'a widow'=one in truth without good who longs to be led by means of good; and 'garments'=truths; and these two things taken together=intelligence. Ex. Moreover, 'a widow,' in the genuine sense,=one in truth who longs to be led by means of good into the truth of intelligence. Ex.

5008². (In what sense it is to be understood that good is to be done to widows, etc.)

5536³. See WIFE, here.

7910². Truth widowed of good. Ex.

9188⁴. The extinction of their spiritual life is described by 'widowhood,' and 'bereavement' (Is.xlvii.8); 'widowhood'=the privation of truth and thence of good; 'bereavement'=the privation of truth and of good.

9198. 'Any widow . . . (ye shall not afflict)' (Ex. xxii.22)=those who are in good without truth, and yet long for truth. . . The reason 'a widow'=this, is that 'a man=vir'=truth, and his 'woman,' good; and therefore 'the woman of a man, who is made a widow'=good without truth. But, in a sense still more interior 'a widow'=truth without good, because, in this sense, 'a husband'=good, and his 'wife,' truth. . . But, as the Celestial Church is not here treated of, but the Spiritual Church, by 'a widow' is signified one in good and not in truth who longs for truth.

—³. 'There were many widows in Israel in the days of Elijah' (Luke iv.25)=the state of the acknowledgment, then, of truth Divine in the Church; for 'widows'=those in good without truth . . . 'the days of Elijah'=the state of the reception of truth Divine . . . at that time . . .

9200⁶. 'Widows' (when mentioned with 'strangers,' and 'orphans')=the conjunction of good with truth.

9213³. 'Thou shalt not take the widow's garment in pledge' (Deut.xxiv.17)=not to take away, by any method, the truths which long for good; for . . . 'a widow'=those in good who long for truths; or, in the abstract, the good which longs for truth; for, if truth is taken away, good and its longing perish.

9348⁴. 'He ravished their widows' (Ezek.xix.7)=to pervert the goods which long for truth. E.601¹³.

R. 764. 'I am not a widow' (Rev.xviii.7)=that they will protect themselves; for 'a widow'=one who is without protection, because without a man. The word . . . 'widow' is used . . . because there is meant Babylon as a Church. E.1121, Ex.

M. 322. (On the) marriage of a youth with a widow . . . Between a youth and a widow there is not a like initiation to marriage from first beginnings, nor a like progression in marriage (such as there is between a youth and a maiden) because a widow is more at her own disposal arbitrū et juris—than a maiden . . .

323. See WIDOWER, here.

325. That the state of a widow is more grievous than that of a widower. Ex.

T. 427^e. 'Widows'=those who are devoid of truth, yet long for them.

E. 257². 'The widows shall be multiplied more than the sand of the sea' (Jer.xv.8)=those who are in evil and long for falsities.

687¹. 'I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know bereavement' (Is.xlvii.8)=to have no lack of followers, dependents, and worshippers. (Compare 1121².)

768¹. 'The high priest . . . shall not take a widow . . .' (Lev.xxi.13). . . 'A widow'=good without truth, because it has been left by truth, which is the 'man.' Ex.

1121². Elsewhere in the Word, 'widows'=both women and men who are in good and not in truth, and yet long for truth; thus who are without protection against falsity and evil, but who are protected by the Lord. The term is used also in the opposite sense. III.

Widower. Viduus.

M. 323. That the state of marriage of a widower with a maiden is different from that of a widow with a widow.—For a widower has already been initiated into the conjugal life . . . The virgin wife has (this) internal inclination, whereas with the man it has passed away . . . In like manner with a marriage between a widower and a widow. (But there is great variety and diversity in these matters) and beyond this general notion, it is not allowable to add anything of a specific nature.

325. See WIDOW, here.

Wife. Uxor.

Wifhood. Uxorem.

Wived. Uxoratus.

See under FEMALE, and WOMAN.

A. 54^e. From the affection of good, the Church is called . . . also 'a wife.'

155. The proprium, when vivified by the Lord, is called 'the bride,' and also 'the wife.'

156. 'This now is bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh; for this she shall be called wife, because she was taken out of man' (Gen.ii.23)= . . . the proprium of the external man . . . vivified . . . (and) as the internal man has been coupled with the external man in this way . . . the proprium which before was called 'woman,' is called 'wife.' [Although it is the same word in the Hebrew.]

160. 'Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh' (ver.24)= . . . to leave the internal man . . . so that the internal shall be in the external, (and) they shall be together there . . . (See below, at M.194². E.555¹⁴. —. De Conj.34.)

162. Hence the law of marriages that there shall be one man and one wife; and, when it is so, they represent the heavenly marriage . . . (In) the Most Ancient Church, this law was inscribed on their internal man, and therefore a man had then only one wife . . . But when their descendants ceased to be internal men . . . they married more wives than one. 2740.

253. From the heavenly and angelic proprium, the Church is called, in the Word, 'the wife,' etc.

266. This law of marriages—that the wife, because she acts from cupidity, which is of the proprium, and not so much from reason as the man acts, is under the prudence of the man (springs from what is celestial and spiritual; and is stated in Gen.iii.16, which=that a Church which loves proprium should be obedient to the Rational. See 261.) See also 568^e.

289. 'A wife'=the Church; and, in the universal sense, the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens and on earth.

430². See MAN-vir, here. 713. 725. 1468. 2389.

434. See MAN-homo, here.

668. 'Wives'=goods. 718, Ex. 742.

721. 'Man-vir, and wife' (Gen.vii.2)=falsities conjoined with evils . . . because they are here predicated of the unclean beasts; but just before of the clean ones; where they=truths conjoined with goods.

768^e. (When 'man-homo'=love or charity) 'wife'=simply the derivative Church, as here, ('the wife of Noah,' and the three wives of his sons.' 770.) 906. 915.

770. But when 'man-vir and wife,' or 'male and female' are mentioned, then 'man-vir' and 'male'=intellectual things or truths of faith; and 'wife' and 'female'=voluntary things or goods of faith. 1468. 2581^e. 4823², Ex.

829². There are youths and young men who . . . have conceived . . . that wives, especially young and pretty ones, ought not to be for their husbands, but for them . . . The punishment of those of them who have confirmed themselves in this, des.

865². True marriage is that of one man with one wife. (Fully quoted under MARRIAGE.)

915. When the Church is described in the Word, it is described either by 'man-vir and wife,' or by 'man-homo and wife'; (in the former case) 'man'=what is intellectual, or truth; and 'wife,' what is voluntary, or good; (but in the latter) 'man'=the good of love, or love; and 'wife,' the truth of faith, or faith; thus 'man-homo'=the essential thing of the Church, and 'wife,' the Church itself.

1369. (In Gen.xi.29) 'Abram' and the other husbands=evils; and their 'wives'=falsities.

1432. 'Abram took Sarai his wife' (Gen.xii.5)=the good to which truth was adjoined. 'Sarai a wife'=truth. 1433.

1468. 'He said to Sarai his wife' (ver.11)=He so thought concerning the truths to which celestial things were adjoined. . . For 'a wife' . . . =truth conjoined with good.

[A.1468]. In the Word, when 'husband' is mentioned, then 'wife'=truth; but when the husband is called 'the man-vir,' then 'wife'=good. This is the constant usage in the Word. 2517. 2581. 4823², Ex.

1473. 'They will say, This is his wife' (ver.12)=that they will call the (Knowledges) celestial. For 'wife'=truth adjoined to celestial things; and therefore 'This is his wife'=that which is celestial.

1489. 'Because of the word of Sarai the wife of Abram' (ver.17)=because of the truth which was to be adjoined to what is celestial. 1493.

1495. The progression is . . . at last to celestial truths, which are here signified by 'the wife.'

1497. 'Behold thy wife; take her, and go' (ver.19)=that the truth should be conjoined with the Celestial.

1500. 'They sent away . . . his wife' (ver.20)=that the scientifics left the truths that were conjoined with celestial things.

1545. 'He and his wife' (Gen.xiii.1)=the celestial truths then with the Lord. Ex.

1798³. He who is in a life of charity, the rather guards his neighbour's wife . . .

1904. 'Sarai, the wife of Abram, took' (Gen.xvi.3)=the affection of truth. . . For 'wife'=affection.

2454. 'His wife looked back behind him' (ver.26)=that truth averted itself from good, and looked to doctrinal things.

2507. 'Sarah his wife' (Gen.xx.2)=spiritual truth conjoined with the Celestial. 2554.

2582. '(Abimelech's) wife' (ver.17)=truth.

2718. 'A wife from the land of Egypt' (Gen.xxi.21)=the affection of knowledges. For 'a wife'=affection, or good.

2731. It has therefore been instituted by the Lord that wives are affections of good, which are of the will; and men-*vir*i Knowledges of truth. . .

2745. [Wives] who observe the conjugal debt, but do not love their husbands, but hold them in slight estimation . . . are represented by a cock, a wild cat, and a tiger of a dull colour. . . (For) such begin (like cocks) by talking much; then they scold; and finally put on the nature of the tiger. It was said by some that still such [wives] love their children; but it was replied that that love is not human, and that it inflows equally into the evil, and even into some animals, so that these too love their offspring more than themselves. It was added that with such [wives] there is nothing of conjugal love. (Continued in D.3198.)

—, In the Spiritual Church, 'a wife' represents good . . . but in the Celestial Church, truth; and, what is an arcanum, (she) not only represents, but also actually corresponds to these. 4843. 8647.

4823². (For) in the celestial Church, the husband was in good, and the wife in the truth of that good; whereas in the Spiritual Church, the man-vir is in truth, and the wife in the good of this truth. They are, and were, so actually; for the interiors in man have undergone this change.

4837². That the Jewish nation possessed nothing conjugal in either the spiritual or the natural sense, is very evident from the fact that they were permitted to marry more wives than one. Ex.

—, The marriage of one husband with a plurality of wives would present in Heaven the idea, or image, as if one good were conjoined with a number of truths that do not agree together. . .

4852. 'The wife of Judah' (Gen.xxxviii.12)=the religiosity with the nation descended from Jacob; and, in special, from Judah. For 'a wife'=the Church; but here, a religiosity, because it treats of the Jewish nation, with which there was no Church, but only the external of a Church. . .

4843. In the Spiritual Church, the wife is called 'the woman,' and=good.

7022. 'Moses took his wife' (Ex.iv.20)=the adjoined good. . . The reason his 'wife' represented good conjoined with truth, is that in everything in (both worlds) there is an image of a marriage; (that is,) an active and a passive. Ex. 8656.

379. Marriage with more than one wife is like an understanding divided among a number of wills, and a man attached to a number of churches . . . The Angels say that to marry a plurality of wives is utterly contrary to Divine order; and that . . . the moment they think about (it) they are estranged from internal bliss . . . and become like persons inebriated, because the good with them is disjoined from its truth . . . (also, that) a lascivious delight is turned into what is undelightful after a short cohabitation, whereas the delight of love truly conjugal not only endures to old age in the world, but also becomes the delight of Heaven after death . . .

42³. The representative form of conjugal love with (the angelic) wife, was as follows:—her face was seen by me, and was not seen; it was seen as beauty itself, and it was not seen because the beauty was inexpressible; for there was in her face a resplendence of flaming light, such as exists with the Angels in the Third Heaven . . . She said, What do you see? I replied, I see nothing but conjugal love and its form; but I see, and I do not see. Hereupon she turned herself sideways from her husband, and then I could survey her more intently. Her eyes sparkled with the light of her Heaven, which light is flaming, and thus partakes of the love of wisdom; for the wives in the Third Heaven love their husbands from their wisdom and in their wisdom; and the husbands love their wives from this love and in this love towards themselves; and in this way they are united. This was the origin of her beauty, which was such that no painter could present it. (Her dress, jewels, etc. des.) Continued under HUSBAND. See also 75⁴.

[M.] 47a. If a man has had more wives than one, he (after death) conjoins himself with them, in order, while he is in the external state; but when he enters the internal state . . . he either adopts one, or leaves them all; for, in the Spiritual World, equally as in the natural, it is not allowable for any Christian to have a plurality of wives, because it infests and profanes religion. . . It is similar with a woman who has had more husbands than one; but these do not join themselves to their husbands, but only present themselves, and the husbands join them to themselves. The husbands rarely recognize their wives; but the wives well recognize their husbands, the reason of which is, that women have an interior perception of love, whereas men have only an exterior one.

At this they all smiled, and said, What is a wise one, or wisdom, without a woman? A wife is the love of a wise one's wisdom. Ex.

—⁵. The wife then appeared beyond the crystal wall, and said to her husband, Speak, if you please. And when he spoke, the life of wisdom from the wife was perceived in his discourse; for her love was in the tone of the speech.

63. The Church is formed . . . through the man with the wife . . .

75⁶. (The man of the Golden Age said) As my wife has the power of perceiving all my inclinations, she, as an intermediate, directs my thoughts (in relation to the wives of others) and removes everything discordant, and at the same time infuses a cold and horror for everything unchaste . . .

—⁷. As the woman was born to be the love of the man's wisdom, there are deliciousnesses of the play (of wisdom and love) between us and our wives. We have clearly seen this for thousands of years . . .

—⁹. I asked, Did any of you, in the natural world, live with more than one wife? He replied that he did not know of one; for they were not able to think of more; and had been told by those who had done so, that the heavenly blessednesses of their souls had instantly withdrawn from the inmosts to the outermosts of their bodies, even to the nails, and, together with them, the honourable marks of virility; and, that when this was perceived, they were cast out of the country.

76³. (The man of the Silver Age said) There is a correspondence between spiritual marriage—which is that of truth with good—and natural marriage, which is that of a man with one wife; and . . . we have seen that the Church, with its truths and goods, is impossible except with those who live in love truly conjugal with one wife; for the marriage of good and truth is the Church with a man; and therefore all we in this Heaven say that the husband is truth, and the wife its good; and that good cannot love any other truth than its own, nor can truth love in return any other good than its own. If any other were loved, the internal marriage which constitutes the Church, would perish; and marriage would become merely external, to which idolatry corresponds. Therefore we call marriage with one wife sacramony; but with more than one . . . sacrilege.

—⁷. He said, The crimson colour signifies the conjugal love of the wife. (Continued under HUSBAND.)

77⁴. (The intelligent one of the Copper Age) set his wife beside him, and spoke as follows (on monogamy).

—⁶. I said, afterwards, How can you subsist upon this earth, seeing you have no love truly conjugal . . . ? He replied, As to connubial love, We love our wives with such vehement zeal (or jealousy) that we do not suffer anyone to enter further within our houses than the vestibule; and, as there is zeal, there is also love.

79⁵. We entered some of the cottages (of those of the Age of Iron mingled with Clay) and saw in each a man with his woman; and we asked them, Do all here live in their house with one wife only? They replied with a hiss, What do you mean by one wife only? why not ask, With one harlot only? what is a wife but a harlot? . . . Why is a plurality of wives denied us? . . . What is life with one woman only, but captivity and imprisonment?

80². The Angel said, (The human Conjugal) is the desire to live with one wife only; and a Christian has this longing according to his religion.

115⁵. (What wives would be if the minds of the married partners were in the marriage of good and truth. Fully quoted under HUSBAND.)

123. A wife does not reflect upon the good in herself, but upon the inclination of her husband towards her . . . and the good which is in her from the Lord, she applies, without the husband's knowing anything about that application.

125. That the wife does not represent the Church. (Fully quoted under HUSBAND.) 126.

—². The Church is first implanted in the man, and through him in the wife; because the man receives the truth of the Church in his understanding, and the wife receives it from the man. If it takes place the other way about, it is not according to order; although it does sometimes happen, but [only] with men who are either not lovers of wisdom, and therefore not of the Church, or else who depend like slaves on the orders of their wives.

136⁶. They all went home with their prizes; and . . . their wives came to meet them, who also wore as marks of distinction ornaments that had been given them from Heaven.

155a. The affection of the deliciousnesses of conjugal love (heard sung) by wives in Heaven.

—². A golden shower (seen) falling over a palace, in which (were three wives with whom resided wisdom concerning the deliciousnesses of conjugal love). . . The Angel asked that I might be allowed to speak with the wives, in their husbands' presence. They called their wives, who looked searchingly into my eyes. I asked why, and they said, We can accurately see what is your inclination . . . and thought . . . concerning the love of the sex . . . I replied, Pray tell me something about the deliciousnesses of conjugal love . . . (for) this Angel has told me as a secret that wives are the receptacles and sensories of these deliciousnesses, because they are born loves; and all deliciousnesses belong to love. To this they replied with a smile, Be prudent, and tell nothing of this kind except with a doubtful meaning; because this is a wisdom which is kept deeply reserved in the hearts of our sex, and is not opened to any husband unless he is in love truly conjugal. There are many reasons for this, which we hide in our own bosoms. Then the husbands said, Our wives know all the states of our minds, so that nothing is hidden from them; they see, perceive, and feel whatever proceeds from our will; but we [see, perceive, and feel] nothing in our wives. This has been given to wives, because they are most tender loves, and as it were ardent zeals for the preservation of conjugal friendship and confidence, and thus of the happiness of life for both their husbands and themselves, which they provide for by a wisdom implanted in their love, and which is so full of prudence, that they are not willing, and therefore are not able, to say that they love; but that they are loved. (Continued under HUSBAND.)

—⁴. The wives said, We will disclose something; (for) while that white dove appears, it is a sign that we may. Every man has five senses . . . but we have a sixth, which is a sense of all the deliciousnesses of the conjugal love of the husband; and we have it in the palms of our hands, when we are touching the breasts, arms, hands, or cheeks of our husbands, but especially their breasts; and also when we are being touched by them. All the gladnesses and pleasantnesses of the thoughts of their minds, and all the joys and delights of their lower minds, and all the festive and cheerful things of their bosoms, pass from them into us, and put on a form, and become perceptible, sensible, and tangible; and we discern them as accurately and distinctly as the ear does the melody of a song, or the tongue the flavours of delicacies; in a word, the spiritual delights of our husbands put on with us a kind of natural embodiment; and therefore we are called by our husbands the sensory organs of chaste conjugal love and of its derivative deliciousnesses. But this sense of our sex comes into existence, subsists, persists, and is exalted, in the degree in which our husbands love us from wisdom and judgment, and in which we in return love them from the same things in them. This sense of our sex is called in the Heavens the sport of wisdom with its love, and of love with its wisdom. . . The variety of these deliciousnesses is infinite; but we are unwilling, and therefore unable, to say more, because the dove . . . has flown away. 314³, Ex.

159. That the will of the wife conjoins itself with the understanding of the man; and, derivatively, the understanding of the man with the will of the wife. Ex.

160. That the inclination to unite the man to herself is constant and perpetual with the wife; but inconstant and alternating with the man. Ex.

161. That conjunction is inspired into the man by the wife according to her love, and is received by the man according to his wisdom. Ex.

— . At this day, this is hidden from the men, the reason of which is that wives persuade [the men] that they alone love, and that wives receive; that is, that the men are loves, and they themselves obediences; and they rejoice at heart when the men believe it. There are many reasons for this, all of which belong to the prudence and circumspection of wives . . .

— . There is nothing of conjugal love, nor even of the love of the sex, with men; but solely with wives and women. (Shown by experiment.)

—². But still the wives, from their prudence, brought the men to believe that love resides with the men, and that some spark of it may pass from them into their wives.

—³. (This experiment shows) that wives are loves, and men receptions. That men are receptions according to the wisdom in them—especially according to the wisdom from religion—is evident from the fact, that when the wife alone is loved, the love is concentrated; and, being ennobled, it remains in its strength, and is steadfast and permanent; and that otherwise it would be as when wheat out of the granary is cast to the dogs, whereby there is scarcity at home.

[M.] 163. That the conjunction of the wife with the rational wisdom of the husband is effected from within; but with his moral wisdom from without. Ex.

165. The rational wisdom of the men climbs into a light in which women are not . . . but still (these things) are in wives from within. Ex.

—e. But . . . the virtues of moral wisdom are for the most part akin to like virtues with women, and partake of the man's intellectual will, with which the will of the wife unites itself, and makes a marriage; and, as the wife knows these virtues in the man better than the man knows them in himself, it is said that the conjunction of the wife with these virtues is from without.

166. That for the sake of this conjunction . . . there has been given the wife a perception of the husband's affections, and also the utmost prudence in regulating them. Ex.

— . Wives know the affections of their husbands by three senses: sight, hearing, and touch; and regulate them without their husbands knowing anything about it.

— . But as these are some of the secrets of wives, it does not become me to lay them open circumstantially; but as it does become the wives themselves, four Memorable Relations are added . . .

167. That wives . . . hide this perception from their husbands, for reasons . . . Ex.

— . If wives were to disclose the affections and inclinations of their husbands, this cold would burst forth (in the latter) . . . and there would remain no hope of (conjugal) friendship, confidence, and of the bliss of dwelling together; and yet wives are continually allured—lactantur—with this hope.

168. That this perception is the wisdom of the wife; and is not possible with a man; nor is the rational wisdom of the man possible with the wife. Ex.

169. That a wife is constantly thinking about the inclination of the man to herself, with the purpose to conjoin him with herself. Ex.

170. The wife conjoins the man with herself by applications to the desires of his will.

171. That the wife is conjoined with her man by the sphere of her life which goes forth from her love. Ex.

—e. The sphere of love that goes forth from a wife who is tenderly loved, is perceived in Heaven as sweetly fragrant . . .

172. That the wife is conjoined with the husband by the appropriation of the powers of his manhood; but this takes place according to their mutual spiritual love. Ex.

— . (These) are received by the wives universally, and they add themselves to their life; so that the wives lead a life more and more unanimous with their husbands. (Continued under HUSBAND.)

173. That in this way the wife receives into herself the image of her husband, and so perceives, sees, and feels his affections. Ex.

—7. (Thus) there is something of the husband being constantly transcribed into the wife . . . as her own.

174. That there are offices proper to the man, and offices proper to the wife; and the wife cannot enter into the offices proper to the man, nor the man into the offices proper to the wife. Ex.

175. In the offices proper to wives, will, affection, and love, play the leading part . . . (Ex. under HUSBAND, at M.176.)

181. All these (before-mentioned) things, are utterly impossible except in the marriage of one man with one wife.

192^e. Married partners, (in the Spiritual World), possess an interior comeliness of face; for the man derives from the wife the lovely bloom of her love; and the wife from the man the bright lustre of his wisdom.

193. That the woman is actually formed into a wife, according to the description in (Gen.ii.22-24). Ex.

—2. This (transcription of his Own wisdom into the woman) was effected in order that in the man there might not be the love of self, but the love of his wife. For the wife, from her inborn nature, cannot do otherwise than convert the love of self in the man into his love for herself; and I have heard that this is effected from the wife's love itself, neither the man, nor the wife, being conscious of it. Hence it is that no one can ever love his consort conjugally who is in the conceit of his Own intelligence from the love of self.

—3. (Thus) in marriage, the woman is as it were . . . formed from the man; and this is effected by the wife; or rather through the wife by the Lord, who has infused into women so to do. For the wife receives into herself the image of the man by her appropriating his affections to herself, and conjoining his internal will with her own . . . and also by her appropriating to herself the propagations of his soul. 197. 198.

194. That this formation is effected by the wife in secret ways, which is meant by the woman being created while the man slept. Ex.

— . That the man's 'sleep' = his complete ignorance that his wife is formed and as it were created, from him, is evident from (what is said above, at M.155a^e. 166. 167. 168.)

—2. 'To cleave to his wife' (Gen.ii.24; Matt.xix. 4,5) = to devote himself to the love of his wife. (= that intellectual things must be associated with celestial ones. D.1061.)

195. That this formation by the wife is effected through the conjunction of her own will with the internal will of the man. Ex.

— . Whether it is said that the wife conjoins herself, or that she conjoins her will, with the will of the man, it is the same, because the wife is born voluntary, and therefore acts from the will . . . (More-over) the will of the man has its seat in the understanding, and the understanding—intellectuale—of the man is the inmost of the woman . . . Men have an external will also . . . which the wife clearly discerns; but she does not conjoin herself with it, except pretending and playfully.

196. One who conjoins with self the will of another, conjoins also his understanding . . . and thus the whole man; and hence it is that it has been implanted in the love of the wife to unite her husband's will to her own; for in this way the wife becomes the husband's, and the husband the wife's; and both, one man.

198. Conjugal deliciousnesses with wives originate from their wanting to be one with their husbands, as good is one with truth in the spiritual marriage . . . (Thus) the wife conjoins the man with herself, as good conjoins truth with itself; and the man reciprocally conjoins himself with the wife according to the reception of her love in himself, just as truth reciprocally conjoins itself with good according to the reception of good in itself; and in this way the love of the wife takes form—formet se—through the man's wisdom, just as good takes form through truth . . .

199. That in this way a virgin is formed into a wife . . . Ex. 321².

— The reason the virgin becomes a wife, is that in a wife there are things which have been taken out of the husband . . . and which were previously not in her . . . (And so) in a husband there are things taken from the wife which exalt the receptibility for love and wisdom . . . But this is with those who are in love truly conjugal.

— (Thus) maidenhood is changed into wifehood.

—². Some men said that conjunction with a woman before marriage is like conjunction with a wife after marriage; on hearing which the wives were very indignant, and said . . . the difference is like that between what is fatuous and what is real. To this the men retorted, Are you not women as before? to which the wives replied in a louder voice, We are not women—foeminae, but wives: you are in fatuous and not in real love, and therefore you speak fatuously. Then the men said, If you are not women (or females—foeminae), still you are married-women—mulieres. They replied, In the first beginnings of marriage we were married-women; but now we are wives.

200. That in a marriage of one man with one wife between whom there is love truly conjugal, the wife becomes more and more a wife . . . Ex.

—². I have heard from the Angels, that a wife becomes more and more a wife as the husband becomes more and more a husband; but not contrariwise; because rarely if ever is a chaste wife lacking in love for her husband; but what is lacking is the return of love by the husband . . . on account of his having no elevation of wisdom, which alone receives the wife's love.

208². (The three wives of the Golden Shower said, further) You glory over us from your wisdom; but we do not glory over you from ours; and yet our wisdom is more eminent than yours, because it enters into your inclinations and affections, and sees, perceives, and feels them. You know nothing at all about the inclinations and affections of your love . . . yet wives know them so well in their husbands that they see them in their faces, hear them from the tones of their voice, and even feel them on their breasts, arms, and cheeks. But from a zeal of love for (our mutual) happiness, we dissimulate . . . and yet we regulate them prudently . . . merely bending them when possible . . .

—³. We have this wisdom from creation . . . in order that the men may be rendered happy by their wives. . . The Lord Himself regulates the male man's freedom from within, and through his wife from without; and in this way He forms the man and his wife into an Angel . . . But we will speak more openly: we are moved to this prudence . . . because we are delighted from their love; and we love nothing more than that they be delighted from our deliciousnesses. If these grow vile with them, they are blunted with us.

—⁴. We have observed various changes in the inclinations . . . of the men towards their wives. (Fully quoted under COLD.) We have noticed this (coldness) from the withdrawal of the sense from their eyes, ears, and body, in presence of our senses. (Thus) we know better than the men whether it is well or ill with them: if they are cold towards their wives, it is ill with them; but if they are warm towards their wives, it is well with them; and therefore wives are continually devising means whereby the men may be warm . . .

—⁵. Here the dove moaned, and the wives said, That is a sign that we wish to divulge deeper secrets, but may not. Perhaps you will publish what you have heard . . . I replied, I intend to do so; what harm would it do? After consulting together, the wives said, Publish it if you like. We are not unaware of the power of persuasion wives possess. They will say, The man is joking . . . do not believe him, but believe us: we know that you are loves, and we obediences. . . Therefore . . . the husbands will place no dependence on your lips, but only on those of their wives which they kiss. (See this verified, 294².)

213. With those in love truly conjugal . . . the wife sees nothing more lovable than the man; and the man the converse. . . (This may be known) from the first deliciousnesses of marriage, which are in their first love because then the wife only . . . is loved. 224.

216a. That conjugal love resides with chaste wives; but still their love depends on their husbands. Ex. (See below, at De Conj. 34.)

— For wives are born loves, and therefore it is implanted in them to want to be one with their husbands; and they continually flatter—lactant—their love by this thought of their will; so that to recede from the endeavour to unite themselves to their husbands would be to recede from themselves. But husbands are not born loves, but recipients of this love from their wives; and therefore in proportion as they receive it, the wives enter with their love; but in proportion as they do not receive it, the wives stand outside with their love, and wait. This is the case with chaste wives; otherwise with unchaste ones.

217. That wives love the bonds of marriage provided the men love them. Ex.

— Wives, from what is implanted in them, want to be wives, and to be called wives. To them, this is a name of grace and honour; and therefore they love the bonds of marriage. And, as chaste wives want to be wives, not in name only, but in reality; and as this is effected by a closer and closer binding with their husbands, they love the bonds of marriage from the firm establishment of its covenant, and this the more in proportion as they are loved in return by their husbands.

[M.] 219. That wives are in no excitation as men are; but have a state of preparation for reception. Ex. (Continued under HUSBAND.)

221^e. Hence wives, from the wisdom implanted in them, never offer any admonition about such things.

224. That where there is love truly conjugal, the conjugal sphere is received by the wife alone, and by the husband solely through the wife. Ex.

—². (This is why) husbands who love their wives very much, turn to them . . . and those who do not love their wives turn from them, and in the day-time look at them with a retracted gaze.

225. That where the love is not conjugal, the conjugal sphere is received by the wife, but not by the husband through her. Ex.

—^e. (Thus) a man who does not love his wife, receives this sphere from some other source . . . but even then it is inspired by the wife, unknown to the man, and when he grows warm.

242. The wife is the good of the husband's truth; and he is the truth of the wife's good.

255. When a married man—usoratus—commits adultery.

256². To remove (this) cold, wives, from the prudence implanted in them, [use] various resistances . . .

258. That (a cause of cold) is affirmation by the wife, and her talking about love. Ex.

— Among the Angels there is no refusal or resistance on the part of wives, as there is with some wives on earth; and the wives also talk about love, and there is no such silence as there is with some wives on earth.

270³. The wife is in the chamber of the will.

—^e. When there is such cold towards the wife, the understanding looks downwards . . . and descends to warm itself at an illicit fire.

285². (For men need) an asylum at home with their wives, to allay the disturbances of their understandings. Besides, peace and tranquillity give serenity to their minds, and dispose them to gratefully receive the kindnesses offered by their wives, who spare no pains to dispel the mental clouds which they are quick-sighted to observe in their husbands . . .

—^e. Add to this, that there are no such simulations with wives as with men; but . . . they are those of real love; because wives have been born loves of the understanding of the men; and therefore they accept kindly the favours of their husbands; if not in words, still at heart.

290. That if favour does not cease with the wife when ability ceases with the man, a friendship which emulates conjugal friendship may take place as they grow old. (Ex. and continued under MARRIED PARTNER.)

291². (Such) men reduce their wives to either [the condition of] a rightful possession, or into compliance with their arbitrary will, or into slavery . . . But if the wives are in this striving (after mastery) . . . they reduce their husbands to either an equality of rights with themselves, or into compliance with their arbitrary will, or into slavery. But as there remains with (such) wives a desire which counterfeits conjugal love, and which is restrained by the law, and by the fear of legal separation . . . they lead with their husbands a consociate life.

—^e. Such wives are in the friendship of spurious love, from desire.

292. (The arts by which wives acquire Power over the men.) Fully ex.

— I am forbidden by wives of this sort in the Spiritual World to present these marriages in public light; because they are afraid of their art . . . being divulged . . . But the men urge me to disclose the causes of the intestine hatred, and as it were fury, which is excited in their hearts against their wives . . . and (say) that they had unwittingly contracted a terrible fear of their wives, so that they had to obey their commands most submissively . . . and that after they had contracted this dread, they did not dare to speak to their wives except in a friendly manner . . . although they cherished in their hearts a deadly hatred against them; and that their wives also behaved courteously to them in both word and deed . . .

—². Women can . . . if so disposed, subject men to the yoke . . . Uncultured wives effect this by alternate scoldings and favours, some, by constant harsh and unpleasant looks; well-bred wives, by urgent and unceasing petitions, and by obstinate resistance to their husbands when they treat them harshly . . . For they know that men, from their nature, cannot resist the obstinacy of their wives, and that after giving way they will submit . . . And then the wives make a show of affability and caresses. The genuine cause of this domination of the wives . . . is that a man acts from the understanding, and a woman from the will . . . The worst of these women . . . can hold to their obstinacies to the death agony.

—³. (The excuses they plead.) They added this admonition for the men: to leave their wives their own rights; and, while in their colds, not to account them as viler than their maid-servants. They also said that many of their sex (cannot) exercise this art on account of their innate timidity. But I added, On account of their innate modesty.

293. Seven wives seen sitting on a bed of roses by a fountain, and drinking the water. . . I asked them, How do you wives know that the deliciousnesses of conjugal love are the same as those of wisdom? They replied, From the correspondence of the wisdom in our husbands with the deliciousnesses of conjugal love in ourselves; for these . . . are qualified in us exactly according to the wisdom in our husbands. . . We are continually reflecting on the wisdom in our husbands, and learn it daily from their lips; for we wives are thinking about the state of our husbands from morning to evening . . . whereas our husbands, in the day-time, think very little about our state . . . Our husbands . . . say, that the pleasantnesses of this wisdom are transcribed from their minds into deliciousnesses in our bosom, and from our bosoms into theirs. Ex. 294².

—⁴. The spiritual rational and moral wisdom of our husbands—in respect to marriage specially—has as its end . . . to love the wife alone, and to put off all concupiscence for other women; and, in proportion as this is done . . . we feel more distinctly and exquisitely the deliciousnesses in ourselves which correspond to the delights of the affections, and the pleasantnesses of the thoughts, of our husbands.

—⁵. The delicious state of (a wife's) love is action; the state of the husband's wisdom is reception, and also reaction according to the perception; and this reaction is perceived by us (wives) with deliciousnesses in the bosom according to the state . . .

294. A few days afterwards, I again saw the seven wives; (but) in a magnificent (rainbow) rose-garden.

—³. (They said) Friend, you know not the wisdom and prudence of wives, for they hide it . . . in order to be loved; for in every man who is not spiritually, but only naturally, rational and moral, there is cold towards his wife . . . concealed in his inmosts; and this a wise and prudent wife . . . keenly observes, and in the same degree, from her conjugal love, hides it . . . because in so far as it appears, the conjugal cold of the man spreads . . . into ultimates . . . 330².

—⁴. Everyone who is insane in spiritual things is inmosts cold to his wife, and warm towards harlots . . . and when cold reigns with a man, he cannot endure any feeling of love . . . from his wife; and therefore the wife . . . conceals it; and in (the same) proportion the man is warmed . . . by the influent meretricious sphere. Hence the wife of such a man has no bosom deliciousnesses . . . but only pleasures, which on the man's side are to be called those of scortatory love.

—⁵. Every chaste wife loves her husband, even if he is unchaste; but as wisdom alone receives her love, the wife exerts all her endeavours to turn his insanity into wisdom, that is, to prevent his desiring other women . . . which she does by a thousand methods that are carefully hidden from the man, because she well knows that love cannot be compelled; and therefore it has been given to women to Know, by sight, hearing, and touch, every state of mind of their husbands; whereas it has not been given to the men to Know any state of mind of their wives. A chaste wife can look at her husband with an austere countenance, accost him with a harsh voice, and also be angry and quarrel; and yet in her heart cherish a soft and tender love towards him. But that this anger and dissimulation have as their end wisdom, and thus the reception of love by the husband, is evident from the fact that she can be reconciled in a moment. Further ex.

—⁷. Their husbands came . . . and confirmed what their wives had said . . .

321³. A sphere of love constantly flows forth from the wife, and a sphere of understanding from the man, and this sphere perfects the conjunctions . . .

323. See WIDOWER, here.

325³. As a man from creation is truth; and a wife from creation is the good thereof . . .

330³. The wives said, After a husband has sipped the natural beauty of his wife, he sees it no longer; but he sees her spiritual beauty, and from this he loves her in return, and recalls her natural beauty, but under a different aspect.

—⁴. Some wives in Heaven, who were beautiful, because they were heavenly affections, confirmed from there the three conclusions of the men; but added, Let wives love their beauty . . . only for their husbands' sake, and from them.

331. The three wives . . . concluded (1) that no wife loves her man from his face, but from his intelligence in his office and conduct—mores. Know, therefore, that a wife unites herself with the man's intelligence, and thus with the man; and therefore if a man loves himself from his intelligence, he draws back his intelligence from his wife into himself, whence comes disunion . . .

— The men said, Perhaps the wife unites herself with the man's virility. The wives smiled, and said, That is not lacking when the man loves the wife from intelligence; but it is if he loves her from insanity. Intelligence consists in loving the wife alone . . . and insanity in not loving the wife, but the sex . . .

—². (2) We women are born into the love of the men's intelligence, so that if the men love their Own intelligence, the intelligence cannot be united with its genuine love, which is in the wife; and (then) it becomes insanity from conceit, and conjugal love becomes cold; and what woman can unite her love to cold . . .

— The men said, Whence has a man honour from his wife, unless he magnifies his intelligence? The wives replied, From love, because love honours . . .

—³. (3) You seem as if you love your wives, and do not see that you are loved by them, and that you only love back; and that your intelligence is the receptacle; so that if you love your intelligence in yourselves, it becomes the receptacle of your own love, and self-love never becomes conjugal, because it cannot endure an equal, but in so far as it prevails, it remains scortatory.

—^e. Some husbands in Heaven . . . confirmed from there the three conclusions of the wives.

333. That love truly conjugal is not possible except with one wife; consequently neither are truly conjugal friendship, confidence, and potency; nor such a conjunction of minds that they are one flesh. Ex. De Conj. 120, Ex.

335. That thus the celestial blessednesses, the spiritual happinesses, and the natural delights, provided . . . for those in love truly conjugal, are possible only with one wife. Ex.

338. That therefore it is not allowable for a Christian to marry more than one wife. Ex.

339. That if a Christian marries more wives than one, he commits (both) natural and spiritual adultery. Ex.

340. That the Israelites were permitted to marry more wives than one, because there was no Christian Church with them, and therefore love truly conjugal was not possible. Ex.

341. That Mohanmedans are now permitted to marry more wives than one, because they do not acknowledge the Lord Jesus to be one with Jehovah . . . and therefore cannot receive love truly conjugal. Ex.

[M.] 342. (In the) higher Mohammedan Heaven (they) live with one wife only.

353. As every man—homo . . . inclines to love himself, to prevent him from perishing . . . it has been provided . . . that this love of the male man be transcribed into the wife; and that there be implanted in her from birth to love the intelligence and wisdom of her man, and thus the man. Therefore the wife continually draws to herself her man's conceit of his Own intelligence, and extinguishes it in him, and vivifies it in herself, and thus turns it into conjugal love, and fills it with pleasant things . . . Sig. T.663.

355². In Heaven . . . there are wives still more beautiful, who appear like native effigies of heavenly love . . . 381.

—³. The Angel said, I have lived with my wife a thousand years . . . Des.

—⁶. With us, fructifications are spiritual . . . the wife, from her husband's wisdom, receives into herself the love of it; and the husband, from the love of it in his wife, receives into himself wisdom; nay, the wife is actually formed into the love of her husband's wisdom, which is effected by the receptions of the propagations of his soul, together with the deliciousness originating from the fact that she wants to be the love of her husband's wisdom. Thus, from a virgin she becomes a wife, and a likeness. Thence, too, love with its inmost friendship with the wife, and wisdom with its happiness with the husband, are perennially growing . . . This is the state of the Angels.

367^e. This love induces on the wife the form of love. (Continued under HUSBAND.)

372^e. So the wife protects, through the husband, those things which she has in common with the man . . .

379. That jealousy with men . . . is different from what it is with . . . wives. Ex.

384. In the virgins (there) there is the brightness, but in the wives, the resplendence, of beauty. The difference is like that between a diamond sparkling with light, and a ruby flashing at the same time with fire.

—². He continued, I have seen (there) the redness of bright-whiteness in the wife; and the bright-whiteness of redness in the husband.

403. That, before conception, wives have a state of love different from that which they have after it, up to the birth. Ex.

409². Hence . . . where there is no conjugal love between man and wife, it still exists with the wife, and by it there is some external conjunction with the man.

411². In Heaven, the husband follows the wife into her Heaven, or into her house, if they are in the same Society. (See an instance of this under MARRIAGE. D.6027¹⁶.)

4399. To be delighted in having one's wife praised, is a formal affection. Ex.

4688. A wife was seen by her husband, and eight evil women assumed her form, so that he did not know which was his wife. The exterior forms were then taken away, and they all appeared as diabolical images, except the wife, who was an Angel of Heaven; and he went to her. Afterwards there was taken away from the wife the external form which the eight evil ones had drawn to themselves by magical art; and then the wife appeared in a resplendent form like an Angel, and he regarded her with admiration; and at last even that form was taken away, and then he was astounded . . .

605⁵². (With those in conjugal love) the love of the husband depends upon that of the wife: in proportion as she loves such (congresses) so does the husband. It is the contrary in love not conjugal . . .

609⁵. The Africans say that by the civil law they are indeed allowed to take two or three wives, but still they take one, for the reason that a love which is divided among a number is external and thus lascivious; whereas with one wife it is internal and truly conjugal.

6110². The wives of the Angels said that I should not reveal the fact (that the feminine principle is to love the husband tenderly), but I said that I shall reveal it. For they suppose this to be a weakness of theirs; but it is the very good of truth and truth of good.

—⁷. If a man concentrates his love on his wife, by shunning adultery as a sin, the love increases daily, together with its potency . . .

—⁸. A woman said to me that it is impossible to love a wife long, because it becomes common. But the Angels said she was mistaken, for where there is love truly conjugal, this very commonness is the plane in which the deliciousnesses form themselves from within . . . and this to eternity. —⁷⁵.

—¹⁴. The wife is the soul and life of the man. Or is the man's heart.

—¹⁶. Unless what is eternal is thought of, that is, an eternal conjunction, she is not a wife, but a concubine.

—¹⁷. The reciprocal bond is that the affection of the wife is in the understanding of the man, and that the understanding of the man is with the wife.

—¹⁸. In Heaven, the wife is spiritual heat; and the husband, spiritual light.

—²⁰. How the husband's life enters his wife by the thighs, and by love: . . . so that truth then becomes good, that is, the understanding [of the husband becomes] the will of the wife; and at last . . . becomes the form of the wife's affection; thus how it is to be understood that the wife was formed out of Adam's rib, and Adam said, 'Bone of my bone; flesh of my flesh'; also that 'they shall become one flesh,' and that 'the man shall cleave to his wife.'

—⁵². Virgins who have imbued piety to the extent of becoming somewhat melancholy, make sad wives . . .

—⁵⁵. Various fears felt of a wife. Enum. . . Such a man seems to love his wife; but it is not fear for his wife, but fear of his wife. Whereas the fear of conjugal love is fear lest the wife be injured . . .

—⁶¹. When conjugal love has been inverted (as man is by regeneration) the man's love proceeds from the wife's love; and such as is hers, such is his.

—⁶⁶. Adultery with the wife of another, destroys all the delight of life between the husband and wife, and induces aversion for the other. It also destroys her care of the children . . .

—⁶⁸. An adulterer does not see this, unless he thinks about his own wife . . .

—⁶⁹. With those in conjugal love . . . [the delights] of the wife inflow into the sense of the husband, so that the very sensations and delights are mutually communicated . . .

E. 340¹³. 'Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine on the sides of thine house' (Ps.cxxviii.3)=the affection of spiritual truth in everything he thinks and does . . . 638¹³.

555¹⁴. That the wife is said to be 'bone of the bones and flesh of the flesh' of the man=that good—which is 'the wife'—is from truth—which is 'the man.' 'Bone'=truth before it has been vivified, that is, conjoined with good . . . and, as all good is formed from truths, it is said, 'because she was taken out of man.' That 'the man shall leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife'=that truth must be of good, and that in this way both become one good. This is signified by 'they shall be one flesh.'

—¹⁵. 'Man and wife'=the conjunction of truth and good, which is called the heavenly marriage, into which man comes when he has been regenerated . . . and (this) is when he is in good and the derivative truths, which is meant by 'the man shall leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife, and they shall be one flesh.' (=that man must leave that evil and falsity which he has from his religion . . . and that his understanding, separated from these, must be conjoined with the corresponding affection which belongs to the wife; for thus the two become one affection of truth and good . . . 710²⁰.)

—²¹. 'Hath not defiled the wife of his companion' (Ezek.xviii.6)=who does not adulterate the good of the Church and of the Word.

654⁴⁷. As 'wives' = affections of good and truth, which become affections of evil and falsity when one man has a plurality of wives, it is said, 'neither shall he multiply to himself wives, that his heart turn not away' (Deut.xvii.17).

701²⁰. 'A wife' is called 'the wife of thy covenant' (Mal.ii.14) from her conjunction with her man: but the 'wife,' here, = the Church; and 'the wife of thy youth,' the Ancient Church, against which the Jewish Church is said to have 'dealt treacherously' . . .

—²⁵. As two various affections cannot correspond to one understanding, in Heaven it is not possible for one man to have more than one wife.

—²⁷. The reason why 'Moses for the hardness of their hearts suffered them to put away a wife for any cause' (Matt.xix.3,8) was that the Israelites . . . were (merely) natural, and (such) are hard at heart, because not in any conjugal love, but in lascivious love, such as is that of adultery.

—²⁸. The reason why, 'whosoever shall put away his wife, except for fornication, and marry another, commits adultery' (ver.9) is that 'fornication'=what is false, and, with a woman, the affection of what is evil and false, thus an affection which cannot possibly accord with the understanding of what is true and good; and from this discordance, conjugal love, which is that of truth and good . . . utterly perishes. For, when the interior conjunction, which is that of minds . . . is null, the marriage is dissolved. Further ex.

[E.] 734¹². The conjunction of good and truth is signified by to 'betroth a wife,' and to 'take her' (Deut.xx. 7). . . 'Lest another man take the wife'=lest truth of a different kind conjoin itself with the affection of good . . .

768¹⁹. As 'man and wife,' in the Word, =the understanding of truth and the will of good . . . they=the thought of truth and the affection of good; and also truth and good. 863².

949³. In proportion as anyone shuns 'coveting' the wives, etc. of others—thus also the love and derivative cupidities of exercising command over others . . . —in the same proportion love to the Lord enters.

992^e. For (by these effects) the Vital (or life) of the man adds itself to the Vital of the wife, and couples them together.

993². Such love truly conjugal cannot come into existence except by a marriage in which the man is truth, and the wife good.

998⁴. When the Angels are separated from their consorts, they are in intelligence, but not in wisdom; but when they are with their consorts, they are in wisdom also; and, wonderful to say, in proportion as they turn their face to her, in the same proportion they are in a state of wisdom; for, in the Spiritual World, the conjunction of good and truth is effected by the aspect; and the wife, there, is good; and the man, there, is truth: so that as truth turns itself to good, so is truth vivified.

1004². The wife has been so created as to be the will of good. (Continued under HUSBAND.)

— Therefore it is not possible for one truth to be united to two diverse goods, nor the converse. Nor is it possible for one understanding to be united to two diverse wills; nor the converse. Nor is it possible for one man—who is spiritual—to be united to two diverse Churches. And so, in like manner, it is not possible for one man to be innately united to two women. Inmost union is like that of the soul and the heart; and the man is the soul of the wife, and the wife is the heart of the man. The man communicates and conjoins his soul to the wife by actual love—for his soul is in his seed—and the wife receives his soul in her heart; and thus the two become one; and then each and all things in the body of the one have regard to their reciprocal-mutuum—in the body of the other. This is genuine marriage, which is possible only between two. For it is from creation that all things of the man, both of mind and body, have their reciprocal-mutuum—in the mind and body of the wife; and thus that the smallest singulars have a mutual regard for one another, and want to be united. This regard and endeavour is the source of conjugal love. (Continued under MARRIAGE.)

1010⁴. See ADULTERY, here.

1120^e. Thus it is from Divine order for the wife to be on the right hand. (Fully quoted under RIGHT-DEXTER.)

J. (Post.) 85. I have spoken with the Mohammedans about a plurality of wives . . . They perceived justice in my reasons; but replied that still they cannot recede from matrimony with a plurality, because it had been granted them in the world by their religion, for the reason that they are Orientals, who, without a plurality of wives would have blazed into adulteries and perished. De Conj.46, Gen.art.

De Conj. 9^e. Men to whom adulteries are the end in matrimony . . . take such a nausea for a wife that they flee from them; for at last they become impotences, and, with them, the life of thought and of speech perishes in the company of wives, and most of all in that of their own wife.

Wild-ass. Onager.

A. 1949. 'He shall be a wild-ass man' (Gen.xvi.12) =rational truth.

— Of the same kind (as the horse, mule, and ass) is the wild-ass; for it is the mule of the wilderness, or wild ass—asinus sylvestris; and it=the Rational of man—not the Rational in its complex, but only rational truth. The Rational consists of good and truth... and it is rational truth that is signified by 'the wild-ass.' This, therefore, is what is represented by 'Ishmael.'... It is the same thing whether you say rational truth, or the man whose Rational is of this kind. The man whose Rational is such that he is in truth only... is a morose man. (Continued under ISHMAEL.)

246. 'Thy wild-beast shall dwell in it' (Ps.lxviii. 10)=that the affection of good [will do so]. (=the regenerate man. 908².)

272. That he should live like a wild-beast. Sig. ... He lives like a wild-beast when the internal man is so separated from the external that it does not operate into it, except in a very general way. For, that man is man he has through the internal man from the Lord; but that he is a wild-beast, he has from the external man, which, separated from the internal, is in itself nothing but a wild-beast: it has a like nature, cupidities, appetites, phantasies, and sensations. The organic things are also similar.

286. In what precedes it has treated... first of those who lived like wild-animals (or wild-things), and at last became spiritual men...

774. 'The wild-beast after its kind' (Gen.vii.14)=all spiritual good; and 'the beast after its kind'=all natural good... Thus 'wild-beast' involves what is of higher worth and excellence than 'beast.' The reason is, that in the Hebrew the term means also 'an animal in which there is a living soul.' And so here, it does not mean 'a wild-beast,' but 'an animal in which there is a living soul;' for [in the Hebrew] it is the same word.

* In E.388²², and 650⁹, it is stated that when, in the Word, fera is used in a good sense, it ought rather to be changed (in Latin) into 'animal, which means a living soul,' for the reason that an idea of what is wild and ferocious adheres to the Latin word fera. In his own usage, however, Swedenborg has not changed fera into animal, even when the sense is good, but has retained fera, in spite of its 'wild and ferocious' associations. Therefore, as this Concordance is merely a work of reference to Swedenborg, the Compiler has followed Swedenborg's own usage in retaining 'wild-beast,' or 'wild-animal,' in the English; and it must be left to the reader to 'set aside the idea of what is wild and ferocious' from the expression in all those instances where it is used in a good sense, and to keep in mind the idea merely of 'a living soul.'

[A.] 803. 'All flesh expired)... as to wild-beast' (ver. 21)=the pleasures in their persuasions (did so).

—, 'Wild-beast,' in the Word, is taken in two senses—for the things in man which are alive, and for those which are dead—for those which are alive, because, in the Hebrew, the term means what is alive: but as, in their humiliation, the Most Ancients acknowledged themselves to be wild-beasts, the term came to mean also the things with man which are dead. By 'wild-beast,' here, is signified both what is alive and what is dead in one complex, as is usually the case with man after temptation. Ex. (Compare 908.)

870^e. 'Deliver not the soul of Thy turtledove unto the wild-beast' (Ps.lxxiv.19)=the life of faith to those who have no charity. (=to the falsity of evil. E.388¹⁶.)

7280^e. When their external bonds are taken away . . . and they are left to their cupidities, they are like wild-beasts . . .

9174. If the good of the love of self and of the world . . . be the soul of a man, he is not a man, but a wild-beast; and, in the other life, in the light of Heaven, he appears as a wild-beast . . .

9182^e. 'The wild-beast of the field'=life from good.

—³. That 'wild-beast'=falsity and evil from the loves of self and the world. Ill.

—⁵. As 'wild-beast'=what is false, and as this is from a double origin—from evil, and from what is upright—'wild-beast,' in the Word,=also the upright gentiles. Ill.

9391¹⁶. As such think insanelly, because from lowest things, they are called 'the wild-beast of the reed' (Ps. lxxviii.30). See E.388¹³. 439⁵. 627¹³. (=the cupidity of falsity which is from the scientifics of the sensuous man. 654²⁴.)

H. 110^e. If he is wild and untamed, he is called a bear or a wolf.

587^e. Dark forests in which wander malignant Spirits, like wild-beasts.

P. 340a^e. I then said, So that you are like wild-beasts. On hearing this, fury seized them . . .

M. 79³. The Angel said, All these wild-beasts that you have seen are not wild-beasts, but correspondences . . . of the cupidities in which are the people we are about to visit . . .

264¹. Those (devils) were seen as various kinds of wild-beasts, with fierce eyes.

267³. The external (of such a one) is human, and his internal ferine.

T. 13¹. (Such) thereby put off the Human, and put on the Ferine, and become like beasts-bestiis=foxes in cunning, wolves in fierceness, etc. . . In the Spiritual World they appear at a distance like these wild-beasts. So their love of evil figures itself.

34³. If he closes the lowest natural degree as to its Spiritual, he becomes, as to his love, like a wild-beast . . .

45². This (diabolical love of self) is the cause of its cupidities appearing . . . at a distance like various species of wild-beasts; some, like foxes and leopards; some like wolves and tigers; and some like crocodiles and venomous serpents.

71^e. And the earth was cleared of those wild-creatures (that is, of the birds of night, locusts, and spectres).

74³. (Otherwise) what is ferine would enter men . . . so that they could not be restrained by any laws . . .

123¹. The combat of the Lord with Hell may be compared . . . to a fight with the wild-beasts of the whole world, and their slaughter and subjugation . . . Moreover infernal Spirits are described in the Word as 'wild-beasts.' They are meant in Mark i.13, by the 'wild-beasts' with which the Lord was 'for forty days.'

148. Like robbers who . . . when they return into the forests are like wild-beasts.

312². At a distance (such) appear like wild-beasts of every kind—tigers, leopards, wolves, foxes, dogs, crocodiles, serpents . . . and when they see gentle animals in the representative forms, they rush at them. . .

328. The concupiscences of the flesh . . . are exactly like those of beasts-bestiarum, and therefore, in themselves, are ferine . . . Therefore, in proportion as anyone indulges (these) concupiscences, he is a beast-bestia, and a wild-beast.

331. No one can approach another who keeps a leopard and a panther . . . unless he first removes these wild-beasts. 436.

405^e. With two . . . faces; one ferine, the other . . . human.

564². Inwardly, he is a beast-bestia; nay, a wild-beast . . .

568³. I have seen evil moral men (when their external was put off) like wild-beasts; their fierce eyes fixed on the neighbour . . . See E.388².

574. Regarded in himself, the natural man . . . differs not from the nature of beasts-bestiarum: he is in like manner wild and untamed—that is, as to the will . . .

588. If the will were not held in check through the understanding, the man . . . from the ferine nature implanted in him, would plunder and slaughter . . .

D. 1913. That fierce-creatures-ferae—with many feet, such insects, for instance,=the more insane devils. Gen.art. 1915, Examp.

4633². As he was of such a ferine nature, he was despatched into the Hell of such. 4634.

[D.] 5832. All said that they are no longer men, but are like wild-beasts; for they had put off the human nature by bursting asunder and profaning the society [which comes into existence by] marriage.

E. 304⁶⁰. 'Evil wild-beasts (shall) cease out of the land' (Lev.xxvi.6)=that there should not be evil affections and concupiscences, which destroy the Church. 365¹⁴. —²⁷. 388⁷. (=exemption from the cupidity for falsity. E.650⁶⁸.)

328¹¹. 'No lion shall be there, neither shall a ravenous one of the wild-beasts be found therein' (Is.xxxv.9)=that there shall be no falsity destroying truth, nor evil destroying good. 388¹⁰. 650⁶⁴.

388. 'And by the wild-beasts of the earth' (Rev.vi.8)=evils of life, which are the cupidities and derivative Falsities that originate from the love of self and of the world, and which devastate all things of the Church with man. (See R.323, where 'beast' in the same passage is 'bestia' in the Latin.)

— That 'wild-beasts,' here,=in special, evils of life, is evident from the series . . . Ex.

—³. That 'evil wild-beasts'=the (above mentioned) cupidities and Falsities; and also, in the opposite sense, the affections of truth that vivify all things of the Church. III.

—⁵. 'The wild-beast of the field' (Hos.ii.12)=the derivative Falsities and evil cupidities. 403².

—⁷. 'The evil wild-beast'=the cupidities which destroy good affections. III.

—⁸. 'The evil wild-beast in the land' (Ezek.xxxiv.25)=cupidities; and 'the wild-beast of the field' (ver. 28)=Falsities.

—⁹. 'The wild-beast of the field shall rend them' (Hos.xiii.8)=cupidities and Falsities. (=that they will be destroyed by falsities from evil. 781¹⁴.)

—¹¹. 'Every wild-beast of the nation' (Zeph.ii.14)=the falsity of evil. (=the affections of falsity. 650⁶⁶.)

—¹². 'Every wild-beast of the field shall be upon his branches' (Ezek.xxxi.13)=that then there will be . . . evils of affection. 650²⁸. (=affections of falsity. 654³⁶.)

—¹⁴. The evils signified by 'the wild-beast of the field' (Ezek.xxxix.4) are evils of life, which are the cupidities that originate from the love of self and of the world.

—¹⁵. 'The wild-beast of the earth' (Ps.lxxix.2)=the derivative affections of evil.

—¹⁷. 'The wild-beast of the field' (Ezek.xxxiv.5)=evils from falsities.

—¹⁹. 'The wild-beast' (Ezek.xxxiii.27)=the evil of falsity.

—²⁰. 'The evil wild-beast' (Ezek.v.17; xiv.15)=the deprivation of (the good of love and the truth of faith) through the evils of the love of self and of the world.

—²¹. 'The evil wild-beast' means all noxious beasts that seize and rend asunder good animals . . . They are lions, tigers, panthers, wild-boars, wolves, dragons, serpents, and many others. That these wild-beasts, and 'the evil wild-beast' in general=the cupidities that originate from the love of self and of the world, from which come all the evils of life and the falsities of doctrine, is from correspondence, as is evident from the appearances in the Spiritual World; for there all the cupidities of evil and of falsity appear as wild-beasts of various kinds; and moreover those from whom such things appear are like wild-beasts; for their greatest delight is to attack and destroy the good . . .

—²². It shall now be shown that 'wild-beasts,' in the Word,=also the affections of truth and good . . . The reason (of this signification) is that the word in the Original Language means 'life'; for 'fera' in that language is 'chajah,' which means 'life'; and the very life of the spiritual man consists in the affection of truth and good; so that when 'fera' is mentioned in this good sense, it ought rather to be changed into and called 'animal' which means a living soul. When 'fera' is mentioned in this sense, the idea that adheres to the word 'fera' in the Latin language must be entirely set aside; for in that language an idea of what is wild and ferocious adheres to the word 'fera' . . . In the Hebrew language it is different, for there 'fera' means 'life'; and a living soul, or animal, in general. In this sense 'chajah' or 'fera' cannot be called 'beast-bestia'; because, in the Word, 'fera' and 'bestia' are sometimes mentioned together, when 'fera'=the affection of truth, and 'bestia' the affection of good. As 'fera,' or 'chajah,' in this (good) sense=the affection of truth and of good, Eve . . . is called 'Chavah.' (See Gen.iii.20.) And the four animals (in Ezek.) are also called 'chajah,' in the plural; and as an idea of what is wild and ferocious adheres to the word 'fera,' the translators have said 'animalia' . . .

—²³. Animals that may be eaten, such as lambs, sheep, etc. . . and also those which are not to be eaten, are also called by the general word 'ferae' . . . III.

— The animals that were sacrificed are also called 'ferae,' III.

—²⁴. That 'fera'=the affection of truth and good. III.

— In Lev.xxv.7, by 'bestias et feras' are meant lambs, sheep, goats, oxen, horses, asses, etc.; and not lions, bears, wild-boars, and the like rapacious wild-beasts; so that by the 'ferae,' here, are meant the domestic animals-ferae domesticae—which are useful, and which=affections of truth and of good.

—²⁵. 'Praise Jehovah . . . ye wild-animal and every beast' (Ps.cxlviii.10)=the affections of truth and of good.

—²⁶. 'Thy wild-animal shall dwell therein' (Ps.lxviii.10)=that the affections of truth and of good (will dwell in the Church). . . For no ferocious wild-beast—that is, cupidity of falsity and of evil—can dwell in (it).

—²⁸. 'The wild-animal of the field' (Ezek.xxxi.6)=the affections of truth. (=the affections of scientifics. 650⁶⁷.)

—³¹. See BEAST, here.

— When it is said 'the wild-beast of the earth' there is meant the wild-beast which devours animals and men; but when it is said 'the wild-animal of the field,' there is meant the wild-animal which consumes what has been sown; so that 'the wild-beast of the earth'=the things which destroy the goods of the Church; and 'the wild-animal of the field,' the things which destroy the truths of the Church. Ex.

400^o. 'The wild-beast of the field' (Ezek.xxxviii.20) = the affection and the cupidity of falsity and of evil. (=affections from scientifics. 650⁴¹.)

650^o. In many passages it is sometimes said 'bestia' and sometimes 'fera'; and by 'fera' is not meant fera in the sense in which there is contained the idea of wild things; for, in the Hebrew, 'fera' is derived from a word which means 'life'; and therefore in some passages instead of 'fera' it is better to say 'animal'. . . . But still there is a careful distinction made in the Word between 'bestiae' and 'ferae'; by 'bestiae' being signified the affections of the natural man which are of his will; and by 'ferae,' the affections of the natural man which are of his understanding . . .

—¹⁰. 'The wild-animal of the forest' (Ps.civ.20) = the affection of scientifics.

—'. 'Both small and great wild-beasts' (ver.25) = various affections.

—⁴⁶. 'Every wild-beast of the field' (Ezek.xxxix.17) = all, in whatever kind of affection of good they may be.

—⁴⁹. All in the Church who are in truths from good . . . are meant by 'the wild-beasts of the fields of the Lord Jehovih' (Is.lvi.9). . . And the gentiles outside the Church are signified by 'the wild-beast in the forest.'

—⁵⁰. In the opposite sense . . . 'wild-beasts' = the cupidities of falsifying and thus destroying the truths of the Church. Ill.

—⁵². 'The wild-beast of the earth shall not devour them' (Ezek.xxxiv.28) = that (the man of the Church shall not be destroyed by) the cupidities of falsity.

—⁵³. 'Assemble every wild-beast of the field, come ye to devour' (Jer.xii.9) = the cupidities of destroying the truths of the Church by means of falsities.

—⁵⁶. 'A crouching place for the wild-beast' (Zeph.ii.15) = the state of a vastated Church as to truths.

—⁶¹. As 'wild-beast' = the cupidities of falsity from evil; and 'birds,' the derivative thoughts and reasonings . . . therefore, where the vastation of the Church is treated of, it is said that 'they shall be given to the wild-beasts and birds to be devoured.' Ill. 654³².

661. Such is the ferine nature of those in Hell.

701¹³. 'I will cause the evil wild-beast to cease' (Ezek.xxxiv.25) = peace from the infestation of what is evil and false from Hell.

1100¹¹. 'Speak unto . . . every wild-beast of the field, Assemble yourselves and come . . .' (Ezek.xxxix.17) = the establishment of the Church among the gentiles . . . 'every wild-beast of the field' = all who are in the affection of good and the understanding of truth.

Wild Boar. See BOAR and SWINE, at C.J.83.

Wild Grape. Labrusca.

A. 1069³. 'It brought forth wild grapes' (Is.v.2). (=the evils of hatred and revenge. 5117².) (=evils which are opposite to the goods of charity; that is, evils of life. E.375²¹.) (=that with that nation instead of the goods of truth . . . there were evils of falsity.

433³¹.) (=that instead of good there was wickedness—iniquum. 918⁴.)

T. 328. The concupiscences of the flesh may be compared to scorched and withered grapes, and to wild grapes; but the affections of the spirit, to juicy and delicious grapes . . .

348². Faith without Truths is like a vine which bears wild grapes . . .

E. 374⁸. The wild vine instead of barley (Job xxxi.40) = falsity instead of truth.

556¹⁰. 'The fathers have eaten a wild grape, and the teeth of the sons are blunted' (Jer.xxxi.29). . . 'To eat a wild grape' = to appropriate the falsity of evil; for 'a wild grape,' which is a bitter and bad grape, = the falsity of evil. . . (But as) a man is not punished for his hereditary evils, but for his own evils . . . it is added . . . 'every man that eateth the wild grape, his teeth shall be blunted.'

618⁴. What is 'bitter' = the falsification and adulteration of truth and good, the various kinds of which are signified by 'wild grapes,' etc.

Wilderness. Desertum.

Deserted, Desert. Desertus.

A. 220. 'The voice of one crying in the wilderness' (Is.xl.3) = in the Church where there is no faith. (=the Church completely vastated. 2708⁹.) 9926⁴. E.405³⁰.

1846³. Their afflictions 'in the wilderness' = the Lord's temptations.

1847^o. Temptations (were represented by) the afflictions of forty years 'in the wilderness.'

1927. 'By a fountain of waters in the wilderness' (Gen.xvi.7) = natural truth which had not as yet acquired life; for 'a wilderness' = that which as yet has but little vitality. Ill.

1928. See SHUR, here. —³. 8346.

2280⁴. All over twenty died in the wilderness (Num.xxxii.11) because evil could be imputed to them; and they represented those who yield in temptations. See also 4289³.

2679. 'Hagar wandered in the wilderness of Beersheba' (Gen.xxi.14). . . 'To wander in the wilderness' = an erratic or roving state.

2708. 'The boy (Ishmael) dwelt in the wilderness' (ver.20) = in what is relatively obscure. Ex. 2713.

—². 'A wilderness,' in the Word, = what is little inhabited and cultivated; and also what is not at all (so). (In the former case) that is, where there are but few habitations, and folds for flocks, pastures, and waters, it = that which, or the people who, have relatively but little life or light—as is the case with the spiritual relatively to the celestial . . . But (in the latter case) it=those who are in devastation as to good and in desolation as to truth. Ill. —⁵.

[A.2708]⁴. That 'a wilderness' = a state which is relatively obscure, is evident from these passages.

—⁵. This (totally uninhabited and uncultivated wilderness, or desert) is used in two senses—of those who are afterwards reformed, and of those who cannot be reformed. Ill.

—⁶. The journeyings and wanderings of the Israelitish people in the wilderness represented the devastation and desolation of the faithful before reformation; and therefore their temptation . . . Ill. (=the state of the Church militant and its temptations . . . 2714⁴.)

—⁷. 'The woman who fled into the wilderness' (Rev.xii.)=the temptation of the Church.

—⁸. That 'a desert' is predicated of a church completely devastated; and of those who are completely devastated as to good and truth, who cannot be reformed. Ill.

—'. 'The desert of the sea' (Is.xxi.1)=truth devastated by means of scientifics and the derivative reasonings. (=the emptiness of knowledges which are not for use. 3048⁴.)

—^e. The signification of a 'wilderness' shows why the Lord so often withdrew into the wilderness. Fully ill. 2714^e.

3708⁵. Of those in ignorance of good, it is said that 'they wandered in the wilderness' (Ps.cvii.4); and of those in ignorance of truth, that 'they wandered' in 'a solitude of a way.' E.223⁵. 730³⁷, Ex.

3900⁶. 'If they shall say, Behold He is in the wilderness, go not forth' (Matt.xxiv.26)=that what they say about truth is not to be believed . . . for devastated truth is what is meant by 'the wilderness' . . . for the reason that when the Church has been devastated . . . it is called 'a wilderness,' or is said to be 'in the wilderness'; for by 'a wilderness' is meant all that which is not cultivated and inhabited, and also that in which there is but little life, as is then the case with truth in the Church, from which it is evident that 'the wilderness,' here, = a Church in which there is no truth.

—⁸. As 'wilderness' is a term of wide signification—for everything not cultivated and inhabited is called 'a wilderness'—it here=the Word of the Old Testament, which is regarded as being abrogated . . . And so the whole Word is also called 'a wilderness,' when it is no longer of service for doctrinal things. Ex.

3941³. 'A wilderness of solitude' (Jer.xii.10) = the devastation of the Church.

4736. 'Put him in this pit that is in the wilderness' (Gen.xxxvii.22)=among their falsities; for 'wilderness'=where there is no truth; being a word of wide signification, as, where the land is uninhabited, and and therefore uncultivated; and, when predicated of the Church, it=where there is no good and consequently no truth.

5117⁵. 'Grapes in the wilderness' (Hos.ix.10)=rational good not yet made spiritual. (=that they were in good, but at first in ignorance of truth . . . E.403¹⁴.)

5376⁴. The desolation which precedes regeneration

. . . is signified by 'desolate wastes and cities that are forsaken-desertis' (Ezek.xxxvi.4).

6432⁵. 'To make her as a wilderness . . .' (Hos.ii.3) = to extinguish all truth.

6828. 'He led the flock behind the wilderness' (Ex.iii.1)=after those in the truth of simple good had undergone temptations. . . 'A wilderness' = what is but little inhabited and cultivated, and also what is not at all (so), thus, in the spiritual sense, a man devastated as to good and desolated as to truth, and therefore a man who is in temptation . . .

6988. 'For in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert' (Is.xxxv.6)=their possession of the Knowledges of truth and good. 'The wilderness,' or 'desert'=a state of no Knowledges of faith, in consequence of ignorance. E.239⁷.

7055. 'Into the wilderness' (Ex.iv.27)=where there was no conjunction before; for 'a wilderness'=where there is as yet but little of what is alive, thus where there is no good and the derivative truth . . .

7093. 'That they may hold a feast unto Me in the wilderness' (Ex.v.1)=that from a glad mind they may worship the Lord in the obscurity of faith in which they are.

7313. 'That they may serve Me in the wilderness' (Ex.vii.16)=worship in what is obscure. . . The reason 'the wilderness,' here=obscurity as to the good and truth of faith, is that those of the Spiritual Church . . . are, in general, in obscurity as to the truths of faith . . .

—^e. Such being the state of those who are undergoing infestation, the sons of Israel were led into the wilderness, in order that they might represent it . . .

7324². 'I will make the wilderness a pool of waters' (Is.xli.18)=to give the Knowledges of good and truth . . . where they were not before. (Compare E.304²¹.) 483². 730²⁴.

7932a^e. Their life of forty years in the wilderness=the temptations (of the Spiritual Church in the World of Spirits). 8039.

—^e. As by 'a wilderness' is signified the state of those who are undergoing temptations, the Lord, when being tempted, went out into the wilderness . . . E.650⁷⁰, 730⁴¹, Ex.

8099². Those being delivered from infestations . . . are led through the midst of Hell . . . and emerge to the left, where there is as it were a wilderness . . . D.4647, Des.

8104. 'In the edge-fin-of the wilderness' (ver.20)= the first state of temptations.

8134. 'The wilderness hath shut them in' (Ex.xiv.3) = that obscurity has taken possession of them.

8165. 'To die in the wilderness' (ver.11)= to succumb in a state of temptations. 8169.

8306. Where there are those who are in falsities of evil . . . there appears as it were a desert land, which is called the condemned land; and under this are cast those who are cast into Hell.

8398. See SIN (the place) here. 8558.

—, 'A wilderness' = the state of undergoing temptations.

8405. 'In the wilderness' (Ex.xvi.2) = a state of temptation.

8442. 'They looked back to the wilderness' (ver.10) = a recollection of the state of temptation in which they had been.

8527. 'That they may see the bread with which I fed you in the wilderness' (ver.32)= the good of truth when in a state of temptations.

8539². The first state of regeneration (when man is led to good by means of truth) is signified by the journeyings of the Sons of Israel in the wilderness . . . 8657^e.

8559. (These temptations) are described by the journeyings of the sons of Israel in the wilderness.

8657. ('Jethro came) to Moses to the wilderness' (Ex.xviii.5)= conjunction in the state before regeneration, when there are temptations.

8753. 'They came to the wilderness of Sinai' (Ex. xix.1)= a state of good in which the truths of faith are to be implanted . . . For 'the wilderness,' here= the good in which truths have not as yet been implanted . . . 'A wilderness'= many things; in general, what is uninhabited and uncultivated; thus, in the spiritual sense, the good in which as yet there are not truths, for good without truths, spiritually, is what is uncultivated; so that 'a wilderness'= the new Voluntary which is as yet not formed by means of the truths of faith. 8757.

9341. 'From the wilderness even to the river' (Ex.

xxiii.31)= from the delight of the Sensuous even to the good and truth of the Rational. . . For 'the wilderness' = a place not inhabited and not cultivated, thus—as applied to the spiritual things of faith and the celestial things of love—'a wilderness'= that in which there is no good and no truth, such as is the Sensuous of man. Ex.

9372³. 'The wilderness of Judea, in which John was, = the state in which the Word was at that time . . . that is, in such obscurity that the Lord was not acknowledged at all, and nothing was known about His heavenly Kingdom . . .

9755¹⁰. 'I make the rivers a wilderness' (Is.i.2)= to lay waste truths themselves. (=to deprive the understanding of truths . . . E.730⁷).

9960¹³. 'A wilderness' (Hos.ii.3)= that which is devoid of goods; 'a land of drought'= that which is devoid of truths. 10402⁶.

10261⁵. 'To plant these in the wilderness' (Is.xli.19) = in the lands outside the Church, thus among the gentiles.

H. 249^e. (Enthusiastic Spirits) dwell together to the left in a desert place.

360. (Those who have renounced the world) betake themselves to desert places.

464^e. (The learned who ascribe all things to nature) are sent into desert places.

586^e. (In the Hells) there are deserts, where there is nothing but what is barren and sandy; in some places rugged rocks in which are caverns; and in others, huts. Into these deserts are cast out from the Hells those who have suffered the extreme things . . . Their ultimate state is such a life.

587^e. Behind the Hells in the southern quarter are (the above mentioned) deserts.

594². The ejection of the superfluous infernal Spirits into the deserts (is one of the means for preserving the equilibrium between the Heavens and the Hells).

J. 50. Many of the evil (Mohammedans) were scattered in a certain desert, which was beyond.

56⁴. Therefore as soon as (those who have been popes and cardinals) present themselves, they are cast out to their like in a desert.

60. How the dwelling-places of the Papists were made a desert. Gen.art.

72². Those (of the Reformed) who were not cast into the Hells, were cast into deserts.

S. 18⁵. 'The voice of Jehovah maketh the wilderness to shake, He maketh the wilderness of Kadesh to shake' (Ps.xxix.8) . . . = the Church where there is not anything true and good.

F. 42^e. (The solidifican) went, and found his companions in a desert, where there was no grass. He asked why; and the Angels said, Because they possess nothing of the Church. R.401.

W. 429^e. They who have lived in faith separated from charity are banished into deserts, because they are not in any good, and therefore not in any marriage of good and truth. R.421^s.

R. 90^t. 'He hath made her wilderness an Eden; and her solitude the garden of Jehovah' (Is.li.3)=the lack and ignorance of truth (into) wisdom and intelligence. Compare E.326^s, below.

546. 'The woman fled into the wilderness' (Rev. xii.6)=the Church which is the New Jerusalem at first among a few. 'The wilderness'=where there are no longer any truths. (=the Church among a few, because with those who are not in good and consequently not in truths. E.730. 731.)

—, 'A wilderness,' in the Word, = 1. A devastated Church, that is, one in which all the truths of the Word have been falsified . . . 2. A Church in which there are no truths, because no Word . . . 3. A state of temptation, in which a man is as it were devoid of truths, because encompassed by evil Spirits . . . (These three significations ill.)

561. 'That she might fly into the wilderness, into her place' (ver.14)=protection (for that Church) while it is as yet among a few. E.760.

722. 'He carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness' (Rev.xvii.3)=that he was carried in a spiritual state to those with whom all things of the Church had been devastated. 'The wilderness'=the Church in which there is no longer any truth, thus where all things of it have been devastated. (=into a place appearing in vision which corresponded to the state of that religiosity. E.1037.)

M. 75^t. (On our way to those who had lived in the Golden Age) we passed through a great wilderness.

79^s. A great desert separates (those of the Age of Iron and Clay) from the inhabitants of the preceding Ages. —, Des.

232^e. The lot (of those who merely reason whether a thing be so) is that they are let down into the deep, into a desert, where they are compelled to carry burdens.

T. 45^e. This (diabolical love of self) causes the deserts where they live to consist only of heaps of stones, or of bare gravel, with marshes interspersed in which frogs croak.

569^e. The camp of Israel represented Heaven; and the wilderness outside, Hell. 614².

D. 4496. Beyond the desert of the robbers. 5619^e.

4643. Like those who kill and plunder, as do many . . . where there are great deserts.

4647. I then came into thoughts about worldly things, and I heard those who were there—that they were in temptations . . . This place is that which is represented by the wilderness where the sons of Israel were for forty years. It was dark there . . .

5355. They were all cast into uninhabited and desert places, and completely separated from one another . . . and they wander about in that desert like people of no religion . . . Those of the second and third classes (of these Protestants) were scattered asunder into desert places more interiorly. 5535, Des.

5538. Adulterers are not cast out into desert places, like those who are adulterers spiritually; but into the Hells. Ex.

5634. (A desert into which these Babylonians are cast, on their way to Hell.) Des. 5635.

5832. I saw a vast crowd driven into deserts, outside the Societies, which consisted of those who had accounted adulteries as nothing . . . They were all like wild beasts . . . and have been cast out into the deserts, so that they may live according to their nature . . .

6008^e. The rest (of these Spirits who induce somnolence) are sent into desert places outside the Societies.

6081. The most (of the Moravians) were cast out into deserts, where they live miserably; and, when they wonder at this, the reason is said to be that they have rejected the three most essential things of the Church and of Heaven.

E. 131¹¹. 'The wilderness'=where there is no good because no truth. 223^s. 239⁷. 280². 304¹⁰. —²¹. 386¹⁵. 405⁵⁰.

281⁶. 'He found him in a desert land' (Deut.xxxii.10)=the first state of those of the Ancient Church. 'A desert land'=where there is no good because no truth.

294². 'I will plant in the wilderness the cedar of shittah, the myrtle, and the wood of oil' (Is.xli.19). This treats of the establishment of the Church among the gentiles; 'the 'wilderness'=no good, because of ignorance of truth . . . 375³³. 730²⁴, Ex.

304²⁴. 'The forsaken places shall be multiplied in the midst of the land' (Is.vi.12)=that there shall not be any good because not any truth.

—²³. 'The pastures of the wilderness are dried up' (Jer.xxiii.10)=no spiritual nourishment in such a Church. It is called 'a wilderness' where there is no good because no truth. (Compare 730²⁴.)

—⁵. 'He will make her wilderness like Eden, and her solitude like the garden of Jehovah' (Is.li.3)=that they shall have truth and good in abundance; 'wilderness' is predicated of the absence of good; and 'solitude' of the absence of truth. 730²⁷.

—¹¹. 'Wilderness'=a longing for truth as a means to good. Ill.

365²⁷. 'That they may dwell securely in the wilderness' (Ezek.xxxiv.25)=that the cupidities of evil will not infest them.

386²¹. 'He turneth a wilderness into a pool of waters' (Ps.cvii.35)=that where there is ignorance of truth there shall be abundance. 730²⁵.

388¹³. 'I will abandon thee in the wilderness' (Ezek.xix.5)=to be without truths and goods.

403⁷. 'The habitations of the wilderness are made grassy' (Joel ii.22)=that there will be with them knowledges of truth where there were none before; 'the habitations of the wilderness'=the interior things of the mind of those in whom they did not exist before.

410⁷. 'The palace shall be a wilderness' (Is.xxxii.14)=the devastation of the whole Church; for 'a wilderness'=where there is no good because no truth.

419¹⁷. 'The wind of the wilderness' (Jer.xiii.24)=where there is no truth, and consequently falsity.

537¹⁴. The 'wilderness' in which the sons of Israel were led, represented the first state of the Church to be established with those who are in mere ignorance of good and truth... and, as this state was represented by their wanderings in the wilderness, it is said that 'Jehovah led them in a land of solitude and of the pit, in a land of drought, and of thick shadow' (Jer.ii.6). Ex. 730²⁸, Ex.

544⁴. The journeys and wanderings of the sons of Israel for forty years in the wilderness, represented the temptations of the faithful; and, as these are effected by the injections and persuasions of falsities by evil Spirits, it is said that they were 'led through a dreadful wilderness, of the serpent, fire-serpent, and scorpion' (Deut.viii.15). 654⁶³.

555⁵. 'A woman forsaken and afflicted in spirit' (Is.liv.6)=a Church which is not in truths, but still is in the affection or longing for them.

632⁸. 'To make the field of desire a wilderness of solitude' (Jer.xii.10)=to so destroy the Lord's Church that nothing of its good and truth remains.

633⁷. The vastation of the Church, and also plenary temptation, are signified by the stay of the sons of Israel for forty years in the wilderness. Ill.

636⁶. The 'wilderness' where the woman was 'nourished' (Rev.xii.)=non-reception of good and truth.

650³⁵. 'I have given waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the solitude' (Is.xliii.20)=to imbue with truths and the derivative intelligence those who had previously been in ignorance... 'The wilderness,' and 'the solitude'=ignorance.

—52. 'To dwell confidently in the wilderness, and to sleep in the forests' (Ezek.xxxiv.25)=that they will be safe from infestation by cupidities, although in and among them. 701¹⁸.

654⁷². 'Edom shall be a wilderness of a waste' (Joel iii.19)=that the natural man will be devoid of goods, and consequently in mere evils. 730²⁰.

727³. 'And now she is planted in the wilderness, in a land of drought and thirst' (Ezek.xix.13)=that the Church is desolated until there is no good of truth or truth of good.

730. For the former Church has become 'a wilderness.' The Church is called 'a wilderness' when there is no longer any good; and where there is no good there are no truths. Ex.

—4. 'Wilderness,' 'solitude,' and 'waste' are mentioned in many passages, and=the state of the Church when there is no longer any truth in it because no good. This state is called 'a wilderness,' because, in the Spiritual World, a place inhabited by those who are not in truths because not in good is like a wilderness, where there is nothing green on the plains, no harvest in the fields, and no fruit tree in the gardens; but a barren land, parched and dry. Further, by 'a wilderness' is signified the state of the Church with the gentiles, who are in ignorance of truth, and yet in the good of life according to their religion, from which they long for truths. By 'a wilderness' there is also signified the state of those who are in temptations, because, in these, goods and truths are shut in by the evils and falsities which emerge. These three significations of 'wilderness,' fully ill.

—7. 'Carmel a wilderness' (Jer.iv.26)=the Spiritual Church devoid of truths from good.

—12. 'The fire hath devoured the habitations of the wilderness...' (Joel i.19)=that the love of self... has consumed all the perception of good... from the sense of the letter of the Word... 'The habitations of the wilderness'=the goods of doctrine from the sense of the letter... This sense is called 'a wilderness' when it is understood only naturally, thus according to the appearances...

—14. 'A wilderness of a waste' (Joel ii.3)=no understanding of truth from good, and consequent insanity from the falsities which are from evil.

—17. 'He maketh the rivers a wilderness' (Ps.cvii.33)=intelligence from the understanding of truth, and of the Word as to its interior sense, devastated by falsities from evil.

—18. 'An Arabian in the wilderness' (Jer.iii.2)=one who kills and plunders, like a robber in the wilderness.

—22. As, in the Jewish Church, all things of the Word had been adulterated, and there was no longer any truth because no good, John the Baptist was 'in the wilderness,' by which was represented the state of that Church. Ill.

—'. 'Your house is left deserted' (Luke xiii.35)=the Church devoid of truths because without good.

—'. From (these) passages, it is evident that by 'a wilderness' is meant a Church in which there are no truths because no good, and consequently in which there is falsity because there is evil...

—23. 'Then the wilderness shall be a fruitful field' (Is.xxxii.15)=that truth from a spiritual origin will then be implanted in them; 'a wilderness'=the natural man destitute of truths. (As with the gentiles.)

—28. 'The habitations of the wilderness distil' (Ps.lxv.12)=that their minds, which had previously been in ignorance, acknowledge and receive truths.

[E. 730]³⁰. As a state of ignorance of truth, in which the gentiles had been, is signified by 'a wilderness,' and a longing for truth by 'lunger,' and instruction by the Lord by 'feeding,' it came to pass that the Lord withdrew into the wilderness, and there taught the multitude who sought Him, and that He afterwards fed them. Ill.

— From these passages it is evident that 'a wilderness' = that with man which is not cultivated and inhabited, thus that which has not as yet been made alive by what is spiritual; and therefore, in application to the Church, that which has not been vivified by truths; thus the religiosity among the gentiles, which had been almost empty and void, because they had not had the Word . . . and, as they had not truths, their good could be no different from such truth as existed among them . . . From which it is evident that 'a wilderness,' when the gentiles are treated of, = no truth, and yet a longing for it for the vivification of their good.

—³¹. The natural state of man, before regeneration, was represented by the stay of the Israelites in Egypt . . . his spiritual state . . . was represented by their introduction into Canaan . . . and his reformation and regeneration, before from being natural he becomes spiritual, was represented by their wanderings in the wilderness for forty years. Fully ill. and ex.

—⁴⁰. That cupidities and Falsities must be removed by means of temptations, is signified by, 'I will bring her into the wilderness' (Hos.ii.14).

—⁴². That by 'a wilderness' is also signified Hell, is because that is called 'a wilderness' where there is neither harvest nor dwelling-place, and also where there are wild beasts . . . In everyone, before regeneration, the natural man is a hell . . .

780³⁰. 'I knew thee in the wilderness, in a land of droughts' (Hos.xiii.5) = a state without good and without truths.

1003^c. The final lot (of adulterers) is that . . . they pass their time solitary in deserts . . .

1214⁴. As use is the plant soul, therefore in the places there which are called deserts, there appears no grass or plant; but mere gravel and sand.

35. Man has two faculties; will and understanding. When the understanding is ruled by the will, they together constitute one mind, thus one life; for then that which the man wills and does, he thinks and intends. But when the understanding is dissident from the will . . . the one mind is torn asunder into two; the one wills to betake itself to Heaven, the other inclines to Hell; and, as the will is the sole agent, the whole man would rush to Hell unless the Lord exercised mercy towards him. 1577².

105. 'In the midst of the garden'=in the will of the internal man. The primary thing possessed by the Lord in a man or Angel is the will, which is called 'the heart.' But as no one can do what is good from himself, the will... is not man's... Cupidity is man's, which he calls will.

116. The will and understanding constitute the mind; and the things of the first river (of Eden) relate to the will; and those of the second, to the understanding. 310.

Man is not man except from will and understanding: by these he is distinguished from the brutes... and with these men all will of good and understanding of truth had perished; instead of will of good there had succeeded insane cupidities, and instead of understanding of truth, insane phantasies.

628^a. Where there is no will, there is no understanding; and such as is the will, such is the understanding. In the Most Ancients there was a will of good... and a derivative understanding of truth; but this understanding completely perished together with the will. 640.

633. With no man is there any understanding of truth or will of good; there was not even with those of the Most Ancient Church; but when men become celestial, it appears as if there were will of good and understanding of truth in them; but they are of the Lord alone...

634. It is very difficult to state... what, in the proper sense, are the understanding of truth and the will of good, because man supposes that everything he thinks is of the understanding, and everything he desires is of the will... not knowing that... the will of good and the understanding of truth are the inmost things; and that they are (perfectly) distinct from each other.

—^e. So that the understanding of truth and the will of good can be predicated only of the celestial man...

652. There are two lives in man; one of the will, and the other of the understanding. They become two lives when there is no will, but cupidity instead of will. In this case it is the intellectual part which can be reformed, and afterwards a new will can be given through it, so that they still constitute one life...

—^e. As man was now such that he had no will... the part which is of the will was closed... and the intellectual part was opened. Tr.

657^a. Without the influx of the Lord's life into the intellectual things in man—or rather into the voluntary things, and through (these) into the intellectual things—and through (these) into the rational things, and through (these) into the scientifics... life in man would be impossible...

670. 'Living soul'=the things of the understanding; and 'all flesh,' those of the will.

[A.] 671. In an unregenerate man there is no understanding of truth or will of good . . .

672. Thus whatever is of the understanding is coupled to something of the will. 718.

710. 'Enter thou and all thy house into the ark' = the things of the will. . . That 'house' = the will. Ill.

712^e. For the will comprehends intellectual things in itself; but not the understanding voluntary things.

732. Intellectual things regard voluntary things as different and distinct from themselves; but voluntary things regard intellectual things as united to themselves . . . For the understanding is from the will.

751². Temptations as to intellectual, and as to voluntary things. See TEMPTATION, here. 755. 756. 845.

794². Every cupidity which a man favours makes the life of his will; and every principle . . . of falsity, that of his understanding.

801². Although (the understanding and will) are at this day separated in man, still the one inflows into the other, and for the most part they unite . . .

808. 'Substance' is predicated of voluntary things, because all things arise from the will . . . The will is the substance itself of man, that is, the man himself.

809. For the Church is never predicated from intellectual, but from voluntary things . . . Everything essential comes from the will.

863². Just as there is never anything truly intellectual except from what is voluntary; if you remove what is voluntary, there is no Intellectual . . .

— But as the will of man is mere cupidity, to prevent what is intellectual . . . from being immersed in his cupidity, the Lord has . . . made the Intellectual distinct from the voluntary by a certain medium, which is conscience. 875³, Ex.

875⁴. With the man of the Most Ancient Church, the voluntary things were united to the intellectual things, as they are with the celestial Angels; but with the man of (the Ancient) Church they were not united, nor are they with the spiritual man. It appears as if the good of charity that he does is from his will; but . . . it is of the Lord alone, not through the will, but through conscience. If the Lord should . . . suffer the man to act from his own will . . . he would do what is evil . . . 918. 9818.

895. The ground of this man is in his intellectual part . . . and never in his voluntary part. Sig. . . With the man of the Most Ancient Church, there was ground in his voluntary part. Ex. 927², Ex.

918^e. (Thus) the conscience which is given by the Lord to the spiritual man is as it were a new will; and thus the man who has been created anew is endowed with a new will, and thence with a new understanding. 927³.

927². But when the love of self, and the derivative insane cupidities, began to take possession of the voluntary part (of the Most Ancients) . . . then not only did their voluntary part, or will, become wholly perverted, but also together with it their intellectual part, or understanding . . . The consequence was that they could not be restored . . . (Continued under UNDERSTANDING.)

928. That the Voluntary of man is entirely evil. Sig. 987, Ex. 999.

— Man supposes that he has a will of good, but is completely mistaken. When he does what is good, it is not from his will, but from the new will, which is of the Lord . . . And therefore when he thinks and speaks what is true, it is from the new understanding, which is from the new will, and thus also from the Lord . . .

933³. For man's will is completely destroyed, and is therefore entirely separated from the new will which he receives from the Lord . . . 1000. 1040³.

977². In a regenerate man there is a new will and a new understanding; (these two) are his conscience; that is, in it . . . In an unregenerate man there is not will, but cupidity . . . nor understanding, but reasoning . . .

989. The new will is formed from charity. 1001, Ex.

999. 'Flesh' = the Voluntary of man. Ill.

1001. This new will, which is of charity, is here 'the blood.' This will is not the man's, but the Lord's in the man; (and therefore) it must never be commingled with the things of the man's will . . . Sig.

1007. 'At the hand of man' = from all his Voluntary; 'at the hand of man's brother' = from all his Intellectual . . . For the essential and life of man is his will; and such as the will is, such is the man . . . And whether the Intellectual in man is a true Intellectual, a spurious Intellectual, or a false Intellectual, it is called 'a man brother.' Ex. . . A filthy Voluntary and Intellectual are here signified . . .

1023. (The voluntary and intellectual proprium. See PROPRIUM, here.)

1034². Their Voluntary, and their Intellectual together with it, had become corrupt, so that their Intellectual could not be separated from their Voluntary, and a new will be formed in the Intellectual . . . It was therefore provided . . . that the Intellectual in man could be separated from his Voluntary, and so be renewed. Tr. 1051.

1038⁸. For power is of the will.

1044². The voluntary proprium of man cannot be regenerated. For a regenerate man is the Lord's as to the intellectual part, but his own as to the voluntary part. (Continued under UNDERSTANDING.)

1555². In every man there are two parts, will and understanding. The will is the primary part, the understanding is the secondary; and man's life after death is according to his voluntary part . . .

— The [new] will is being formed by the Lord in a man from infancy to childhood. Ex. (Continued under UNDERSTANDING.)

1608². 'The will of the flesh' (John i. 13) = that which is contrary to love and charity; and 'the will of man' = that which is contrary to faith from love . . . (= the voluntary and intellectual proprium. 8409³. L. 18^e.) Life 17^e. E. 157⁵. Compare E. 329³⁰. 745^e.

1755². Providence from permission, will, etc. 2447². 2768, Ex. 9940, Ex. D. 2296.

1937⁴. A willingness = voluntarium — and thus a freedom . . .

—⁵. Without a proprium acquired through freedom . . . no one can be reformed, because he cannot receive a new will, which is conscience. Ex.

1947⁴. 'In what is of freewill = voluntario — will I sacrifice unto Thee' (Ps. liv. 6).

2231². He who wills good, also thinks good . . .

— That the will is one thing, and the understanding another. Ex. . . Yet man was so created that they should constitute one mind. Ex. 2930, Ex.

2256³. As the will . . . has been completely destroyed, the Lord separates (it) from the intellectual part, and implants in the latter the good of charity; and, through this, a new will . . . 2930.

2401². To will what is evil, and thence do it, and [at the same time] acknowledge truth in faith, is impossible . . . And it is the very willing = velle — of man that lives after death; (and) his thinking only in so far as it flows from his willing. Ex.

2626. For Divine thought is will = velle. 3037.

2708. In the celestial, the good of love is implanted in their voluntary part, where there is the principal life of man . . . 2715.

2715. But with the spiritual all the Voluntary has been destroyed, so that they have nothing of good from it, and therefore good is implanted by the Lord in their intellectual part. Refs.

— It is principally the voluntary part that lives in man, and the intellectual part lives from it; and as, with the spiritual man, the Voluntary has been so destroyed as to be nothing but evil, and as the evil from it is constantly inflowing into the intellectual part . . . it is evident that the good therein is relatively obscured . . .

2781. In man there are voluntary and intellectual things; to the voluntary things pertain those which are of good, and to the intellectual those which are of truth; and there are various kinds of beasts by which the voluntary things . . . are signified, as lambs, sheep, kids, she-goats, bullocks, and oxen; and there are beasts by which the intellectual things . . . are signified, namely, horses, mules, wild-asses, camels, asses, and also birds.

2886. No one can will and think from himself, but from others; and these again from others, and so on (up to) the Lord. Ex. 2887, Ex. 5986. P. 287. 290 (from experience).

2910^e. Thus the will becomes more prone to evils and falsities (in successive generations).

2930. 'The heart' = the will. Ex.

2954². As the spiritual have nothing of a will of good . . . they are introduced into a will of good through the understanding of good . . . but not into anything of a will of good from themselves, because with them all the will of good has been destroyed; but into a new will which they receive from the Lord; and, when they have received this will, they are called, specifically, 'the redeemed.'

2975. Application to (both will and understanding is here signified); for man is reformed as to both parts; for unless the will and understanding are in accord, so as to make a one, the man has not been regenerated. Ex.

3037. From which was His Divine willing and understanding. Sig. and Ex.

3090. (For) when man is being regenerated, an image of a marriage is made between the will and the understanding . . .

3157^e. And when truth . . . has been received by the will . . . the man is regenerate.

3158². Nothing is man's . . . unless it is of his will . . . For what is of the will constitutes the esse of man's life. (Continued under UNDERSTANDING.)

—^e. All that is of the will appears free; the very state of the will is freedom; for that which I will, I choose, because I love it, and acknowledge it as good. . . . (Thus) truth . . . never becomes the man's until it has been received by the will . . .

3295². But after man is regenerate, he does good from the will . . . and that which is from the will is good. Examp.

3338^e. It is this (spiritual) heat from which his will . . . lives; and it is this (spiritual) light from which his understanding [lives]. 6032. —³, Ex.

3351. Some of the choirs belonged to the voluntary and some to the spontaneous respiration.

3394³. The regenerate spiritual man receives the Divine good in the new will, and the Divine truth in the new understanding . . .

3463³. Whereas he who acts from charity . . . commences from the willing of good . . . (and therefore) does not think of merit.

3469². And man's thought and will are founded in the Natural as in a plane.

3489. For the Angels attend solely to (man's) . . .

intentions and volitions—voluntates—and the derivative thoughts.

[A.] 3509². The rational mind is distinguished into the two faculties called will and understanding; and when man is being regenerated that which flows forth from the will is called good, and that from the understanding, truth. Before man has been regenerated, the will does not act as a one with the understanding, but the former wills good, and the latter truth, so that an effort—conatus—of the will is perceived as quite distinct from an effort of the understanding.

3519. 'Two' are mentioned, because as in the Rational, so in the Natural, there are things of the will and things of the understanding; (and these are) delights and scientifics.

3538. When the Rational acts from the Voluntary . . . through the Intellectual . . . the rational mind is called one 'house.' Tr.

3539³. But when man has been regenerated, voluntary things . . . act the first part. Tr. and Ex.

3563⁴. In the state before regeneration . . . the Voluntary . . . is without, and the Intellectual . . . within (thus in inverted order). The use of this. —⁵. 3564.

3603⁵. See INVOLUNTARY, here.

3652⁶. All reasoning ought to cease when the man is in a state to will what is true and good; for he then thinks and acts from the will . . . Sig.

3701³. (The necessity and formation of the new will and understanding. Ex. —⁴. —⁵. —⁶.)

3870. The state of faith if the will does not correspond to it. Sig. and Ex.

— For truth to live it must be introduced into the will . . . For life inflows from the Lord through the new will which He creates in man. . . Obedience is the first of the will . . . the affection of doing truth is the Progressive of the will . . . Unless there is such a progression of faith, truth . . . couples itself with . . . the man's Own will, which is contrary to charity. Sig.

3888. The kingdom of the will, and the kingdom of the understanding. Ex.

— The influx of the will into the understanding, and of the understanding into the will. Ex.

3901². To grow as to the willing of good. Sig.

3934. Omnipotence is predicated from . . . the Divine will.

—⁶. 'He that doeth the will of My Father . . . ' (Matt. vii. 21).

3969⁸. There are two things which constitute the Spiritual Church—the Intellectual and the Voluntary (and these are represented by 'Ephraim and Manasseh').

4077⁶. Man has not the least of thought, or will, except by influx through Spirits from the Lord. 4249³, Ex.

4097⁶. In this way, good together with truths insinuates itself from the intellectual part into the voluntary part, and is appropriated.

4169. The good of the will, and the good of the understanding. Ex

4215². Voluntary and involuntary things. Ex.

4247². Previously, truth had been in the understanding, but now it is in the will; and, when it is in the will, it is in the man; for the will constitutes the man himself.

4274. Nothing makes man's Voluntary life but what he has impressed on himself as being good . . . and, when this is assaulted, the life of his will is assaulted.

4301³. There are two things which constitute the internal man—the understanding and the will. Truths pertain to the understanding, and goods to the will. Ex. These two faculties should constitute a one.

4317⁵. Hereditary evil . . . is to will and thence think evil. Ex.

4325. The voluntary and the involuntary sense. Ex. 4329⁸.

— The voluntary sense is proper to the cerebrum . . .

4328. The Most Ancients . . . had a Voluntary in which there was good, and an Intellectual in which there was the derivative truth, and, in them, these two made a one. But the Ancients . . . had a Voluntary completely destroyed; but an Intellectual entire, in which the Lord, by regeneration, formed a new Voluntary, and through this a new Intellectual. Refs. (This change seen represented.) 4454. 4493². D. Min. 4711.

4329⁶. This general voluntary sense is possible only in the wise.

—⁴. There are still more perfect general voluntary senses in the interior sphere of Heaven. Ex.

4368⁵. Good will—bene velle. 4390.

4538⁴. After man has been instructed in truths . . . he is gradually led by the Lord to will truth . . .

4581. The difference is that between willing well from willing well, and willing well from understanding well.

4884². See TRUTH, here. 4904. 4984.

— Man (cannot) imbue anything except what he does from will—velle. Ex.

4985. For the good of life is the esse itself of man, because it is of his will, and the truth of faith is the derivative existere, because it is of the understanding. For whatever is of the understanding comes forth—existit—from the will. The esse (or being) of man's life is in his will—velle; and the existere (or manifestation) of his life is in his understanding—intelligere. The understanding of man is nothing but the will unfolded, and so formed that its quality may appear in view.

5017². Thus the circle (is) from the will into the thought, so into speech, and (so) through the ear into another's thought and will.

5035. Spirits act into the Intellectual, . . . and Genii into the Voluntary . . .

5072. Some sensuous things are subordinate to the intellectual, and some to the voluntary part. Tr. 5077.—³, Ex. 5078, Ex.

5113. The Celestial Church exists with the man who can be regenerated . . . as to the voluntary part; the Spiritual Church, with him who can be regenerated only as to the intellectual part . . . (In) the Most Ancient Church . . . there was what is entire in the voluntary part; but (in) the Ancient Church . . . there was nothing entire in the voluntary part, but in the intellectual. Ex. —⁷, Ill.

— The man of the Spiritual Church . . . must learn what is good from truth . . . and he is then able to think it, then to will it, and at last to do it; and then a new will is formed in him by the Lord in the intellectual part. Through this new will, the spiritual man is elevated by the Lord into Heaven; evil still remaining in the will that is proper to him; which will is then miraculously separated, and this by a superior force . . .

—³. But the man of the Celestial Church was regenerated as to the voluntary part. Ex. . . In him, the understanding and the will made one mind; for by what was in the understanding, there was perceived what was in the will.

5117¹⁰. The Intellectual . . . and Voluntary obsessed. Sig. 'Grapes'=charity; and so are predicated of the Voluntary, but of the Voluntary in the intellectual part; (here) in the opposite sense.

5131³. Thus, when heavenly love is the end, will the cause, and action the effect—if there is correspondence—then that love inflows into the will, and the will into the action . . .

5144. 'Three baskets'=the successives of voluntary things. Ex.

— For all good pertains to the will . . . as soon as anything proceeds from the will, it is perceived as good.

—⁴. In this passage, 'basket' is expressed by another word, and=a new Voluntary in the intellectual part.

5145⁵. All those in whom the interior voluntary things have been terminated, are elevated into Heaven . . . Whereas all those in whom (they) have not been terminated, betake themselves to Hell. Sig. and Ex.

5146. 'In the highest basket'=the inmost of the Voluntary, (full of celestial good for the nourishment of the Natural. Sig. 5147.)

5147². Man's Voluntary receives good, and his Intellectual, truth; and the Intellectual cannot possibly receive truth so as to appropriate it, unless at the same time the Voluntary receives good; and so also the converse; for in this way the one inflows into the other, and disposes it to receive. Intellectual things may be compared to forms which are continually varying; and voluntary things, to the harmonies which result from the variation . . .

5150⁶. Man is called celestial if the Lord's Divine good is received in the voluntary part; spiritual, if in the intellectual part.

5157². That the sensuous things subject to the intellectual part . . . were retained, and those subject to the voluntary part . . . rejected. Sig. and Ex.

—³. For the Voluntary in the Lord . . . was Divine from conception, and was the Divine good itself; but the Voluntary which He had by birth from the mother was evil; and therefore had to be rejected, and in its place a new one had to be procured from the Divine Voluntary by means of the Intellectual . . . Tr.

5202³. As the former Voluntary had been rejected, a new one must inflow, in its place. This new Voluntary is from the Celestial of the Spiritual. Tr.

— So the will becomes of another form when it becomes action; but still it is the will that is presented . . .

5351. A new Voluntary in the Natural, and its quality. Sig. and Ex.

— For 'Manasseh'=spiritual good in the Natural, thus a new Voluntary. 6222, Tr.

—². The will precedes in man; for man's willing—velle—is the first of his life, and his understanding—intelligere—succeeds, and applies itself according to his willing. That which proceeds from the will is called good in those who have received a new Voluntary . . . but evil in those who would not receive it; and that which proceeds from the Intellectual is called truth in the regenerate, but falsity in the unregenerate. (Continued under UNDERSTANDING.)

5353. When evils are removed, the new Voluntary arises; for the new Voluntary comes into existence through the influx of good from the Lord, (which) is continuous; (and therefore) as soon as evils are removed, the new Voluntary comes into existence. . .

Hence comes the new Voluntary in the Natural which is 'Manasseh.' 5461².

[A.] 5354¹¹. That the will-velle-of man will be against his understanding-intelligere; and his understanding against his will. Sig. 5482.

5428³. Heavenly freedom is to will nothing from self, but from the Lord . . .

5461. That faith in the will ('Simeon') will be separated. Sig. and Ex.

— For, with the regenerate man, the influx of the Divine . . . is into the will, and thence into the understanding.

5526². As soon as truth . . . enters the will . . . it becomes spiritual good; and from this good a new will is formed in man by the Lord. Ex. 5595, Ex. 5626.

— For, regarded in itself, the will is nothing but the love. Ex.

5595². But celestial good is implanted in the voluntary part itself, and (not in the new will that is formed in the intellectual part).

5660³. The heavenly proprium comes into existence from the new will . . .

— The ends of life are the will-velle-itself . . .

5665. That he adjoined the will-velle-to truths. Sig. and Ex.

5755. That it is not done from the will. Sig. and Ex.

5807. When the will wills good, this good is insinuated into the understanding, and is there formed . . . and this form is truth.

5826^e. For nothing becomes internal until it has been implanted in the will; for the Voluntary is the inmost of man . . .

5835. The mind . . . has two faculties . . . one allotted to truths . . . called the understanding, and the other to good . . . called the will. For man to be man, these two must make a one. But at this day they are completely disjoined. Ex.

5853. Hence, all things that the man thinks, the Spirits think; and all things that he wills, they will; and the converse . . .

5946^e. For the will to see or know anything, it must be through the understanding.

5969. For the life of the will always precedes, and that of the understanding follows; the reason of which is that the will only has life in it, and not the understanding except from the will. Ex.

5978. The reason there are two Angels with every man, is that . . . one may act into his voluntary, and the other into his intellectual things . . . Those who act into the voluntary things are called celestial; and (the others) spiritual.

6065. Goods which originate in the will, and goods which originate in the understanding. Ex.

6204. The evil that enters the thought does no harm . . . But when it enters the will, it does harm, because it then goes into act whenever external bonds do not prevent. Evil enters the will by being kept in the thought, by consent, and especially by act and the derivative delight. 6308².

6222^e. These . . . cause the Intellectual and Voluntary to constitute one mind. (For) both the Intellectual and the Voluntary are born from the Internal.

6267. The good of the Voluntary as in the first place. Sig. and Ex. 6273, Ex. 6292.

6292. For the Intellectual and Voluntary itself is in the head, and in the body are the acts according thereto.

6296². For the Voluntary of man has been continually depraved, so that at last evil has taken possession of the whole of it, insomuch that nothing entire has remained. Therefore, to prevent man from perishing, the Lord has provided that he can be regenerated as to the intellectual part . . . This is why there are but few in whom there is anything entire left in the voluntary part, thus few who [can] become celestial men . . .

6367. For man is born into the things of the voluntary part; and therefore those of the Most Ancient Church . . . were born into the good of love to the extent in which they had good in their Voluntary.

6392^e. For this (disposition to do good works free from any feeling of self-merit) is in the new will which is given by the Lord to those being regenerated; for this will is of the Lord with the man.

6469. The Angels perceive a sweetness from the fact that they do not think and will from themselves, but from the Lord; from this they have tranquillity, peace, and happiness.

6571². Such as is the effigy of a man in general, such is the effigy of the least of his will . . .

6576^e. For all truth pertains to the understanding, and all good to the will; for the understanding is the receptacle of truth, and the will of good.

6578. Influx into the will, and the consequent trust. Sig.

6584. The establishment of the Church as to the Voluntary and its derivatives. Sig. and Ex.

6717². (In the second state of regeneration) truth is in the will also; and that which is in the will is appropriated. And as, then, the understanding makes a one with the will—for the understanding acknowledges, and the will does—there is a conjunction of good and truth . . .

6840. A calling by influx into the will. Sig. . . This calling is internal; for the Lord inflows into the will, and makes the man do what he pleases.

7007². What is compulsory is not the man's will-velle; but what is free is his will-velle; and good and truth, in order to belong to a man as his Own, must be inrooted in his will; that which is outside the will is not of the man. 8700².

7032. Obstinaey from the will. Sig. and Ex.

7056². The truth which proceeds immediately from the Divine enters man's will . . . but that which proceeds mediately, his understanding; and therefore no conjunction (of them) is possible unless the will and understanding act as one, that is, unless the will wills good, and the understanding confirms it by truth.

7107. The will of those who infest the truths of the Church. Sig. and Ex.

7180. It is the will that carries the man away, and the understanding favours.

7233². The Intellectual (of the spiritual) can indeed be enlightened; but the new Voluntary cannot be affected with any good except that which has been formed through conjunction with the truth received in the Church; for their Own Voluntary has been destroyed, and a new Voluntary has been formed in the intellectual part; and, when their Own Voluntary has been separated from the new Voluntary, which is in the intellectual part, the light therein is feeble . . .

7342. Resistance from the will, and consequent obstinacy. Sig. and Ex.

— For it is the will that rules man. (Continued under UNDERSTANDING.)

— When the will is mentioned, there is meant the affection which is of love; for the will of man is nothing else . . .

—^e. It is the affection of spiritual love that makes the new will.

7480. The Spirits of Mars relate to . . . what is intermediate between the Intellectual and the Voluntary . . .

7808. They regulate the punishment . . . according to the will in the thoughts.

7848. 'The blood' upon the houses' = (the holy truth) upon the things that are of the will of good.

— The reason 'a house' = the will, is that it = man, and man is man specially from his will-velle. 7876. 7929.

7906². Man's state is purified when he acts from the good of charity, for he then acts from the will; previously, only from the understanding.

7929. That falsity and evil . . . should in no wise come near the will. Sig. and Ex.

7945. 'So did they' = act from the will; (whereas) previously it = act from the understanding.

8066. 'It shall be for a sign upon thy hand' = that it shall be perpetually in the will. 8090.

—^e. 'Hand' = power; here, the will, because all the action and power of action effected by the hand proceeds from the will. 8067.

8067. The things in a man . . . which he thoroughly believes and loves, are perpetually in his thought and will . . .

8068^e. The Intellectual is in the meaning of the words . . . the Voluntary is in the affection . . .

8179². When he combats as of himself . . . the man has a new proprium, called the heavenly proprium, which is a new will.

8194. 'The Angel of God' went behind them' = protection lest the falsity of evil should inflow into the Voluntary.

— For, in . . . the Spiritual World, voluntary things are presented at the back, or behind; and intellectual things in front, or before.

—². The Lord takes the greatest possible care less the infernals should inflow into the Voluntary of man; for if they were to (do so), after he has been regenerated . . . it would be all over with him, because his Voluntary is nothing but evil. Hence it is that the man of the Spiritual Church is regenerated . . . as to the intellectual part, and that a new Voluntary is formed in this part which is completely separated from the Voluntary the man has hereditarily. Refs.

8234². For to act from obedience is to act from the Intellectual; but to act from affection is to act from the Voluntary. (Compare 8690.)

8307². That man can abstain from evils of himself, is because the Lord continually inflows into his will with this endeavour . . .

8311². Just as the Intellectual in a man is the form of his will. For the will puts itself forth into the light, and effigies and forms itself, through the Intellectual.

8343². That everything of thought and will inflows; what is good from Heaven, and what is evil from Hell. Refs.

8432^e. For the good that inflows from the Lord is not given as much as they will, but as much as they can receive; whereas evil is allowed as much as they will.

8439². For the influx from the Divine passes first into the perception, which is of the understanding . . . thence into the will, and then into act . . .

8457. 'Upon the faces of the wilderness' = a new Voluntary. 'Wilderness,' here, = a new Voluntary through the insinuation of truth; for the new Voluntary is formed from good through truth . . . and appears as conscience. 8753, Ex.

8458. The good of truth . . . as truth forms the Intellectual of the mind, and as good forms the new Voluntary; for the Intellectual is distinguished from the Voluntary . . . by this: that the Intellectual presents matters to itself in a form, so that it sees them as in light, whereas the Voluntary is affected with them, so that it feels them at the same time as delight . . . and this according to the quality of the form.

[A.] 8495². The proprium from which they will not act, is signified by, 'not doing their own wills . . .' (Is. lviii. 13). 10362.

8510. For the order in which man is led by the Lord is by the will-velle, consequently by good . . . 8513², Ex.

8521². For a new will is formed by the Lord in their intellectual part, which is that the man wills to do according to the truth . . .

—³. Whereas the good in those of the Celestial Kingdom is not implanted in their intellectual, but in their voluntary part. Refs.

8649. The goods of truth . . . constitute the new will . . .

8690. That thence, then, is everything of the will in those of the Spiritual Church, in every state. Sig. and Ex.

8702^e. What the will wills and loves, the understanding thinks and confirms; and the converse.

8806^e. Hence it is that all the Voluntary which (those of the Spiritual Church) have hereditarily is destroyed; and therefore a new Voluntary is formed by the Lord in their intellectual part by means of the truths of faith . . . Refs.

8855. What a man loves above all things . . . is in his will like a hidden current . . . 8853. (This is his veriest will. 8858.)

8865. The life of the will of the Angels is the life of love from the Lord; and the life of their understanding is the life of faith from Him.

8882. As the will continually inflows into the understanding—for the understanding is the form of the will, that is, the will manifests itself there in light—when a man believes one thing and does another, truth and evil, or good and falsity, are conjoined . . .

8885². That which reigns universally (in a man) is insinuated into his very will; for the will itself is the inmost of man, because it has been formed from his love. For whatever a man loves, he wills, and that which he loves above all things, he inmost wills. And the understanding serves to manifest the things which the man wills . . . and also to bend the wills of others . . .

—⁴. In the evil, the thought and will do indeed inmost agree . . . but their consensus does not appear before men; for . . . they learn to separate their interior from their exterior man, and to form in the latter another will and thought . . .

8908². For the will prevails over the understanding, and by influx persuades, and at last blinds it.

8910. 'Thou shalt not covet . . .'=that care is to be taken . . . lest the evils referred to in the preceding commandments become of the will . . .

— . Love itself pertains to . . . the will . . . but concupiscence to both the will and the understanding, but it is properly of the will in the understanding.

— . The things which become of the will are appropriated to the man; for the will is the man himself. (Continued under THOUGHT.) 9224. 9230². 9274².

—³. As soon as a man receives evil from the thought into the will, it . . . enters into him. Sig.

8911. A man is such as is his will, and such he remains after death.

— . Therefore to be judged 'according to the deeds' =according to the will . . .

— . Conatus, in man, is will.

8925. 'To sin'=to do and think what is evil and false . . . from the will . . .

8966. Temptations conduce to . . . insinuate truths into the will . . .

8988. (Those in good) act from the will, thus from themselves; for whatever is of the will with man is his proprium, because the esse of man's life is his will. But they who act solely from obedience do not act from their own will, but from the will of their lord; thus not from themselves, but from another; and therefore they are relatively in servitude. To act from truths, and not from good, is to act solely from the Intellectual . . . and to act from the Intellectual, and not from the Voluntary, is to act from that which stands outside and serves; for the understanding has been given man in order that it may receive truths and introduce them into the will, so that they may become goods . . .

9007^e. In Heaven, by 'man-vir' is perceived the Intellectual of man, (and) by 'man-homo,' his Voluntary; because man is man-homo-from his will, and man-vir, from his understanding . . .

9009. What is not of foresight from the will. Sig. and Ex. (See FORESEE, here.)

—². Only that evil which passes from the intellectual to the voluntary part is inrooted and appropriated . . . The things that enter the will are said to 'enter the heart.'

—³. But those evils that proceed solely from the will, and thus not from previous thought, are such as those to which the man hereditarily inclines . . . and these are not imputed to the man, unless he has [afterwards] confirmed them in his intellectual part . . .

9012. Previous thought from a depraved will. Sig. and Ex.

9055. If anything of the affection of love interiorly in the Voluntary (should be injured). Sig. and Ex.

—². Man has an internal and an external Voluntary, just as he has an internal and an external Intellectual. The internal Voluntary is where the internal Intellectual is, and the external Voluntary is where the external Intellectual is, for they must be conjoined. Ex. . . (Thus) when man is being regenerated, there is given him by the Lord a new understanding through the truths of faith, and a new will through the good of charity; and there must be both, and they must be conjoined together in order for him to have been regenerated. 9274².

9056. If anything of the affection of love exteriorly in the Voluntary (has been injured). Sig. and Ex.

9069. That the evil is not from the internal man, because it is from the Voluntary, and not [at the same time] from the Intellectual. Sig. and Ex. . . For (such) evil does not condemn, because the man does not see it . . .

9089². If anyone, through falsity, destroys good or truth in himself or others, he does it from evil, thus from the Voluntary through the Intellectual . . . and that which is done through both, remains, because it imbues the whole of the man's life . . . It is otherwise if evil goes forth from the Voluntary and not at the same time from the Intellectual. Tr.

9094³. Thus the life of a man's understanding is from the life of his will . . .

9115. They have conscience who have received a new will from the Lord. This will itself is conscience . . . And, as the good of charity makes the new will, it makes conscience also.

9132. For what is done consciously, goes forth from the will and at the same time from the understanding, thus from the whole man; for man is man from both . . .

9156. The evils called ('sins') come forth from a depraved will. Ill.

9227². Truths . . . enter (by an external way . . . into the understanding) in order that they may be introduced into the will, and thus be appropriated. But the good that inflows from the Lord by an internal way, inflows into the will; for the will is the internal of man . . .

—³. But the things that enter the will, that is, which become of the will, are in the light of Heaven.

9274⁹. In the first state (of regeneration) truths . . . enter through the Intellectual into the will; but in the second the goods thus produced go forth from Heaven through the will into the Intellectual . . .

9282. As the things of life, of worship, and of the civil state are not anything in a man so long as they are solely in his understanding; but are in him when in his will, 'doing' is everywhere insisted on in the Word; for to do is of the will; whereas to know, understand, acknowledge, and believe are of the understanding. But these have no being in a man until they become of the will, nor do they come forth—existunt—in him until they become of the understanding from the will; for the esse of man is to will, and the existere is to acknowledge and believe thence . . .

9293. Deeds regarded together with the will are not mere motions, but are forms of the will shown before the eyes. Ex.

9296². This good (which man receives from the Lord when an infant) makes the initiament of the new will in him; and it grows according to . . .

— . But as the man grows up . . . this new Voluntary . . . is closed in proportion as he is carried away by the delights of the loves of self and of the world; but in proportion as he is not carried away by these delights, it is opened, and is also perfected. Ex.

—³. This new Voluntary—which is from the good of innocence—is the habitation by means of which the Lord enters man, and excites him to will what is good . . .

— . But if the use of life is solely for self and the world, this initiament of the new will is closed, and beneath it there is formed a Voluntary from the evils of the loves of self and of the world, and a derivative Intellectual from falsities. This Voluntary is closed above and open below . . .

9300². With a regenerate man the understanding and will make one mind, and communicate reciprocally. Ex.

—⁴. See ENLIGHTEN, here. —⁵.

—⁶. In the other life, such are in the understanding of all the things of faith, and in the will of all the things of charity . . . for they are in the interior understanding that was enlightened in the world, and in the interior will that was enkindled . . .

9385. Reception in the will. Sig. and Ex. 9398.

9473². So with living conatus, which is will . . .

9572². The internal man, while in the body . . . wills in the Natural . . .

9670². The things of the lungs and cerebrum are called voluntary.

9683². For the proper will of man is continually leading him away; (just as) his voluntary things continually lead him away from order, but his involuntary ones continually lead him back to order . . .

9702. See INTERNAL MAN, here. 9703. 9704. 9705. 9706. 9707.

9730². There are two determinations of the intellectual and voluntary things in man; one outwards towards the world, and the other inwards towards Heaven . . .

9798. In proportion as the internal man is open to the Lord . . . in the same proportion it is in the will of good . . .

9799. The will of good is to will (the truths of the Word) from affection.

9810. The celestial Angels are receptions of Divine truth in their voluntary part . . .

9812⁹. (For) will is the soul and the all in action . . .

9818³. The life of the voluntary part is to will and love truth for the sake of truth, and good for the sake of good. 'This life is called 'heart.' Ill.

—⁴. 'A new heart'=a new will; and 'a new Spirit'=a new understanding.

9835. The things in the Celestial Kingdom pertain to the voluntary part . . .

— . There are two things to which all things in the universe relate—good and truth; and therefore there are two faculties in man—will and understanding . . .

[A. 9835]². The will of (the Grand Man) is in the Celestial Kingdom, and his understanding is in the Spiritual Kingdom.

9846. 'A workman in stone' = the good of love, thus the Voluntary of a regenerate man . . . (which) corresponds to the Celestial Kingdom in Heaven. —². Ex.

9914². The organics (are moved) at the beck of the will, which commences in the brains.

9915². There are three things in the Heavens which succeed in order — the Celestial, the Spiritual, and the Natural . . . The faculties in man that receive these are called the Voluntary, the Intellectual, and the Scientific . . . These three are signified by 'the weaver,' 'the designer,' and 'the embroiderer.' . . The reason 'the weaver' = the Voluntary, is that the Voluntary inflows into the Intellectual, and weaves it. (Continued under UNDERSTANDING.)

9993. To the Celestial Kingdom corresponds the Voluntary of man . . . and the Voluntary in man is internal and external . . . the internal Voluntary making the celestial life of the internal man, and the external Voluntary the celestial life of the external man.

9995². (This is) why man can with so much difficulty distinguish between thinking and willing. (Continued under THOUGHT.)

— . Good pertains to the will; and the will is that which the man loves . . . and truth pertains to the understanding . . . but when it is devoid of will-velle, it is not appropriated to the man's life . . .

—³. In a celestial man and Angel (the marriage of good and truth takes place) in the voluntary part . . .

9996. There are two things in man which make his life — the Intellectual and the Voluntary . . . The ultimate of the Voluntary is called sensuous delight . . . and it is imbibed through the two senses of taste and touch. Sig.

—^e. Whether you say voluntary goods, or celestial goods, it is the same . . .

10035. 'Flesh' = the Voluntary of man, thus his proprium . . .

—². All the proper Voluntary of man is evil, because, from himself, man loves nothing but himself and the world . . . and therefore he has to be regenerated, and through regeneration receive a new will. But this will . . . is not the man's, but the Lord's in the man . . .

10044. The inmost with man is his will and understanding. These are in the brain in their beginnings-principiis; and the things that proceed thence are acts . . . and therefore when the will and understanding are mentioned, the whole man is meant, for man is man from them. Moreover, the acts of the body have their all from the will; and this is why a man is not regarded from the acts of his body, but from the will in them . . .

10057². The circle (of man's life) begins from the will, which is the inmost of his life . . .

—³. The truths that are loved become of the will; and, in proportion as they become of the will they become of the life; for the will of man is his life itself . . .

10062³. For all that is voluntary has been formed from goods; and . . . the will of man has been given for goods.

10064². The will of man is therefore such as are the goods that make it, and such as is the love of them. In the opposite sense . . . the will is such as is the evil that makes it, and such as is the love of evil. The will of evil . . . is from Hell . . . for it is opposite to the will of good, which is from Heaven . . .

10067⁷. When the Lord regenerates man, He insinuates the truth that must be of faith into his Intellectual, and the good that must be of love into his Voluntary, and conjoins them therein . . .

—⁹. The reciprocal conjunction of the understanding and will in man. Ex.

10076². (Thus) the second state (of regeneration) . . . consists in thinking and acting from . . . the will . . .

— . Who can possibly believe that the whole man is an image-instar-of his will and the derivative understanding? Ex.

—⁴. The soul itself of man is his will; and the proximate cause by which it produces the effect is his understanding . . .

— . Whether you say will, or end, or love, or good, it is the same . . .

10093. But in the Celestial Kingdom (Divine truth is received) in the voluntary part . . . and that which is received in the voluntary part is said to be perceived.

10122². The will that is from the Lord, also called the new will, is the receptacle of good; and the understanding that is from Him, also called the new understanding, is the receptacle of truth. But the will from the man's proprium, also called the old will, is the receptacle of evil; and the understanding from his proprium, also called the old understanding, is the receptacle of falsity. Man is born from his parents into this latter understanding and will; but into the former understanding and will, from the Lord . . .

—³. Man has been so created that the will and understanding make a one. Ex. . . For the will is the inmost of man, and is the esse of his life; and the understanding is exterior, and comes forth-existit-thence; for what a man wills he loves, feels as delight, and calls good; and the understanding favours it, and confirms it by reasons, and calls these truths. Hence it is that the will and understanding in reality make a one . . .

—⁴. In the other life, everyone comes into a state like that of his will; and then those who have not received a new will from the Lord rush into evils of every kind, and think such things as favour the evils . . . For it is a law of Divine order that the will and the understanding should make one mind, and thus one man . . .

10124. With those in the Celestial Kingdom, good is implanted through truth in the voluntary part. —², Ex.

10143³. For when good and truth have been conjoined in a man, he has a new will and a new understanding, consequently a new life . . .

10156². Wherever a man looks, there his heart turns, that is, his will and his love.

10169. One in love truly conjugal, loves what the other thinks, and what the other wills; thus loves to think and will as the other. 10173.

10196². Angels and Spirits, like men, enjoy the two faculties (of) understanding and will; and their understanding has been formed to receive Divine truth, and their will, Divine good. The understanding serves them for reception, and also for perception.

10199⁸. The truths of faith which have been inscribed on the life are in the will; and the things which are in the will are in the internal man. Ex.

— . Whether you say the will, or the love, it is the same. Ex.

10264³. The Voluntary is constituted from the affection of good . . .

10291⁹. For man's Voluntary is formed through his Intellectual, and also manifests itself through it.

10298². At his birth, man has nothing of understanding, and nothing of will. His understanding and his will are formed by degrees . . . the understanding by means of truths, and the will by means of goods, inasmuch that his understanding is nothing but a composition of such things as relate to truths, and his will is nothing but an affection of such things as are called goods. It follows that a man is nothing but the truth and good from which his two faculties have been formed.

—³. (Thus) a man is completely and entirely such as are his Intellectual and his Voluntary . . .

10331⁷. Moreover, the will-velle-itself of man is nothing but work, because what anyone wills, he does . . .

10336³. To 'write the law upon the heart' = to implant Divine truth in the will. Ex.

10645². For the Lord is not in the understanding of truth without the willing of it; but is in the understanding of truth and the willing of it. For truth does not enter into man . . . until he wills it, and from willing does it; for the will is the man himself; and the understanding is man in so far as it has from the will. 10683⁴. H.474.

10683⁴. That truth is in the will, may be known . . . from the fact that the man does it, and still more from the fact that he loves to do it . . .

H. 16. To will is to love to do. Ex.

26. For the Lord inflows immediately into the willing of man, and mediately through his willing into his thinking . . . Refs.

32. There is an internal and an external in every Heaven . . . which are as the Voluntary and the Intellectual . . . Every Voluntary has its own Intellectual . . . the Voluntary being as a flame, and the Intellectual as the derivative light.

61. Therefore the Angels attend (solely) to the will (in a man), from which his body acts.

95. In every man also . . . there are (as in Heaven) two kingdoms, one of the will, and the other of the understanding; the will reigns through affections of good, and the understanding through affections of truth. And these kingdoms correspond to those of the heart and lungs. And so the Celestial Kingdom is the Voluntary of Heaven . . . and the Spiritual Kingdom is its Intellectual . . . Hence 'the heart' = the will . . . and the pulmonary breath the understanding . . .

137³. All a man does, he does from understanding and will; he does from will through good, and from understanding through truth . . .

145. By love the Lord inflows into the will of the Angels; and makes Himself seen through their understanding. Rep.

221⁶. The Angels (too) have understanding and will; their understanding is such as to be continually perfected . . . through truths; and their will . . . through goods . . .

228. All a man's power is from his understanding and will; for without these he cannot move a particle of his body: his understanding and will are his spiritual man . . . Man's will and understanding are ruled by the Lord through Angels and Spirits; and as the will and understanding are, so therefore are all things of the body . . . (From experience.)

229. The Angels can . . . (overcome all opposition) by a mere effort of will . . .

278². The will (with those in a state of innocence) is their memory itself. Ex.

297. Immediate influx, which is of the Lord Himself, is from His Divine Human, and is into the will of man, and through his will into his understanding . . .

367. The mind consists of two parts, called the understanding and the will . . . In Heaven, the husband acts the part called the understanding, and the wife the part called the will . . .

368. For the . . . woman is born to be voluntary, thus to think from the will . . . Ex.

[H.] 369. Both man and woman enjoy understanding and will; but understanding predominates in the man, and will in the woman; and the man-homo-is according to what predominates. But in the marriages in the Heavens there is no predominance; for the will of the wife is also that of the husband, and the understanding of the husband is also that of the wife... This conjunction is actual... for the will of the wife enters into the understanding of the husband, and the understanding of the husband into the will of the wife... 370, Ex.

423. The conjunction of the understanding and the will. Ex.

— A man can think (truth) from the understanding... but does not think it from the will unless he wills and does it. When he wills it, and, from willing, does it, it is in both understanding and will, and therefore in the man; for the understanding alone does not make man, nor the will alone, but (both) together... What is in the understanding only is with-apud-the man, but not in him...

424. That man can think from the understanding, and not at the same time from the will, has been provided to the end that he can be reformed...

— For man is born, as to the will, into all evil. Des. . . In order that this Voluntary may be amended and reformed, the ability to understand truths has been given him... but still he cannot think them from the will, until he is of such a character that he wills and does them from the heart...

425. In proportion, therefore, as the truths of the understanding have been conjoined with the goods of the will... he has Heaven in him... But in proportion as the falsities of the understanding have been conjoined with the evils of the will, he has Hell in him... But in proportion as the truths of the understanding have not been conjoined with the goods of the will, he is in a middle state...

—². But in neither Heaven nor Hell is anyone allowed to have a divided mind, that is, to understand one thing and will another; but what he wills he understands, and what he understands he wills...

455. That a man can understand truths, and be rational, if he will. Ex.

—². To love and to will are the same; for what a man wills, he loves; and what he loves, he wills.

463. Every particular of thought and will have been inscribed on the brain... thus on the whole body.

— Thus a man is wholly such as he is in his will and the derivative thought...

472. A thousand men may... do the same deed... and yet each, regarded in itself, be different, because from a different will. Ex.

479. That after death a man is his own love, that is, his own will. Gen.art.

503. In the second state after death, a Spirit thinks from his will itself... and then the thought makes a one with the will, so much so that it scarcely appears that the Spirit thinks, but only that he wills...

508^e. The will is the very nature-natura seu indoles-of the man; and therefore to be remitted into his will, is to be remitted into his nature; and also into his life...

512. (In the second and third state of the evil after death) they will and think from their love; and, as this love is infernal, they will nothing but evil, and think nothing but falsity...

589². In the natural world, that which acts and reacts is called force and conatus; but in the Spiritual World... life and will;... will, there, is living conatus.

N. 28. On the will and the understanding. Gen.art. T.397.

31. The will and understanding also make the spirit of man...

32. How the will and understanding make one mind. Ex.

33. But those in evil and falsity have no will and understanding. Ex.

35. (Refs. to passages on the subject of the will and understanding.) 120². J.39.

164. A man... must examine his thoughts and the intentions of his will... (otherwise) he cannot perform repentance; for... to will evils is to do them.

271^e. If a man were to be forced to what he does not will, he would always incline... to what he does will.

J. 36. The doctrinal things of the Church... do not enter a man's life until they enter his will and thence his actions. Then, for the first time, are they in the man's spirit; for his spirit... is formed from his will, and in so far from his thought as it proceeds from his will... Whether you say the will, or the love, it is the same...

—². A man may know, think, and understand many things; but, when left to himself, he rejects those which are not in accord with his will... That alone remains in the spirit of a man which has entered into his will, or love. Life 15², Ex.

S. 83. In every man there are two faculties of life, called the understanding and the will. The understanding is the receptacle of truth, thus of wisdom; and the will, of good, thus of love. For a man to be a man of the Church, these two must make a one; and they do so when he forms his understanding from genuine truths—which to all appearance is done by himself—and when his will is infilled with the good of love—which is done by the Lord. Hence the man has... a life of truth in the understanding from the will; and a life of good in the will through the understanding. This is the marriage of truth and good in a man; and also that of the Lord and the Church in him.

115. There are two faculties of life in man, called the understanding and the will; and the understanding has been made subject to the will, but not the will to the understanding; for the understanding merely teaches, and shows the way. Search, and you will find that the will of a man is his proprium, and that this, regarded in itself, is mere evil; and that from it there is falsity in the understanding.

—². (Thus) man, from himself, does not will to understand anything except that which is from the proprium of his will; nor would he be able to do so unless there were some other source of knowledge . . .

Life 15. For the understanding . . . can be elevated into the light of Heaven . . . but the will cannot be . . . elevated into the heat of Heaven . . . unless the man is spiritual. Ex. W.242^o. 243. 244.

43. Man has two faculties . . . called the will and the understanding. They are distinct from each other, but have been so created as to be a one; and, when they are a one, they are called the mind . . .

— So all things in man relate to the will and understanding . . . For these two faculties are the receptacles and subjects of good and truth . . .

—². Nothing is of more importance than to know how the will and understanding make one mind. They do (so) as good and truth make a one; for there is a like marriage between the will and understanding as between good and truth. Ex. . . So the will in man is the very esse of his life, and the understanding is the derivative existere of his life . . . N.32. T.397.

44. For . . . the will leads the understanding, and makes it act as one with it; and therefore if there is anything in the understanding that does not accord with the will, the man, when left to himself . . . either casts it out, and forces it to be one with the will by falsification.

63^o. These, after some combat against evils, do not will them . . .

86^o. Man can be in the spiritual mind—and thus in Heaven—with the understanding, but not with the will . . . unless he shuns evils as sins; and if he is not there with the will, he is not in Heaven; for the will drags the understanding downwards . . . F.32.

—³. Man compared to a garden; his understanding to the light, and his will to the heat. Ex.

—⁴. So long as a man does not shun evils as sins, the concupiscences of evils block up the interiors of the natural mind on the side of the will . . .

—⁵. But as soon as these concupiscences have been dispersed by the Lord, the man is a man, because he then thinks truth in the understanding from good in the will.

F. 15. The will produces nothing from itself without the understanding, nor the understanding anything without the will. For anything to come forth—existat—they must act in conjunction. Ex.

16. The conatus of producing means is in man from the will in the understanding . . . These means are called the truths of faith . . . The will comes forth—existit—in the uses. (Thus) the will of producing uses by means of the understanding is perpetual in every progression, until it comes forth.

W. 25. For the understanding and will reside in the head, and the body is actuated from the understanding and will. Ex.

30. It is from the fact that the Divine essence . . . is love and wisdom that man has two faculties of life, from one of which he has understanding, and from the other will. Ex. (Continued under FACULTY.)

—². When (these faculties are closed) the understanding is indeed called understanding, and the will, will; but still, essentially, they do not exist.

52. The affections and derivative thoughts correspond to all things of the animal kingdom; the will and derivative understanding, to all things of the vegetable kingdom; and the ultimates of life, to all things of the mineral kingdom.

136. (Thus) the body is a form corresponding to the understanding and will. And, as form is predicated of the understanding and will also, the form of the body corresponds to that of the understanding and will . . . This is why the mind—that is, the will and understanding—rules the body . . . 387.

209^o. Will and understanding . . . have no existence outside their subjects, which are substances; but are states of them . . . 210, Ex.

214. Will, understanding, and exercise are in a series of (three) degrees. (Like end, cause, and effect. W.213.) 239. 277.

216. Unless will and understanding . . . clothe themselves with works whenever possible, they are airy nothings . . .

219. The living conatus in man . . . is his will united to his understanding.

— (Thus) the interior things of the will and understanding make the first degree; the interior things of the body, the second . . .

239. (Thus) in every man there is a natural, spiritual, and celestial will and understanding in potency from his birth, and in act when they are opened. Ex.

244². (Thus) the understanding does not lead the will . . . but merely teaches and shows the way . . . But the will leads the understanding, and causes it to act as one with it . . . The will does nothing . . . without the understanding . . . and the will associates the understanding with itself, by influx; but not the converse.

266. Reason and experience testify that an evil man can also will and do (truths) . . . For who cannot will and do what he thinks? The reason he does not will and do it, is that he does not love to will and do it. The ability to will and do is the freedom which every man has from the Lord. That he does not will and do what is good, when he can, is from the love of evil . . .

—². Those diabolical Spirits said that they can will and do according to these (arcana of angelic wisdom), but that they do not will. When told that they would will them if they would shun evils as sins, they said they could do that too, but do not will. P.99².

— The reason man can will, is that the Lord . . . continually gives the ability. For . . . the Lord dwells with every man . . . in the faculty or power of being able to will.

358. That the Lord has created . . . in man two receptacles and habitations for Himself, called the will and the understanding, the will for His Divine love, and the understanding for His Divine wisdom. Gen.art. 395.

[W.] 361. That every man has . . . will and understanding, and that they are distinct . . . is known from common perception, but is not known from thought . . . Everyone perceives it when he hears it, and may also say, This person wills well, but does not understand well; and this understands well, but does not will well. I love him who understands well and wills well, but not him who understands well and wills evilly. Yet when the same individual thinks about the will and understanding, he makes no distinction between them . . . the reason of which is that his thought communicates with the bodily sight; and when he is writing he comprehends still less that the will and understanding are two distinct things. Ex. (See 372², where it is shown that they are confounded in common speech.)

362. That the will and understanding, which are the receptacles of love and wisdom, are in the brains, in the whole and in every part of them; and are derivatively in the body, in the whole and in every part of it. Gen.art.

363. That love and wisdom, and the derivative will and understanding, make the very life of man. Ex.

364. Everyone sees that the understanding is the receptacle of wisdom, but few that the will is the receptacle of love. The reason is that the will does nothing of itself, but acts through the understanding. Further ex.

365. Man's life, in its beginnings, is in the brains . . . By life in its beginnings are meant the will and understanding. 387, Ex.

368. For such as are the love and wisdom, such are the will and understanding . . .

371. That there is a correspondence of the will with the heart, and of the understanding with the lungs. Gen.art. 372. 375. 376. 378, Ex.

373. As the will and understanding are receptacles of love and wisdom, they are organic forms, that is, forms organized from the purest substances. Ex.

384. The cerebellum is especially for the will, and the cerebrum is especially for the understanding. Ex.

390. That the conjunction of the spirit . . . with the body is through the correspondence of the will and understanding with the heart and lungs . . . Gen.art.

394. That things about the will and understanding . . . may be known from the correspondence of the heart with the will, and of the understanding with the lungs. Gen.art.

—². The soul . . . is the spirit, and is a man in perfect form, and the soul of this is the will and understanding; and the soul of these is love and wisdom from the Lord . . .

395. As love and wisdom in the Lord are distinctly one . . . the will and understanding have been so created . . . as to be distinctly two, but still so as to make a one in all operation and sensation; for in these the will and understanding cannot be separated.

397. Lest a man be in Heaven by his understanding, and in Hell by his will . . . all of understanding which is over and above his own proper love is removed after death; the result of which is that in all persons the will and understanding at last act as a one. Ex.

399. That the love, or the will, is the very life of man. Gen.art.

—^e. (Thus) as the subsidiary life of the body depends on the heart alone, so the life of the mind depends on the will alone; and the will lives when the thought ceases, just as the heart lives when the respiration ceases.

400. That the love or the will continually strives after the human form . . . Gen.art.

401. That . . . the will cannot do anything . . . without a marriage with . . . the understanding. (Shown from the physiology of the heart and lungs.)

402. That . . . the will prepares a house . . . for its future consort . . . the understanding. (Shown in the same way.)

403. That . . . the will prepares all things in its human form, so that it can act conjointly with . . . the understanding. (Shown in the same way.)

— . Although will and understanding are mentioned, it must be well known that the will is the whole man. Ex.

— . Beware of cherishing an idea of the will as of something separate from the human form; for it is this form.

404^e. All the operations . . . of the will outside the understanding relate to affections of good, and not to affections of truth.

405². (The influx of the will into the understanding explained by the double influx of the blood into the lungs.)

406. That by means of these three conjunctions . . . the will is in its sensitive and its active life. Gen.art. 407, shown.

408. That . . . the will introduces . . . the understanding into all things of its house. Ex.

409. That . . . the will does nothing except in conjunction with . . . the understanding. Ex.

410. That . . . the will conjoins itself with . . . the understanding, and causes . . . the understanding to be reciprocally conjoined. Shown.

414. That . . . the will can be elevated in the same way (as the understanding), and can receive the things of heat from Heaven, if it loves wisdom . . . in that degree. Ex. and Shown.

416. That otherwise . . . the will draws . . . the understanding back from its elevation, in order that it may act as one with it. Gen.art.

419. That . . . the will is purified in the understanding if it is elevated together with it. Ex. and Shown.

421. That . . . the will is defiled in the understanding, and by it, if they are not elevated together. Ex.

P. 74. Hence beasts have no understanding and will; but (only) knowledge and affection, both natural. 96⁴.

—³. (Therefore beasts) cannot think—I will this, or do not will it . . .

78. For whatever man does, he does from the will through the understanding . . .

80. Nothing is appropriated to man that he only thinks, nor that he thinks to will, unless . . . he wills it to such a degree that he does it when he has the opportunity. Ex. and Sig.

89. As all willing is from love, and all understanding from wisdom, it follows that the ability to will is from the Divine love, and the ability to understand from the Divine wisdom . . .

— . But there exists with man an interior willing and an exterior willing, and he can act according to (the latter) and not at the same time according to (the former); but still to will exteriorly is from freedom . . .

96. Without these two faculties (of rationality and freedom) man would not have understanding and will, and thus would not be man. —²Ex.

—³. As man can will, he can also understand; for willing has no existence without understanding . . . Also, if you take away willing from understanding, you understand nothing; but in proportion as you will, in the same proportion you can understand, provided the aids called Knowledges are at hand. Ex.

—⁵. (This) is from the influx of the Lord's will—that He wills to be received by man . . . These things are of His will, because they are of His love. It is this will of the Lord that causes what a man thinks, speaks, etc. to appear as his.

—⁶. It is known in Heaven that the Lord operates all things by willing, and that what He wills is done.

103. By (the external and internal man) is meant the external and internal of the will and understanding; for (these) make the man . . .

111². It is the man's internal will that is in the concupiscences, and his internal understanding in the cunning; and it is his external will that is in the delights of the concupiscences, and his external understanding in the machinations . . .

136⁷. For everything of understanding and will must be formed by what is external before it is formed by what is internal. Ex. . . And when the first understanding and the first will have been formed, the internal of thought regards them as externals of its thought, and either conjoins itself with them, or separates itself from them . . .

—⁸. But . . . the internal of the understanding does not conjoin itself with the internal of the will; but the internal of the will conjoins itself with the internal of the understanding, and causes the conjunction to be reciprocal. But this is done by the internal of the will, and not one whit by the internal of the understanding.

144. When the understanding is blinded (by ignorance of truths) the will is also stopped up . . .

151. The internal man is not reformed by merely knowing, understanding, and being wise . . . but by willing what (these) teach. Ex.

— . Thus the internal is to will, and the external is to do; for unless anyone does that which he wills, it is because, inwardly, he does not will; and this at last becomes not to will [at all].

165. A man is led by the understanding . . . only when the . . . will makes it. in which case it may be said of the understanding also that it is led: but still the understanding is not led, but the will from which it is.

183. The Divine Providence never acts together with the love of a man's (hereditary) will; but continually against it. Ex. 219⁴. 234.

193². Thus in every man there are two principles (or beginnings) of life, one natural, and the other spiritual, the natural one being the pulsation of the heart, and the spiritual one the will of the mind; and each adjoins to itself a consort . . .

—³. As the soul of the will is love, and the soul of the understanding wisdom, both from the Lord, it follows that . . . the will is the life of everyone, and that the quality of this life is determined by that of the conjunction of the will with the understanding.

209². Their understanding acknowledges, but if their will does not also do so, they do not acknowledge; for the love of the will inspires into the understanding whatever it wills; and not the converse. It even destroys in the understanding everything that is not from itself.

227. That whatever a man thinks, speaks, and acts from his will, whether good or evil, is appropriated to him, and remains. Ex.

—¹⁰. (Otherwise) the will would adulterate the good, and the understanding would falsify the truth . . . (for) when the will is in evil, it adulterates good in the understanding, and adulterated good in the understanding is evil in the will, for it confirms that evil is good, and good evil. . . This is done by the will in the understanding, and not by the understanding from itself.

249^e. (But) by the former means, the Lord leads the good not only from doing evils, but also from thinking and willing them. Ex.

259². For the will must see in the understanding, and not the understanding in the will; or, what is the same, the life and its love must lead the understanding to think, speak, and act, and not the converse; (otherwise) the understanding, from some . . . diabolical love, might seize on whatever occurs through the senses, and enjoin the will to do it.

278. In order that he may examine himself, an understanding has been given man, separated from the will . . . so that from the interior thought (in his understanding) he may see what the will is doing in the exterior thought . . .

281². See LOVE, here.

[P.] 282. It is the will (and not the understanding alone) that must be healed. (Fully quoted under UNDERSTANDING.)

284. The understanding is a recipient of both good and evil, and truth and falsity; but not the will itself. . . for this must be in either evil or good; it cannot be in both, for the will is the man himself.

293. There is not in any man a grain of will or prudence that is his Own; (otherwise) Heaven, Hell . . . and the whole human race would perish. Ex.

296⁵. If evils are in the thought only, and not in the will, the man is not yet in an infernal Society with [his] evil; but he enters it when they are in the will also. —⁸, Ex.

297. The faculty of understanding and perceiving . . . is given every man . . . but still a man cannot lead himself out of evil by it; because evil is of the will; and the understanding does not flow into the will, except with light only . . .

298. That man's Own intelligence, when the will is in evil, sees nothing but falsity . . . Ex.

—². Every man has his Own Voluntary and his Own Intellectual; (the former) is evil, and (the latter) is the derivative falsity. They are meant by 'the will of man, and the will of the flesh,' and, in their essence, are the love of self, and the derivative conceit. Their marriage ex. 321^e.

318¹¹. Everything confirmed in the will and at the same time by the understanding remains to eternity; but not that which has been confirmed by the understanding only. For that which is of the understanding only is not in the man, but outside him . . . and nothing enters man, or is appropriated to him, except that which is received by the will . . . (See —⁹.)

328⁵. Therefore the . . . understanding is an image of God; and the . . . will is a likeness of God . . . It follows that man has been created . . . in order that his will may receive love from God, and his understanding wisdom from Him . . .

329. For the Lord continually inflows into the will with the power to be able to shun evils; and into the understanding with the power to be able to think that there is a God. But still no one can do the one unless he does the other . . .

R. 17⁴. For the thought and memory of the understanding do not inflow into the will, and through the will into act; but the will inflows into the thought and memory of the understanding, and produces deeds.

210. That they are devoid of the understanding of truth and the will of good. Sig. and Ex.

254. 'By Thy will they are, and have been created' (Rev. iv. 11) = . . . from the Lord's Divine love . . . or from the Divine good . . . E. 295, Ex.

355. The will of serving and of doing. Sig. and Ex.

386^e. For every man can be in the light of Heaven as to the understanding, provided the will is closed as to its evil.

541². They assert that whatever proceeds from the will and judgment of man is not good, and therefore the goods of charity . . . being done by man, contribute nothing to salvation . . . when yet the one only thing from which man is man, and through which he is conjoined with the Lord, is that he can do what is good . . . as from his own will according to his judgment. Ex.

634³. For what enters the thought and understanding only does not condemn; but what enters the will does condemn, because this enters the life, and remains; for nothing can enter the will unless it is of the love, and love is the life of man.

832². Therefore, unless the understanding is in the light of Heaven by the Word, the will cannot come into the heat of Heaven.

839¹¹. 'Thy will be done, as in Heaven so also on the earth.' III.

875⁷. (So) will and understanding (are not anything without) action. Ex.

—⁸. Will, or conatus (however) is in itself act, because it is a continual effort to act, which becomes an outward act when determination is present; and therefore conatus and will is accepted as an interior act . . . provided it does not fail when there is opportunity.

—¹⁰. Nothing of (what man wills, thinks, etc.) is in him except the state of receiving that which inflows.

935. But the Voluntary together with the Intellectual becomes human according to the state of the understanding through which it comes forth—existit; for the state of life of every man is such that his will cannot do anything except through the understanding; nor can the understanding think anything except from the will.

956. 'Let him that willeth' (Rev. xxii. 17) = him who from love wills . . . for 'to will' = to love, because what a man wills from the heart, he loves; and what he loves, he wills from the heart.

M. 92^e. The male receives (the conjugal sphere) in the understanding, because he is the intellectual form; and the female receives it according to her form, thus in the will . . .

159. That the will of the wife conjoins itself with the understanding of the man; and, derivatively from this, the understanding of the man with the will of the wife. Ex.

165^e. (These virtues) partake of the intellectual will of the man, with which the will of the wife unites itself.

195. That this formation by the wife is effected through the conjunction of her own will with the internal will of the man. Ex.

— . The things of rational wisdom make the man's understanding, and those of moral wisdom, his will; and the wife conjoins herself with the latter, which make his will. It is the same whether we say that the wife conjoins herself, or that she conjoins her will, with the will of the man, because the wife has been born voluntary, and thus does from her will all she does.

— The reason it is said, with the internal will of the man, is that the will of the man has its seat in his understanding; and the Intellectual of the man is the inmost of the woman. . . Men have also an external will, but this frequently partakes of simulation . . . and the wife does not conjoin herself with it except playfully.

196. To the end that the will of both may become one. Ex.

— For he who conjoins himself with the will of anyone, conjoins himself with his understanding also; for, regarded in itself, the understanding is nothing but the ministry and service of the will. Ex.

197. For the affections . . . form the will, and make and compose it. But, with men, the affections are in the understanding; whereas with women they are in the will.

221. For the understanding is not so constant in its thoughts, as the will is in its affections. For the understanding is carried now upwards, now downwards; is now in a serene and clear state, and now in a turbulent and obscure one; is now engaged with grateful, and now with ungrateful objects; and as the mind, when acting, is in the body too, it follows that this has like states; and this is why a husband now recedes from conjugal love, and now accedes to it . . .

248. Conjugal love . . . regards a union of wills.

259. The thought that the wife is willing; and . . . that the man is not willing (a cause of cold). Ex.

270⁶. Love truly conjugal dwells, in the highest region, in the midst of mutual love, in the chamber of the will; and also in the midst of the perceptions of wisdom, in the chamber of the understanding. . . The husband is in the chamber of the understanding, and the wife in that of the will.

— Conjugal cold also dwells in the highest region, but only in the chamber of the understanding, that of the will being closed there. For the understanding . . . can ascend into the highest region . . . But if the will . . . does not ascend at the same time into its consociate chamber, the latter is closed, and cold results in the other . . . (In this case) the understanding looks down from the highest region to the lowest, and . . . descends, in order to warm itself with an illicit fire.

292³. The reason of this domination of the wives . . . is that a man acts from the understanding, and a woman from the will; and the will can obstinately harden itself, but not the understanding.

316⁴. The reason (all the bodily organs are in pairs) is that one is of the will, and the other of the understanding.

a flame. In the will, love knows nothing about itself, because it is not sensible of itself there; nor does it act from itself there; but this takes place in the understanding and its thought . . .

400. In man, all end is of will; all cause, of understanding; and all effect, of action.

432². The natural man, separated from the spiritual, is man only as to the understanding, and not as to the will . . .

490. They who do not discriminate the will and understanding from one another, cannot discriminate evils and goods from one another. Ex.

492. That adulteries of the fourth degree are adulteries of the will. Ex.

—². Those who are evil from the will, dwell behind, and are called devils. . . With such, the will plays the leading part.

493. The reason (adulteries of the will) are so grievous . . . is that the will plays the leading part in them—but the understanding in those previously treated of—and the life of man is essentially of his will, and formally of his understanding; the reason of which is, that the will acts as a one with the love, and love is the essence of man's life, and this forms itself in the understanding by such things as accord; and therefore the understanding, regarded in itself, is nothing else than the form of the will . . . What flows forth from . . . the will is, principally, called purpose—propositum; whereas what flows forth from . . . the understanding . . . is called intention. Guilt, too, is predicated principally of the will . . .

494. That adulteries of the third and fourth degree are evils of sin, in proportion to the amount and the quality of the understanding and will there are in them, whether actually committed, or not. Ex.

— For man is man from will and understanding. Ex.

— 'To commit adultery in the heart' = to do so in the will.

527. That evil is imputed to anyone according to the quality of his will, and according to that of his understanding. Gen.art.

— (Thus) such as are a man's will and understanding, such is the man. Ex.

—². (Thus) by the deeds according to which everyone will be judged . . . are meant his will and understanding. Ex.

— All things done by the interior will . . . are done of purpose . . . and all things done by the understanding are done from confirmation. Ex.

I. 7. That (spiritual) heat and light inflow into the will and understanding (respectively). Ex. T.75².

—³. The influx into speech is effected from the will through the understanding; but that into the actions, from the understanding through the will.

13⁴. The (infernal) turn the back of the head to the Lord; (and) receive the influx into the affections of their will . . . and make the understanding favour them; whereas the (Angels—who turn their foreheads to the Lord) receive the influx into the affections of their understanding, and make the will favour them. . . . For the human understanding dwells in the cerebrum . . . and the will in the cerebellum. T.564^e.

14. That the understanding can be elevated into the light . . . in which the Angels are, according to the cultivation of the reason; and the will, into the heat . . . according to the deeds . . . But that the love of the will is not elevated, except in proportion as the man wills and does the things which the wisdom of the understanding teaches. Gen.art.

—². The light which makes the understanding is received first; and, by slow degrees, the love which makes the will. Ex. . . . Thus is the will formed through the understanding.

—³. A man becomes prosperous and blessed if he acquires wisdom, and keeps his will in obedience thereto; but unprosperous and unhappy, if he makes his understanding obedient to his will. The reason is that the will inclines to evils from birth . . . and therefore, unless it were restrained through the understanding, the man would rush into crimes . . . (Continued under UNDERSTANDING. —⁴.) T.588.

—⁵. The state of a man if the love of the will is not elevated by means of the understanding. (Shown by comparisons.) T.590.

—^e. But with those who subdue the allurements of the cupidities of the will through the wisdom of the understanding, the understanding enters into a conjugal covenant with the will . . . and they dwell together . . . with deliciousnesses.

15. Beasts have no will and understanding, but . . . only an analogue of each.

—². Man is man because his understanding can be elevated above the desires of his will, and thus, from above, can know, see, and govern them . . . thus from the fact that his will is under obedience to his understanding; whereas a beast is a beast because its understanding is under obedience to its will. It follows . . . that the understanding of man . . . is alive, and thus is a true understanding; and that his will . . . is alive, and thus is a true will; but the reverse is the case with beasts.

—⁴. In a word, with beasts the will and understanding always cohere; and, as the will in itself is blind . . . it makes the understanding blind also . . .

—⁵. A beast does not in the least think from the understanding . . . The reason a man thinks and speaks, is solely because his understanding is separable from his will . . .

T. 14². He who (has denied) God . . . has closed his internal man as to the will . . . but he cannot close it as to the understanding—for he would then be no longer a man—but the love of his will infatuates with falsities the higher things of the understanding, causing the understanding to become as it were closed as to truths . . . and goods . . .

32⁴. The memory is the soil (for the seeds of knowledge); the understanding is their place of germination; and the will, of their fructification; and . . . the understanding and will are such that they can be cultivated and perfected . . . to eternity.

37². Of these two essentials and universals (the will and the understanding) the mind of everyone consists, and they exist and operate in everything of it. The reason is that the will is the receptacle and habitation of love, and the understanding of wisdom; and therefore the two correspond to the Divine love and the Divine wisdom, from which they originate.

39. See LOVE, here.

39^e. (Thus) the life of man dwells in his understanding . . . and the love of the will modifies it.

56. The power and will—posse et velle—of God are a one; and, as He wills nothing but what is good, He can do nothing but what is good.

— . In the Spiritual World, no one can do anything contrary to his will, which they derive from God, in that His power and will are a one.

87. The will, from its good, cannot do anything except through the understanding. Ex.

99². Such is the reciprocal conjunction of the will and understanding. Ex.

255^e. For confirmation enters the will, and the will is the man himself, and disposes the understanding at its pleasure; whereas mere bare Knowledge enters the understanding only, and the understanding has no authority over the will, and therefore is not in the man, except as one who stands in the door-way . . . 347³.

313. For concupiscence becomes as a deed when it is in the will. For allurements enter the understanding only; but intention, the will . . . 316.

316. It is abstaining from willing (that makes a man chaste). Ex.

362. The two faculties of life in man, called the will and understanding. Ex.

366^e. In this way (the good) form the state of the will for the influx of love and charity; and that of the understanding for the influx of wisdom and faith . . . But the evil obstruct the influx . . . but still God resides in their highests . . . and gives them the faculty of willing good and understanding truth . . .

371⁷. The conjunction of will and action is not alternate, but mutual. Ex.

374². (Thus) works are essentially of the will, formally of the understanding, and actually of the body.

403°. For the will and understanding, in their beginnings (or principles) are in the head, and in their derivatives in the body, as the will is in the deeds, and the thought in the speech . . .

443°. In the second period of life, the . . . understanding regulates (the actions); in the third, the will acts upon the understanding, and the understanding modifies the will . . .

457°. (Such a man) receives the Divine influx in the understanding and not in the will . . . But (this man) receives the influx into the will, and from it in the understanding . . .

481°. The power to understand and to will truth is given every man, devils too, and is never taken away. (From experience.)

— (The infernal) was asked by the Angels whether he could understand the Divine spiritual things they said to him. He replied that he understood them. . . Why then did he not receive them? . . . Because he did not love them, and therefore did not will to do so. Being told that he could will . . . he said No. The Angels therefore breathed the glory of reputation into his understanding . . . and he then willed and loved them. But on being remitted into his previous state . . . as he did not will, he no longer understood them.

493. But the will of man is twofold, interior and exterior. Ex. . . (Thus) the interior will is the man himself, for there are the esse and essence of his life; and the understanding is its form, by means of which the will presents its love to view.

— Everything that man . . . wills from love is free; for whatever proceeds from the love of the internal will is the delight of his life . . . so that whatever is received from the freedom of this will, remains . . .

495. 'I will sacrifice what is free-voluntarium' (Ps. liv.6).

497. That the will and understanding of man are in this free-will . . . Gen.art.

510. But when (thought about salvation) enters the will, it is in the man; for the will is the man himself . . . and then the will and thought act as a one, and together make the man. Thus repentance . . . must be of the will . . .

532. That true repentance is to examine . . . also the intentions of the will. Gen.art.

533°. The reason the intentions of the will must be examined, is that the love resides in the will, for the will is the receptacle of it . . . and from it every love breathes forth its delights into the perceptions and thoughts of the understanding; for these do not act at all from themselves, but from the will . . . The will is therefore the house itself in which the man dwells; and the understanding is the court through which he goes out and in.

—^e. When the intentions of the will have been examined and removed, the man is elevated out of the natural will—in which hereditary and actual evils have their seat—into the spiritual will, through which the Lord reforms and regenerates the natural will; and, by the mediumship of this, the sensuous and voluntary things of the body; thus the whole man.

574. As to the will (the natural man differs not a whit from the nature of beasts); but he differs from them as to the understanding; for this can be elevated above the concupiscences of the will . . . This is why a man can think from the understanding . . .

584. The human seed is conceived interiorly in the understanding, and is formed in the will . . .

589°. (Thus) the first of the new birth is the reception of Truths in the understanding; and the second is that the man wills to act according to them . . .

—^e. He is a reformed man who is in the affection of Truth for the sake of Truth; for this affection conjoins itself with the will; and, if it makes progress, it conjoins the will with the understanding; and then regeneration begins.

593. As to the division of the natural man into two forms, it is an actual division in it of both the will and the thought . . . so that another will has been formed by the man below the former one, and also another thought; but still both constitute the natural man. This latter will, which is formed by the man, may be called the corporeal will, because it actuates the body . . .

596. There (thus) arises a disagreement between the new will, which is above, and the old will, which is below . . . and after this disagreement of the wills, there arises . . . spiritual temptation; but . . . the will cannot fight from itself, but through the understanding . . .

601. That a regenerate man has a new will and a new understanding. Gen.art.

602. As to the understanding, a man can rise into (heavenly) light; but if he does not rise as to the will also, he is still the old man . . . Therefore regeneration is predicated primarily of the will, and secondarily of the understanding. Ex.

604. The new will is above the old will, in the spiritual region of the mind; and so is the new understanding . . . In that region they conjoin themselves together, and conjoinedly look into the old or natural will, and dispose all things there . . .

658. That thought is imputed to no one; but will. Gen.art.

— (Five general statements to show the relative nature and properties of the will and the understanding.)

659. As man can choose . . . he can will, or not will; and that which he wills is received by the will, and appropriated; and that which he does not will, is not received, and therefore is not appropriated. All the evils to which a man inclines by birth are inscribed on the will of his natural man, and they inflow into the thoughts . . . and if the man adopts them, they are received by the old will, and add themselves to the former ones. But if he adopts goods with truths, a new will and a new understanding are formed by the Lord above the old . . .

[T.] 712. Hence there are three things in man . . . the soul or mind, the will, and the understanding; and these three are the receptacles of the above-mentioned three universals . . . 775².

778³. (So, in the Lord) His will is of the Divine love, and the Divine love is of His will; and His understanding is the Divine wisdom, and the Divine wisdom is of His understanding . . .

1568. To will is of the more interior mind.

1628. Spirits who tried to think that they did not will to know . . . in order to get to know . . . Thus their will was artificial . . . They (then) wanted . . . to leave themselves without any will . . . but were told that even this was not genuine . . .

1907. On the will. (How Spirits may influence it, shown.)

3025a. He was told that no one can do anything except from the will . . .

3175. In a man, or a Spirit, two contrary things are possible—that he wills, and does not will. Ex.

3178. On things which are of the will, and not of the act.

— . It has been insinuated into me . . . that whatever comes into thought, and not into the will, is not sin; and also that if it comes into the will, or what is like will-voluntatis simile—and the man thinks that it is sin . . . and so shakes it off, neither can this be sin, but temptation. But if anything comes into thought, and into the will, so that he desires to do it, provided external bonds would not hinder—this is sin; as the Lord says . . .

3376. Thus (since the Flood) the thought has been separated from the will, which has been as it were abandoned to cupidities, so that there is no will. But the will of good and truth is of the Lord . . .

4010^e. It is better to know merely that the will inflows.

4113. As soon as (evil becomes actual) it passes into the will . . . and when it is in the will it is not easily extirpated. Ex.

4486. Voluntary things and thoughts must act as one thing. Ex.

98³. (The deeds are qualified by the will.) Ex.

— . It is said the will, but in the spiritual sense is meant the love. Ex.

105². The whole spirit of man is nothing but his will; and therefore when he becomes a Spirit, he cannot resist anything that is not contrary to his will . . . 157³. Ex.

116. 'Works'=the things of the will . . . for will is the cause and works are the effects . . . The will of man is spiritual, and the derivative works are natural.

—². All things of the interior will are of the love. The reason why, in common speech, we speak of a man's love, and not of his will, is that loves are manifold . . . and they are all together in the will, which is perceived by the man as a one, because he makes a distinction between the will and the understanding. The will, therefore, is the Spiritual itself of man, because love is spiritual.

167. The kingdoms of the will and understanding. Ex.

240². There are the understanding of truth, and the understanding of good . . . and also the will of truth, and the will of good. Ex.

245^e. For the understanding sees no truth unless the will is in good. Ex.

248³. Thus comes the Reciprocal with a man, which is his new will.

295². The will and understanding originate from (the Divine good and the Divine truth). Ex.

— . The understanding is the means for the reformation of the will, and by which the will may appear in a form . . .

— . Thus the will is the esse of man's life; and the understanding the derivative existere.

—³. As the will of man is his love, and the will of God the Divine love, it is evident what is meant by 'to do the will of God,' and 'the will of the Father.' Ex. and Ill.

—⁴. In the Old Testament, the will of the Lord is called His 'good pleasure;' and to do this, or His will=to love God and the neighbour, thus to live according to the Lord's commandments. Ill. —¹², Ex.

—¹³. That 'will'=love in the opposite sense, that is, the love of what is evil and false. Ill.

313¹⁴. The inmost of man is his will and derivative understanding; and such as are these, such is the whole man.

329¹⁵. The correspondence of the will is to the flesh; and of the understanding to the blood. Ill.

336³. So also (there is) one thing of the will to many of the understanding.

349². The receptacle of the good of love is the will . . .

376. For the new will is formed through truths . . .

388². All thought and will affect the spirit . . . and make its life after death.

412¹⁹. What is received in freedom enters the will, and remains . . . because the will is the man himself; for his life resides primarily in it . . . 434⁵.

423. The Divine will. Sig. and Ex. 628.

458. For the interior will of man, which is the will of his spirit, is the receptacle of his love . . .

466. The understanding is the receptacle of Divine truth, and the will of Divine good . . .

526¹³. The understanding from the will is the efficient cause . . .

551. The two lives (or faculties of life) of man—of the understanding, and of the will. 736. 837⁴. 1170², Ex.

—^e. Then the understanding sees truth, and the will perceives it. Ex.

580². What enters the thought, and not the will, does not make the man unclean. Sig. and Ex. 867, Ex.

616². When the Divine inflows into the understanding only, it passes through and is dissipated; but when into the will . . . it remains conjoined.

617⁶. 'If ye be willing and obedient' (Is.i.19)=if ye do.

643. 'If anyone shall will to hurt them' (Rev.xi.5) =that everyone perishes according to the will . . . to inflict evil; for the will makes the life of everyone. 647.

654⁶². Memory is of the natural man; understanding of the rational man; and will of the spiritual man. This is the way of regeneration. Ex.

789⁴. So what a man wills, he also wills to do, wills to know, wills to think, wills to speak, wills to understand, and therefore also wills to have his faith in. (For) what is said of the love may be said of the will . . . Thus love produces faith, as will does thought . . .

790². So every man has natural will and thought, and spiritual will and thought. Ex.

—¹¹. On the formation of the will and understanding of the regenerate man. His will is formed in the natural man by the influx of the heat of Heaven . . . Thus the will is formed from goods . . . So that his understanding is nothing but the form of his will, the only difference being that the understanding sees, and the will feels. Therefore, such as is a man's will of good, such is his understanding of truth . . . So that although the will and understanding are two faculties of life, they still act as a one, and are therefore called one mind. These are in the natural man. There are will and understanding in the spiritual man also, but much more perfect; and these too are called one mind—the spiritual mind; the former being the natural mind. 1170⁶.

797⁴. Love, in its essence, is to will . . .

802⁵. The things in man with which God . . . conjoins Himself, are the understanding and will. These faculties are man's . . .

831³. But the celestial Angels admit truths . . . at once into the will . . .

—⁴. For the will does not come into existence unless it becomes active . . .

863¹⁷. As diverse wills (cannot be conjoined) with the same understanding . . . 1004².

866³. The reason 'deceit' was so grievous . . . is that what is of deliberate purpose is of the will. Ex.

— . (What) is pleasing enters the will, and adds itself to the life.

901. What is in the thought, and not in the will, is not yet in the man. What is in the thought and the will, and not in the act, does indeed enter the man, and commences his life, but still it goes out and disappears, because it has not been terminated. But what is in the will, and thence in the act, makes the man's life, and remains, whether it is evil or good. Ex.

920³. What is said of good and truth, may be said of will and understanding. Ex.

1148³. But the understanding and will (from this influx) are changed and varied according to the reception.

1150³. The law . . . that the understanding and will must not be one whit compelled. Ex.

1168³. So with the understanding and will . . . Before a man has been brought out of Hell, the understanding and will do not act as a one, for he then sees many things from the understanding that he does not will . . . But when the man has been conjoined with Heaven, the understanding and will act as a one, for the understanding becomes of the will; for . . . what the man wills, he loves; and what he wills from love, he thinks . . . 1170³, Ex. —⁴. —⁵. —⁶.

[E.] 1170⁸. Thus it is the will that must be reformed . . .

—^c. The will and understanding make a one in the evil also. Ex.

1171⁵. When the will has been reformed . . . the man is like a garden . . .

— . Thus the will is like a father, and the understanding a mother.

1202². That a beast has not will and understanding; but, instead, affection and knowledge. Ex.

De Verbo 13. The interior way is through the will into the understanding . . .

D. Love xviii. That man's will is his affection. Gen.art.

— . The will is called the receptacle of love, because love is not possible with man except in a recipient form, which is substantial.

—². That the will is the all of man, and is in all things of him, thus is the man himself. Ex.

—³. That the will is the man's love in form. Ex.

xix. Regarded in itself, the will is not love, but is the receptacle of it; and is such a receptacle that it not only receives love, but also takes on its states, and puts on forms in accordance with them. Ex.

— . The will is the receptorium of spiritual heat . . . and this receptorium is everywhere in man, but, in its primes, is in the brains. These primes . . . are the cortical and cineritious substances. (The descent into the body des.)

— . Thus the will of man is living conatus in man, and acts into the ultimates by means of the fibres and nerves . . .

— . Thus the will is the receptacle of love in a perpetual conatus to act, which is excited and determined into acts by the love which inflows . . .

—². For no conatus, or will, is possible . . . unless it is in ultimates; and when in ultimates it is in interior act; but this act . . . comes forth in the spirit; and it is from this that the will and the act are a one, and that will is accounted as act . . .

—^e. Thus to will and not to act, is not possible. Ex.

D. Wis. ii. That the Lord has created in man, and afterwards forms in him, a receptacle of love, which is his will; and adjoins to it a receptacle of wisdom, which is his understanding. Gen.art. . . These receptacles . . . are spiritual forms . . . They are forms within forms, ascending to the third degree, innumerable, discrete, but still unanimous, and each of them is a receptacle of love and wisdom. The originaries are in the brains . . . These forms . . . first come forth in man when he has been conceived . . . And from them, by continuity, all things of the body . . . are brought forth. Fully ex. iii, Gen.art.

iii. 5. That one receptacle is for the will of the future man, and the other for his understanding; and yet nothing whatever of his will and understanding is present in the formation [of them]. Ex.

— . Will and understanding do not begin until the lungs have been opened . . . For the will then becomes the receptacle of love, and the understanding of wisdom. Ex. v, Ex.

v². The reason the will and understanding are called receptacles, is that the will is not any abstract spiritual thing; but is a subject substantialized and formed for the reception of love from the Lord. (The same with the understanding.) They exist—existunt—actually, although hidden from view, being interiorly in the substances that constitute the cortex of the cerebrum, and also, scatteredly, in the medullary substance of the cerebrum, especially in the corpora striata; and also interiorly in the medullary substance of the cerebellum; and also in the spinal marrow, of which they constitute the nucleus. Thus there are not merely two, but innumerable receptacles, each one twinned, and also of three degrees, as has been shown above (iii. 3, 4). Further ex.

vi. That there is a correspondence of the heart with the will, and of the lungs with the understanding. Gen.art.

— . So the will and understanding are the two fountains of all the spiritual activities in the same body.

x³. By the life of the will, is meant love and affection; and by that of the understanding, wisdom, intelligence, and knowledge. The heart and all its vessels throughout the body, corresponds to the will; and its blood, to love and its affections . . . And the lungs, together with the windpipe, larynx, glottis, and tongue, corresponds to the understanding; and the respiration . . . to the life of the understanding.

1. That the life of the will conjoins itself with that of the understanding. Ex. 2.

3. That the life of the understanding purifies that of the will, and also perfects and exalts it. Ex.

4. That the life of the will co-operates with that of the understanding in every motion; and . . . the life of the understanding with that of the will in every sense. Ex.

— . The will is the prime agent in producing motions; and the understanding . . . in presenting sensations. Ex.

5. The formations of love from the will in the understanding. Ex.

6. (But) with the evil, the life of the will is not purified through the life of the understanding; but is defiled, depraved, and brutified. Ex.

C. 21. All (real) good proceeds from the interior will. By repentance, evil is removed from this will; and there also resides the evil into which the man is born; so that unless he performs repentance, evil remains in the interior will, and good proceeds from the exterior will . . . But the interior qualifies the exterior . . . The Lord says, 'Cleanse first the inside . . . ' 22.

61. The will makes the neighbour . . . 62, Ex.

62⁶⁶. There is an internal will and an external will; in like manner with the understanding. The internal will has conjunction with Heaven; and the external will, with the world. All good is of the will; and the good of charity is the good of the internal will. These two wills are usually separated in man, most especially in hypocrites . . . But when they make a one, both the goods make one good, which is the neighbour.

107. Everything of will is called good, and of understanding, truth, because the will is in the heat of Heaven, and the understanding in its light. And, as the will has no quality without the understanding, and therefore cannot be called anything; and as it receives a quality, and becomes something, in the understanding, and (this) according to what there is in the understanding; so (is it with) good and truth.

Inv. 2. This is the new understanding, and the new will. Ex.

Willow. Salix.

A. 7093³. Sensuous truth, which is the most external truth, is signified by 'the willows of the brook-torrentis' (Lev.xxiii.40). 8369. 9269⁶. E.458⁴.

Wind. Ventus.

See EAST WIND.

A. 97. Hence they likened the spirit or life to the wind; as does the Lord in John iii.8. Further ill.

1949³. 'To snuff the wind' (Jer.xiv.6)=to take in empty things instead of real ones, which are truths.

3301⁷. 'Scattered in the wind' (Ezek.v.2)=destroyed by false principles.

4060⁹. 'The four winds' from which the elect will be gathered (Matt.xxiv.31)=all states of good and truth. E.418⁵.

5379. Correspondence of the colon tumid with its wind.

7679⁶. 'To feed on wind' (Hos.xii.1)=to multiply a lie. (That is, to falsify truths. S.79⁵.)

7702. 'Jehovah turned a mighty wind of the sea' (Ex.x.19)=the cessation of the Divine influx through Heaven . . . For 'a wind of the sea,' that is, a west wind, being the opposite to the east wind,=the cessation of the (destroying) influx.

8286. 'The wind of Thy nostrils' (Ex.xv.8)=Heaven . . . because it means the breath of life, thus Divine life . . . This is why, in the Original language, the same word means both 'wind' and 'spirit (or breath).' Ill.

—². That 'the wind of Jehovah,' or 'His breath' =the life which is of Heaven, and which is of the man who is in Heaven, that is, of the regenerate man. Ill.

—³. As 'wind'=life, the Lord, when teaching about regeneration . . . says, 'The spirit, or wind, breathes where it will . . .'

—⁴. As 'the wind of the nostrils of Jehovah'=the life which is from the Lord, thus . . . Heaven; and as, by the presence of (these), evils and falsities are cast into Hell, therefore this effect also is signified by (this expression). Ill.

8296. 'Thou hast breathed with Thy wind' (Ex.xv.10)=the Lord's presence with the Angels.

9146⁶. 'The wind' they 'sow' (Hos.viii.7)=empty things.

9281³. Hence Spirits . . . are so called from 'wind'; and, in the Word, are compared to 'the wind'; as in John iii.8. W.383³, Ex.

9372³. The Word is compared to a reed shaken with the wind' (Matt.xi.7) when it is explained at pleasure.

J. 49. The four quarters are called 'the four winds.' Ill.

R. 334. 'When shaken by a great wind' (Rev.vi.13) =by reasonings of the natural man . . . E.403.

—². That 'wind,' and 'storm'=reasoning-ratio-ratio. Ill.

343. 'Holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow . . .' (Rev.vii.1)=a nearer and thus a stronger influx into lower things . . . which influx is restrained by the Lord. (=the remitting of the influx, lest the good be injured, and the evil be cast out before the day. E.418. 419.)

—². 'The four winds'=the influx of the Heavens. . . That 'wind'=influx, properly, that of the will into the understanding. Ill.

—³. 'The wings of the wind' (Ps.xviii.10; civ.3)=the Divine truths that inflow. (=spiritual things from which are natural things. E.283⁵. —⁸.) E.419¹². Compare 529². 594¹⁰.

—³. That 'wind,' and 'breathing'=the influx of Divine truth into the understanding, is from the correspondence of the lungs with the understanding.

—⁴. As a stronger Divine influx through the Heavens disperses the truths in the evil, 'wind'=the dispersion of truth in them, and their consequent conjunction with Hell, and destruction. Ill.

—⁴. 'Jesus rebuked the wind' (Mark iv.39)=the influx from Hell.

D. 479. The spirit is likened to 'the wind' (John iii.8) . . . and the Spirits . . . have often come to me with a wind which struck my face, and even moved the flame of the candle, and my papers. The wind was cold, and [came] very frequently when I raised my right arm. 2392.

3680. A vehement wind that dispersed (my enemies).

3861. Their operation was felt . . . as a very gentle wind, rather cool . . .

4273. (Therefore) the Lord says about one who is to be regenerated, that it is like the wind blowing, and that the man knows not when it comes, and whither it goes. This is exactly the case with influx . . .

E. 130⁶. 'The wind of Jehovah,' in the Word, =the Divine truth; (as in) 'Jehovah maketh His Angels winds' (Ps.civ.4).

304⁵⁸. 'The four winds'=all the truths and goods of the Church in the complex.

316¹⁶. 'The four winds of the heavens' (Dan.viii.8) =all falsities and evils. 418⁶.

355⁹. 'The four winds of the heavens' (Zech.vi.5) =all Divine truths. (=all the Divine, proceeding . . . 414⁴.)

405⁴⁸. 'Wind' is predicated of truths; and, in the opposite, of falsities.

418². The reason 'the four winds'=all the Divine, proceeding, is that 'the winds of heaven' mean the quarters . . .

[E. 418]³. 'Come from the four winds, O spirit' (Ezek. xxxvii.9)=from the Divine of the Lord in Heaven; for 'the four winds' are the four quarters . . . (Compare 419³.)

—⁷. 'The four winds from the four ends of the heavens' (Jer.xlix.36)=falsities conjoined with evils.

—⁸. 'The four winds' (Dan.vii.2)=falsities conjoined with evils.

419. 'The wind'=the Divine, proceeding, which is Divine good united to Divine truth.

—². 'The wind of Jehovah' has a like signification to 'the spirit of Jehovah,' because there is meant the wind of respiration . . . Hence, in many languages, wind, and spirit, are denominated by the same word . . . And this is why Spirits and Angels (are supposed to be) like wind.

— That by 'wind,' and 'spirit,' when predicated of man, is signified the life of truth, that is, a life according to truths . . . is because the respiration . . . corresponds to that life . . .

—³. (Thus) 'the wind,' and 'spirit,' 'of Jehovah'=the Divine truth; and 'the four winds'=Divine truth united to Divine good.

— As by 'wind' is meant the wind or breath—spiritus—of respiration, and as there is signified by it the Divine truth, and spiritual life in those who receive it, therefore this 'wind' is called also 'the breath—halitus—of the nostrils of Jehovah,' etc. III.

—⁶. In John iii.8, is described the life of man's spirit which he has by regeneration; 'the wind'=the Divine truth through which he has that life. Further ex.

—⁹. 'Neither is there any breath in their mouth' (Ps.cxxxv.17)=that there was no truth in their thought.

—¹¹. That 'the wind of the earth'=the Divine, proceeding, is from the correspondence with the winds in the Spiritual World; for . . . the winds there arise from the determination of the Divine influx, and they go forth to the lower things. In the Heavens it is seldom that any but gentle winds are felt; but winds are frequent with those who dwell lower down; for they increase with the descent; and their determinations are from the quarters into which the Divine inflows, especially from the north. And as the winds there are from a spiritual origin, they=spiritual things, in general, the Divine truth from which [they are]. III.

—¹⁵. 'Stormy wind' (Ps.cxlvi.8)=the Divine truth as to the reception of it.

—¹⁶. 'The wind,' in the opposite sense, = falsity. III. 644²⁵. 654⁵⁸.

—²³. 'Stormy wind' (Ps.evii.25) = temptation. Also in Mark iv.37; Luke viii.23. —²⁴.

—²⁵. The winds that arise in the Spiritual World appear to do so from different quarters . . . Those from the south disperse truths with those who are in falsities; those from the east disperse goods with those who are in evils. The reason the winds disperse them, is that they arise from a strong influx of the Divine through the Heavens into lower things . . . and those whose interiors . . . are mere falsities and evils . . . cannot endure such an influx . . . and they withdraw into the falsities and evils which they love . . . (Continued under EAST WIND.)

578⁷. 'Wind of storms' (Ps.xi.6)=the destruction of all truth. (=a vehement assault on truth. 960⁶.)

587¹². 'Wind,' and 'emptiness' are predicated of falsities from proprium.

644¹⁹. 'He bringeth forth the wind out of His treasures' (Ps.cxxxv.7)=spiritual things in the Word from Heaven.

—²¹. 'The winds' that blew and beat on that house (Matt.vii.27)=the thoughts which come up in these temptations . . .

721⁴. 'To bring forth wind' (Is.xxvi.18)=to imbibe vanities in which there are no truths.

811¹³. 'The wind' that shall 'feed the shepherds' (Jer.xxii.22)=the inanity and emptiness of the doctrine.

D. Wis. x³. The windpipe, etc. correspond to the understanding.

Window. Fenestra.

A. 652. 'The window' (in the ark, Gen.vi.16)=the Intellectual. 655, Ex. and III.

655. The 'suns,' or windows (Is.liv.12)=intellectual things from charity. Ex.

—². All the windows of the Temple . . . represented the same; the highest of them, intellectual things; the middle, rational things; and the lowest, scientifics and sensuous things . . . (1 Kings vi.4—⁶). 658.

— Windows of the middle story are meant (in Jer.ix.21) and = rational things . . . (= intellectual things. 2348^o.)

—³. As 'windows' = intellectual and rational things, which are of truth, they also=reasonings which are of falsity. III.

863. 'Noah opened the window of the ark' (Gen. viii.6)=the second state, when the truths of faith appeared to him . . . For 'a window'=the Intellectual, and therefore the truths of faith.

1629°. When their homes are changed, there appears something at the side that represents a window . . .

3391. 'Abimelech . . . looked through a window' (Gen.xxvi.8)=the doctrine of faith looking at rational things in Knowledges. . . For 'a window'=the Intellectual, and therefore the internal sight . . . so that 'to look through a window'=to perceive the things which appear by the internal sight, which, in general, are Knowledges, which are of the external man.

—². That 'windows'=the things of the internal sight, that is, of the understanding, which, in one word, are called intellectual things. III.

—, 'To enter in by the windows as a thief' (Joel ii.9)=to destroy truths and the Knowledges of them. 5135°. 8906°. E.1937.

—, 'A voice shall sing in the windows' (Zeph.ii.14)=the desolation of truth, thus of the intellectual faculty as to truth. (=the preaching of what is false. E.6507°.)

—³. 'To look forth through a window' (Judg.v.28)=by means of the reasonings of those who deny truth . . .

4653°. The interior membranes (of the ear) called windows.

7806. These Spirits . . . see a face in a window, which is a sign for them to depart.

H. 489°. When (such) look through the windows, it is as if through pure crystals.

P. 206°. Self-love has closed the window in its roof . . . and also the side windows . . .

207. The Lord (then) opens the window in his roof, and afterwards the side windows . . .

R. 132°. 'A window'=truth in light.

386. I wanted to look in through a window, but there was none . . . But a window was suddenly made on the right side; and I heard them complain that they were in darkness. Presently a window was made on the left side, that on the right being closed, and the darkness was then slowly dissipated . . .

M. 12. The lofty windows (of the palace), of the most transparent crystal, had posts of gold.

103°. On each side (of the house) were three lofty windows of crystalline glass, the posts of which were of olive-wood. . . No windows were seen in the east wall.

114. A window was (then) made where none was seen before, and a voice was heard through it . . .

155a°. The wives looked at a window in the southern quarter, and there was seen a white dove . . .

270°. The palace had three rows of windows (through which the three kinds of birds flew). Des.

293. I looked through a window to the east, and saw seven women sitting on a bed of roses . . . 294.

T. 80. On seeing (the Satans) I closed the window; yet I spoke to them through it.

134. There were no windows in the walls (of the temple) but a great opening in the middle of the roof . . . which lighted it better than if there had been windows at the sides.

508. The walls (of the magnificent temple) were continuous windows of crystals. . . This temple=the New Church . . . its windows of crystals, the Truths that enlighten it.

D. 3135. There appeared to me a face in a window, from which I might infer that I should see something worthy of observation.

4418. Augustus showed me a round, or oval, window that he had in his palace. Ex.

4860. (In the Hell of the Genii) there were walls as of a great building, but . . . instead of windows there were great openings . . . For they cannot dwell in houses that have . . . windows . . . for they feel as if they were being suffocated. The reason is that windows=the things that are of thought.

5711. When they are (spiritually) dead, there appear no windows in the houses, but only openings, within which it is dark. But when they are alive, windows appear, and men in them.

E. 1937. 'Windows,' etc.=the things of a mind that receives . . . (namely) that of the mind which is called the understanding . . .

282°. 'To fly . . . as doves to the windows' (Is.lx.8)=the thorough investigation of truth . . . 'Windows'=truth in light. 40610.

555°. 'Death hath come up through the windows . . . ' (Jer.ix.21)=that infernal falsity has entered into the understanding. 65227.

65227. 'Windows'=the thoughts from the understanding.

67519. 'To open the windows of heaven, and pour forth a blessing' (Mal.iii.10)=the Divine inflowing, from which come intelligence and eternal life.

J. (Post.) 229. With the windows closed.

Wine. Vinum.

Vinous. Vinosus, Vinarius.

See MERUM, and MUST; and also under DRUNK, STRONG DRINK, VINE, VINEYARD, and VINTAGE.

A. 1071. ('Noah) drank of the wine' (Gen.ix.21)=that he wanted to investigate (by reasonings) the things of faith. Ex.

—, 'Vineyard,' or 'vine'=the Spiritual Church . . . 'the grapes' . . . =charity . . . and 'the wine'=the derivative faith, and all things that are of faith; thus . . . 'the wine'=the Spiritual of that Church. III.

—³. 'Wine' (Gen.xlix.11)=the Spiritual from the Celestial; 'the blood of grapes'=the Celestial relatively to Spiritual Churches; thus 'grapes'=charity itself; and 'wine'=faith itself. (=the Divine good and Divine truth of the Natural. 3300°.) See below, at 5117°.

—⁴. As 'grapes'=charity, so 'wine'=the derivative faith; for wine is from grapes.

[A.1017⁴]. 'Not to tread out wine in the presses' (Is. xvi.10)=that there are no longer any who are in faith.

—'. 'Wine' (Is.xxiv.9)=the truths of faith.

—⁶. As 'wine'=faith in the Lord, faith... was represented by 'a libation of wine.' Ill.

1072⁴. 'Wine of whoredom' (Rev.xiv.8)=the adulterated truths of faith, of which 'drunkenness' is predicated. (=falsity from evil. 8904⁵.) R.721.

1517. A vinous odour... comes from those who compliment one another from friendship, (so that) there is truth in the compliments. D.1047.

1727. 'Melchizedek brought forth bread and wine' (Gen.xiv.18)=celestial and spiritual things and the refreshment from them. Ex.

—^e. For, in the Ancient Church, 'wine' was a representative of all spiritual things; thus, here, of the Lord Himself...

2165⁴. The 'wine' (in the Holy Supper)=all spiritual things. (=His Divine Spiritual. 2830.) (=His Divine truth. 3813².) (=spiritual love. 4211.) (=the Holy of charity and faith in Heaven. 4700².) (=Divine spiritual love. 4735².) (=charity. 6789³.) (=the Lord as to the truth of faith, and its reception by man. 10149^e.) (=the good of faith. 10521.) (=the Lord as to Divine truth; and, with the recipients, holy truth from the Lord. R.316².) (=Divine truth. T.238. 372.) (=the good of faith, which in its essence is truth. E.376²⁶.) (=the good of faith which in its essence is truth from good; and, in the supreme sense, the Lord as to Divine truth. 376²⁶.) (=truth from this good, which is also the good of faith. 617²⁰.) (=the Divine truth. 1082².)

2184⁵. 'Buy wine and milk' (Is.lv.1)=the Spiritual of faith, and the Spiritual of love. (=spiritual truth, and spiritual good. 2967⁹.) (=the good of faith. 8568².) (=the truth of good, and the good of truth. 8976^e.) (=spiritual good which in its essence is truth, and the good of this truth. E.376⁴.) (=Divine truth spiritual, and Divine truth natural. 617¹⁰.)

2187². As wine and grapes... =what is spiritual, the Nazarite was forbidden to eat of them. Ex. 5113¹⁷. E.918¹¹, Ex.

2341². 'Wines sweet ['on the lees'] and refined' (Is.xxv.6)=truths derived from (goods). (This is said in relation to the Holy Supper. T.708.)

2465². 'Let us make our father drink wine' (Gen. xix.32)=that they should imbue such good with falsities. —⁴.

2851⁷. 'Wine'=truth. 4581¹⁰. E.475⁶.

3069. 'Not to drink wine with a song' (Is.xxiv.9)=not to be instructed from the affection of truth, and not to be delighted thereby. (Compare E.323².) (=no heavenly bliss. E.376²⁰.)

3316⁶. Instead of 'wine' (the Angels perceive) spiritual love and the things of it, that is, of love towards the neighbour. —. 3464².

3570. 'Esau brought him wine, and he drank' (Gen.xxvii.25)=the conjunction of truth afterwards. (For) 'wine'=the truth that is from good.

3596^e. (The drinking of wine, in the Ancient Church)=what is of charity towards the neighbour.

4007². 'His eyes are redder than wine' (or, 'are red with wine') (Gen.xlix.12)=the Divine wisdom. (=that the Intellectual, or the internal Human, is nothing but good. 6379.) (=the Divine truth. R.316².)

4217². When 'wine' is read in the Word, or is received in the Holy Supper, the Angels think... about charity towards the neighbour...

4581⁴. See BREAD, here.

5117⁷. 'They shall drink the wine' (Amos ix.14)=to appropriate the truths of the Spiritual Church, which are of charity. (=to be instructed and become intelligent. E.376⁶.)

—⁸. 'He hath washed his garment in wine, and his vesture in the blood of grapes' (Gen.xlix.11). The Lord is here treated of; 'wine'=spiritual good from the Divine love; and 'the blood of grapes' the derivative celestial good. ('Wine'=the Divine truth. R.316². E.195¹⁹.) ('Wine' and 'the blood of grapes'=the Divine truth. E.376²⁰, 475¹².) (See below, at 6377.)

—⁹. Wine is called 'the blood of grapes' (Dent. xxxii.14) because both = the holy truth proceeding from the Lord; but 'wine' is predicated of the Spiritual Church; and 'blood' of the Celestial Church. This is why 'wine' was commanded in the Holy Supper.

5120². See CUP—scyphus, here.

—⁵. 'He took the cup, and gave thanks... saying. Drink ye all of it; for this is My blood...' It is said 'the cup,' and not 'the wine,' because 'wine' is predicated of the Spiritual Church, and 'blood' of the Celestial Church, although both = the holy truth proceeding from the Lord; but in the Spiritual Church, the Holy of faith from charity towards the neighbour, and in the Celestial Church, the Holy of charity from love to the Lord. (Continued under HOLY SUPPER.)

—⁶. See CUP—poculum, here.

—⁸. As wine inebriates and makes insane, so does falsity...

5360. Wine (as food) corresponds to spiritual love.

5915. See HOLY SUPPER, here.

5943⁶. The wine of the libation = the derivative truth of faith.

6377. 'He washes his garment in wine' (Gen.xlix.11) = that His Natural is Divine truth from His Divine good... (For) 'wine' = the good of love towards the neighbour, and the good of faith; and, in the supreme sense, the Divine truth from the Lord's Divine good. (See below, at E.433⁴.)

—². That 'wine' = love towards the neighbour, and the good of faith, is evident from... the Holy Supper, namely, that... 'the wine' = the good of spiritual love... And so the libation of wine = the good of faith.

—³. That 'wine' = love towards the neighbour, and the good of faith. Ill.

—⁶. That 'wine' = the good of mutual love and of faith. Ill.

—'. 'The wine' (Rev.vi.6) = the good of spiritual love. (=the good and truth of faith. 9780⁴.)

—7. '(The Samaritan) poured in oil and wine' (Luke x.34)=that he performed the works of love and charity. (=the good of love, and the good of faith. 9057².) (=the good of love, and the good of charity and of faith. 9780⁶.) (=good and its truth. N.87.) (=teaching good and truth. R.316⁴.) (=the good and the truth that heal man. E.375⁴², 376³⁰.) (=instructing in the good of love, and the truth of faith. 444¹⁴.) 962⁶.

—8. That 'wine'=the good of love and of faith, is evident from the Lord's words . . . 'I will not drink of this fruit—genimen—of the vine, until the day when I shall drink it new with you . . .' (Matt.xxvi.29). Ex. (=the truth of the New Church and Heaven. T.708⁷.)

—9. As 'wine'=the good of love and of faith, it =in the supreme sense, the Divine truth from the Lord's Divine good; for from this, by influx, the man who receives it has the good of love and of faith.

—10. 'Wine,' in the opposite sense, =falsity from evil. Ill.

7906². The truth then comes forth purified, like wine, which becomes clear after fermentation.

8481^e. 'Wine'=truth from good; and, in the opposite, falsity from evil.

9223. 'The first-fruits of the wine thou shalt not delay' (Ex.xxii.29)=that as all . . . truths are from the Lord, they must be attributed to Him, and not to self. . . For 'wine'=the truth of good, thus the truth of the good of faith.

—2. In the Original Language, it is said . . . 'the tear of the wine' . . . and tears are things that drop.

9272⁵. 'Thou shalt tread . . . the must, but not drink the wine' (Micah vi.15)=to be instructed about the truths that are from good, but still not to appropriate them to one's self. 9277². E.376¹⁷.

9296⁵. The wine that is 'of the press'=truth from good.

9320³. 'The wine'=the internal truth of that Church.

9393^e. The 'blood,' and the 'wine' (in the institution of the Holy Supper)=the Divine truth proceeding from the Divine good of the Lord's Divine love; and, on the other hand, the same received by man.

9960¹⁶. The 'wine' that Noah drank, and with which he was inebriated=the falsity with which the Ancient Church became imbued in its beginning.

10031^e. 'Wine'=the truth of good.

10040². By the drinking up of the wine (by the priests alone) is signified that they alone know Divine truth . . .

10079². As in burnt-offerings . . . there was nothing that was pleasing in the Heavens, meat-offerings of bread, and also libations of wine, in which there was something pleasing, were also employed; for 'bread'=all celestial good; and 'wine,' all the truth of it.

10137. 'A libation of the fourth of a hin of wine' (Ex.xxix.40)=spiritual truth sufficient for conjunction; for 'wine'=truth; here, spiritual truth corresponding to spiritual good from celestial. Ex.

—3. That the libation, which was wine, =the good of faith. Ill.

10770^o. There appeared (in the Fifth Earth) shrubs that were not vines, but which bear berries from which they prepare wine.

N. 219. (Refs. to passages on the subject of wine.)

L. 27. 'Blood,' or 'wine'=the good of faith from the Word.

W. 420. The chyle collected from things esculent and vinous.

P. 254⁴. (The *bränvin-vinum adustum—of a peasant, as opposed to the noble wine of a king.)

284². Good (then) becomes like generous wine after fermentation . . . But if evil conquers, good with its truth . . . becomes turbid and foul, like unfermented wine . . .

292². The heat (that) flows into things vinous, fragrant, etc.

R. 316. 'Hurt not the oil and the wine' (Rev.vi.6)=that . . . the holy goods and truths which lie hidden in the Word be not violated and profaned. E.375.

—'. 'Oil'=the good of love; 'wine,' truth from this good. Ill. E.375.

—3. 'They do not put new wine—vinum novum—into old bottles . . .' (Matt.ix.17). 'New wine'=the Divine truth of the New Testament, thus of the new Church; and 'the old wine'=the Divine truth of the Old Testament, thus of the old Church. E.195¹⁵.

—5. That 'wine'=holy truth, is evident from its opposite sense, in which it=truth falsified and profaned. Ill.

417⁹. He said, I have planted a vineyard; I will now drink wine even to drunkenness . . . out of an invisible cup . . . But I say unto you, Drink wine from the Word understood. Ex.

632. 'She made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication' (Rev.xiv.8)=that by profanations of the Word, and adulterations of the good and truth of the Church, she has seduced all . . . 'Wine'=truth from good; and, in the opposite sense, falsity from evil. E.881. See R.721. 758.

635. 'The wine of the anger of God mingled with unmixed' (ver.10)=the truth of the Word falsified. (=falsity and the derivative evil, conjoined with falsified truths. E.887.)

649^e. See VINEYARD, here.

721. 'Wine'=the Divine truth of the Word.

758. 'The wine' (Rev.xviii.3) = their nefarious dogmas.

778. 'Wine' (ver.13)=truth from the good of love.

795^e. (They say) that the wine is for (the priests) lest they should be wearied out; and that water is mixed with the wine, lest they be inebriated.

829. 'The wine of the fury and anger of God' (Rev.xix.15)=the goods and truths of the Church, which are from the Word, profaned and adulterated; thus the evils and falsities of the Church.

* Vinum adustum is evidently a literal translation into Latin of the Swedish word bränvin, which means a spirituous liquor that is made from potatoes.

M. 3^d. (Heavenly happiness supposed to consist in feasting, with) generous and noble wines.

13^d. The trees of wine (in the garden) came next to the trees of oil.

14^d. They saw a table magnificently laid out, containing . . . wine jellies—musta vinorum concreta . . . and a pyramid through the middle of which there gushed out a fountain of nectareous wine . . .

20^e. (Wine drunk at a wedding in Heaven.)

T. 328. Compared to the taste of the wine that is pressed out of the grapes.

377^e. Like grapes after the wine has been pressed out of them.

383^e. Like urine conjoined with wine of flavour.

702. That by the Lord's 'blood,' and by 'the wine,' is meant the Divine truth of His wisdom, and also all the truth of faith. Gen.art.

708. That by 'wine' is meant the like as by 'blood.' Ill.

834^e. Like the fragrance in wine cellars—cellis vinariis.

Ad. 3/5521. The reason (the priests) did not drink wine or strong drink (Lev.x.9) was indeed from drunkenness . . . lest . . . the representations should be disturbed; for wine disturbs the life of the body and the natural life of the mind . . . so that the spiritual life cannot act in it becomingly . . .

3/5522. The flame in the Habitation, the shining gold, and the aromatic odour of the incense would have been disturbed by wine, and therefore the representations would have been disturbed; besides that the odour of the wine and strong drink would have united itself with the mind . . . so that it could not make a distinction between what was holy and what was profane. 5523, further ex.

3/6879, 6880. Thus the Nazarite might (then) drink wine . . . because it was after he had been sanctified; for then wine could not inebriate him. It is as it is with the regenerate, to whom cupidities then do no harm, because then the cupidities are no longer excited by nature and the body . . . The wine is thus happiness, or heavenly joy; for it then exhilarates, and excites only the things that are of charity.

D. 2458. A disgust for wine, or intoxicating drink. See DRUNK, here.

3486. (Poisoned wine offered me by Dippel, the effect of which would have been to destroy the understanding.)

3801^e. (The Quaker Spirit) appeared with a flask of red or dark wine, which he drank up, and so disappeared. 3802. 3803, Ex. See J.(Post.)58.

3898. (Great goblets full of wine with sugar seen, with which the lascivious girls delighted themselves.)

4053. Wine cellars seen, as representatives.

6059. Why the Papists have separated the bread from the wine. . . It is not done on account of deficiency of wine, because there is wine in Italy, France, Spain, Portugal, the more interior part of Germany, and Hungary; and where wine is not produced, as in England, Holland, Sweden, Denmark, and Protestant Germany, wine does not grow—and yet it is employed in the sacrament of the Supper. The Papists could find no other reason except that the monks . . . should not be wearied out in their continuous labour . . . But it was said that it has come to pass of the Divine Providence . . . because good is not good if separated from truth . . . E.1054^e, Ex.

E. 223^e. 'A cry over the wine in the streets' (Is. xxiv.11)=the truth of doctrine falsified, over which there is contest and indignation. (Compare 652⁷.)

235⁷. 'They err through wine, through strong drink they go astray . . . they are swallowed up by wine' (Is.xxviii.7)=truths mixed with falsities.

252^e. 'Wine'=the good of charity, which in its essence is truth. Refs.

—⁷. 'A feast of lees,' that is, of the best wines (Is.xxv.6)=the appropriation of truths.

283¹⁶. 'The wine is gone' (Hos.iv.17)=that the truth of the Church has departed. 376³⁸. 887⁴.

329. In the Word . . . 'wine' stands for all spiritual drink, (that is) all the truth which is communicated to man by the Lord.

—². Thus 'wine'=the Divine truth proceeding from the Divine good of the Divine love; and, in relation to man, this received by him.

—⁴. As by 'wine' is meant the Divine truth nourishing the spiritual life, the Lord says . . . 'I will not drink of this product of the vine . . . until I shall drink it new with you.' (=the good of faith which in its essence is truth. 376²⁶.)

359³. In the wine-presses, the wine is pressed out of the grapes; and 'wine'=the Divine truth.

376. That 'wine'=spiritual good, which is the good of charity towards the neighbour and the good of faith; and . . . in its essence this good is truth . . . Hence it is that 'wine'=truth. Gen.art. —⁴, Ill.

—⁶. 'Must,' that is, 'wine' (Amos ix.)=truth.

—¹³. The derivative truths are meant by the 'treading out of the wine in the wine-presses' (Is. xvi.10). . . For they were wont to sing . . . in the wine-presses when the grape was trodden into wine, on account of the representation of the delights from the truths which are signified by 'wine.'

—¹⁴. The truths of good that were taken away, are meant by 'the vintage,' and 'the wine in the wine-presses' (Jer.xlviii.33).

—¹⁵. 'Corn and wine' (Lam.ii.12)=all the good and truth of the Church in general. 750¹³.

—¹⁹. 'The wine of Heshbon' (Ezek.xxvii.18)=natural truth.

—²². 'Wine' (Zech.x.7)=the truth from good from which is this heavenly delight. 448⁸.

—²³. 'To drink wine out of the vessels of the Temple' (Dan.v.)=to imbibe the truths of the Church that are from the Word.

—²⁴. 'Wine' (Joel iii.3)=truth falsified.

—²⁵. As 'wine'=the truth of the Church which is from good . . . the libation of wine was commanded. Ill.

—²⁶. 'The product of the vine,' that is, wine, which the Lord would drink new with them . . . = that all the Divine truth in Heaven and the Church would then be from His Divine Human. He therefore calls it 'new'; and He also calls it 'the New Testament in My blood'; for the Lord's 'blood' = the like as 'wine.'

—²⁷. The 'wine' (as brought forth by Melchizedek, Gen. xiv. 18) = the Divine truth, or, in application to man . . . the good of faith which comes from the reception of the Divine truth.

—²⁸. In Luke v. 37-39, 'wine' = truth; 'old wine,' the truth of the old or Jewish Church . . . And that the statutes and judgments of the Jewish Church . . . do not accord with the truths of the Christian Church, is meant by, 'They do not put new wine into old bottles' . . . And that those who have been born and brought up in the external things of the Jewish Church cannot be at once brought into the internal things of the Christian Church, is signified by, 'No one who drinks old wine straightway desires new; for he says, The old is more useful.'

—²⁹. The like is signified by the water turned into wine . . . (which =) the truth of the external Church, such as was that of the Jewish Church from the sense of the letter (made into) the truth of the internal Church, such as is that of the Christian Church . . . by opening the internal things concealed in the former.

—³¹. 'Wine,' in the opposite, = truth falsified, and also falsity. III. —³⁷.

—'. 'Smitten down - perturbati - with wine' (Is. xxviii. 1) = those who see falsity in place of truth. . . 'These err through wine . . .' (ver. 7) = through falsities.

—³². See STRONG DRINK, here. —³³.

—³⁴. 'Every bottle shall be filled with wine' (Jer. xiii. 12) = the mind of man with falsity.

—³⁷. 'To be inflamed with wine' (Is. v. 11) = to hatch doctrinal things from themselves.

—'. 'Heroes to drink wine' (ver. 22) = those who aspire to great things (and who) imbibe falsities. (= those who adulterate the truth of the Word. 618³.)

—³⁹. 'The wine of the wrath of God' = the falsity of evil.

386. Natural foods correspond to spiritual foods; as . . . wine to truths from good.

433⁴. 'He washes his garment in wine' (Gen. xlix. 11) = the Lord's external or natural Human, that it is Divine truth from His Divine love; 'and his vesture in the blood of grapes' = the Lord's internal or rational Human, that it is Divine good from His Divine love; 'his eyes are redder than wine' = that the internal or rational Human is nothing but good . . .

—³⁰. 'Their wine is the poison of dragons, and the cruel gall of asps' (Deut. xxxii. 33) = falsities from evil . . . 'Wine' = truth from the Word; but 'poison of dragons,' and 'gall of asps' = the monstrous falsity that comes forth from the falsified truths of the Word. (Compare 519². 714²⁷.)

444¹⁴. 'Wine,' in the Word, = the good and truth of faith. 519⁷.

448⁸. 'Their heart shall be glad as it with wine' (Zech. x. 7) = the joy of such from truths.

519². See VINEGAR, here.

556²¹. 'His eyes red with wine' = that His Intellectual was Divine truth from Divine good.

617²⁶. 'To eat flesh and drink wine' (Is. xxii. 13) = to appropriate to one's self evil and falsity. . . 'Wine' = the falsity of evil.

638⁶. 'The vine' = (the Spiritual Church) because . . . 'wine' = the good of charity towards the neighbour and the good of faith.

—¹⁹. 'To plant a vineyard and cultivate it, and not to drink the wine' (Deut. xxviii. 39) = that although the Church is established, and the truths of doctrine are taught, still truths will not affect and perfect. 'Wine' = the truth of doctrine.

652⁷. 'Wine' = the truth of the Church from the Word.

727². 'My cup shall run over' = with the truth of doctrine from the Word; for 'cup' here stands for 'wine.'

863¹⁰. 'To sell a girl for wine' (Joel iii. 3) = to falsify the goods of the Word.

918⁹. As all truth is from good, as all wine is from grapes, by 'wine,' in the Word, is signified truth from good. 922⁶.

919⁴. 'Wine' = the truth of the Church.

960². 'The cup of the wine of the anger of Jehovah' (Jer. xxv. 15) = the falsity that is from Hell. —³.

960¹³. 'Wine' = the truth of the Word and of doctrine. 962⁶.

1035. 'Wine' = spiritual truth.

—³. Falsities from evil may be compared to wine or strong drink that induces drunkenness.

1045. 'Wine' = truth from Heaven; and, in the opposite, falsity from Hell.

1116. 'Wine' = Divine truth.

1152. 'Wine,' in Rev. xviii. 13, = truth from a celestial origin, because it is joined with 'oil.'

—'. 'Wine,' in the Word, = truth, or spiritual good; for truth from a celestial origin coincides with spiritual good.

1211². In the Second Heaven there are orchards - arboreta - from whose fruits drop wines.

J. (Post.) 90⁶. The Mohammedans said that in Heaven they shall drink wine.

Wine-press. Torcular.

A. 3300². 'Garments like him that treadeth in the wine-press' (Is.lxiii.2)=the truth of good. (=violence offered to Divine truth . . . E.922⁵.)

6377⁴. The good of faith is 'the wine-press,' 'the must,' and 'the libation of wine' (Hos.ix.2).

9139². See VINEYARD, here.

9296. Occurs. 9231⁵.

R. 651. 'Cast it into the great wine-press of the anger of God' (Rev.xiv.19)=the examination-exploration of the quality of their works—that they were evil. By 'to cast the clusters of the vine into the wine-press' is signified to examine works; for these are signified by the 'clusters.' But as it is called 'the wine-press of the anger of God,' the signification is an examination [which showed] that the works were evil. (=the falsification of the Word as to all spiritual truth, and the consequent damnation, from there being no spiritual good, which is charity. For 'a wine-press'=the bringing forth of truth from good; for the clusters and grapes put into the wine-press=spiritual good, and the wine produced=truth from this good. E.920.)

— The reason that examination is signified by 'a wine-press,' is that in wine-presses there is pressed out the must from the clusters, and the oil from the olives; and the quality of the clusters and olives is perceived from (that of the products).

—². The examination of works as signified by 'a wine-press,' farther ill.

652. 'The wine-press was trodden without the city' (ver.20)=that the examination was made from the Divine truths of the Word, as to what was the quality of the works that flow forth from the doctrine of faith of the Church. (=the bringing forth of falsity from evil from Hell. E.922.)

— 'To tread the wine-press'=to examine-explorate.

—². 'To tread the wine-press'=not only to examine evil works, but also to endure them as in others, and also to remove and cast them into Hell. Ill.

653. 'And blood came out of the wine-press' (id.)=violence inflicted on the Word through direful falsifications of truth . . . For by 'the blood from the wine-press' is meant the must and wine from the trodden clusters. E.923.

829. 'He treadeth the wine-press of the fury and anger of God Almighty' (Rev.xix.15)=that the Lord alone has endured all the evils of the Church, and all the violence inflicted on the Word, thus on Himself . . . To 'tread the wine-press of this wine'=to endure them, to fight against them, and to condemn them, and thus to deliver Angels . . . and men . . . from infestation by them . . . —², Ill.

E. 359³. 'I have trodden the wine-press alone . . .' (Is.lxiii.3) treats of the Lord and His combats against the Hells . . . that He alone fought against them . . . 'The wine-press'=combat from Divine truths against falsities, because the wine is pressed out from the grapes in the wine-presses; and 'wine'=Divine truth . . . 922⁵, Ex.

376¹³. See WINE, here. —¹⁴.

—¹⁷. 'The threshing-floor and wine-press' (Hos.ix.2)=like things as 'corn and wine,' because there is a collection of these there. ('The press,' here,=the goods of love; for it implies oil, for which there were presses as well as for wine. 695²².) 922².

799²¹. 'The produce of the wine-press'=all the truth of good of the Church, the like as 'wine.' Ill.

863². 'The Lord hath trodden the wine-press for the virgin daughter of Zion' (Lam.i.15)=when all the truths of the Church have been falsified. (Compare 922².)

918⁴. 'He hewed out a wine-press in it' (Is.v.2)=the bringing forth of truth from good. 922².

920. As the bringing forth of truth from spiritual good is signified by 'a wine-press,' in the opposite sense the bringing forth of falsity out of evil is signified by it . . . —², Ex. 922.

922². 'The wine-press'=the bringing forth of falsity out of evil, and the consequent adulteration of the Word, and overthrow of the Church.

—⁴. 'I have caused the wine to cease from the wine-presses' (Jer.xlviii.33)=that there is no longer truth because not good.

—⁶. That by 'a wine-press,' and the 'treading' of it, is signified the bringing forth of truth out of good, because 'the grape'=spiritual good, and 'wine from the grape,' truth from this good. Ill.

— 'The presses overflow with must and oil' (Joel ii.24)=that from the good of charity they have truth and its delight.

—⁷. 'He digged a wine-press in it' (Matt.xxi.23)=that (the Jewish Church) had spiritual good.

—^c. 'Vintage,' and 'wine-press,' from the grape and wine,=the good of spiritual love, which is love towards the neighbour.

Wing. *Ala.Winged. Alatus.

A. 776. 'Bird'=spiritual truth; 'flying thing,' natural truth; and 'winged thing' (Gen.vii.14) sensuous truth.

1613³. 'Wings' (Is.viii.8)=reasonings whence come falsities.

1992⁶. 'Wings,' in the Word,=the things that are of truth.

275⁸. (The beauty of butterflies' wings.)

3192⁹. These are like two wings, which elevate.

3226. Ideas are thus made as it were winged.

3901². 'To mount up with strong wing as eagles' (Is.xl.31)=to grow as to the understanding of truth thus as to the Rational. (Compare E.283¹¹. 650⁴⁴.)

—⁴. 'Eagle's wings' (Dan.vii.4)=rational things from proprium . . .

4966². The wings (of Pegasus)=spiritual things. 7729⁶. (=spiritual truth. W.H.4.)

6200. I likened that surrounding wave to spiritual wings, by which the thought is elevated out of the memory.

6723. 'The land shadowing (or 'shadowed') with wings' (Is.xviii.1)=the Church that darkens itself by reasonings from scientifics. (Compare E.304²².)

S764. 'I have borne you upon the wings of eagles' (Ex.xix.4)=that they have been elevated to heavenly light by means of truths . . . For 'wings'=spiritual truths.

—². That 'wings'=spiritual truths, is because birds . . . =intellectual things . . . and therefore 'wings'=spiritual truths, because everything intellectual is from these.

—'. 'Wings'=also the powers which are of spiritual truth from its good; for the wings with birds are like the hands or arms with men, and (these)=powers.

—³. When 'wings' are attributed to the Divine, they=the Divine truth which possesses omnipotence. Ill.

—'. That 'wings'=spiritual truths, that is, the truths of faith, in which there is power from good. Ill.

—⁴. 'The wings' (of the cherubs in Ezekiel)=truth Divine. (The spiritual sense given of all the statements made about these 'wings'.) E.245². 283¹⁵.

—⁶. That 'wings'=spiritual truths, or the truths of faith. Ill. —⁷.

—⁷. 'The wings of a dove' (Ps.lxviii.13)=the truths of faith. . . They are said to be 'overlaid with silver,' because 'silver'=truth from good. (=spiritual truths. E.283⁴.)

—⁸. That 'wings'=truth Divine. Ill.

—'. To be 'covered with the wing of Jehovah,' and to 'trust under His wings' (Ps.xci.4)=the protection and confidence of faith. Further ill.

—⁹. 'Wings,' in the opposite, =falsities. Ill.

9331. Flying animals, and winged insects=such things as are of thoughts in both senses, thus truths, or falsities.

—². Good is circumstanced to truth as the body is to . . . the wings; for (in birds) the body cannot move itself without wings. Moreover, in the Word, 'body' corresponds to good, and 'arms,' or 'wings,' to truths, and also to the powers of good [exerted] through truths.

9515. 'With their wings covering above the mercy-seat' (id.)=the spiritual things that cover over . . . For 'wings'=the truths of faith, or spiritual things, (and these clothe celestial things).

9741⁵. 'The voice of the wings' (Ezek.x.5)=the truth of faith from good.

9760. 'The wing' (of the court of the tabernacle) (Ex.xxvii.14)=where truth is in light . . . because this wing was towards the south; whereas by 'the hangings of the wing towards the north' . . . are signified truths in obscurity. 9762.

10199⁵. 'A great eagle, great with wings' (Ezek. xvii.3)=the interior truth of the Spiritual Church; 'the wings'=exterior truths.

C. J. 82. The skirts of their garments.

P. 20. Wings=spiritual truths.

R. 245. 'The four living creatures had each six wings in a circuit' (Rev.iv.8)=the Word as to its powers, and as to its guards. . . 'Wings'=powers, and also guards. (=the appearance of the Divine Spiritual on all sides around the Divine Celestial. E.283.)

—'. 'Wings'=powers, because birds elevate themselves with them; and the wings in birds are in place of the arms in man; and 'arms'=powers.

—'. (It follows) that the six wings of the lion=the power of fighting against evils and falsities . . . this power is that of the Divine truth of the Word; the wings of the calf=the power of affecting lower minds, for the Divine truth of the Word affects those who read it holily; the six wings of the man=the power of being wise as to what God is and what is of God . . . ; and the six wings of the eagle=the power of knowing truth and good, and thus of acquiring intelligence.

—². 'The wings with which the seraphim covered their faces and feet' (Is.vi.2)=guards; and 'the wings with which they flew'=powers. (Compare E.282⁹.) (=the Divine in primes and ultimates, and its extension on every side, thus omnipresence. 285^e.)

—³. That 'wings'=guards. Ill.

437. 'The voice of the wings (of the locusts) was as the voice of the chariots of many horses running to war' (Rev.ix.9)=their reasonings as from the truths of doctrine . . . 'The voice of wings'=reasonings, because 'to fly'=to perceive and instruct. S.13³. E.558.

561. 'To the woman were given two wings of a great eagle' (Rev.xii.14)=the Divine circumspection for the New Church. 'Wings'=power and protection. (=spiritual intelligence and circumspection which the Lord gives those of the New Church. 'Wings'=spiritual things. E.759.) (=the understanding of truth. 759⁴.)

574². 'The four wings' like those of birds (of the leopard)' (Dan.vii.6)=confirmations of falsity. (Compare E.78c⁹.)

5953. See MERCURY (the god) here.

E. 279⁵. 'With healing in His wings' (Mal.iv.2)=reformation through the truth of faith. (=through truth from good. 283⁹.)

282². 'He was borne upon the wings of the wind' (Ps.xviii.10)=omnipresence in the natural world. 283³. 419¹². (=to give understanding, and to enlighten the Ultimate Heaven. 529⁷.)

—⁶. 'Who will give me a wing as of a dove?' (Ps.lv.6)=the affection of spiritual truth.

—⁸. 'A winged bird' (Deut.iv.17) = the understanding of spiritual truth.

283⁴. That 'wings'=the Divine Spiritual, which in its essence is truth from good. Ill.

— For 'wing'=what is spiritual.

—⁶. 'To cover under the wing'=to guard by Divine truth, which is the Divine Spiritual.

—⁷. That 'wing,' when predicated of the Lord, = the Divine Spiritual. Ill.

— 'I expanded My wing over thee' (Ezek.xvi.8) = spiritual truth through which reformation has been effected.

—⁸. 'To walk upon the wings of the wind' (Ps.civ.3) = the spiritual sense which is in the literal. 594¹⁰.

—¹². (Thus) 'the wings of cherubim,' in the Word, = the Divine Spiritual, which is the Divine truth, instructing, regenerating, and protecting. Ill.

— 'The wings of cherubim' and their determinations=the Divine truth heard and received from the Lord. Ill.

—¹⁵. 'Wings,' in the opposite, = falsities and the ratiocinations from them. Ill.

—^e. 'The wind hath bound her in its wings' (Hos.iv.19) = ratiocination from fallacies, whence come falsities.

329¹⁰. 'Say to the bird of every wing' (Ezek.xxxix.17) treats of the restoration of the Church... 'The bird of every wing'=spiritual truth in the whole complex. 'Wings' (as well as 'birds') = spiritual things.

395⁵. The tearing off of the skirt of Samuel's cloak (1 Sam.xv.27)=the tearing away of the kingdom from Saul... for 'the skirt of a cloak'=Divine truth in ultimates, or all Divine truth in general.

—⁶. The like is signified by David's cutting off the skirt of Saul's cloak (1 Sam.xxiv.4).

433²⁶. 'The skirt of a Jew' (Zech.viii.23) = truth from this good.

799⁸. 'I will confide in the covert of Thy wings' (Ps.lxi.4)=in Divine truths; for the wings of Jehovah = spiritual truths.

4618³. Unless there were reception in the Second Heaven, the wisdom (of the Third Heaven) would be dissipated. (So with the intelligence of the Second Heaven, if not received in the First.)

4682². 'Old men'=the wise; 'young men'=the intelligent; 'servants'=the knowing.

4727^e. All the wisdom, intelligence, and light in Heaven proceeds from His Divine Human.

4741². (Confirming no proof of wisdom.)

4776^e. All wisdom and intelligence is contained in heavenly love. 4899^e.

[A.] 4792. Spiritual food is knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom.

4795. Therefore wisdom, or to be wise, is derived from relish—sapore. (See 8522.) E.617^e.

4809. This resplendence of light in which are wisdom and intelligence from the Divine truth . . . is called 'glory.'

4844^e. (Thus) becomes the good of wisdom.

4925². For it is good into and through which the Lord inflows, and gives wisdom and intelligence . . .

4966^e. How far mankind have gone back from the learning of the ancients, which led to wisdom.

5052. The (celestial) Angels are the wisest of all. 5608. 7877².

5070. In the life which is from the Lord there is wisdom and intelligence; for to receive good from Him, and thence to will good, is wisdom; and to receive truth from Him, and thence to believe truth, is intelligence . . .

— (Such) are not wise—sapiunt—in anything of good . . .

5116^e. Hence the insanity of the age, which is believed to be wisdom.

5204¹. These (arcana of regeneration) are what for the most part constitute angelic wisdom . . . 5354³.

5223. 'The magicians and wise men of Egypt' (Ex. xli.8) = interior and exterior scientifics. . . Those skilled in scientifics that were not mystical . . . and who therefore taught exterior scientifics, were called 'wise men.'

—². Those called 'wise men' did not care for such things (as the 'magicians' were versed in); but they solved difficult problems—ænigmatica, and taught the causes of natural Things. The wisdom of that time chiefly consisted in such things as these, and skill in them was called 'wisdom.' III. See 7296.

—³. (Thus) the Egyptian 'wisdom'=the knowledge of natural things; and the 'magic'=the knowledge of spiritual things . . .

5224³. The wisdom of the Ancients was to cultivate interior things, and thus perfect the intellectual and voluntary faculty, and thereby provide for the welfare of the soul. . . This is evident from the desire of all to hear Solomon. III.

5287. 'A man intelligent and wise' (Gen.xli.33)=the inflowing truth and good. Ex.

—². Consequently, in proportion as anyone loves himself above others, in the same proportion he is less wise.

— In the Word passim a distinction is made between wisdom, intelligence, and knowledge; and by 'wisdom' is meant that which is from good . . .

5310. 'Wise' (Gen.xli.39)=good.

5477². Spiritual light is the wisdom itself which proceeds from the Lord; this wisdom is presented before the sight of the Angels as light.

5527². When taken into heavenly Societies, they were in wisdom and intelligence like that of the Angels therein; and did not know but that the intelligence and wisdom were in them. . . Such a faculty is in good. 5859². 6193.

5556. They seem to themselves wise above others, for they place wisdom in the faculty of reasoning; and are not at all aware that the chief of wisdom is to perceive without ratiocination that it is or is not so.

5576². (The things of intelligence and wisdom shown to be actual spiritual food.) 9052. 9372⁹. H.340.

5648^e. (Thus) Angels place wisdom in such things as man thinks worthless . . . and man places wisdom in such things as Angels care nothing about . . .

5651^e. The man is then being perfected in intelligence and wisdom; and when he is being perfected in intelligence and wisdom, he is being blessed with happiness, to eternity.

5688³. The Word (contains such arcana) that it may enter into the angelic wisdom; for . . . angelic wisdom so transcends human intelligence that scarcely anything of it can be comprehended by man.

5718². They placed human prudence and wisdom in exciting enmities . . . in order to command.

6107^e. Wisdom is to behave towards the Lord from the good of love and faith, as little children do towards their parents.

6247. In the former state, man is affected with truth that he may become intelligent; in the latter, that he may become wise, (that is) for the sake of life.

6323³. Thus (man, if in order, would be born into) all wisdom and intelligence. 7750², Ex.

—^e. He (has to be) born again, and thus come into so much intelligence and wisdom as he receives good and truth . . . 6325².

6335². In Heaven, the states of intelligence and wisdom vary according to the lights.

6392². Inquire of the wise at this day . . .

6524. 'Elders'=the chief things of wisdom, thus those which agree with good. But 'old men'=wisdom —², III.

— For wisdom is of life, thus of good. . . (as in) 'I am wise above the old, because I have kept Thy commandments' (Ps.cix.100).

—³. 'Golden crowns'=the goods of wisdom.

— Those in the Third Heaven are called wise . . .

6598. They speak much from the memory, and thereby appear to themselves wiser than others. 6621.

6629. Therefore those of the Ancient Church were interior men, and (thus) wiser . . . for wisdom comes from Heaven only . . . and there is wisdom in Heaven because the Angels are in good.

6630. The decrease of this ancient wisdom. Ex.

6648^e. For every Thing that is of wisdom is of infinite extension; and the Things of wisdom are infinite in number; (therefore) wisdom can increase to eternity, and yet may not reach far beyond the first degree.

6923. The left eye corresponds to . . . the things of intelligence; the right eye, to those of wisdom.

6931. The Spirits of Mercury . . . do not grow in wisdom, because they love Knowledges . . . but not uses.

7296. The Egyptians and Chaldeans called the knowledges of Things wisdom.

7750^c. By Divine means man is brought to something of intelligence and wisdom, but not actually into it, unless he removes the loves of self and the world . . .

—³. That love to the Lord and towards the neighbour have all intelligence and wisdom in them, is evident from the fact that when (such) come into Heaven, they know and are wise in such things as they had never known before . . .

8063². In Heaven, everyone has intelligence and wisdom according to the extension of the sphere . . .

8118. In the ancient times . . . innocence reigned, and with it wisdom. Des.

8369³. As 'a palm-tree' = good, it also = wisdom; for wisdom is of good.

— . The cherubim, palmtrees, and flowers on the walls (of the Temple) = the Providence, wisdom, and intelligence that are from the Lord.

8627. The inhabitants of Jupiter place wisdom in thinking well and justly about the Things that occur in life; they derive this wisdom from their parents; it is successively transferred to posterity, and thus grows.

8628. (These) Spirits of our Earth . . . had placed wisdom in things of mere memory . . .

8869⁷. That all the wisdom which is of life is from the Lord . . . and that nothing of wisdom is from man. Sig.

8891³. Paradise = the wisdom of the man who is created anew.

8967. The result (of these temptations is that) the man has . . . a derivative intelligence and wisdom, which increase day by day.

9039³. (The humility of those in Heaven who are in intelligence and wisdom above others.) Des.

9094. Hence the things of angelic wisdom are for the most part . . . incomprehensible; but still (such) a man comes into such wisdom after death; for the faculty of receiving this wisdom is in the good of faith and of charity.

9103⁴. When the light of Heaven inflows into these Knowledges . . . the man has intelligence and wisdom in the things of eternal life . . .

9174. In the Spiritual World no goods are asked for from others, or given, except those of intelligence and wisdom. Ex.

9228. A full state of intelligence and wisdom from love and faith in the Lord. Sig.

9278⁵. The intelligent and wise in this world (are) those in the truth and good of the Church, for these are wise from Heaven . . .

— . Before the Angels, the simplicity of these is wisdom; and after death they are elevated by the Lord into angelic wisdom. Ill.

9301². The (celestial Angels) are in wisdom, because that which they understand and will is from the Lord.

VOL. VI.

9396³. The heavenly paradise is intelligence and wisdom.

9466⁵. 'The work of the wise' (Jer.x.9) = what is from Own intelligence.

9476⁶. The precious stones = intelligence and wisdom; for intelligence is from the truths of faith, and wisdom is from the goods of faith.

9642. In the Heavens, intelligence and wisdom increases towards the interiors. 9648⁶. 9666².

9730². In the same proportion the man can be imbued with wisdom, faith, and love.

9803. (Thus) to be intelligent and wise is not to understand and be wise in many things of the world; but to understand and will the things of Heaven . . .

9817. 'All that are wise in heart' (Ex.xxviii.3) = all who are in the good of love.

—². For wisdom is predicated of the life of Heaven in a man.

9818. 'Whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom' (id.) = in whom has been inscribed the Divine truth. Ex.

—²¹. 'A crown of ornament' = the wisdom that is of good.

9827. 'The mitre' = intelligence and wisdom. Ex. (= infinite wisdom. 9934.) 9943. 10008.

9863³. 'Full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty' (Ezek. xxviii.12). . . 'Wisdom' is predicated of good; and 'beauty,' of truth; for all the wisdom in the Heavens is from good, and all the beauty from the derivative truths.

9930¹¹. As the good of wisdom is acquired through the combats of temptations . . . crowns were assigned them.

9938². Innocence . . . dwells in ignorance, especially with the wise in heart; for they who are wise in heart know and perceive that nothing of the wisdom in them is from themselves . . . (Thus) the acknowledgment of this, and especially the perception of it, is the innocence of wisdom.

9943. For all wisdom and intelligence is from the Divine truth that proceeds from the Lord's Divine good . . . Intelligence is to know and understand Divine truths, and afterwards to have faith in them; and wisdom is to will and love them, and from this to live according to them.

10201. (What is meant by intelligence and wisdom. See INTELLIGENCE, here.)

10217⁸. To know . . . these things is the part of one who is wise and intelligent; and therefore it is said, 'Here is wisdom . . . ' (Rev.xiii.18).

10225. From the sixtieth year and upwards is a state of wisdom, and of innocence in wisdom. —⁶.

—⁵. Man is intelligent and wise in proportion to the amount of light that inflows from Heaven into the things of the world.

—⁵. The state of wisdom and of innocence in wisdom is when the man no longer cares to understand truths and goods, but to will and live them; for this is to be wise. And a man can (do this) in proportion as he is in innocence, that is, in proportion as he believes that he is wise in nothing of himself; but that whatever he is wise in is from the Lord . . .

[A. 10225]'. (Such a man) is in the ignorance of wisdom; and also in the innocence of wisdom.

10227². All have the faculty of understanding and being wise; but the reason one is wise above another, is that they do not similarly ascribe to the Lord all things of intelligence and wisdom. Ex.

—³. By the faculty of being wise is not meant that of reasoning . . . or that of confirming . . . but the faculty of clearly seeing what is true and good, of choosing what is suitable, and of applying it to the uses of life . . .

10331. See INTELLIGENCE, here. —². —³.

—². He is wise who does truths from love; he is intelligent who does them from faith . . .

10336. 'In the heart of every wise one in heart I have given wisdom' (Ex. xxxi. 6) = all who will and do good and truth for their own sake; (for these are) 'the wise in heart' . . . and 'to give wisdom in the heart' = to do these things from the Lord, thus from the good of love.

10675³. For wisdom and intelligence can never be predicated of falsities from evil . . .

10796. Priests who are wise . . . and those who are not wise. Des.

10801. A king who is not wise. Des.

10802. A king who is wise. Des.

H. 18. All who come into Heaven, even the simple, come into angelic wisdom . . .

25. The Angels in the Celestial Kingdom far excel those in the Spiritual Kingdom in wisdom and glory. Ex.

49. The Angels have intelligence and wisdom according to the extension of their sphere. Ex. 79.

50. The wiser Angels are in the middle . . .

111. A garden corresponds to Heaven as to intelligence and wisdom.

148. Those in the clear light of wisdom dwell in the south; those in the obscure light of wisdom, in the north. 149.

155. The Angels are not constantly in the same state as to love, and therefore not as to wisdom; for all the wisdom they have is from love and according to it.

—². Noon corresponds to the state of their wisdom in clearness; evening, to the state of their wisdom in obscurity; and night, to a state of no love and wisdom. —^e.

186. Wisdom is of good and at the same time of truth . . .

199. By (the Lord's presence) the Angels have wisdom; for by it they have extension of thoughts . . .

201. As all the communication is according to the form of Heaven, so is all the extension of thoughts and affections, and consequently all the intelligence and wisdom of the Angels; so that in proportion as anyone is in the form of Heaven, in the same proportion he is wise. 203.

204. But the intelligence and wisdom with each one are varied according to the communication . . . Enum.

208. When (an Angel looks down into a Society of a lower Heaven) he is deprived of his intelligence and wisdom. Ex.

209. The wisdom of the Angels of a higher Heaven exceeds the wisdom of those of a lower one as ten thousand does one.

214. (In the Celestial Kingdom) the less wise Angels interrogate the more wise; and these the Lord . . .

218. The governors (in the Spiritual Kingdom) are those in love and wisdom above the rest . . .

223. Before the preacher's face sit those who are in the light of wisdom above the rest . . .

239. The speech of the Angels is full of wisdom, because it proceeds from their interior thought, (which) is wisdom. Des.

241. As the celestial Angels are in the good of love to the Lord, they speak from wisdom; and as the spiritual Angels are in the good of charity towards the neighbour, they speak from intelligence; for wisdom is from good, and intelligence from truth.

244. The speech of the wise (Angels) is more interior . . . and that of the less wise is more exterior . . .

251. That region of the head (which contains the cerebellum) corresponds to wisdom . . .

265. On the wisdom of the Angels. Chapter.

— The wisdom of the Angels transcends human wisdom so far that they cannot be compared—acquirari.

266. The nature of the wisdom of the Angels may be inferred from the fact that they are in the light of Heaven, which in its essence is Divine truth, or Divine wisdom . . . They are also in heavenly heat . . . from which they have the affection of being wise . . .

— That the Angels are so much in wisdom that they may be called wisdoms, may be inferred from the fact that all their thoughts and affections flow according to the heavenly form, which is the form of Divine wisdom . . .

—². That the Angels have supereminent wisdom, is evident from the fact that their speech is that of wisdom. Ex. . . So that nothing withdraws them from the Divine influx . . .

— This also conspires to such wisdom . . . that all the things they see and perceive by the senses accord with their wisdom . . . and are forms representative of the things of wisdom.

—^e. The Angels are not withdrawn from the delights of wisdom by (earthly things and cares) . . . and moreover are gifted with delights according to the reception of wisdom from the Lord.

267. The reason the Angels can receive such great wisdom, is that their interiors are open, and wisdom . . . increases towards the interiors . . .

— The wisdom of the Angels is according to these (three) degrees; and therefore the wisdom of the Angels of the Innermost Heaven immeasurably transcends the wisdom of the Angels of the Middle Heaven; and the wisdom of these, the wisdom of the Angels of the Ultimate Heaven.

—². Singulars to generals are as thousands . . . to one, and so is the wisdom of the Angels of a higher Heaven to the wisdom of those of a lower one. But still the wisdom of these in like manner transcends the wisdom of man . . .

—^e. From this it is evident what kind of wisdom is possessed by those who think from sensuous things . . . namely, that they are not in any wisdom, but only in knowledge. But it is different with those whose thoughts have been elevated above sensuous things . . .

268. How great is the wisdom of the Angels, is evident from the fact that in the Heavens there is a communication of all things, and the intelligence and wisdom of one is communicated to another . . .

269. The quality of the wisdom of the Angels cannot be described in words; but may be illustrated. Fully ex.

270. The wisdom of the Angels of the Third Heaven is incomprehensible, even to those in the Ultimate Heaven. Fully ex.

—⁴. The difference between the wisdom of the Angels of the Third Heaven and the wisdom of those of the First, is like that between what is lucid and what is obscure.

— The wisdom of the Angels of the Third Heaven compared to a magnificent palace. Des.

— (Such) cannot attain the first threshold of the palace of wisdom . . .

—⁵. The wisdom of the Angels of the Third Heaven consists chiefly in this: that they see Divine and heavenly things in every object, and marvellous things in a series of many . . .

271. (For) love to the Lord is the receptacle of all things of wisdom . . .

— The Angels of the Third Heaven are continually being perfected in wisdom; but differently from those of the Ultimate Heaven. Ex. . . They are perfected in wisdom through the hearing, and not through the sight. Ex.

272. An additional reason—which in Heaven is the primary one—why the Angels can receive such great wisdom, is that they are devoid of the love of self. Ex.

273. Although the Angels are continually being perfected in wisdom, they cannot, to eternity, be so perfected that there is any proportion between their wisdom and the Divine wisdom of the Lord . . .

274. As wisdom perfects the Angels, and makes their life; and as Heaven inflows with its goods into everyone according to his wisdom, all there long for it . . . as a hungry man longs for food . . .

275. The Angels in one Heaven, and also in one Society, are not in the like wisdom; those in the middle are in the greatest wisdom . . . and the decrease of wisdom according to the distance from the middle, is like the decrease of light verging to shade . . . Moreover, the light of Heaven is Divine wisdom . . .

278. The innocence of wisdom. Ex. . . When there is innocence in (the mind) there is also wisdom . . . Hence it is said in Heaven that innocence dwells in wisdom; and that an Angel has as much wisdom as he has innocence. Ex

288³. For internal peace . . . is not possible except in wisdom; (and) wisdom is derived from the conjunction of good and truth.

295. In old age, Spirits are present who are in wisdom and innocence.

310^e. If, when reading the Word, a man would think from some knowledge of the internal sense, he would come into interior wisdom.

314. The human mind is as wise as the angelic mind; but the reason it is not so wise (here) is that it is in an earthly body, and in this the spiritual mind thinks naturally . . .

341. Genuine innocence is wisdom; for in proportion as anyone is wise, in the same proportion he loves to be led by the Lord; or, what is the same, in proportion as anyone is led by the Lord, in the same proportion he is wise.

—^e. In a word, the wiser the Angels are, the more innocent they are . . .

346. On the wise and the simple in Heaven. Chapter.

348. By 'those who justify many' are meant those who are wise; and in Heaven those are called wise who are in good; and those there are in good who apply Divine truths at once to life. . . These, therefore, are called the wise, for wisdom is of the life.

349. All who have acquired intelligence and wisdom (here) are accepted in Heaven . . . according to the quality and quantity of their intelligence and wisdom. Ex.

350. Those who have much loved (what is true and good) are called wise . . .

— In Heaven, the wise are in much light . . .

351. It is believed that those who know many things are more intelligent and wise than others . . .

—². But true intelligence and wisdom is to see and perceive what is true and good, and, from that, what is false and evil, and to well distinguish them, and this from an interior view and perception. Ex.

—³. But in order to become intelligent and wise, it is necessary to learn many things . . . and in proportion as a man learns them and applies them to life, in the same proportion he becomes intelligent and wise . . .

352. Spurious intelligence and wisdom is not to see and perceive, from within, what is true and good and thence what is false and evil; but only to believe that to be true and good, or false and evil, which are said to be so by others, and then to confirm it. Ex.

— Of this class, those are less intelligent and wise who have confirmed themselves much; and those are more intelligent and wise who have confirmed themselves little.

[H. 352]³. If man were born into the order of his life—which is to love God above all things, and the neighbour as himself—he would be born into intelligence and wisdom . . .

353. False intelligence and wisdom is all that which is devoid of the acknowledgment of the Divine. Ex. —^e, III.

370. (Connection of intelligence and wisdom with conjugal love.)

389. The wiser Angels (have charge) of the things of general good or use; and the less wise, of those of particular good or use.

390². He who regards men from spiritual truth . . . sees one man as being like another . . . with a difference only in wisdom; and wisdom is to love use . . .

467. Men who are in love to the Lord and in charity, have in them angelic intelligence and wisdom even (here) but it is stored up in the inmosts of their interior memory. This intelligence and wisdom cannot possibly appear to them until they put off bodily things . . .

508. In proportion as anyone loves himself, he is removed from Heaven; and in proportion as anyone is removed from Heaven, he is removed from wisdom.

N. 9². Those in the good of love and of charity are in Heaven as to the internal man . . . from which there is an elevation of their minds to interior things, and they consequently have wisdom; for wisdom cannot come from any other source than . . . through Heaven from the Lord; and there is wisdom in Heaven because those there are in good. Wisdom is to see truth from the light of truth; and the light of truth is the light there is in Heaven.

14. All the intelligence and wisdom the Angels have, is from the marriage (of good and truth) and not any from good separated from truth, nor from truth separated from good. It is the same with the men of the Church.

27. That wisdom is from good through truths. (Refs. to passages.)

J. 12². There is a (mental) extension according to the increments of wisdom.

L. 1². For wisdom is in love, and love in wisdom, Sig.

48. That by 'spirit' is meant . . . the life of wisdom. Ill. 51.

S. 70. That the Word is in all the Heavens, and is the source of angelic wisdom. Gen.art.

74. The wisdom of the celestial Angels surpasses the wisdom of the spiritual Angels almost as (this) surpasses the wisdom of men . . . For where there is the good of love, wisdom resides there together with it; but where there are truths, there resides no more of wisdom than there is of the good of love.

102. Those who knew the correspondences of the Ancient Word interiorly, were called wise and intelligent . . .

Life 27. That if a man knows and is wise in many things, and does not shun evils as sins, he is not wise in them. Ex. 30, III.

32². But still the Angels of all the Heavens are in wisdom and intelligence in proportion as the good with them makes a one with the truth . . .

89. Nor does anyone else come into wisdom (than he who loves Truth).

F. 4. Angelic wisdom consists solely in this: that they see and comprehend the things they think.

31². The second state is called regeneration; and when a man is in this state, wisdom increases in him daily . . .

W. (Title.) Angelic Wisdom concerning the Divine Love and the Divine Wisdom. (See also the title to the work on the Divine Providence.)

14. Love is esse (or being); and wisdom is existere (or manifestation); for love is impossible except in wisdom; and wisdom is impossible except from love. (Continued under LOVE.)

28. The Divine essence itself is love and wisdom. Gen.art. (See LOVE here, and at 29. 30. 31. 32.)

34. Love and wisdom are said to be distinctly one, because they are two distinct things, but are so united that love is of wisdom, and wisdom is of love; for love is in wisdom, and wisdom comes forth in love . . .

39. In man, love and wisdom appear to be two separate things; but still, in themselves, are distinctly one. (Fully quoted under LOVE.)

40. Scarcely anyone thinks that love and wisdom are really and actually a substance and a form. They who see (it) still perceive the love and wisdom outside the subject . . . not knowing that love and wisdom are the subject itself . . . The Truth is, that love and wisdom are the real and actual substance and form which make the subject itself. Ex. 41. 42.

102². For the equal reception of love and wisdom is the Angelic itself . . .

115. An Angel does not perceive but that he is in love and wisdom from himself . . .

—². By this an Angel is made wise and remains wise.

116². But in proportion as an Angel believes that love and wisdom are in him . . . in the same proportion the Angelic is not in him . . .

117. Some suppose that Adam . . . was able . . . to be wise from himself . . .

125². Love and wisdom proceed from the Lord as a one; but are not received by the Angels as a one . . . and the wisdom which abounds over love does indeed appear as wisdom, but still is not, because there is no life from love in the super-abounding wisdom.

126. The varied reception of love and wisdom makes the quarters there. Ex.

127^e. These pairs (of organs, etc. exist) in order that love and wisdom may act as a one . . .

129. If a man is in love and wisdom, he is an Angel.

139. This actual conversion to the Lord is from love and at the same time from wisdom; not from love alone, nor from wisdom alone; for love alone is like esse (or being) without its existere (or manifestation); for love comes forth—existit—in wisdom; and wisdom without love is like manifestation without its being, for wisdom comes forth—existit—from love. (Continued under LOVE.)

175°. This is from angelic wisdom.

179. On the degrees of love and wisdom. Gen.art.

186. Those in the middle . . . are in the light of wisdom; those in the circumferences are in the shade of wisdom.

191. Heat and light are receptacles of love and wisdom.

192°. The degrees of love and wisdom are homogeneous. Ex.

197. (The first degree of love and wisdom is the all in all of the following degrees.)

200. Perfection of life is perfection of love and wisdom.

202°. To think from ends is of wisdom; from causes, is of intelligence . . .

209°. Love and wisdom are not abstract things, but are a substance . . . Love and wisdom are impossible outside of subjects which are substances; but are states of the subjects, or substances. They are changes of these . . .

213. As to love and wisdom (in relation to the law that the ultimate degree is the complex, containant, and basis of the prior degrees), love is the end, wisdom is the cause per quam, and use is the effect . . . 241, Ex.

222. As the Angels are in wisdom from universals . . .

224. The reason why not the least of love and wisdom . . . is possible without degrees of both kinds, is that love and wisdom are a substance and a form . . . For to separate love and wisdom . . . from substance in form is to annihilate them . . . for they are states of their subjects perceived by man in variation . . .

230. Love produces use by means of wisdom. . . Love and wisdom cannot be said to be and come forth—existere—unless there is a use . . . These three constitute the three degrees of height . . . and are as (end, cause, and effect).

232. The spiritual degree is that of wisdom . . . And the Angels of the Spiritual Kingdom are in wisdom.

236. Love and wisdom with man (do not) increase by continuity only.

239°. By this (mind) man can be elevated into angelic wisdom, and possess it here; but still he does not come into it until after death . . .

241°. It follows that such as is the love with a man, such is the wisdom with him. 368, Gen.art.

242°. Man can receive wisdom even to the third degree; but not love, unless he shuns evils as sins . . . 245, Ex.

244°. (Thus) wisdom does not produce love, but only teaches . . . (and) the love . . . calls that wisdom . . . which is in agreement with it.

253. Wisdom alone (does not open the spiritual degree) . . .

256. Although angelic wisdom cannot be thought by a natural man as it is by the Angels, it can be comprehended in the understanding when this is elevated to the degree of light in which the Angels are . . .

—³. Thus while man lives (here) he cannot be elevated into very wisdom itself, such as it is with the Angels; but only into higher light . . .

257⁴. While man lives (here) human wisdom, which is natural, cannot possibly be elevated into angelic wisdom; but only into some image of it. Ex. . . But still the man with whom the spiritual degree has been opened comes into this wisdom when he dies; and he can come into it also by a lulling of the bodily sensations . . .

258°. Therefore if the love . . . is not also elevated, the wisdom of the understanding, however it may have ascended, relapses to its love.

275°. Wisdom and intelligence from their loves make the middle degree in the Heavens; and folly and insanity, which appear as wisdom and intelligence, from their loves, make the middle degree in the Hells.

287. That love and wisdom are man . . .

297. Love produces use through wisdom . . . Love, wisdom, and use follow in order according to the degrees of height . . . 316°, Ex.

358. For wisdom is nothing but the 'image' of love; since love presents itself to be seen and Known in wisdom . . . Moreover, love is the being of life; and wisdom is the derivative manifestation—existere. (These statements are proved by the fact that) love shines forth from within in the Angels' faces, and wisdom shines forth in their beauty; and their beauty is the form of their love.

363. Love and wisdom . . . make man's very life. Gen.art.

368. It is supposed that wisdom distinguishes (one man from another); but the wisdom is from the love, being its form; for love is the being of life, and wisdom is the manifestation—existere—of life from that being.

389. (The human form) is the form of love and wisdom . . .

394. That all things about . . . love and wisdom may be known from the correspondence of the heart (and lungs with the will and understanding). Gen.art.

401. That love . . . without marriage with wisdom, cannot effect anything . . . Ex.

402. That love . . . prepares a house . . . for its future consort, which is wisdom. Ex.

403. That love . . . prepares all things in its human form, to enable it to act conjointly with wisdom . . . Ex.

404°. This thought is that of wisdom; the other is thought from the memory . . .

408. That love . . . introduces wisdom . . . into all things of its house. Ex.

409. That love . . . does nothing except in conjunction with wisdom. Ex.

[W.] 410. That love . . . conjoins itself with wisdom . . . and causes it to be reciprocally conjoined. (Shown by the correspondence with the heart and lungs.)

413. That wisdom . . . from the power given it by love, can be elevated . . . (Shown by this correspondence.)

414². Love towards the neighbour from the Lord is the love of wisdom . . .

415. This conjunction, or disjunction, of wisdom and love, may be seen as it were effigied in the conjunction of the lungs with the heart . . .

416. That otherwise love . . . drags back wisdom . . . from its elevation . . . Ex.

418. It is the common opinion that wisdom makes the man; and therefore when people hear anyone speaking and teaching wisely, they believe him to be wise, and even the person himself believes it at the time . . .

422. That love purified by wisdom . . . becomes spiritual and celestial. Ex. (See 419.)

—^e. Man is not elevated through wisdom alone, but through a life according to it. . . In proportion as he lives according to wisdom, he loves it; and he lives according to wisdom in proportion as he purifies himself from the unclean things which are sins.

427. The marriage of celestial love is with wisdom, and that of spiritual love is with intelligence; for it is of wisdom to do what is good from good; and it is of intelligence to do what is good from truth. 428.

—². Those in celestial love have wisdom inscribed on their life, and not on their memory . . . But those in spiritual love have wisdom inscribed on their memory . . .

429. But those in spiritual natural love have neither wisdom nor intelligence inscribed on their life . . .

431. In Heaven, all who do uses from the affection of use . . . are wiser and happier than others.

432². The left (hemisphere of the brain) is the receptacle of wisdom.

P. 8⁶. Love and wisdom . . . are one, when the will and understanding . . . make one . . .

13. Love makes the life of man; but . . . not love separated from wisdom . . . Love cannot be understood without its quality (which) is wisdom; and the quality, or wisdom, is not possible except from its esse (or being) which is love . . . As wisdom is from love, therefore both taken together are called love . . . for love in its form is wisdom . . .

28². The Angels receive the Lord in wisdom, and through this reciprocally conjoin themselves with the Lord. (So it appears to them) but the truth is that the Lord conjoins them with Himself through wisdom; for their wisdom also is from Him . . .

—³. Love conjoins itself with wisdom through the affection of knowing . . . of understanding . . . and of seeing that which is known and understood . . .

34. That the more closely man is conjoined with the Lord, the wiser he becomes. Gen.art.

— . As there are three degrees of life in man . . .

there are, especially, three degrees of wisdom in him. These are the degrees that are opened in a man according to the conjunction—they are opened according to the love, for love is conjunction itself; but the ascent of love according to degrees is perceived only obscurely by the man, whereas the ascent of wisdom is clearly perceived by those who know and see what wisdom is. The reason the degrees of wisdom are perceived, is that love enters through the affections into the perceptions and thoughts, and these present themselves to the internal sight . . . Hence it is that wisdom appears, but not so well the affection of love that produces it. Ex.

—². There are three degrees of wisdom—natural, spiritual, and celestial. A man is in the natural degree of wisdom while he lives (here); and this degree may be perfected in him to its highest, but cannot enter the spiritual degree, because this degree (is connected with the natural degree only) by correspondences. Man is in the spiritual degree of wisdom after death; and this degree also is such that it may be perfected to its highest, but still cannot enter the celestial degree of wisdom; for this degree (is connected with the spiritual degree only) by correspondences. This shows that wisdom can be elevated in a triplicate ratio, and can be perfected in a simple ratio in each degree to its highest.

—³. (This explains) how it is that angelic wisdom is ineffable . . . No one can come into this ineffable wisdom of the Angels except through conjunction with the Lord, and according to it . . .

35. Wisdom (does not consist in) knowing many things, in perceiving them in a certain light, and in being able to speak them intelligently, unless the wisdom is conjoined with love; for love produces wisdom through its affections; and if it is not conjoined with love, it is like a meteor . . . but wisdom conjoined with love is like the light of the sun . . . A man has the love of wisdom in proportion as he is averse to the . . . concupiscences of evil and falsity.

36. The wisdom that comes to perception is the perception of truth from the affection of it, especially the perception of spiritual truth. Ex.

— . In conversation with me, the Angels have said that wisdom is conjunction with the Lord, because He is wisdom itself, and that he comes into this conjunction who rejects Hell from himself, and in proportion as he rejects it. They have said that they represent wisdom to themselves as a magnificent and richly adorned palace, the ascent to which is by twelve steps, and that no one arrives at the first step except from the Lord through conjunction with Him; and that everyone ascends according to the conjunction; and, in proportion as he ascends, he perceives that no one is wise from himself . . . and also that the things in which a man is wise, relatively to those in which he is not wise, are as a few drops to a great lake. The twelve steps to the palace of wisdom, mean goods conjoined with truths, and truths conjoined with goods.

39. The felicities of Heaven ascend in a like degree with wisdom.

44. The (celestial) Angels, who are the wisest of the Angels (say) that the Lord does not inflow immediately into the things that are of their perception and thought from wisdom, but into the affections of the love of good, and through these into those; and that they perceive the influx into the affection from which they have wisdom; and that then all that they think from wisdom appears as from themselves, and thus as their own; and that through this there is effected a reciprocal conjunction.

74². The consort of the affection of natural love is knowledge; that of the affection of spiritual love is intelligence; and that of the affection of celestial love is wisdom. For an affection without its mate is not anything. Ex.

75. So that man can be elevated from natural knowledge into spiritual intelligence, and thence into celestial wisdom; and, from these two, intelligence and wisdom, he can look to the Lord . . .

—³. Therefore those who do not want to understand anything beyond what is of the world . . . cannot be elevated from knowledge into intelligence, and still less into wisdom.

91². In the Spiritual World . . . wisdom effects presence; and love conjunction; and the converse. There is an acknowledgment of the Lord from wisdom; and there is an acknowledgment of Him from love. Ex.

95². When man turns his face to the Lord, love and wisdom are given him. These enter man through the face, and not by the back of the neck.

136². All infants (there) are introduced . . . by delightful things into angelic wisdom, and through this into celestial love. Des.

170. A kind of enlightenment by which it is revealed to a man in what . . . intelligence and wisdom he is. Ex.

193³. As the soul of the understanding is wisdom . . .

222. That a man can be admitted into the wisdom of spiritual things . . . and still not be reformed. Gen.art. 225, Ex.

— . For by his rationality a man can be elevated into wisdom almost angelic . . . Still, such as the love is, such is the wisdom: if the love is celestial and spiritual, the wisdom becomes celestial and spiritual; but if the love is diabolical and infernal, the wisdom is so too: in its external form . . . it may appear celestial and spiritual, but in its internal form, which is its very essence, it is diabolical and infernal; not as it is out of the man, but as it is within him. . . So is it seen to be by the Angels.

223. That man possesses the faculty of understanding the arcana of wisdom like the Angels themselves (is shown by the fact that) devils understand them when they hear them. . . But when they return to their love they do not understand them, but contrary things . . . which they then call wisdom. I have heard them, when in a state of wisdom, laugh at their insanity; and when in a state of insanity, at wisdom. A man who has been such (here) is usually let into alternate states of wisdom and insanity, in order that he may see the latter from the former. But, although, from the wisdom, they see that they are insane, when the option is given them . . . they let themselves into the state of insanity, and love it, and then hold the state of wisdom in hatred. Sig.

225. With (the merely natural) also there may be the appearance that they love wisdom; but only as an adulterer loves a noble woman as a harlot . . .

242. 'Cain'=wisdom . . . in special, wisdom separated from love . . . and wisdom so separated rejects love, and even annihilates it.

298. Believes that wickedness is wisdom, and cunning prudence.

311³. (Such) place wisdom in life, and not in talk.

320. They who have confirmed the appearance that wisdom and prudence are from man, and that they do not inflow according to the state of the organization of the mind. 321, Ex.

324³. (This) was seen by the Sophi or wise men of old; for they said, How can the mind die, when it is able to be wise? (the interior idea in which was) that God is wisdom itself . . . and He is eternal.

332². The procreations of wisdom from love are like seeds, and through these procreations the man becomes like a garden . . . and in the Word his wisdom from love is described by . . . 'the garden of Eden.'

334. For every Angel is perfected in wisdom to eternity, each one according to the degree of the affection of good and truth in which he was when he left the world . . .

335². If, with a wise man, there were an end to wisdom, the delight of his wisdom would perish, for it consists in its perpetual multiplication and fructification . . . and in its place there would succeed the delight of glory . . .

—³. Although, in Heaven, the wisdom of a wise one increases to eternity, there is no such approach of angelic wisdom to Divine wisdom that it can arrive at it . . .

R. 120. 'I will give him to eat of the hidden manna' = . . . hidden wisdom such as is with the (celestial) Angels; for as these, in the world, had been in good works and at the same time in truths of doctrine, they are in wisdom above the rest of the Angels, but in hidden wisdom, for it is inscribed on their life, and not so much on their memory . . .

151. 'I will give him the morning star'=intelligence and wisdom then . . . for these come through the Knowledges of good and truth . . . and it is called 'the morning star' because intelligence and wisdom will be given them by the Lord when He comes to establish the New Church. (=intelligence and wisdom from the Lord's Divine Human. E. 179.)

189. 'That no one take thy crown'=lest their wisdom perish from which is eternal happiness.

— . Man's only source of wisdom is good through truths from the Lord. The reason man has wisdom through these, is that by them the Lord conjoins Himself with man and man with Himself, and He is wisdom itself. Therefore wisdom perishes with a man when he ceases to do truths . . . and he then ceases to love wisdom, and therefore the Lord. By wisdom is meant wisdom in spiritual things: from this as a fountain is derived wisdom in all other things, which is called intelligence; and, through this, knowledge, which is from the affection of knowing truths.

[R. 189]. The reason 'a crown' = wisdom, is that wisdom holds the highest place with man . . . Ill.

235. 'Golden crowns' = the things of wisdom from love.

243. 'The third living creature had a face like a man' = the Divine truth of the Word as to wisdom. 'A man' = wisdom because he is born to receive wisdom from the Lord . . . so that anyone is a man in proportion as he is wise. Truly human wisdom is to be wise in the existence, nature, and derivatives of God. Ill. E.280.

252. 'They cast their crowns before the throne' = the acknowledgment that wisdom is from Him alone.

288. 'Worthy is the Lamb . . . to receive . . . riches and wisdom' (Rev.v.12) = . . . Divine knowledge and wisdom, which are omniscience. (=omniscience and the Divine Providence. E.338.)

351. 'Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed 12000' = wisdom from celestial love with those (of) the New Heaven and New Church. The reason 'Reuben' here = wisdom, is that he follows 'Judah,' and celestial love produces wisdom; for love is not possible without its consort, which is knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom: the consort of natural love is knowledge; that of spiritual love is intelligence; and that of celestial love is wisdom.

372, 374. 'Wisdom . . . be to our God' (Rev.vii.12) = (the Divine truth or Divine Spiritual in the Lord). (=what is from the Divine truth that proceeds from the Lord in the Third Heaven; for 'wisdom' = the reception of Divine truth in inmosts. E.465.)

433. That they appeared to themselves as wise. Sig. and Ex.

450^e. 'All is the work of the wise' (Jer.x.9) = what is from man's Own intelligence. E.576⁷.

463⁴. In the world such are known only by the fact that they believe themselves to be wiser than everybody . . .

534. 'On her head a crown of twelve stars' = the wisdom and intelligence of the New Church from the Knowledges of Divine good and Divine truth from the Word.

607. 'Here is wisdom' (Rev.xiii.18) = that it is the part of the wise to see . . . from what is here said, the quality with the clergy of the doctrine of God and Salvation. (=that this is their doctrine in its whole complex, which is accounted as wisdom, although it is insanity. E.844.)

736. 'Here is the mind that hath wisdom' (Rev.xvii.9) = that this is the interpretation in the natural sense, but that it is for those who are in the spiritual sense from the Lord. (=the understanding of these things in the natural sense from the spiritual. E.1061, Ex.)

—. 'That hath wisdom' = for those who are wise interiorly. Ex.

875. In the southern Heaven are those who are in wisdom from the Lord.

—². (A discussion as to) whether Heaven in its essence is love, or wisdom. The Angels agreed that the one is of the other, but questioned which is the original. . . . Thus wisdom from its origin is love . . . So that love is the all of wisdom; and consequently the essence of the Heavens is love, and their manifestation—existentia—is wisdom; or, what is the same, the Heavens are from the Divine love, and come into existence from the Divine love through the Divine wisdom . . .

—⁴. The Temple of Wisdom. Des. This temple is not seen by anyone who believes himself to be very wise, still less by anyone who believes himself to be wise enough; and still less by one who believes himself to be wise from himself. The reason is that these persons are not in the reception of the light of Heaven from the affection of genuine wisdom. Genuine wisdom consists in a man's seeing, from the light of Heaven, that the things he knows, understands, and is wise in, in comparison with those he does not know, understand, and be wise in, are as little as a drop in comparison with the ocean . . .

—⁶. Love is not anything without wisdom; but in wisdom it is formed for something. This something . . . is use.

M. (Title.) The deliciousnesses of wisdom concerning conjugal love.

2. (Six companies of the wise, so called, deliver their sentiments concerning heavenly joy and eternal happiness.) 3. 7.

5³. The delight of use derives its . . . coming into existence from wisdom.

7^e. A bright cloud then overshadowed them, in which was an aura of wisdom, which caused their sanity to return.

8⁵. The deliciousness of the soul is from love and wisdom . . . and, as love . . . is efficient through wisdom, both have their seat in . . . use.

18. Eight wise ones, sent by the Prince . . . speak concerning the beginnings and the increase of wisdom (showing that) with the Angels wisdom has no end, but increases to eternity.

—. That the seat of wisdom is in use. Ex. . . . At his first creation, man was imbued with wisdom and its love, not for the sake of himself, but that he might communicate it to others . . . Hence it has been inscribed on the wisdom of the wise, that no one is wise and lives for himself alone . . .

—². Those who are in spiritual uses . . . are wise. . . . Those in (moral and civil uses only) are not so wise, but only appear to be so . . . Those in (natural uses only) are not wise at all, for they are satans . . . And those in (corporeal uses only) are the least wise of all, for they are devils . . .

21². Two things make the marriage of the Lord with the Church—love and wisdom; the Lord is love, and the Church wisdom; and wisdom is at the right hand of love; for a man of the Church is wise as of himself; and, in proportion as he is wise, he receives love from the Lord. . . . Love has power through wisdom.

— . But after the wedding the husband represents wisdom, and the wife the love of his wisdom . . . and the wife has this love from the Lord through the wisdom of her husband. The love of the Lord . . . is the love of being wise, with the husband.

32. In the male, the inmost is love, and its covering is wisdom . . . and the inmost in the female is this wisdom of the male, and the covering of it is the derivative love (which) is given the wife by the Lord through the wisdom of the husband; whereas the former love is masculine love, and is the love of being wise, and is given the husband by the Lord according to the reception of wisdom. It is from this that the male is the wisdom of love, and the female the love of this wisdom.

33. (Thus) the male is born into the affection of knowing, understanding, and being wise.

42⁴. Her eyes sparkled with the light of her Heaven, which is flaming, and partakes of the love of wisdom; for the wives in the Third Heaven love their husbands from their wisdom, and in their wisdom . . . This was the origin of her beauty.

44⁹. Love and wisdom are the offspring which are born from the marriage of good and truth.

48a³. In his external, every man is wise; that is, he wants to seem to be wise . . .

—⁴. But a good man is more wise in his internal than in his external . . .

51. The consorts there . . . have spiritual procreation, which is that of love and wisdom. Gen.art.

—³. The first assigned as the cause (of beauty in the female sex) that women have been created . . . affections of the wisdom of the men, and the affection of wisdom is beauty itself. The second . . . that woman was created . . . through the wisdom of the man . . . and therefore she is a form of wisdom inspired with the affection of love; and, as the affection of love is life itself, woman is the life of wisdom, and the male is wisdom, and the life of wisdom is beauty itself.

—⁵. When (our host) spoke, the life of wisdom from his wife was perceived in his discourse . . .

65. The truth (of the heavenly marriage) makes wisdom; and when love accedes to wisdom . . . love becomes love; and when wisdom accedes to love . . . wisdom becomes wisdom. Love truly conjugal is nothing else than the conjunction of love and wisdom . . .

66. The male was created to become wisdom from the love of being wise; and the female was created to become the love of the male from his wisdom . . . so that two consorts are the very forms . . . of the marriage of love and wisdom.

69^e. These (conjugal) delights are exalted according to the wisdom with the husbands . . . because nothing is more blessed to them than to be wise more and more.

75⁵. She is the love of my wisdom, and I am the wisdom of her love; and therefore her love from within veils over my wisdom; and my wisdom from within is in her love.

—⁷. As the woman was born to be the love of the man's wisdom, there are deliciousnesses of the play (of wisdom and love) between us and our wives.

79⁸. Some of the wise ones, so called, of the city, approached us . . .

88. Wisdom cannot come into existence with man except through the love of being wise. If this love is taken away, the man cannot be wise at all. Wisdom from this love is meant by the truth of good . . . But when, from this love, a man has acquired wisdom, and loves it in himself, or himself on account of it, he then forms a love which is the love of wisdom, and is meant by the good of truth . . . There are therefore two loves . . . the prior of which is the love of being wise; and the other . . . the love of wisdom. But if this latter remains with the man, it is an evil love, and is called the . . . love of his Own intelligence . . . This love . . . has been transcribed into the woman, in order to become conjugal love.

90². The Lord adjoins (love to the male) according to . . . his mind to be wise.

93. The (conjugal) sphere inflows into the form of wisdom with men and Angels; for man can increase in wisdom to the end of life . . . and afterwards to eternity . . . and his form is perfected in proportion as he increases in wisdom; and this form does not receive the love of the sex, but that of one of the sex . . . 95.

98. Love truly conjugal exists solely with those who earnestly desire wisdom, and who therefore advance more and more into it. This love does indeed commence in them through the love of the sex, but does not originate from it; for it originates in proportion as wisdom advances and comes forth with it into the light; for wisdom and this love are inseparable companions.

102². (The Rational) is opened solely through wisdom: and when the interiors of the rational mind have been opened, the man becomes a form of wisdom; and this form is the receptacle of love truly conjugal. The wisdom that constitutes this form, and receives this love, is wisdom rational and at the same time moral. Rational wisdom regards the truths and goods that appear interiorly in the man as . . . inflowing from the Lord; and moral wisdom shuns evils and falsities as leprosy, especially lasciviousnesses . . .

103². Four horsemen seen going to the wise ones in the kingdoms of Europe . . .

115⁵. The wisdom that is with males from the Lord feels nothing more delightful than to propagate its truths; and the love of wisdom that is with the wives feels nothing more pleasant than to receive them as in a womb, and thus to conceive, gestate, and bring them forth. Such are the spiritual proliferations with the Angels; and (even) natural proliferations are from the same origin.

[M.] 125². (This takes place only) with men who . . . are not lovers of wisdom, and therefore are not of the Church.

130. That conjugal love is according to the state of the Church, because it is according to the state of wisdom, with man. Ex.

— . What wisdom is; and that it makes a one with the Church. Ex.

— . There are, with man, knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom . . . intelligence is of reason, and wisdom is of life. Regarded in its fulness, wisdom is simultaneously of Knowledges, of reason, and of life; Knowledges precede, reason is formed through them, and wisdom through both, as is the case when a man lives rationally according to the Truths which are Knowledges. Wisdom, therefore, is of reason and life together; it becomes wisdom when it is of reason and thence of life; but is wisdom when it has become of life and thence of reason. The Most Ancients . . . recognised no other wisdom than wisdom of life: this was the wisdom of those called Sophi; but the Ancients . . . recognised as wisdom the wisdom of reason, and these were called Philosophers. But now many call knowledge wisdom; for the learned, the erudite, and the merely knowing are called the wise. Thus has wisdom fallen from its summit to its valley.

—². What wisdom is in its origin, progress, and full state. Ex.

—³. As spiritual things are in the light of Heaven, they by their light enlighten the things that follow in order, and by their heat . . . they animate them; and when this is the case the man has wisdom.

—⁴. As wisdom is of life and thence of reason . . . it may be asked, What is the wisdom of life? In a summary statement, it is to shun evils because they are hurtful to the soul, the commonwealth, and the body; and to do goods because they are profitable to (these). This is the wisdom which is meant by the wisdom with which conjugal love attaches itself; for it (does so) by shunning the evil of adultery as the pest of the soul, commonwealth, and body. And, as this wisdom springs from the spiritual things that are of the Church, it follows that conjugal love is according to the state of the Church, because it is according to the state of wisdom, with a man.

132. On the public exhibitions (or schools) of wisdom there. Des. T.48.

134⁶. Man is born into no knowledge, in order that he may come into all, and advance into intelligence, and through this into wisdom.

137^e. No one can reject the horrible delights of adultery but he who is wise from the Lord; and no one is wise from the Lord unless he does uses from the love of uses.

145². Man becomes spiritual in proportion as his Rational . . . begins to get a soul by influx from Heaven, which is the case in proportion as he is affected and gladdened with wisdom. Ex.

— . Wisdom purified may be compared to alcohol. . .

—³. As spiritual wisdom is in itself such that it grows warmer and warmer with the love of being wise, and, from this, increases to eternity, which takes place as it is perfected as by defecations, castigations, rectifications, intensifications, decantations, and sublimations; and as these are effected by the freeing and withdrawing of the understanding from the fallacies of the senses, and of the will from the allurements of the body, it is evident that conjugal love, whose parent is wisdom, is in like manner made successively more and more pure . . .

—^e. The first state of love . . . is tempered successively as the husband is perfected in wisdom, and the wife loves the wisdom in her husband.

155a³. (The wives said) This is a wisdom which is kept deeply reserved in the hearts of our sex . . .

—⁴. This sense of our sex is called . . . the sport of wisdom with its love, and of love with its wisdom.

161. That the conjunction . . . is received by the man according to his wisdom. —³.

163. That the conjunction of the wife with the rational wisdom of the husband is effected from within; but with his moral wisdom from without. Ex.

— . Wisdom with male men is twofold—rational and moral; their rational wisdom is of the understanding alone, and their moral wisdom is of the understanding and at the same time of the life. . . The things of rational wisdom are . . . called, in general, knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom; and, in special, rationality, judgment, cleverness, erudition, sagacity. Each person has knowledges peculiar to his calling. To rational wisdom pertain also all the knowledges into which youths are initiated in the schools, and by means of which they are afterwards initiated into intelligence . . . such as philosophy, physics, geometry, mechanics, chemistry, astronomy, jurisprudence, politics, ethics, history, and others, through which . . . an entrance is made into rational things, from which is formed rational wisdom.

164. The things of the moral wisdom in males are all the moral virtues . . . and also the spiritual virtues. Enum.

—^e. In all these . . . the justice is of moral wisdom, and the judgment of rational wisdom.

165. The reason the conjunction of the wife with the man's rational wisdom is from within, is that this wisdom is proper to the understanding of men, and climbs into a light in which women are not. This is why women do not speak from this wisdom . . . but listen. That nevertheless such things are with the wives from within, is evident from their listening . . . But . . . the virtues of moral wisdom are for the most part akin to like virtues with women, and partake of the man's intellectual will . . .

168. This perception is the wisdom of the wife, and is not possible with the man; nor is the rational wisdom of the man possible with the wife. Ex.

—^e. Nor is the moral wisdom of the man possible with women, in so far as it partakes of his rational wisdom.

172². This (appropriation of the man's powers) has been provided . . . that the wisdom of the man, which constitutes his soul, may be appropriated to the wife . . .

183³. Love and wisdom without use are only abstract ideas . . . (Fully quoted under LOVE.)

—^e. Conjugal love is according to the love of being wise for the sake of uses, from the Lord.

189. The woman feels the deliciousnesses of her love in the wisdom of the man, because this wisdom is the receptacle . . .

192^e. And the wife derives from the man the bright lustre of his wisdom.

193². The woman was created from the man by the transcription of his Own wisdom, that is, from natural truth; and the love of this was transferred . . . into the woman. (Fully quoted under WIFE.)

195. The things of rational wisdom constitute the man's understanding, and those of moral wisdom, his will; and the wife conjoins herself with these . . .

198. The deliciousness (felt by the wife) in that she wants to be the love of her husband's wisdom. Ex.

—². Thus the love of the wife forms itself by means of the wisdom of the man . . .

200². What is lacking is the return of love by the husband . . . on account of his having no elevation of wisdom, which alone receives the wife's love.

202. That the offspring of those in love truly conjugal . . . have the inclination and faculty, if a son, to perceive the things of wisdom; and if a daughter, to love the things that wisdom teaches. Ex.

208². (The wives said) You glory over us from your wisdom . . . yet our wisdom is more eminent than yours . . . We have this wisdom from creation, and our husbands liken it to instinct. (Fully quoted under WIFE.)

211. That with those in love truly conjugal the faculty of being wise increases; but with those not in conjugal love it decreases. Ex.

— Hence those in this love, love nothing more than to be wise; for a man is wise in proportion as the interiors of his mind are opened; for . . . the higher light is wisdom, and the higher heat is the love of wisdom . . . (Their) spiritual deliciousnesses conjoined with natural . . . make . . . the faculty of being wise. This is why the Angels have conjugal love according to wisdom . . . and why their spiritual offspring are such things as are of wisdom from the father, and of love from the mother . . .

233. A cry heard, Oh how wise! Des. T.334.

261. The reception (of the heat and light of the spiritual Sun) is according to the love of being wise.

266³. In proportion as we do uses from the love of them, the love (of them) increases, and wisdom with it, whereby the communication (of bliss) is effected.

270³. The highest region of the mind, where dwells conjugal love in the love of good, with its wisdom. Rep.

293. (The wives said) We conclude that the deliciousnesses of conjugal love are also those of wisdom . . . We know this from the correspondence of the wisdom in our husbands with the deliciousnesses of conjugal love in ourselves. (Quoted fully under WIFE.)

—⁴. (They said, further) There is spiritual wisdom, and derivative rational and moral wisdom. Spiritual wisdom is to acknowledge the Lord the Saviour as the God of Heaven and earth, and to acquire from Him the truths of the Church, whence comes spiritual rationality; and to live from Him according to them, whence comes spiritual morality. These two our husbands call the wisdom which in general produces love truly conjugal; (for) through this wisdom the interiors of their minds and thence of their bodies are opened . . . The spiritual rational and moral wisdom of our husbands—in respect to marriage specially—has as its end to love the wife alone . . . 294².

—⁵. The state of the husband's wisdom is reception, and also reaction according to the perception . . .

294³. You know not the wisdom and prudence of wives . . .

—⁵. As wisdom alone receives her love, the wife exerts all her endeavours to turn her husband's insanity into wisdom. (Fully quoted under WIFE.)

326⁷. (Thus) spiritual wisdom is the wisdom of wisdom, and is therefore imperceptible to any wise one in the natural world. (And) there is a wisdom more interior or higher, called celestial, the relation of which to spiritual wisdom is like that of spiritual wisdom to natural wisdom; and these inflow in order, according to the Heavens, from the Lord's Divine wisdom, which is infinite.

329². I said . . . You are wise in proportion as your ideas are divisible.

—^e. One natural idea is the containant of innumerable spiritual ideas; and one spiritual idea of innumerable celestial ideas; and hence comes the difference between the celestial wisdom in which are the Angels of the Third Heaven, the spiritual wisdom in which are the Angels of the Second Heaven, and the natural wisdom in which are the Angels of the Ultimate Heaven, and also men.

353. A conversation of the Angels about intelligence and wisdom—that man perceives no otherwise than that both are in him . . . and therefore, to prevent his perishing . . . it has been provided that this love of the man should be transcribed into the wife, and that there should be implanted in her from birth to love the intelligence and wisdom of her man. Ex.

354. A debate among two priests and an ambassador about intelligence and wisdom, and the derivative prudence, as to whether they are from God, or from man.

355⁶. The wife, from her husband's wisdom, receives into herself the love of it; and the husband, from the love of it in his wife, receives into himself wisdom; nay, the wife is actually formed into the love of her husband's wisdom. (Continued under WIFE.)

380⁶. For love and wisdom are life, (and must) have an origin somewhere.

[M.] 400². So . . . every instrumental cause is of wisdom . . . for the receptacle of wisdom is the understanding . . . (So therefore do all operations with man) progress from love, through wisdom, into use. But by wisdom is here meant all that which is of judgment and thought.

432. He who is in love truly conjugal . . . becomes wise more and more; and the more anyone is wise, the more is he a man.

444⁶. The cerebrum is assigned to wisdom and its truths, and therefore he who looks with his face to the Lord receives from Him wisdom, and through this love; whereas he who looks backwards from the Lord, receives love and not wisdom; and love without wisdom is love from man and not from the Lord . . .

461³. The novitiate Spirit . . . inquired where he might find the wise . . .

— . The company who examine effects are called Spirits of knowledges . . . ; those who investigate causes, Spirits of intelligence, abstractedly, intelligences; and those who explore ends, Spirits of wisdom, abstractedly, wisdoms . . .

I. 5². Wisdom is the derivative existere (or coming forth) of life . . .

Ex. 6. The derivative light, in its essence, is wisdom.

—³. Love and wisdom are indivisible . . . for love comes into existence through and according to wisdom.

13. (Thus) in proportion as a man loves wisdom, that is, in proportion as with him wisdom is in the bosom of love, in the same proportion he is an image of God . . .

—². Love itself and wisdom itself are not life, but the esse (or being) of life. (Continued under LOVE.)

14. That the understanding can be elevated into the light—that is, into the wisdom—in which are the Angels, according to the cultivation of the reason . . . Ex.

— . The light of Heaven . . . in its essence is wisdom . . .

— . Wisdom and love proceed from the Lord as a Sun . . . They proceed unitedly . . .

T. 31². By the eternity of God, the Angels perceive the Divinity as to wisdom.

37³. Love . . . produces all forms; but by means of wisdom as a bride and wife . . .

38. That God is . . . truth itself . . . and truth is of wisdom. Ex. . . For all that which proceeds from wisdom is called truth; for wisdom consists of nothing but truths, and it affects its objects with the pleasantness of light . . . Therefore . . . wisdom is the complex of all Truths . . .

39. God, being love itself and wisdom itself, is life itself . . . Ex.

— . 'The Word' = the Divine wisdom; and the Divine wisdom, properly, is life' . . .

—^e. Thus the life of man dwells in the understanding and is such as is his wisdom . . .

40. Wisdom is not creatable . . . 472.

41. That the love and wisdom in God make a one. Gen.art.

—². God is continually operating the conjunction of love and wisdom in man; but man, unless he looks to God . . . is continually operating their division. (Continued under LOVE.)

—^e. Wisdom or faith is as the wife.

42. There are three degrees of love and wisdom, and thence three degrees of life . . .

43. Two things constitute the essence of God—love and wisdom . . . To love others out of itself, to desire to be one with them, and to make them happy . . . constitute the essence of His wisdom also . . . but love wills these things, and wisdom produces them.

50. That to the Divine wisdom from the Divine love belong omnipotence, omniscience, and omnipresence. Gen.art.

— . (These attributes) do not belong to the Divine love through the Divine wisdom. (For) love . . . inflows into wisdom, and resides in it like a king in his kingdom . . . and relinquishes all the government . . . to its judgment . . .

51. 'Judgment' is predicated of wisdom.

53. As God is . . . the very and only love, and the very and only wisdom; and as wisdom from love constitutes the form . . .

68. That man is so far in wisdom concerning good and truth from the Divine omniscience . . . as he lives according to Divine order. Gen.art. 69.

69. (Thus) man cannot be in any truth of wisdom interiorly, except from God . . . In proportion as the mind is elevated into the higher degrees, it is elevated into wisdom, because into the light of Heaven . . .

—². (God, or self, regarded as the source of wisdom. Ill. by comparisons.)

152. In the celestial region of the mind, the man is wise; in the spiritual, intelligent; and in the lowest, knowing.

290². The infinity of spiritual seeds . . . in the Word is evident from the wisdom of the Angels, which is all from the Word, and increases with them to eternity; and the wiser they become, the more clearly they see that wisdom is without end, and perceive that they are only in the courtyard of it, and cannot in the smallest particle attain to the Divine wisdom, which they call an abyss.

350. That the Truths of faith are multiplicable to infinity, is evident from the wisdom of the Angels, in that it increases to eternity; and they say that there is no end to wisdom, and that wisdom is solely from Divine truths analytically divided into forms by means of the light that inflows from the Lord. True human intelligence is from the same source.

354³. A Spirit who appeared simple because he acknowledged the Lord alone, when taken up among the wiser Angels, was as wise as they . . . Such will be the state of those who come into the New Church. Sig.

392². Spiritual heat and light (cause) a blossoming in the mind (which) is wisdom and intelligence.

718. In every sane man there is a faculty of receiving wisdom from the Lord—that is, of multiplying the truths from which it is—to eternity . . .

766. From the time (when a man receives the Lord) he begins . . . to advance into wisdom more and more interior ; and, in proportion as he receives this wisdom from the Lord, he advances through morning into day . . .

Ad. 3/5225. The wisdom of Solomon was merely natural. Ex. 5226.

D. 551. The Spirits of Jupiter are much wiser than our Spirits. 556. 585.

660. On the life of those who are wise from themselves. Ex.

1633. The difference between true wisdom, and imaginary wisdom.

2060. When a man, or Spirit, knows nothing from himself, he is wise for the first time. Ex.

2265. On the wisdom of Spirits, especially that of Angels.

2394. On the intelligence and wisdom of the Angels.

2672. Life is in wisdom . . .

3348. On a certain one who was among the wisest of the world.

4011. Placed all intelligence and wisdom in memory . . .

4662^e. Wisdom from the Lord inflows solely with those who are humble . . .

5188. He who has been in wisdom (here) is in wisdom (there), and this wisdom is appropriated to him. They who have not been in wisdom (here) but in the good of life, can receive wisdom through the former, but it is not appropriated to them ; for when they depart from those to whom wisdom has been appropriated, they are simple, as before.

5189. The knowledge of correspondences and representatives is the ultimate plane of angelic wisdom.

—². I saw one of the ancients, who was in a great angelic Society, depart, and then . . . its wisdom was taken away. He who departed had been in the Knowledges of wisdom, and hence the rest had wisdom by communication. 5194.

5190. On angelic wisdom. Gen.art.

5564. On speech and wisdom in Heaven. Gen.art.

5607. How the Angels have their wisdom from the Word. Ex.

5608. The natural thought of man is the plane in which all things of angelic wisdom cease . . . and such as is the plane, such does their wisdom become . . .

5610. The Angels are sometimes in much wisdom, and sometimes in less . . . according to the direction (in which their thoughts are turned) . . . to men . . .

5626. (Thus) spiritual wisdom increases in proportion as it is removed from a material notion.

5684. Otherwise he stands far outside the palace of wisdom.

—^e. The Ancients were not so sensuous . . . and therefore could be in interior wisdom.

5848. That those who reason about truths . . . do not arrive at the first threshold of wisdom. Ex.

6051¹. That wisdom increases according to chastity. Ex.

D. Min. 4579. Such is modern wisdom. The ancient wisdom . . . taught naked Truths . . .

4654^e. These persons seem very wise before the world.

4655. Free from the vagaries of such wisdom.

—². They who are in such wisdom lose all their freedom . . .

4682. The light has intelligence in it, and the heat, wisdom.

4728. On man's Own prudence and wisdom.

4735. Such believe themselves to be most wise . . .

—^e. When those who are in the persuasion that they are wise above others . . . come to any Society, they take away reflection from them . . .

E. 14². The (celestial) Angels, who are the wisest, receive all their wisdom through hearing, and not through sight . . . This shows that hearing has been given man chiefly to receive wisdom ; and sight, to receive intelligence. Wisdom is to perceive, will, and do ; intelligence is to know and perceive.

126. 'I will give thee the crown of life'=wisdom and the derivative eternal happiness. Ex. (For wisdom and eternal happiness taken together are eternal life . . . E.358².)

147. 'I will give him a white stone'=wisdom and intelligence. Ex.

152. 'His eyes as a flame of fire'= . . . Divine wisdom and intelligence communicated to (such) . . . All the wisdom and intelligence possessed by Angels and men is not theirs, but is the Lord's in them.

— . Truths interiorly seen and acknowledged constitute intelligence ; and these, together with goods interiorly perceived and thence seen, constitute wisdom.

—². That 'the eye'=the understanding of truth, that is, intelligence and wisdom. Ill.

[E.] 198. 'Shall be clothed in white garments'=intelligence and wisdom according to truths and their reception. . . For all intelligence and wisdom is from Divine truths, according to the perception of them, and their reception in the life . . . The intelligence and wisdom that is not from Divine truths, but is solely from worldly things, is not intelligence and wisdom, but only knowledge and the derivative faculty of reasoning. (Continued under INTELLIGENCE.)

218. Those in spiritual love . . . are in intelligence; and those in celestial love . . . and the derivative perception of truth, are in wisdom.

236². But to know and think falsities is not to be intelligent and wise; for intelligence is of truth, and wisdom is of the derivative life.

237². 'Thy wisdom and thy knowledge hath misled thee . . .' (Is.xlvii.10)=those who believe that they know all things and are more intelligent than all others, when yet they know and understand nothing of truth . . .

280. 'Man'=the affection of truth and also wisdom; for (these) act as a one, since he who is in the spiritual affection of truth . . . is conjoined with the Lord . . . and from this he has wisdom . . . And man is man from wisdom . . . and therefore those who are wise, in the light of Heaven appear as men, with a grace and beauty according to their wisdom; while those who are not wise—that is, who are in . . . merely natural affection—appear as monsters. Ill.

—³. Intelligence is distinguished from wisdom by this: that . . . wisdom is of the understanding of truth such as belongs to the celestial man.

298. Divine good has all its intelligence and wisdom through Divine truth . . .

—². 'Right hand' . . . predicated of men=power and wisdom. Ill.

318. The derivative wisdom and intelligence in Heaven and the Church. Sig. and Ex.

— Unless wisdom and intelligence is formed from (truth from good) it is not wisdom and intelligence, but folly and insanity . . . So that whatever is from what is man's Own is contrary to wisdom and intelligence . . . The reason wisdom and intelligence is mentioned, is that wisdom is of truth from good . . . and intelligence is of truth through which is good . . . Those in the Celestial Kingdom are in wisdom . . . and those in the Spiritual Kingdom in intelligence . . .

324¹⁰. 'The wise men from the east' (Matt.ii.11)=those in the Knowledges of truth and good. (The subject ex.)

370². That there was no longer any wisdom; for all wisdom is of truth from good. Sig.

376⁶. The appropriation of good, thus wisdom, for wisdom comes when truths are committed to life. Sig.

—³⁷. 'Woe to the wise in their own eyes, and the intelligent before their own faces' (Is.v.21)=those who [are wise] from their Own intelligence, and those who [are intelligent] from their Own affection.

408. All the internal and external goods and truths through which are wisdom and intelligence. Sig. and

Ex. . . For there is wisdom from internal . . . and intelligence from external . . . goods and truths.

— Wisdom is distinguished from intelligence thus—wisdom is from the light of Heaven; and intelligence is from the light of the world enlightened by the light of Heaven. This is why wisdom is predicated of spiritual goods and truths, and intelligence of natural goods and truths . . . for the spiritual mind is in the light of Heaven . . . and the natural in the light of the world. (Continued under INTELLIGENCE.)

412⁴. 'To make His faces shine . . .'=to enlighten in Divine truth, and to bestow intelligence and wisdom; and 'to lift up His faces and give peace'=to infill with Divine good and to bestow love. Both are necessary for man to be wise; for all (there) are lighted by the light which is from the Lord as a Sun, and yet only those become intelligent and wise who are at the same time in love . . .

507². Intelligence and wisdom is from the truths that are from Heaven. This intelligence and wisdom, being from Heaven—that is, through Heaven from the Lord—is living, because it is the very spiritual life of man. But intelligence and wisdom from falsities is impossible . . .

544^e. Wickedness is not wisdom; for wisdom is of truth from good . . .

617¹⁶. If (the celestials) imbue the natural man and its memory with the Knowledges of spiritual truth and good, and wish to be wise from these, they become stupid; although they are the wisest of all . . .

—^e. As 'to eat'=to perceive the quality of a thing, and as this is perceived by the taste . . . taste-sapor, and to have taste-sapere, are predicated of the perception of a Thing; and from this sapientia also.

625⁴. The Angels, who are in the spiritual sense of the Word . . . have no idea of person, or place . . . It is from this that they have intelligence and wisdom . . . (which) are ineffable.

629⁸. Celestial intelligence, which is called wisdom. Sig.

641^e. For to become more interior is to become wiser; and (the converse).

644¹⁹. By His wisdom and by His intelligence He stretcheth out the heavens' (Jer.x.12; li.15). . . 'Wisdom' and 'intelligence'=the proceeding Divine from which is the wisdom of good and the intelligence of truth in Angels and men.

654¹³. 'The trees of Eden in the garden of God'=the perceptions of truth from celestial good, whence is wisdom . . . 'Eden in the garden of God'=wisdom which is from the good of love.

—⁵⁰. 'How say ye . . . I am the son of the wise . . . Where now are thy wise men?' (Is.xix.11,12)=that the wisdom and intelligence of the natural man from the spiritual has perished; for the natural man has been formed in order to receive intelligence and wisdom from the spiritual man . . .

655⁹. 'I send unto you prophets, wise men, and scribes' (Matt.xxiii.34)=the truth and good of doctrine and of the Word . . . 'Wise men'=the good of doctrine.

675⁷. 'To trade' = to acquire intelligence and wisdom by means of Knowledges. —⁸.

696¹⁷. 'The spirit of wisdom and intelligence' (Is. xi. 2) = that thence He has Divine wisdom . . . By 'the spirit of wisdom' is meant the Divine Celestial, which is the proceeding Divine received by the (celestial) Angels . . .

701. In proportion as man receives of this affection (of knowing and understanding truths, and of willing and doing them) in the same proportion he becomes wise . . .

744. The joy of the Angels because of the light and wisdom they then had. Sig. and Ex.

823³. (The celestial Angels) are in humility of heart, knowing that wisdom is to perceive that the things they are wise in, relatively to those they are not wise in, are scarcely anything.

832⁶. As is the love (of the Angels) such is their wisdom and intelligence; those in the third degree of love and the derivative wisdom, live in an atmosphere as it were purely ethereal; those in the second degree of love and the derivative intelligence, live in an atmosphere as it were purely aerial . . .

874. The Angels have wisdom according to the reception of Divine truth, not only in doctrine, but also in life . . .

—². It is believed that those have wisdom . . . who know Divine truths, and who speak them from knowledge, although they do not live according to them; but I can attest that such have no wisdom. They appear to be in wisdom (only) while they are speaking . . . But . . . they who live according to the Divine truths, think wisely also when by themselves . . . (From experience.)

914². Like the difference between the wisdom of Angels, and the wisdom of men. The wisdom of men, as compared with the wisdom of the Angels, is as knowledge to intelligence . . .

957³. Such as is the idea of God, such is . . . the perception, intelligence, and wisdom . . . for these are from the Lord according to the conjunction with Him.

998⁴. The amount and quality of intelligence and wisdom are in proportion to the amount and quality of the conjugal love. (Fully quoted under WIFE.) . . . (But) by intelligence and wisdom is not meant ingenuity in reasoning about truths and good, but the faculty of seeing and understanding them . . .

1153³. In proportion as a man knows truths . . . and does them as of himself, the Lord, through love, introduces him into wisdom, and conjoins love with wisdom, and wisdom with love, and causes them to be a one, because they are a one in Him.

1170. All who have believed themselves to be in wisdom, in intelligence, and in knowledge, and have confirmed the falsities of that . . . religiosity . . . Sig. and Ex.

— 'A pilot' = those in wisdom . . .

—⁶. Such as is the love, such is the wisdom . . . because the love is the being of man's life; and the wisdom is the derivative coming into existence of his life; so that the love forms itself in the understanding; and the form it there receives is what is called wisdom; for, as they both have one essence, it is evident that the wisdom is the form of the love, or the love in form.

1179. Joy of heart in Heaven and the Church in those who are in wisdom and in intelligence from the Word. Sig. and Ex.

— Those who are in doctrine from the Word are called 'the intelligent'; and those who teach the Word, 'the wise.'

1186. No longer any wisdom, intelligence, and knowledge. Sig. and Ex.

1190². All the eminent (in Heaven) are wise . . . This eminence . . . can be acquired in the world . . . by all who love wisdom . . . To love wisdom is to love uses that are true uses.

1191². The governors (in Heaven) are ordained and subordinated by the Lord according to their wisdom and intelligence. Their chief, who excels the rest in wisdom, dwells in the midst, in a palace. Des.

De Verbo 11. That the wisdom of the Angels of the three Heavens is from the Lord through the Word . . . Ex.

— This wisdom (of the Angels of the three Heavens) does not appear in our Word, but still is in it (in this way)—There are three Heavens . . . in the highest is angelic wisdom in the highest degree, which is called celestial wisdom; in the middle is angelic wisdom in the middle degree, which is called spiritual wisdom; and in the ultimate is angelic wisdom in the ultimate degree, which is called spiritual and celestial natural; and in the world . . . is wisdom in the lowest degree, which is called natural. All these degrees of wisdom are in the Word . . . in simultaneous order . . .

19⁴. The men of the Earth . . . are called knowing; the (spiritual) Angels, intelligent; and the (celestial) Angels, wise.

24². The intelligence of the (spiritual) Angels is ineffable and incomprehensible to those in the Natural Kingdom; and the wisdom of the (celestial) Angels is (so) to those in the Spiritual Kingdom. And as to the Lord's Divine wisdom, it so transcends all wisdom, that there is no proportion; for all the intelligence and wisdom of the Angels is finite . . .

D. Love xi³. The wisdom (in the Heavens) surpasses (that) of the world a thousandfold; for, in the Spiritual World, the light and the wisdom are in an equal degree of perfection. D. Wis. i⁴.

D. Wis. i⁵. Two ways appeared, one called the way of wisdom, and the other the way of folly . . . (Out of 300 of the learned) 260 entered the way of folly, and only 40 the way of wisdom . . . Des.

iii. 2. That the Lord conjoins Himself with man . . . in the (understanding) through wisdom. Ex.

3. Love and wisdom are two distinct things, exactly as are heat and light . . . Yet in the forming of things they do not operate as two, but as one (as also) do heat and light . . . The union of love and wisdom is reciprocal . . . love acts, and wisdom reacts . . .

[D. Wis. 3]^f. As . . . love and wisdom form the embryo the womb, there are two receptacles, one for love, and the other for wisdom; and therefore also there are (pairs of parts) in the body . . . 4. Ex. 5. Ex. See WILL at v².

4³. In beasts . . . the beginnings of their life are not receptacles of the Lord's love and wisdom. Ex.

5. There is no life without the co-operation of the love and wisdom through which the embryo is formed and vivified.

iv². As to love a likeness, and as to wisdom an image, of the Lord.

v. That after birth the will becomes the receptacle of love, and the understanding, of wisdom. Or, perhaps, thus . . . After birth the receptacle of love becomes the will, and that of wisdom the understanding. Gen. art.

— The Lord has provided means for the fuller and fuller reception in these of the love and wisdom from Himself as man matures and grows old.

vii. 2. The Spiritual Kingdom is in wisdom from (love to the Lord). Ex.

—². As all wisdom and intelligence is according to the affections, . . . each Society has its own peculiar respiration . . . and pulsation. Ex. . . The respiration makes a one with the wisdom of the understanding . . .

4². If the love and wisdom do not act conjoinedly, no rational operation can take place. If . . . wisdom withdraws, the will . . . becomes as it were dead . . .

5³. (Thus) the Angels have a wisdom which is incomprehensible . . . to the natural man.

viii². Regarded in itself, man's angelic mind is wisdom from the Lord from love to Him. . .

— (When the body is separated) the man comes into angelic wisdom, because the higher degrees . . . are opened.

ix. For all that wisdom teaches is truth. Ex.

x. That there is a reciprocal conjunction of love and wisdom. Gen. art.

—³. By the life of the understanding is meant wisdom, intelligence, and knowledge.

xl. That wisdom comes into existence in faith. Gen. art. 1a.

De Conj. 24. Angelic wisdom increases through their marriages, which is instead of procreation in them . . .

Coro. 41². That wisdom flourished in Arabia, is evident from the journey of the Queen of Sheba . . . and from the three wise men.

A. 4195. Such heaps were... for a witness... that a covenant had been made there...

4197. 'This heap is a witness between me and thee' (Gen.xxxi.48)... 'A witness'=the confirmation of good through truth... (Thus these words)=a testification of the conjunction of the good signified by 'Laban' with the Divine good of the Lord's Natural, consequently the conjunction of the Lord, through good, with the gentiles. The truths of this good are what testify of the conjunction.

—³. That 'a witness'=the confirmation of good through truth, and of truth by good. Ill.

—⁴. 'The two witnesses' (Rev.xi.)=good and truth, that is, the good in which there is truth, and the truth which is from good, both confirmed in hearts. (=the Word of both Testaments in so far as they testify about the Lord. 9548³.) (The good of love to the Lord and the good of charity towards the neighbour, being from the Lord, are called 'the two witnesses.' 9780³.) (=all who are in the goods of love through the truths of doctrine, thus those who are regenerate. 666.)

—⁶. 'A witness,' therefore, in the supreme sense, =the Lord, because He is the Divine truth which confirms. Ill.

—⁷. That all truth must stand on the word of two or three witnesses, and not on that of one (Num. xxxv.30; Deut.xvii.6,7; xix.15; Matt.xviii.16) is founded on the Divine law that one truth does not confirm good, but a number of truths. Ex.

4201. 'God is witness between me and thee' (Gen. xxxi.50)=confirmation by the Divine.

4580. Statues as a witness. Ex.

5028. Joseph's 'garment'=a witness... because ultimate truth, when taken away, is a witness to the natural man against the spiritual. Ex.

8908. 'To bear false witness' (See LIE-mendacium, here, and at Life 87.)

9071. 'It hath been testified' (Ex.xxi.29)=it hath been made known.

9172. 'He shall bring it for a witness' (Ex.xxii.13)=the same confirmed.

9250. 'To be a witness of violence' (Ex.xxiii.1)=no affirmation of such things as are contrary to the good of charity; for 'a witness'=confirmation.

9818²⁶. 'He shall bear witness of Me' (John xv.26)... 'To bear witness about the Lord'=to teach Him.

S. 67⁵. 'Thou shalt not bear witness falsely,' by man is understood to be to lie and defame; by a spiritual Angel, to say and persuade that falsity is truth, and evil good, and the converse; and by a celestial Angel, to blaspheme the Lord and the Word. Life 87. R.462. T.236⁴. Compare E.1083⁷.

R. 6. 'Who hath borne witness of the Word of God' (Rev.i.2) being said of John, =who from the heart, and thus in light, receive Divine truth from the Word... These 'bear witness,' that is, see, acknowledge, receive from the heart in light, and confess, the truths of the Word... (=to those who in heart acknowledge the Divine truth. E.10.)

—². As to the spiritual signification of 'bearing witness,' it is predicated of the Truth, because, in the world, the Truth must be borne witness to; and (then) it is acknowledged. But in Heaven the Truth itself bears witness about itself...

16. 'He is the faithful witness' (ver.5)=that He is the Divine truth itself. 'Witness' is predicated of the Truth, and the Truth bears witness of itself, thus it = the Lord, who is the Divine truth itself. (=from Whom is all truth in Heaven. The Lord as to the Divine Human is called 'the faithful witness,' because in Heaven the Divine truth proceeding from Him bears witness of Him. Ex. and Ill. E.27.)

199. 'The Amen, the faithful and true witness' (Rev. iii.14)=the Lord as to the Word, which is the Divine truth from Him... 'The faithful and true witness,' when said of the Lord, =the Divine Truth which is from Him in the Word. Whether you say that the Lord bears witness of Himself, or that the Word bears witness of Him, is the same thing... (=from whom is all truth and everything of faith... for 'a witness,' when said of the Lord,=the Divine truth which is from Him, and thus everything of faith . . . The Divine truth proceeding from the Lord is called 'a witness,' because it is His Divine in Heaven and the Church, in which He Himself is, and which is Himself there. Further ex. E.228.)

730. 'Drunk with the blood . . . of the witnesses of Jesus' (Rev.xvii.6)=insane from adulterated . . . truths and goods from the Lord through the Word in the Church. (=violence inflicted on those truths of the Word which teach that the Lord alone is to be adored. E.1050.)

953. 'I Jesus have sent Mine Angel to bear witness unto you of these things in the Churches' (Rev.xxii.16)=a testimony by the Lord before the whole Christian world, that it is true that the Lord alone has made manifest the things described in this Book . . . The Angel did indeed bear witness of it, but not from himself, but from the Lord, as is evident from the words in verse 20 . . . 'To bear witness' is said of the Truth . . .

960. 'He that beareth witness of these things saith' (ver.20)=the Lord, who has revealed the Apocalypse and has now opened it, bearing witness of this Gospel . . .

M. 307. Before the celebration of the nuptials, the conjugal covenant must be ratified in the presence of witnesses. Ex.

T. 321. 'To answer false witness against the neighbour,' that is, to bear witness falsely, in the natural sense, the meaning nearest the letter is to act as a false witness before a judge, or before others not in a court of justice . . . In a wider natural sense, this commandment forbids lies of every kind, and politic hypocrisies, which have an evil end in view; and also to traduce and defame the neighbour . . . In the widest natural sense, are meant plots, deceptions, and evils of design . . .

322. In the spiritual sense, by 'to bear witness falsely' is meant to persuade that the falsity of faith is the truth of faith, and that the evil of life is the good of life, and the converse . . .

323. In the celestial sense, by 'to bear witness falsely' is meant to blaspheme the Lord and the Word, and thus to banish the Truth itself from the Church . . . On the other hand, by 'to bear witness,' in this sense, is meant to speak the Truth . . .

779. I testify (this) in Truth.

E. 10². 'To bear witness'=to acknowledge in heart. Ex.

401⁸. 'A faithful witness in the clouds' (Ps.lxxxix.37)=the Word in the sense of the letter, which is called 'a witness' because it bears witness. (=that He is the Divine truth; for 'a witness,' when said of the Lord,=that which proceeds from Him, and, as this is His, it bears witness respecting Him. 594⁹.)

635². The reason these goods and truths are meant by 'the two witnesses,' is that they—that is, all who are in them—acknowledge and confess the Lord; for it is the proceeding Divine, which is called Divine good and Divine truth . . . which bear witness concerning Him . . . For it is the Divine which bears witness concerning the Divine, and not man, from himself . . . 638⁴.

—³. As all the acknowledgment and confession of the Lord . . . is from the Lord Himself, and as 'to bear witness'=to confess it, therefore 'to bear witness' (has this signification) in the Lord's words about Himself. Ill.

935². 'Thou shalt not bear witness falsely' includes also not to lie and blaspheme; for (these) also are false testimonies.

1019². The eighth commandment, 'Thou shalt not be a false witness,' in the proximate sense,=to lie against the neighbour, by accusing him falsely. In the internal sense, it=to call what is just unjust, and what is unjust just, and to confirm this by falsities. In the inmost sense, it=to falsify the truth and good of the Word, and, on the other hand, to prove a falsity of doctrine to be true by confirming it by fallacies, appearances, fabrications, scientific falsely applied, sophistries, and the like. The confirmations themselves and the derivative persuasions, are false testimonies, for they are false testifications. . . In a word, every falsification of truth, whether spiritual, moral, or civil, which is done from an evil heart, is a false testimony.

513. 'The second woe is past; behold, the third woe cometh quickly' (Rev.xi.14)=lamentation over the perverted state of the Church, and finally a last lamentation, of which below. (=lamentation over the final vastation of the Church, now certainly at hand. E.680.)

558. 'Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea' (Rev.xii.12)=lamentation over those who are in the internals and externals of the doctrine of faith alone . . . (=lamentation over those who become merely natural and sensuous. E.752.)

769. 'Alas! alas! that great city Babylon' (Rev.

xviii.10)=grievous lamentation (over) that religiosity. . . . As 'woe'=lamentation over future calamity, unhappiness, and damnation, 'Woe, woe' (or 'Alas, alas') =grievous lamentation. R.785. 788. E.1134. 1176.

E. 654³⁹. 'Woe to the refractory sons' (Is.xxx.1)=lamentation over the condemnation of those who avert themselves.

918⁸. 'Woe is me . . . I am become as the gatherings of the summer, as the gleanings of the vintage' (Micah vii.1)=grief on account of the vastation of good and of the derivative truth in the Church.

1165. 'Woe, woe'=lamentation, when it is said 'Woe! (or Alas!) that city'; but it=a curse when it is said 'Woe to that city.'

Wolf. Lupus.

A. 45. Things that are evil in man are signified by . . . wolves, etc.

430. 'The wolf shall dwell with the lamb' (Is.xi.6). 'The lamb'=the [inmost] degree of innocence and love; and 'the wolf'=its opposite. 3994³. 10132³. (See D.2119.) Such is what sometimes happens when deceitful Societies have been (formed).

E. 195¹³. 'Beware of false prophets, who . . . inwardly are ravening wolves' (Matt.vii.15)=those who teach falsities as if they were truths; but who, when by themselves . . . think of nothing but themselves and the world, and study to deprive all others of truths.

355²⁴. Their cunning in destroying truths . . . is signified by 'their horses are more acute than wolves of the evening' (Hab.i.8). (=cunning in deceiving by fallacies. 780⁸.)

780⁶. 'A wolf'=the evil that is opposite to innocence, and that endeavours to destroy it.

—. 'The wolf of the plains shall lay them waste' (Jer.v.6)=the derivative dominion of evil . . . destroying the truths and goods of the Church.

1200³. Wolves are seen in Hell.

Wolff. (Christian.) Wolffus.

Wolffian. Wolffianus.

U. 38. Spirits of Mercury came to . . . Christian Wolff, desiring to be instructed by him in various matters; but when they perceived that the things he said were not elevated above the sensuous things of the natural man, because when he spoke he was thinking about honour; and that he wanted, as in the world, to put together various things into series, and from them to infer other things again and again continuously . . . they ceased to interrogate him, and merely asked, How is this called? How that? and as he replied to these questions also by material ideas . . . they departed from him.

I. 17². (Such) cannot avoid terminating the ideas of their thought in . . . the simple substances of Wolff, and thus closing their understanding . . . so that it cannot even think from reason about spiritual influx, because it cannot think of any progression; for, says the author respecting his simple substance, if it is divided it falls to nothing . . .

19. Behind Leibnitz stood a person holding the skirt of his garment, who, I was told, was Wolff.

T. 90². Like the Wolffian simple substance, in which, as that author himself says, are all things of the Son's merit; but that it cannot be divided . . .

335⁹. I (then) saw Leibnitz and Wolff near me, who paid close attention to the reasons advanced by the angelic Spirit. Leibnitz came forward, and expressed his concurrence; but Wolff went away, both denying and affirming, for he did not excel in interior judgment as did Leibnitz.

J. (Post.) 262. On Leibnitz and Wolff. Gen.art.

263. Leibnitz wondered that Wolff had held that his monad—which he calls a simple substance—was created out of nothing, and that when divided it falls to nothing; and yet had attributed changes of state to it . . . Wolff said that he had wanted, by the definitions of his simple substances, to captivate the minds of theologians, who want it to be believed that all things have been created by God out of nothing, immediately; and that he was not aware that his followers, by confirming these principles, would close against themselves the ways to angelic wisdom, which is founded upon natural Truths.

A. 151. 'The rib . . . 'He builded into a woman' (Gen.ii.22) . . . 'A woman' = what is man's Own-proprium—vivified by the Lord. 'He brought her to the man' = that what is his Own was granted him. For the posterity of this Church . . . did not want to be . . . a celestial man, but wanted to lead themselves . . . and therefore what was their Own was granted them, but vivified by the Lord, and therefore it is called 'woman,' and afterwards 'wife.' 154². 155. (It is called 'wife' in no. 156, although it is the same word in the Hebrew.)

152. That what is man's Own is signified by 'the woman,' may be known from the fact that it was the woman who was beguiled; for nothing ever beguiles man but what is his Own; or, what is the same, the love of self and the world.

153. It is said that 'the rib was built into a woman,' and not that the woman was 'created,' or 'formed,' or 'made' . . . because 'building' = raising up that which is fallen.

155^e. 'Jehovah hath created a new thing in the earth—a woman shall compass a man' (Jer.xxxi.22). This signifies the heavenly marriage, and by 'the woman' is signified what is man's Own vivified by the Lord . . . for this is of such a nature that it 'encompasses,' as a rib made flesh encompasses the heart.

191. The love of self, or man's Own love, is represented (in Gen.iii.) by 'the woman.'

194. 'The serpent . . . said to the woman' (ver.1) = (to) what is man's Own. 205.

207, 208. 'The woman saw that the tree was good for food . . . and she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and she gave also unto her man with her, and he did eat' (ver.6). . . This was the fourth posterity of the Most Ancient Church, who suffered themselves to be seduced by their Own love, and were not willing to believe things revealed, unless they saw them confirmed by things of sense and memory—knowledge-scientificis.

229. 'The woman whom Thou gavest to be with me

she gave me of the tree, and I did eat. And Jehovah God said unto the woman, Wherefore hast thou done this? And the woman said, The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat' (vers.12,13) = that the Rational of the man suffered itself to be deceived by what was his Own, which was dear to him, that is, by the love of self, so that he believed nothing unless he saw and felt it.

250. 'I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed' (ver.15). . . 'The serpent,' here, = all evil in general; in special, the love of self; 'the woman' = the Church . . . and 'the seed of the woman' = faith in the Lord. 255, Ex.

252. That 'the woman' = the Church. Ex.

253. The Church is called 'woman' from its heavenly and angelic proprium (that is, from what is its Own made heavenly and angelic). Ill.

256. The Lord Himself also is called 'the seed of the woman,' both because He alone gives faith, and thus is faith, and because it pleased Him to be born, and that in such a Church as had fallen entirely into an infernal and diabolical proprium . . . in order that of His Divine power He might unite, in His human essence, the Divine celestial proprium to the human proprium, so that they should become one in Him . . . As the Lord is thus 'the seed of the woman,' it is not called 'it,' but 'he.'

261. 'And unto the woman He said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth sons, and thine obedience shall be to thy man, and he shall rule over thee' (ver.16). 'The woman' now = the Church, from what was its Own-proprio, which it loved . . . 'Sorrow' = combat, and anxiety. . . 'Conception' = all thought. 'Sons brought forth in sorrow' = truths. . . 'The man' = the Rational, that . . . would rule over the Church.

262. 'The woman,' here, = the Church perverted by what was its Own, because it is treating of the posterity of the Most Ancient Church.

1272. How the antediluvian women were dressed.

1496. 'I might have taken her to me for a woman' (Gen.xii.19) = that so the truth . . . might have had violence done to it.

1719. '(He brought back) the women and the people' (Gen.xiv.16) = both the goods and the truths.

1907. 'She gave her to Abram . . . for a woman' (Gen.xxvi.3) = conjunction through the incitement of the affection of truth. . . Hagar was not given for a wife, but for a woman, because . . . it is not a marriage unless it be of one man with one wife . . .

2200. 'It had ceased to be with Sarah . . . as with women' (Gen.xviii.11) = that (the Human with the Lord) could no longer remain so.

2348. 'Old women' = goods confirmed.

2516. 'Thou wilt die because of the woman' (Gen.xx.3) = that the doctrine of faith would be null if the Rational were consulted . . . 'Sister,' here called 'woman,' = the Rational.

2708⁷. 'The woman' who 'fled into the wilderness' (Rev.xii.)=the temptation of the Church.

3024. 'Thou shalt not take a woman for my son of the daughters of the Canaanite' (Gen.xxiv.3)=that the Divine Rational was not to be conjoined with any affection that was in disagreement with truth. 'To take a woman'=to be conjoined by a covenant of marriage. . . By 'the woman' who was to be associated by a covenant of marriage, is meant the Divine truth itself, which was to be called forth from the natural man by the common way.

3030. 'Perhaps the woman is not willing to go after me to this land' (Gen.xxiv.5)=a doubting of the natural man respecting that affection as to whether it was separable; for 'the woman'=truth—here, from the Natural—which was to be conjoined with the Divine good of the Rational; and, as all conjunction is effected by means of affection, by 'the woman' is signified the affection of that truth.

3211. 'He took Rebekah, and she was to him for a woman. . .' (Gen.xxiv.67)=the conjunction of good and truth. . . The reason she was said to be 'for a woman,' and not 'for a wife,' is that between rational good and the truth called forth from the Natural and made Divine, there is not a marriage, but a covenant which resembles the marriage covenant.

3236. Abraham's 'woman' (Keturah)=the Lord as to the Divine truth adjoined to Divine spiritual good.

— Truth is what the wife represents, because it is in the second place, and therefore, in the Word . . . the Church is called 'a woman,' etc.

3242⁴. 'The women who had Known a man' (Num. xxxi.17)=affections of what is false.

3398. 'One of the people might lightly have lain with thy woman' (Gen.xxvi.10)=that (Divine truth) might have been adulterated. . . 'Woman' (here, Rebekah)=Divine truth. 3399, Ex.

3470. 'He took as a woman Judith' . . . (Gen.xxvi.34)=the adjunction of natural truth from another source . . . for 'a woman'=truth adjoined to good; here, natural truth adjoined to natural good.

3662. 'Thou shalt not take a woman of the daughters of Canaan' (Gen.xxvii.1)=provided it be not conjoined with affections of falsity and evil.

3681. 'To take him from thence a woman' (ver.6)=conjunction through the affection of truth; for 'a woman'=the affection of truth.

3917. 'She gave him Bilhah . . . for a woman' (Gen. xxx.4)=the affirmative medium adjoined . . . for 'to give for a woman'=to adjoin.

3974². 'The woman' (of the Hebrew servant)=the affection of natural good.

4061. The separation of the good and truth represented by Jacob and his women from the good signified by Laban. Tr.

4449. 'Give her to him for a woman' (Gen.xxxiv.8)=a longing for conjunction with this new Church . . . 4457.

4627. A woman appeared (at a bath) who soon vanished into a blackish cloud. . . She = such female insidiators. Des. —³.

4658⁵. I saw a woman who stretched out her hand, wishing to stroke the cheek (of Aristotle), and he said that when he was in the world such a woman was often seen by him, who as it were stroked his cheek, and that her hand was beautiful. The angelic Spirits said that such women were sometimes seen by the ancients, and were called by them Pallases; and that she appeared to him from those Spirits who, when they lived as men in ancient times, were delighted with ideas, and indulged in cogitations, but without philosophy; and because such Spirits were with him . . . they presented such a woman representatively. D.3952.

4823. For, in the Word, 'a man-viri'=falsity; and his 'woman,' evil.

5946. '(Carriages) for your infants and for your women' (Gen.xlv.19)=for those who do not as yet know the interior things of the Church . . . For 'women'=the affections of truth; for when 'men-viri'=truths, their 'women'=the affections of truth; and, conversely, when 'men-viri'=goods, their 'women'=truths; but in this case the men are called 'husbands.' The affections of truth . . . do not know the interior things of the Church, except through the truths, called 'the men.' Without these, the affections are like the will without the Intellectual . . .

6014. '(The sons of Israel carried) their women' (Gen.xlvi.5)=the things of charity; for 'women'=goods when their men=truths. 8337.

6432⁴. 'Two women' (Ezek.xxiii.2) which are 'Jerusalem' and 'Samaria'=the Church.

6684. 'The Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women' (Ex.i.19)=that the scientifics of the Church are not such as the scientifics which are contrary to them . . . For 'women'=the things of the Church.

6718. 'The woman conceived' (Ex.ii.2)=the first of the birth of the Divine law . . . 'The woman,' here=the same as 'the daughter of Levi' whom 'the man of the house of Levi' married, namely, truth conjoined with good.

6740. 'A woman a nurse from the Hebrew women' (ver.7)=the insinuation of good from the Church itself.

6747. 'The woman took the child, and suckled him' (ver.9)=that good from the Church was insinuated into it. 'The woman'=the Church.

6916. 'Every woman shall ask of her neighbour . . . (Ex.iii.22)=that the good of everyone will be enriched . . . For 'a woman'=the affection of the good of charity. . . The reason a woman was to ask, is that by 'a woman' is signified the good of charity, and this is what is to be enriched ; for good, in order to be good, must have truths which qualify it. Ex.

— . That 'women'=affections. Refs.

8809. 'Come not near a woman' (Ex.xix.15)=the purification of the good of faith ; for the marriages among the Israelitish nation were impure . . . hence 'not to come near a woman'=to abstain from what is impure.

8977. For 'the woman' of the Hebrew servant=delight (not good) conjoined with truth. Ex.

—³. But good from a spiritual origin is meant by the woman whom the master gives to his servant ; but as this cannot be conjoined it was ordered that when the servant went out, the woman should be the master's, and also her sons and daughters. Ex. 8979. 8980. 8981. 8982. 8983.

9042. 'Shall strike a pregnant woman' (Ex.xxi.22)=injury of the good that is from truth . . . (Thus) 'a pregnant woman'=the state of the formation of good from truths.

9046. 'The woman'=good.

9065. 'When an ox shall gore a man or a woman' (Ex.xxi.28)=if the affection of evil in the Natural shall injure the truth or the good of faith. 9073.

9184. 'He shall endow her to himself for a woman' (Ex.xxii.16)=a pledge of consent to a lawful conjunction.

9995⁶. 'The woman of Sidon' (1 Kings xvii.10)=the Church that is in the Knowledges of truth and good.

10402. 'Women' (Ex.xxxii.2)=evils of the Church.

H. 368. The woman is born to be voluntary, thus to think from the will, as is evident from her inclination or connate nature, and also from her form ; (for) a woman acts from affection . . . and has a smoother and more beautiful face, a higher voice, and a more tender body. . . Hence, in the Word, 'a virgin,' and 'a woman'=the affection of good ; and the Church is called 'a woman' and 'a virgin' from the affection of good and of truth.

369. A woman enjoys both understanding and will, but still in her the will predominates, and a human being is according to that which predominates.

'And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place' (ver.14)=the Divine circumspection for that Church, and protection while it is still among a few. By 'the woman' is signified a New Church. (=the spiritual intelligence and circumspection which the Lord gives those who are of that Church. 'The woman'=the Church that is called the New Jerusalem, consequently the men of that Church. E.759.)

562. 'Where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent' (id.)=that on account of the cunning of those who seduce, it is provided with circumspection that the New Church may come among more, until it grows to its appointed state—statutum. (=until the Church grows, and comes to its fulness. E.761.)

563. 'And the serpent cast out after the woman . . . water as a flood, that he might cause her to be swallowed up . . .' (ver.15)=reasonings from falsities in abundance to destroy the Church. E.763, Ex.

564. 'And the earth helped the woman; and the earth opened its mouth, and swallowed up the flood . . .' (ver.16)=that (these) reasonings fall to nothing from the spiritual truths rationally understood, which the Michaels, of whom the New Church consists, advance. By 'the earth that helped the woman' is signified the Church as to doctrine . . . and it is truths from the Word, by which 'the earth'—that is, the Church—helps the woman; and by 'opening its mouth' is signified to adduce these truths. (=that those who are of a Church that is not in truths afforded assistance, and did not receive the cunning reasonings . . . Ex. E.764.)

565. 'And the dragon was angry against the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, who keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ' (ver.17)=the hatred kindled with those who believe themselves wise from their confirmations of the mystical union of the Divine and the Human in the Lord, and of justification by faith alone, against those who acknowledge the Lord alone as the God of Heaven and earth, and that the decalogue is the law of life, [shown by] their assailing novitiates with the design of seducing them. (=the hatred of those who are meant by 'the dragon,' against the Church which is the New Jerusalem, and which is kindled by their perceiving that it is favoured by many. E.767.)

620. 'These are they who have not been defiled with women, for they are virgins' (Rev.xiv.4)=that they have not adulterated the truths of the Church, and defiled them with falsities of faith; but have loved truths because they are truths. 'A woman'=the Church, from the affection of truth; and consequently, in the opposite sense, the Church from the affection of what is false. E.862.

926. In the middle (of the place of worship of the solidarians was seen) the image of a woman, clad in a scarlet garment, holding a golden coin in her right hand, and a chain of pearls in her left.

M. 8². (Women mentioned as being seen in the Spiritual World.) 75⁴.

47a^e. For women have an interior perception of love; and men only an exterior one.

58^e. Who does not then regard other women with a look of indifference—mutu inanimato?

75^e. I asked, Such being the union, can you look at any other woman than your own? He replied, I can; but as my wife is united to my soul, we both look together, and then nothing of lust can enter. Ex.

175². It is believed by many that women can perform the offices of men, provided they are initiated into them from their earliest age . . . They can indeed be initiated into the exercise of these things, but not into the judgment on which the rightness—rectitudo—of the offices interiorly depends; and therefore those women who have been initiated into the offices of men, are obliged to consult men in matters of judgment; and then, if they are at their own disposal, they choose from their counsels what favours their own love.

—³. It is also supposed by some that women are equally able to elevate the sight of their understanding into the same sphere of light as men, and that they can discern matters in the same height, which opinion has been induced by the writings of certain learned authoresses. But these writings, when examined in the Spiritual World in their presence, were found to be works, not of judgment and wisdom, but of cleverness and eloquence; and works that proceed from these two, from the elegance and neatness of their style, appear to be sublime and erudite; but only to those who call all ingenuity wisdom.

—⁴. See MAN—vir, here.

194. The prudence in thus acting has been implanted in women from creation . . .

199^e. In the first beginnings of marriage we were married-women; but now we are wives.

6055⁵. As the woman has been born affection of truth and good . . .

6057⁵. The idea of God as a Man exists . . . with women . . .

6106. A woman with me who . . . believed that it is impossible to love one's consort long . . . 6110⁸.

—¹⁵. With women the nerves are softer and the veins wider; the thighs are broader because they = conjugal love.

—⁷⁶. With (such) the woman's love is not communicated to the man . . .

—⁷⁷. But when the woman's affection inflows into the man's understanding, as is the case with the Angels, whence they have intelligence in their life (the conjugal love is permanent).

E. 9⁶. 'Jesus . . . saith unto His mother, Woman, behold thy son' (John xix. 26). 'Mother,' and 'woman,' here, = the Church. 250⁸. 785⁵.

270². 'Women,' in the Word, = the goods that are of the Church. —⁵.

374¹⁸. 'A woman beloved of her companion, and an adulteress' (Hos. iii. 1) = such a Church.

430¹⁵. 'Besides women and children' (Matt. xiv. 21) = those who are in goods.

483¹². 'A woman of Samaria' (John iv. 7) = a Church made up of such.

555². That 'woman' = the Church as to the affection of truth. Ill.

—¹⁷. As 'woman' = the Church as to the affection of truth from good, that is, the affection of truth from good possessed by the man of the Church, in the opposite sense, 'women' = the cupidity of falsity from evil. Ill.

576⁸. 'Woman,' in the Word, = the Church. Ill.

652²⁸. 'Man and woman' (Jer. vi. 11) = truth conjoined with good, and the derivative intelligence.

675¹⁰. The reason 'a woman' is said to have 'lost a piece of silver' (Luke xv. 8) is that 'a woman' = the Church as to the affection of truth, and therefore also the affection of truth that is of the Church.

—¹². 'Ten women shall bake bread in one oven'

(Lev. xxvi. 26) = that in all the things of the Church with man there is so little of good and truth as to be scarcely any; 'ten women' = all things of the Church.

710²⁵. Woman is born to act from affection . . . and the affection with women is the affection of truth and good . . . and in Heaven the correspondent affection which belongs to the woman is conjoined with the correspondent understanding which belongs to the man.

724³. The 'woman' treated of in Rev. xii. is the one who is called 'the Bride, the Lamb's wife,' which was 'the holy city Jerusalem coming down out of Heaven from God' (Rev. xxi.)

725³. The 'women' etc. of the nations were not smitten (Deut. xx. 14) because they signified evils, and evils can be subdued, amended, and reformed by means of truths.

739¹¹. The affection of the natural man, persuaded by its Sensuous . . . is signified by 'the woman . . . taking of the fruit of the tree' (Gen. iii.). Coro. 31.

768³. By 'the woman' (in Gen. iii. 15) the Papists understand Mary . . .

805⁵. 'A woman of whoredoms' (whom Hosea was commanded to take, Hos. i. 2) = the Church that was falsifying the truths of the Word.

863⁹. 'Women' (Ezek. ix. 6) = goods conjoined with truths.

1038. 'I saw a woman sitting on a scarlet beast' (Rev. xvii. 3) = the dominion of the papal religiosity over the holy things of the Word. 1042. 1062.

Womb. Uterus.

A. 1803². The viscera of generation, especially the maternal womb, represent and therefore signify chaste conjugal love, and the derivative love of infants. Ill.

2405⁴. 'From the womb of the morning' (Ps. cx. 3) = Himself, thus the Divine love from which He fought.

2586. 'Jehovah . . . had closed up every womb' (Gen. xx. 18) = [spiritual] barrenness. 2588², Ex.

3293. 'Two nations are in thy womb' (Gen. xxv. 23) = conception as to interior and exterior good. 3299.

3294. 'The womb' . . . is predicated of the things of love, that is, of good.

3298. Good and truth (also) are . . . in the womb . . .

3633. The primitive of man . . . makes an effort to the formation of the whole man in the ovum and womb.

3755. 'Woe to them that are gestating in the womb' (Matt. xxiv. 19) = those who have been imbued with the good of love to the Lord . . . 'To gestate in the womb' = to conceive the good of celestial love.

3856. 'He opened (Leah's) womb' (Gen. xxix. 31) = that thence came doctrines of Churches; for 'to open the womb' — that is, to conceive and bear — = to become a Church, and this is effected through doctrinal things.

3967. 'God opened (Rachel's) womb' (Gen. xxx. 22) = the faculty of receiving and acknowledging . . . the goods of truth and the truths of good.

4904. When truth is in the will, it is in its womb, and is then first produced . . .

4909. 'To gestate in the womb' . . . = to be produced.

4918. 'Lo twins were in her womb' (Gen. xxxviii. 27) = both things of the Church . . . for 'the womb' = the place where good and truth are lying in a state of conception, thus the place where there is that which is of the Church. In the genuine sense, 'the womb' = the inmost of conjugal love in which there is innocence, because, in the Grand Man, the womb corresponds to this love; and, as conjugal love originates from the marriage of good and truth . . . and this marriage is . . . the Lord's Kingdom, which, on earth, is the Church, therefore by the womb is signified the Church . . . Hence it is that 'to open the womb' = the derivative doctrines of Churches, and also the faculty to receive the truths and goods that are of the Church; and 'to go forth from the womb' = to be reborn or regenerated.

—². As 'to go forth from the womb' = rebirth and the derivative Church, the Lord is called 'the Former from the womb,' 'the Bringer forth from the womb,' and those who have been regenerated and made the Church are called 'those carried from the womb,' Ill.

—'. 'To be estranged from the womb' (Ps. lviii. 3) = from the good that is of the Church.

4925⁶. As that which opens the womb is the first-born, therefore where the word 'first-born' is mentioned, it is said also, 'that which openeth the womb,' in order that good may be signified. . . (Hence) Zarah opened the womb with his hand, and he represents good. And the womb which is said to be 'opened,' is the place where good and truth are, and consequently the Church; and to open it is to give power that truth may be born.

5052^o. Angels of the Inmost Heaven are present with infants in the womb, and through them the Lord takes care that the infants there are nourished and perfected; thus they have charge over those who are gestating in the womb. D. 1201.

5054. Those who have loved infants very tenderly . . . are in the province of the womb and the surrounding organs, namely, the neck of the womb and the ovaries; and they who are there are in the sweetest and most delicious life, and are in heavenly joy more than others. (Compare D. 3152, which shows that the corresponding province in man is that of the testicles. Also De Conj. 100. 106.)

6433. ('The blessings) of the womb' (Gen. xlix. 26) = the conjunction of good and truth; for 'the womb' = the inmost of conjugal love; and, as conjugal love comes forth from the heavenly marriage, which is the conjunction of good and truth, this conjunction is signified by 'the womb.' (= celestial goods. E. 340¹⁶.)

6468^e. The soul forming a body in the womb.

6491. Evident from the formation of embryos in the womb.

6716². The inmost of life, which is from the father . . . operates upon the external, which is from the mother . . . even in the womb . . .

—². As these things are signified by 'the womb,' the Lord is called 'the Former from the womb,' that is, the Regenerator. Ill.

8603³. Seeds during their time in the womb . . .

9042. For when man is born anew, he is first conceived, then is as it were gestated in the womb, and finally is born; and, as regeneration . . . is the conjunction of truth and good . . . to gestate in the womb = the initiation of truth into good; and therefore 'a gravid woman' = the state of the formation of good from truth. That 'the womb' = the place where truth and good lie in a state of conception; and that 'to be in the womb,' and 'to go forth from the womb' = to be regenerated. Refs.

9043². 'To go forth from the womb' = to go forth from the internal man into the external or natural man.

10660. 'Everything that openeth the womb is for Me' (Ex. xxxiv. 19) = that every good of innocence, of charity, and of faith, is to be ascribed to the Lord; for 'that which openeth the womb' = that which is born from the Lord. Ex.

W. 6. To this form (from the father) . . . are successively added in the womb substances and matters in forms adapted to the reception of life in its order and in its degree.

310². Seeds . . . can produce forms of uses, and then emit them as from a womb . . .

D. 4636. On the Hell of those who are opposite to those who are in the province of the womb in Heaven, that is, to those who are in the inmost of celestial love.

E. 618⁸. 'The belly' = conjugal love, like 'the womb' . . . 'The womb,' or 'belly' = spiritual conjugal love . . .

622¹². 'The womb,' and 'the belly,' = the like things. III. The reason why 'the belly,' or 'viscera' = the interior things of the thought or of the understanding. Ex.

710⁵. 'The belly' is mentioned instead of 'the womb,' because of the swelling of the belly appearing with those who are with child; but still 'the belly' is mentioned where truths are treated of, and 'the womb' where good is treated of.

724³. 'The womb' = the inmost of love, and the reception of truth from good.

865³. Thus the opening of the womb, or matrix = the opening of the spiritual mind . . . because the womb corresponds to the good of celestial love.

985². All the members allotted to generation, in both sexes, especially the womb, correspond to Societies of the Third Heaven; the reason of which is that love truly conjugal is derived from the love of the Lord towards the Church, and from the love of good and truth, which love is the love of (these) Angels. De Conj. 27.

D. Wis. ii². That these forms (the will and the understanding) begin to have existence in man when he has been conceived, and is nascent in the womb. Ex.

iii. On the formation of man in the womb by the Lord by means of influx into these two receptacles. Gen. art.

1. That the Lord conjoins Himself with man in the womb of the mother from his first conception, and forms him. Ex.

— (All this work) of preparation for Himself, the Lord does in the womb . . . Therefore the Lord is called 'the Creator, Former, and Maker from the womb.' III.

— While man is in the womb, he is in a state of innocence . . .

5^e. From these things may be inferred the quality of the life of the foetus in the womb, in which only the heart performs its motions . . . namely, that nothing of the life of the will or . . . understanding is present in it, but that the formation is effected solely by the life from the Lord, by which the man is afterwards to live.

iv. That there is an analogy between the formation of man in the womb, and his reformation and regeneration. Gen. art.

— The difference is that a man in the womb has no will or understanding. v.

—². From these he was formed in the womb.

—^e. New things are formed in the regenerate man as in a womb.

viii³. That an angelic mind is formed in man, is evident from his formation in the womb. Ex.

640. 'Gopher woods' (Gen.vi.14)=concupiscences.

643. Gopher wood is a wood that abounds in sulphur, like the fir.

— The Most Ancients compared. . . what is lowest or corporeal from the Celestial in man to wood.

—². 'Thy woods' (Ezek.xxvi.12)=the things of the will.

— 'The beam from the wood answereth' (Hab.ii.11) . . . 'the wood'=what is lowest of the will, which answers when anything is brought forth from the sensuous Scientific.

— 'Woe to him that saith to the wood, Awake' (Hab.ii.19). Here, also, 'wood'=cupidity. (=evil. 8932⁷.)

—³. 'Our woods come for a price' (Lam.v.4) . . . 'woods'=the things of the will. (=instruction purely from ourselves, which is the source of mere evils. E.654⁶¹.) (=lack of the Knowledges of good. 1145³.)

— 'Saying to a piece of wood, Thou art my father' (Jer.ii.27); here 'wood'=cupidity, which is of the will, whence is conception. (=to be conceived from evil. E.1145⁸.)

—⁴. 'Wood,' in general, =the lowest things of the will; precious woods, such as cedar, like the cedar woods in the Temple, the cedar wood employed in the cleansing of leprosy (Lev.xiv.) and the wood cast into the bitter waters at Marah. . . =the lowest things of the will that are good.

—^e. But woods not precious, and those which were made into graven images, and also those employed for funeral piles, and the like=cupidities.

1110. Those who have placed righteousness and merit in good works. . . seem to themselves to cut wood-ligna. . . When they are cutting the wood-ligna, there appears to be something of the Lord under the wood-lignis, thus as if the wood-lignum=were merit. . . 2702¹⁷. The bitter waters that were healed by the wood, represented that the truths which are not pleasing become acceptable and grateful from good, or from the affection of it; (for) 'wood'=good, which is of the affection, or will.

2784. 'He clave the wood-ligna—for the burnt-offering' (Gen.xxii.5)=the merit of righteousness. . . 'Wood-ligna'=the goods that are of works, and that are of righteousness; and to hew 'wood-ligna'=to place merit in the goods that are of works. Ex. 2798. 2804. 2812. 2814.

—². For wood is a representative of good, as was all the wood in the ark and in the Temple, and also all the wood upon the altar. . .

— They who attribute good to themselves, and make it meritorious, are also said. . . 'to worship wood,' or an image carved out of wood.

3095². Wood=good.

3720. The reason 'the house of God'=the Celestial that is of good. . . is that 'a house,' in the Word, =good, and because, with the Most Ancients, it was constructed of wood, for the reason that wood=good. E.1145².

—². When a wooden house has been seen by me, there has instantly been presented the idea of good; but when a stone house, an idea of truth.

3969¹⁰. 'Wood'=good, both the good of love to the Lord, and the good of charity towards the neighbour, and therefore it was commanded that 'Judah' and 'Joseph' should be written upon 'pieces of wood,' which should become one (Ezek.xxxvii.16). 5354⁸. (For it is good that conjoins. E.222⁴. 433⁶.) 1145⁴.

[A.] 5135⁵. 'The woods' (Zech.v.4) = the goods (in the natural mind).

5156. 'Pharaoh' shall hang thee upon wood' (Gen. xl.19)=rejection and condemnation. Ex.

—^e. The punishment of hanging upon wood was on account of evil, because . . . wood = good, and, in the opposite, evil; and therefore in the prophetic Word mention is made of 'committing adultery with . . . wood,' by which is signified . . . the adulteration of good, that is, evil.

5354⁸. 'Wood' = the good that is of charity, and of the derivative works.

5378. That great Spirit had wooden shoes, which he threw at the kidney Spirits. . . The wooden shoes represented the lowest natural things, such as the kidneys . . . absorb and carry off.

5865. The corporeal life of a man who is in the good of faith, appears . . . woody, and of the colour of wood.

6777. The reason 'a trough' = the doctrine of charity, is that it is a wooden trough . . . for what is of wood = the good of charity.

7328. 'Both in wooden and stone things' (Ex.vii.19) = the total falsification of the good that is of charity, and the truth that is of faith.

7456². Those were hung upon wood who wanted to destroy the good that is of life; for 'wood' = good, and, in the opposite, the evil of cupidities.

7847^e. 'Wood of oil' = the good of truth, that is, the good which is of the Spiritual Church. (Compare 9277⁵.)

7918². 'Wood of cedar' = internal spiritual truth.

8354. 'Jehovah showed him a piece of wood' (Ex. xv.25) = that the Lord inspired good.

8355. 'And he cast it into the waters' (id.) = with which He affected the truths; for 'to cast a piece of wood into the waters' . . . = to affect truths with good.

8379. The habitations (in Jupiter) are of wood. Des.

9011². 'To cut woods in the forest' (Deut.xix.5) = disputation about good from what is religious. . . For 'wood' = good . . . and 'the forest' = what is religious. E.1145⁷, Ex.

9051³. 'Wood' = good; and, in the opposite, evil. Refs.

9141⁴. 'They shall bring no woods from the field' (Ezek.xxxix.10) = . . . no interior goods of the Church; (while) 'woods from the forests' = its exterior goods. 9228².

9277⁵. See CHERUB, here.

9472. 'And Shittim woods' (Ex.xxv.5) = the goods of merit that are from the Lord, thus that are of the Lord alone; for 'woods' = the good of merit.

— . Shittim wood was the wood of the most excellent cedar.

— . 'The wood of oil' (Is.xli.19) = celestial good. 10261².

9486. '(Make the ark) of Shittim woods' (Ex.xxv.10) = righteousness . . . which is the good of merit. Ex.

9634. Everything of wood = good, even to the very houses that were of wood.

10178. 'Of Shittim woods thou shalt make (the altar of incense)' (Ex.xxx.1) = from the Divine love; for 'Shittim woods' = the good of merit and righteousness, which is of the Lord alone.

— . 'Wood,' in general, = the good of love; and, in special, the good of merit. Hence it is that 'wood,' in the supreme sense, = the Divine good . . .

10362². 'To cut woods' (forbidden on the Sabbath) = to perform what is good from self.

10503. 'Idols of wood' = worship from evils of doctrine.

10513. The sacred edifices (in the Third Earth) are of wood.

10515. (They use) a luminous wood, which gives as much light as a fire on the hearth. D.1680.

10517. They think about good, and but little about truths; and hence it is that . . . they love . . . houses of trees; for trees and woods = goods.

10835. The houses (in the Sixth Earth) are of wood.

H. 223². In the Celestial Kingdom the temples appear as of wood, because . . . wood corresponds to good, in which those in the Celestial Kingdom are.

Life 109. A natural moral man . . . if in goods, appears before the Angels like an image of wood.

W. 109^e. In woods there are combinations of filaments in a threefold order.

192. The woody filaments, from the leasts to their composite, are homogeneous.

P. 168^e. Such appear there like human faces with wooden heads.

R. 411². I have heard the noise from these rendings (of the Word) as of wood split by the fire in a furnace.

459. 'Wooden idols' (Rev.ix.20) = falsities concerning good works. (= false doctrinal things confirmed by the mere sense of the letter. E.587.)

585. The tabernacles (used in the Most Ancient Church) were of wood . . . and wood = good.

774. 'All thyine wood' (Rev.xviii.12) = natural goods. (= all good conjoined with truth in the natural man. E.1145.)

—⁴. That 'wood' = good. III.

775. 'Every vessel of precious wood' (id.) = the Scientific from rational good and truth. (= good of great excellence, thus rational good . . . E.1146.)

M. 77². All the houses in the city (of the Copper Age) were built of the wood of resinous trees . . . because wood = natural good; and the men of that age were in this good.

T. 339². Like the light in putrefying wood.

374². The good works with a man . . . actually, are of the wood of the tree.

441⁴. Those who demand a reward because of their merit in matters of salvation . . . at a distance appear as if they were cleaving wood-ligna.

D. 273. On those who have been elevated from among the hewers of wood. 330.

534. I saw one of the saints (of Jupiter). He was cleaving wood-ligna; and was standing with the wood under his feet, and cleaving it.

1632. The innocence of such as study to be wise from external things, was represented by an infant that was wooden . . .

2762. In the regeneration of the corporeal things . . . they become as of a wooden or bony brown colour . . . because (they) begin to be nothing, thus devoid of life.

2805^e. As the wood falls, so it remains.

4161. Spirits who are as it were wooden. Des.

4177². On the hewers of wood.

4708. One who carried a beam of wood under his left arm. Des. 4714.

4739. There appeared a small chamber composed of wooden beams.

4740. He said that he sits at the wood—of the Lord's cross . . .

4926^e. There remain (at the Last Judgment) the houses that are of wood . . . for those who live in them are in the good of charity and of faith.

6098³. I saw that (magician) ascending towards Heaven with a wooden bundle behind him. . . The wood corresponds to good.

E. 391²¹. The altar was made of wood, because 'wood'=good. —²².

433⁶. 'Wood'=the good of life. Refs.

458⁸. 'One cutteth wood out of the forest, the work of the hands of the workman with the axe . . .' (Jer.x. 3-5). These words describe natural good separated from spiritual, which is good from proprium . . . 'Wood'=good; here, such good. (=the evil of the worship. 1145⁶.)

553¹⁷. 'The sons gather wood-ligna, and the fathers kindle the fire . . .' (Jer.vii.17)=that those in falsities acquire for themselves falsities from evils, when they favour and excite evils. 'To gather wood'=to acquire falsities from evils.

587. 'Wood'=sensuous good.

618⁵. The healing of the waters of Marah by a piece of wood cast into them, represented the good of love and of life dispelling what is false, and opening what is true, and thus effecting a restoration; for all truth is adulterated by evil of life and of love, and therefore it is opened and restored through the good of love and of life, the reason of which is that all truth is of good, and the good of love is like a fire, from which truth is seen in the light. (The 'wood' here=the good of the natural man. 1145⁴.)

629⁵. 'The house of God'=the Church as to good, because in ancient times it was of wood, and 'wood'=good.

655⁴. 'Crucifixion' signified condemnation and curse on account of the destruction of good in the Church, for the reason that 'wood,' upon which they were hung, =good, and, in the opposite, evil.

—⁵. 'If there be in a man a crime, a judgment of death, thou shalt hang him on wood' (Deut.xxi.22)=that if one has done evil against the good of the Word and of the Church . . . he was to be hung upon wood, because 'wood,' in the Word, =good; and, in the opposite, evil.

—⁶. 'The boys stumble under the wood' (Lam.v. 13)=nascent goods perishing through evils. (=to compel those who are able to will good to adulterate goods. 1182².)

829^e. Not a stone is found (in the gardens of the Third Heaven) because stone = natural truth, while wood=good . . .

831². The places of worship in the Third Heaven are called houses of God, and are of wood.

1145. 'Wood'=the good of the natural man.

—². The reason 'wood'=good, is that it is from a tree, from which come fruits; and also because wood can be burned and be made useful in keeping the body warm, and in building houses, and making various articles of use and convenience; and also because an oil, by which is signified the good of love, is expressed from wood; moreover, it stores up heat in it.

— The Angels of the Third Heaven dwell in houses of wood-lignis because they are in the good of love to the Lord, to which wood corresponds. Moreover, their woods have a correspondence according to the trees they are from. . . This is why woods from various kinds of trees are mentioned in the Word . . . and the wood of the olive=celestial good; that of the vine, spiritual good; that of the cedar, rational good; that of the poplar, natural good; and that of the oak, sensuous good.

—³. That in the Word 'wood'=good; and, in the opposite, evil. Fully ill.

— 'Woods' (Ezek.xxvi.12)=the goods of the natural man.

—⁴. As 'wood,' from its correspondence=the good of love, the tables of stone on which the law was inscribed were placed in an ark made of Shittim wood; and for the same reason other things of the tabernacle were made of the same wood; and the Temple of Jerusalem was covered with wood.

—⁵. 'Wood' (Is.xl.20)=evil which is adored as good.

—⁷. 'Like hewers of wood' (Jer.xlvi.22)=as if they wanted to extirpate evil, and yet they extirpate good.

—⁸. 'Wood' (Hab.ii.11)=the evil that confirms falsity, and agrees with it.

—⁹. As 'woods' (or 'staves') = evils destroying good . . . a multitude went out with Judas Iscariot against Jesus 'with swords and staves' (Matt.xxvi.47).

Wooded. Sylvestris.

Wool. Lana.

Woollen. Laneus, Lanuginosus.

Woolbearing. Laniger.

A. 3301⁸. 'His hairs white like the clean wool' (Dan.vii.9)=the Divine Natural as to truth. In the Word . . . truth itself was represented by white, which, being from good, is called 'clean wool.' (=His external good. 9470³.)

3519⁸. By 'the wool of she-goats' (Ex.xxv.4,etc.) is signified the ultimate or outermost of innocence, which is in ignorance, such as there is with the gentiles. (=the good that is from the good of mutual love. See GOAT, at 9470.)

5895². 'Thou shalt not wear wool and linen together' (Deut.xxii.11); 'wool' = good, and 'linen,' truth. 7601⁸.

9331⁷. 'The worm shall eat them like wool' (Is.li.8) . . . 'wool' = the lower or exterior goods that are of the sensuous man.

9470². That 'wool' = truth from a celestial origin, which, in itself, is good. Ill.

—'. 'My wool, and my flax' (Hos.ii.5) = the external goods of love and truths of faith.

—⁴. Such truth as is in itself good, because it is the form of celestial good, is signified by 'wool,' in Ezek.xxvii.18, and in Is.i.18.

—⁵. 'Wool' = celestial truth, which, relatively, is good. And therefore it is said, in Ezek.xliv.15-18, that 'the priests . . . shall put on garments of linen, and no wool shall come upon them.'

—⁶. 'Wool' = celestial truth, which is the truth of the good of love; and, as those who are in this truth cannot be in spiritual truth . . . it was ordered that no garment should be worn of mixed wool and linen. 10184⁶. 10669⁹. E.951⁷.

9960¹⁴. 'Wool' = the exterior good of the Spiritual Church.

10402⁷. 'Wool' = good in the external man.

10835. The cows (in the Sixth Earth) are wool-bearing, like sheep.

R. 47. 'His head and His hairs were white as wool, like snow' (Rev.i.14) = the Divine love of the Divine wisdom in primes and in ultimates. (=as to the good and truth there. E.67.)

—⁶. It is said 'like wool, and like snow,' because 'wool' = good in ultimates, and 'snow,' truth in ultimates; as also in Is.i.18; for wool is from sheep, by which is signified the good of charity.

M. 75⁴. The man (of the Golden Age that we saw) was clad . . . in a tunic of white wool.

266. One of the two Angels wore a woollen robe that shone with flaming crimson.

T. 72². Your reasoning is about goat's wool. 335².

1866. Woolly-lanuginosum. 4357.

E. 67. 'White wool' = good in ultimates . . . the reason of which is that the wool upon lambs and sheep has a signification like that of the hair upon man; and (these animals) = good. Ill.

376¹⁹. 'The wool of Zachar' (Ezek.xxvii.18) = natural good.

1042⁸. That 'sins . . . shall become as wool' (Is.i.18) = good.

Word. Verbum.

See WORD (of the Lord), and WORD-ROSE.

A. 167. The words of the letter are represented in the World of Spirits to the very life, in a beautiful order . . .

312. Words that are applicable solely to the antediluvians.

1288. 'The words were one' (Gen.xi.1) = that there was one doctrine in particular. For 'lip' = doctrine in general, and 'words,' doctrine in particular, or the particulars of doctrine.

—². That 'a word' = all doctrine concerning charity and the derivative faith; and 'words,' the things of doctrine. Ill.

—'. 'By taking heed according to Thy word' . . . Thy word have I laid up in mine heart . . . I do not forget Thy word' (Ps.cix.7-16); 'word,' in these passages, = doctrine in general.

—³. 'To ride upon the word of truth' (Ps.xlv.4) = to teach the doctrine of truth . . . 2761⁶.

—⁴. 'Jehovah sent a word unto Jacob, and it hath lighted upon Israel' (Is.ix.8) = the doctrine of worship, external and internal.

—'. 'Man (liveth) by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God' (Matt.iv.4). 'When anyone heareth the word of the kingdom, and heedeth it not, then cometh the evil one, and snatcheth away that which was sown in his heart' (Matt.xiii.9). 'Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My word shall not pass away' (Matt.xxiv.35). In these passages, 'word' = the Lord's doctrine; and 'words,' the things that are of His doctrine.

—⁵. As 'words' = all things of doctrine, the commandments are called 'words.' Ill.

1409. The historicals are representative, and all the words significative. Ex. 1540. 1783.

1492. It is the affection that lies hidden in the words that constitutes the internal sense here; the words of the letter are not attended to . . .

1642². For the Lord alone is Discourse and Word.

1785. 'After these words, the word of Jehovah came to Abram in a vision' (Gen.xv.1) = that after the combats in childhood there was a revelation. . . Words, in the Hebrew language, = Things, here, the Things accomplished. . . 'The word of Jehovah to Abram' is nothing else than the Lord's word to Himself; but in His childhood . . . it could not appear otherwise than as a revelation. 1801.

2587. 'On account of the word of Sarah' (Gen.xx.18) = the whole transaction . . .

2861. 'It came to pass after these words' (Gen.xxii.20) = the Things transacted relating to those who are within the Church; for 'words' = Things. In the Original Language, Things are called 'words.' Ex. 6219.

3209. 'The servant told Isaac all the words that he had done' (Gen.xxiv.66) . . . 'The words' = the Things.

4126. Thought and will conjoin, not words. In this world words do conjoin; but only when the hearer believes that the speaker thinks and wills what is good.

4692. See WORD (of the Lord) here.

4714. 'Bring me word again' (Gen.xxxvii.14) = Knowledge. Ex.

5075. 'After these words' (Gen.xl.1) = after the things that precede; for 'words,' in the Original Language, are Things as well as words. . . The reason the words in the Original Language = Things also, is that 'words,' in the internal sense, = the truths of doctrine; and therefore all Divine truth in general is called 'the word.' . . And, as nothing that comes forth in the universe is anything, that is, a Thing, unless it is from Divine good by Divine truth, therefore the words in the Hebrew are also Things. Ill.

5272. 'This is the word that I spake unto Pharaoh' (Gen.xli.28) = that which the Natural had thought . . . for 'a word' = a Thing. . . Thus 'This is the word' = this is the Thing. . . As to 'word,' in the Original Language, a Thing is expressed by a word, and therefore a Divine revelation is called 'a word;' and, in the supreme sense, the Lord also; and, by 'the word,' when predicated of the Lord, or of a revelation that is from Him, there is signified, in the proximate sense, the Divine truth, from which come forth all Things that are. 5283.

5337². For the words and tones with which the thought is clothed, are nothing but additions—adjecta . . .

5622². 'I watch over My word . . . ' (Jer.i.12) = (over) the truth.

5752. 'He spake unto them these words' (Gen.xliv.6) = the influx of this Thing . . . for 'words' = Things; moreover, in the Original Language, a Thing is expressed by this word—vocem. 5754. 5755.

6185. 'I will do according to thy word' (Gen.xlvii.30) = that so it shall be done.

6319². Spirits do not apprehend a man's words as a man hears them, but as the man thinks.

6982. 'I am not a man of words' (Ex.iv.10) = that (the truth Divine) has not the faculty of speech. Ex.

7058. 'All the words of Jehovah' (Ex.iv.28) = the several things of doctrine.

7509. 'To-morrow shall Jehovah do this word' (Ex.ix.5) = that this will be with them for ever.

7510. 'And Jehovah did this word' (ver.6) = the effect.

7562. 'He that feared the word of Jehovah' (ver.20) = the things that are of the Lord. 7564.

7931. 'Ye shall keep this word . . . ' (Ex.xii.24) = that all this shall be observed.

8167. 'Is not this the word . . . ' (Ex.xiv.12) = such a thing; for 'this word' = this Thing.

8418. 'Gather the word of a day in its day' (Ex.xvii.4) . . . 'a word' = the Thing of which it is said, here, the manna.

8466. 'This is the word that Jehovah hath commanded' (ver.16) = a command about it from the Divine; for 'a word' = the Thing that is treated of. 8524.

8495³. The proprium from which they will not act, is signified by 'nor speaking a word' (Is.lviii.13).

8693. 'When they have a word' (Ex.xviii.16) = in everything that happens; for 'a word' = a Thing that happens. 8698.

8700. 'The word is too heavy for thee' (ver.18) = that it is not possible; for 'a heavy word' = [a Thing] that is not possible.

8705. 'Bring thou the words to God' (ver.19) = mediation and intercession. 8729.

8717. 'Every great word they shall bring to thee' (ver.22) = everything from (it). 8718. 8720.

8772. 'These are the words that thou shalt speak . . . ' (Ex.xix.6) = influx to receive truths. 8774.

8861. 'God spake all these words, saying' (Ex.xx.1) = truths Divine for those in the Heavens and on the earth. 8862, Ex.

8868³. What is inwardly contained in the words of speech is plainly perceived there.

9156. 'Upon every word of transgression' (Ex.xxii.9) = whatever injury and loss.

9160. 'The word coming to God' (ver.9) = examination by means of truth.

9261. 'From the word of a lie' (Ex.xxiii.7) = from falsity of evil.

9267. 'Perverteth the words of the just' (ver.8) = so that they appear like truths of good . . . for 'words' = the Things themselves, thus truths. . . The reason 'words' = truths, is that 'word,' in the Original Language = that which is something, and that really exists . . . From this it is that Divine truth is called 'the word.'

9311^e. 'To hear the words,' or 'discourses' (Luke vi.47) = to learn and know the precepts of faith that are from the Lord.

9383. 'All the words of Jehovah, and all the judgments' (Ex.xxiv.3) = those things in the Word that are of life in a spiritual and a natural state. 'The words of Jehovah' = those things in the Word that are of life in a spiritual state. Ex.

9385. 'All the words that Jehovah hath spoken we will do' (id.) = reception then in the heart; for 'the words that Jehovah hath spoken' = truths from the Word that are of life.

9386. 'Moses wrote all the words of Jehovah' (Ex.xxiv.4) = an imprinting on the life (of the) truths from the Word.

9401. '(The covenant) that Jehovah hath made with you upon all these words' (ver.8) = that there is conjunction with the Lord through each and all things of the Word . . . 'All these words' = each and all things of the Word; for the laws promulgated from Sinai, in the universal sense, =all Divine truth, thus the Word as to each and all things.

[A.] 9416. 'The ten words' =all the truths that are of doctrine, and the goods that are of life. (=all truths Divine in (the Word). 10688.) (=all truths in the complex. Life.62.) (=all truths, for they include them. R.101².) T.286. E.1024².

9425. 'Everyone that hath words, let him come to (Aaron and Hur)' (Ex.xxiv.14) =that falsities are to be removed therefrom; 'to have words' =to dispute about truths; for 'words' =truths.

9818¹⁰. 'To speak the words of God' (John iii.34) = Divine truths.

—¹³. 'The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life' (John vi.63); 'the words' that the Lord has spoken = Divine truths.

—¹⁶. 'The word of Jehovah' =the Divine truth. 9987, Ex.

10362. 'To speak a word' (Is.lviii.13) =to think such things.

10535. 'The people heard this evil word, and they mourned' (Ex.xxxiii.4) =their grief because they were not to be pre-eminent to others.

10604. 'I will write on the tables the words...' (Ex.xxxiv.1) =... interior Divine things, thus those which are of the internal sense, (and are) of love and of faith.

10682. 'Write for thyself these words' (ver.27) =the primary truths that are to be remembered and done. For by 'words' are signified, in general, Things; in special, truths...

10728. 'These are the words that Jehovah hath commanded, to do them' (Ex.xxxv.1) =instruction about the primary thing of the Church, to which all things relate... for these things are said about the Sabbath.

H. 254. Thus the Lord inspired the words which the Spirits dictated to the prophets... And, as the words came forth immediately from the Lord, they were each filled with the Divine, and contain in themselves an internal sense...

R. 8. 'The words of the prophecy' (Rev.i.3) =the doctrine of the New Jerusalem. (=the truths that are of the doctrine of Heaven. E.14.)

D. 805. On those who love mere elegance of words, and plays upon words.

129. The true order is, that a man should receive wisdom from the Lord, that is, from His Word. Then all things follow...

155. For the Word of the Lord is such that the things contained in its inmosts relate to the Lord . . . and His Kingdom; this is the source of all the life of the Word.

167°. Such is the Word of the Lord. Des. 855. 1264. 3376°.

426. For the Word of the Lord is spiritual, not verbal.

589. The Word has been spoken according to the appearances with man.

— . To confirm false principles by the Word is one thing, but it is a different thing to believe in simplicity what is in the Word. Ex.

683°. Celestial and spiritual things are so conjoined in the Word, that in every particular there is a likeness of a marriage . . .

771. Every word—vox—in the Word is from the Lord, (and therefore) signifies and involves something.

838. For the Word of the Lord is such, that wherever it treats of one person, it treats of all men . . . with a difference according to the disposition of each; this is the universal sense of the Word.

937. (Such is) the Word of the Lord in the internal sense. In the sense of the letter it appears so simple . . . yet these things involve arcana . . . The very words . . . are . . . most general terms, or vessels (containing) so many and such great heavenly arcana . . . that they can never be exhausted to the ten-thousandth part . . . 1143°.

1025°. The historical things of the Word are not perceived in Heaven, but the things signified by them. The Word was written not for man only, but also for the Angels. When a man reads the Word, and apprehends from it nothing but the literal sense, the Angels apprehend not the literal, but the internal sense. Examps.

1043°. When (men) have been regenerated, they do not receive any immediate revelation, but only the things that are insinuated into them through the Word, and the preaching of the Word.

1068°. These doctrinal things (derived from the perceptions and revelations of the Most Ancient Church) were the Word (of the Ancient Church). 1241°. 1409°.

1151°. The Word of the Lord does not treat of worldly things, but involves Divine things.

1190. The style of the Word—especially the prophetic Word—is such that when it treats of intellectual things, it treats also of voluntary things.

1194. For the Word of the Lord, in its bosom and recess, that is, in its internal sense, never treats of other things than those which are of His Kingdom, and thus of the Church. 1247. 1659°.

1408. The Word of the Lord is like a body in which there is a living soul: the things of the soul do not appear while the mind so inheres in corporeal things that it scarcely believes in the existence of the human soul and the future life; but as soon as the mind withdraws from corporeal things, the things of the soul and life become manifest. . . It is the same with the Word of the Lord. Ex.

—³. Many things in the Word are said according to appearances, and even according to the fallacies of the senses . . . and yet in the internal sense are quite the contrary . . . Still it does no harm to those who in simplicity of heart believe the Word as they apprehend it in the letter, provided they live in charity. The reason is that the Word teaches nothing else than that everyone should live in charity with his neighbour, and should love the Lord above all things; and they who do this have the internals in themselves; and so, with them, the fallacies taken from the sense of the letter are easily dispelled.

1429°. There is not a syllable or jot in the Word that has not an internal sense . . .

1461. Instruction in Knowledges from the Word. Sig. and Ex.

—². The Knowledges must be from the Word; for Knowledges from the Word are such that they are open from the Lord Himself; for the Word is itself from the Lord through Heaven, and the Lord's life is in each and all things of the Word . . . which shows that the Lord, in His childhood, was not willing to imbue any Knowledges but those of the Word . . .

1502°. The Word of the Lord could not possibly have any life unless there were an internal sense which regards Him. 1540°.

1540°. If the men of the Most Ancient and Ancient Churches lived now, and read the Word, they would pay no attention to the sense of the letter, but to the internal sense.

1542. For the Word of the Lord has descended from Him through Heaven, and therefore not the least part of a word has been written that does not involve heavenly arcana. 1619.

1659°. For not a syllable can be written in the Word that has not been sent down from Heaven, and consequently in which the Angels do not see heavenly things.

1673°. If a man supposes the truths of the Word to be false, and confirms himself so that he cannot see otherwise, he may be certain that such Spirits (as the Nephilim) are with him . . .

1690°. In the Word of the Lord's life . . .

1761. Spirits who reject the interior things of the Word. Des.

1767. On the Holy Scripture, or Word: that it has stored within it Divine arcana, which are open to good Spirits and Angels. Gen.art. 1869, continued.

— . When the Word of the Lord is being read by a man who loves the Word, and lives in charity, and also by a man who in simplicity of heart believes what is written, and has not formed principles contrary to the truth of faith that is in the internal sense, it is presented by the Lord before the Angels in such beauty . . . and also with representatives, and this with inexpressible variety in accordance with all their state at the time, that every particular is perceived as if it had life; which life is that which is in the Word, and is that from which the Word had birth when it was sent down from Heaven. 1769, Examps. 1770. 1771. 1772. 3474. 6617. D.2053. 2061.

[A.] 1771^e. Thus when the Lord fills the Word with life, it is of such efficacy that it penetrates to the inmosts; but when He does not do so, it is the letter only, with scarcely any life.

1773. Spirits who in their bodily life had been delighted with the Word of the Lord . . . have a kind of delightful heavenly heat. Des.

—³. But the heat of those who had indeed been delighted with the Word, but had not been solicitous about the understanding of it, was only in the right arm.

1774. Spirits who do not want to hear anything about the interior things of the Word, although they can understand them. Des. . . They interpret the meaning of the Word from the letter according to their fancies . . . They are represented by an old woman with an ugly face . . . But those who love the interior things of the Word are represented by a girl in early maidenhood . . .

1775. It has been a necessity that some revelation should exist . . . for a revelation, or Word, is a common recipient vessel of spiritual and celestial things, thus conjoining Heaven and earth . . .

1776^e. The Word of the Lord is a dead letter; but it is vivified by the Lord in the reader according to the capacity of each one; and it becomes living according to the life of his charity, and his state of innocence, and this with inexhaustible variety.

1783. As each and all things in the Word are inspired, they cannot but be from a heavenly origin; that is, they must necessarily store up within them celestial and spiritual things; otherwise it would never be the Word of the Lord.

1807^e. So he who is in Divine things does not regard the Word of the Lord from the letter; but regards the letter and the literal sense as representative . . .

1869. How many things there are in a single word of the Word. Shown.

— The experience of one who had been delighted with the Word.

1870. So each of the words of the Word of the Lord presents in form its own idea . . . and in the ideas there are things innumerable. Des.

—². The Word has been inspired, not only as to each of its words, but also as to the little letters of each word . . . for in every jot there is something from that affection and life which is common to the whole Word . . .

1871. How the Word of the Lord appears before the Angels, cannot be described, but some idea may be formed (from the kaleidoscope) in which beautiful images are represented from things rudely tossed about. . . . So it is with the Word of the Lord, especially the Prophets. In the literal sense there is scarcely anything that does not appear destitute of order; but when it is being read . . . it becomes more beautiful . . . as it ascends, and at last is presented before the Lord as the image of a man, in which . . . Heaven is represented in its whole compass . . .

1872. The interiors of the Word represented as in their first ascent. Des.

1874. Many things in the Word . . . are said according to appearances and fallacies . . . in order that persuasions and cupidities may not be broken, but bent . . . Moreover such things serve as common vessels to contain spiritual and celestial things . . .

1876. The (proper) names in the Word, like all the words of human speech, perish . . . when they ascend . . . 2015.

—². (Thus) not anything or a word that is in the Word can pass over to a Spirit . . .

1879. Those who hold in hatred the interior things of the Word. Des.

1925². The Angels who spoke the Word of the Lord. III.

1936². In every word of the Word . . . there are numberless things, more than the universal Heaven; and the arcana therein may be presented before the Angels . . . with perpetual variety to eternity.

2094². Those who believe the Word in simplicity have no need to know all these things, because they are in the end . . .

2135, Pref.². None can see the glory of the Lord that is in His Word, but those who are in faith, its charity, and the good of charity. Sig.

2157. In everything of the Word there is an affection and a subject-res. Ex. 2275, Ex. 2802². 3839, Ex.

2162. Representatives in the other life, thence with the Most Ancients, and thus in the Word. 2763.

—⁴. The Word. Sig. —⁵. —⁷. 3381. 3424-5576⁴.

2176^e. The Word of the Lord is written not only for man, but also for Heaven together with man, and, in fact, so, that when a man reads it, the Angels have from his reading heavenly ideas, so that in this way Heaven has been conjoined with the human race. 2209². 2310².

2177⁸. From this it is evident what is the holiness of the Word to those who are in heavenly ideas . . .

2179^e. The books of the Word have been written (by mere representatives, according to the style of all ancient books).

2242³. If the sense of the letter were not according to appearances, no one would understand and acknowledge the Word, thus would not receive it. (Continued under INTERNAL SENSE.)

2310². The Word is sent down from the Lord through Heaven to man, and is therefore a different thing in its origin.

—³. Would anyone say that the abominable affair of Lot's daughters . . . would be related in the Divine Word? or Jacob's peeling rods . . . unless they involved a deeply hidden Divine meaning?

—⁴. If it were not for the holy veneration for the books of the Word that has been impressed upon them from childhood (the learned world) would easily say in their hearts, that the Word is not holy except from that impression; when yet it is . . . because an internal sense, which is heavenly and Divine, is in it, which causes it to unite Heaven and earth, that is, angelic minds with human minds, and thus these with the Lord.

2311. That the Word is . . . distinct from all other writing, is evident from the fact, that not only do all the names=Things, but all the words also have a spiritual sense. (Continued under INTERNAL SENSE.)

2333². The words of the sense of the letter (are wonderfully changed into spiritual and celestial ideas) when it ascends from a man who is reading the Word to the sphere in which the Angels are . . .

2343². Such is the order and series in each and all things of the Word . . .

2362². (This shows) how pure is the Word in the internal sense, although it appears otherwise in the letter. Examp.

2568². To regard the doctrine of faith from rational things, is not to believe the Word, or the derivative doctrine, until one is persuaded from rational things that it is so; but to regard rational things from the doctrine of faith, is first to believe the Word, or the derivative doctrine, and then to confirm the same by rational things. Ex. and Tr.

2588². Those think from the affirmative who believe that things are true because the Lord has said them in the Word . . .

—⁶. Man, being born for both lives, can, while in the world, be also in Heaven, through the Word, which is for both worlds.

2592. (Delight of a heathen philosopher with the Word on account of its representative style. Its holiness affected him so deeply that he could not endure it.) 2593. See H.322.

2686. (Thus) the Ancient Church had writings both historic and prophetic that were Divine and inspired, and which in their internal sense treated of the Lord and His Kingdom, and they were the Word to them. 4964².

2702. Hagar 'saw a well of water'=the Word of the Lord, from which are truths.

—⁵. 'Living water'=truths from the Lord, or from His Word, for He is the Word. —⁶.

2762². Elijah and Elisha represented the Lord as to the Word.

2799⁴. The rider on the White Horse = the Word, thus the Lord who is the Word.

2896. The Word in the Most Ancient Church was not a written Word, but was revealed to everyone who was of that Church. For they were celestial men, and were therefore in the perception of good and truth . . . and thus had the Word written on their hearts. Ex.

2897. From (the representatives and significatives collected by those meant by 'Enoch') was the Word in the Ancient Church. (These) were employed in their Divine worship, in order that they might have communication with Heaven . . . They had a written Word also, which consisted of histories and prophecies, like the Word of the Old Testament; but this Word was lost in process of time. The Histories were called 'The Wars of Jehovah,' and the Prophecies were called 'Parables—Enuntiated,' as is evident from Num.xxi.14,27. Their histories were written in the prophetic style, and were for the most part made up histories. Ill. Their prophecies were written like those of the Old Testament. Ill. . . Thus that Word had an internal sense. 2898.

2899. The Word in the Jewish Church followed afterwards, and was in like manner written by representatives and significatives, in order that it might have an internal sense understood in Heaven, and that there might be in this way a communication . . . From this it is, that if the Word be read by even a little child, the Divine things therein are perceived by the Angels.

2900. As to the Word of the New Testament . . . as the Lord spoke from the Divine Itself, the several things spoken by Him were representative and significative of Divine things, and thus of the heavenly things of His Kingdom and Church.

2904². The representatives and significatives in the Word are thus circumstanced: that, in the supreme sense, each and all things regard the Lord; and the very life of the Word is from this. And, as they regard the Lord, they regard His Kingdom also, for the Lord is the all in His Kingdom. Ex.

[A.] 2909. Where it treats of truth, it treats of good also, for the sake of the heavenly marriage in every thing of the Word. Refs.

2953². There are ideas of man's thought which are the objects of the spiritual thoughts with the Angels, principally those . . . which are from the Word, because all things in the Word are representative . . . and it is at once observed that they are from the Word, because the spiritual and celestial things therein follow most perfectly disposed in their order; and in both there is what is holy from the inmost sense, which treats solely of the Lord and His Kingdom.

3137. The Word, being truth Divine, is called 'a fountain.'

3228^e. Thus the Word is not Divine as to its historical things . . . 3229.

3229^e. Thus the literal sense is the Word only from the internal sense in it.

3263². The Church has not been limited to those who have the Word . . . 3267.

3301^e. To call Elisha 'bald' = to blaspheme the Word, as if there were no truth in it; for Elisha represented the Lord as to the Word. 5247⁶, Ex.

3305². The Word is Divine principally in this—that each and all things in it do not regard one nation or people, but the universal human race, that is to say, which has been, and which will be; and what is still more universal, namely, the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens; and, in the supreme sense, the Lord Himself. As this is so, the Word is Divine.

3310. For the good of life to be of the Church, there must be doctrinal things from the Word . . . (Otherwise) there is indeed the good of life . . . as among the gentiles who have not the Word . . .

—². 'The seed' = the Word of the Lord.

— . It is the good in man that receives the Word.

3358. See APPEARANCE, here. 3359. 3360. 3362.

3364². For the Lord is doctrine itself, and this is why He is called 'the Word,' for the Word is doctrine . . .

3382². For they who are in Heaven are in the idea that all things of the Word, in the internal sense, treat of the Lord; and also that all things of the Word are from the Lord.

3393. For each and all things in the Word, in the supreme sense, relate to the Lord; and the Lord is doctrine itself, that is, the Word, not only as to the supreme, but also as to the internal, and the literal, sense. Ex.

3413^e. These are the earthly things with which the Word itself, which is the fountain of all truth, is obstructed.

3416. For there are internal truths everywhere in the Word, but those who are in the mere memory-knowledge of Knowledges, and not at the same time in the life, when they read the Word, do not even see those truths. . . Thus the posterior things of the Word appear to them, but not the anterior things; that is, the exterior things, but not the interior; and (this) is to see nothing of what is Divine. Sig.

3424². That the Word is living and gives life, is because in it, in the supreme sense, the Lord is treated of, and, in the inmost sense, His Kingdom . . . so that it is life itself that is in the Word, and that inflows into the minds of those who read the Word in a holy [state] . . .

—³. As it has fared with the Word in this way . . . its successive states are described in this chapter.

3436. Although the Word, as to the literal sense, is such that things not true may be confirmed from it . . . he who reads the Word for the purpose of growing wise, that is, of doing what is good, and understanding what is true, is instructed according to his end and affection; for, unknown to him, the Lord inflows, and enlightens his mind, and, where he is in difficulty, gives understanding from other passages. (Continued under SENSE OF LETTER.)

3438². For the Word appears to everyone according to his quality.

3439. As to the Divine in the Word, the case is this: the Divine itself is in the supreme sense of the Word, because in this is the Lord; the Divine is also in the internal sense, because in it is the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens, and hence this sense is called celestial and spiritual; the Divine is also in the literal sense of the Word, because in it is the Lord's Kingdom on earth . . .

3445^e. For the doctrine of charity and love, and life according to it, is the whole Word, as the Lord teaches in Matt. xxii. 37-40.

3452^e. No doctrinal things whatever, provided they are from the Word, are [to be] denied, for they are accepted by the Lord, provided that he who is in them is in the life of charity, for all things that are of the Word can be conjoined with this life . . .

3454. The holy things of the Word are, the Lord's Divine Human, love to Him, and love towards the neighbour—these three are the principal things of the internal sense, and are the holy things of the Word . . . A fourth is, that the Word, as to each and all things of it . . . is Divine; thus that the Lord is in the Word.

3472. On correspondences and representations, especially those which are in the Word. Gen. art.

3476. The Word has been given to man and Angels that by it they may be present with the Lord; for the Word is the medium for uniting earth with Heaven, and through Heaven with the Lord. Ex.

3478. Those who, during their life here, have been greatly delighted with the Word, have such representations (as the tabernacle) presented to their view. Des.

3509³. For in proportion as the Word penetrates . . . more interiorly into Heaven, the more innumerable and ineffable the arcana become . . .

3540^e. See Job, here.

3652. In the Church, or rather in the tract where the Word is.

3665^e. (Origin of the delight felt by a child in reading the Word.)

3686³. The Word in the Ancient Church also had thence the names of places representative, as had also the Word after their time, which is called 'Moses and the Prophets.'

3704¹¹. The reason the Lord so spoke (about the Father and the Son) was that the Word might be received in both earth and Heaven . . . 3705^e.

3708²². When man suffers himself to be enlightened through the Word by the Lord, his obscurity becomes lucid, for there is then opened an internal way, whereby influx and communication takes place through Heaven from the Lord; but when he does not suffer himself to be enlightened through the Word by the Lord, but by his Own intelligence, then his obscurity becomes dark, and thus false; for the internal way is closed . . .

3735². Thus is evident the nature of the conjunction of Heaven and earth through the Word; namely, that a man who reads the Word holily, is, by such correspondences, closely conjoined with Heaven, and through Heaven with the Lord, although he be in thought solely about those things in the Word which are in the sense of its letter. The Holy itself, that is then with the man, is from the influx of celestial and spiritual thoughts and affections, which are such with the Angels.

3768. That all the knowledge and doctrine of good and truth are from the Word. Tr.

3769. That the Word had been closed up. Sig. and Ex.

— . The Word is said to be closed, when understood only as to the sense of the letter, and everything in it is assumed as doctrine; and it is still more closed when the things that favour the cupidities of the love of self and of the world are acknowledged as doctrinal things. Fully ex.

—³. In proportion as a man is in the loves of self and of the world . . . in the same proportion the Word is closed to him. Ex.

—^e. Thus has the Word been closed, when yet the Word is such that it is open even into Heaven, and through Heaven to the Lord; and it is closed only relatively to the man . . .

3770. That all Churches and their doctrinal things are from the Word. Sig.

3771. That they opened the Word. Sig. 3789.

3773. That meanwhile the Word was closed. Sig. and Ex.

— . The case is this. When any Church is being established, the Word is at first closed to them, but is then unclosed . . . and they learn that all doctrine is founded on the two (great) commandments. When these are regarded as the end, the Word is opened; for all the Law and the Prophets . . . depend on them; (so that) the men of the Church are then enlightened in everything they see in the Word, because the Lord is then present with them by means of Angels, and He teaches them, without their knowing it . . . But in process of time Churches depart from these two commandments, and turn aside . . . to the things that are called matters of faith, thus from life to doctrine; and, in proportion as this is done, in the same proportion the Word is closed.

3786^e. The Word has been given to the Church (to prevent doctrinal things from being supplied by man's Rational, which, in spiritual and Divine things, is blind and illusive).

3798. That the Lord, from natural good, has uncovered the Word as to its interiors. Sig. and Ex. . . For the Word is uncovered from good. Ex.

3812⁹. That the Word, which is Divine truth itself, vivifies the dead. Sig.

3839^e. It is evident from this how holy the Word is; for there is holiness in . . . love that is from the Divine, and thus in the things contained in the Word.

3857⁴. On this account the Lord has spoken in the Word according to the apprehension of man . . . 4210^e, Ex.

3880. 'I will confess Jehovah' . . . in the internal sense, = the Word, and in the external, the derivative doctrine . . . for all the doctrine of love and charity must be from the Word, because, from himself, man knows nothing of things celestial and spiritual . . .

3898³. The reason the interior things of the Word are now being opened, is that the Church is at this day so ravastated . . . that although men know and understand, still they do not acknowledge . . . except a few who are in the life of good, and are called 'the elect,' who can now be instructed . . . But where they are, the Lord alone knows; there will be few within the Church . . .

[A.] 3900^s. The whole Word is called 'a desert,' when it no longer serves for doctrinal things. Ex.

3901. The comparisons in the Word are all made by means of significatives. 4434^s.

3954^s. Thus the Word has been given so as to serve for man and Angels at the same time: in this the Word differs from all other writing.

3993. There are many things (here) that would not be worthy of mention in the Divine Word, unless there were in them more arcane things than such as appear in the letter. Ex.

4060^s. Not that the Lord has come in person . . . for the Lord is present in the Word, because all things of the Word are from Him and about Him. Sig. —⁷.

4136^s. There is not a single word in the Word that does not involve a heavenly arcanum, although to man it appears as of no moment . . .

4189^s. Those within the Church are in good and truth . . . in the direct line, because they have the Word, and through the Word there is a direct communication with Heaven, and through Heaven with the Lord; but not for the gentiles, because they have not the Word . . . Tr. 4190. 4197.

4190^s. Christians are in what is false in believing that Heaven is for them alone, because they have the book of the Word written on paper but not on hearts.

4217^s. The like is the case with everything in the Word (as with the symbols in the Holy Supper), and therefore the Word is a medium uniting man with the Lord; and unless there were such a uniting medium, Heaven could not inflow with man . . . and, if it were removed, no one could be led to good . . . That the Church of the Lord where the Word is, is like the heart and lungs . . . Refs.

4231^s. 'My words shall not pass away' = that (although the external and internal things of the former Church will perish) the Word of the Lord will remain. . . 'The words of the Lord' are all things that are in the Word. (Moreover) the Jewish nation has been preserved for the sake of the Word.

4280^s. Incredible to say, the internal man thinks in no other way (than according to correspondences), for when the external man apprehends the Word according to the sense of the letter, the internal man apprehends it according to the internal sense, although the man is not aware of it while he lives in the body . . .

4368^s. Many are affected by the Word of the Lord, and devote much labour to the reading of it; but still there are few who have as the end to be instructed in the truth; for most abide in their own dogma, which is the only thing that they study to confirm from the Word. . . Those only are in the affection of truth who love . . . to know what the truth is, and to search the Scriptures for this end; and no one is in this affection but he who is in good, that is, in charity towards the neighbour, and, still more, he who is in love to the Lord.

4383^s. From this may be inferred the nature of the Word, that, being Divine, it contains in it infinite things from its first origin, and, derivatively, unutterable things that are of angelic wisdom; and, finally, only such things as are adapted to human apprehension.

4391^s. Divine revelation, or the Word. Tr.

— To hide the interiors of the Word. Sig.

4442^s. This is why the Word has been written in such a style. But the Word has this peculiarity beyond the writings of the ancients: that each of the subjects represents, in a continuous series, the heavenly and spiritual things of the Lord's Kingdom; and, in the supreme sense, the Lord Himself . . . and, what is more, they are real correspondences, which are continuous through the three Heavens from the Lord.

4444^s. (The Jews) acknowledge Moses and the Prophets, and thus the Word. This, in itself, is holy; but as regards them it is not holy; for they regard themselves in everything therein, and thus make the Word worldly, and even earthly.

4480. Whatever has been written in the Word, is spiritual in itself and in its essence. It is known that the Word is spiritual, but its spirituality does not appear in the letter, for in this it is worldly, especially in the historical parts. But when it is being read by man, the worldly things therein become spiritual in the Spiritual World, that is, with the Angels . . .

4690^s. For the Word of the Lord is universal, and comprehends in general every Church. 4769^s, Examp.

4692. That 'words=verba'=truths, is because all the Word in Heaven is from the Lord, and therefore, in the internal sense, 'words'=truths, and 'the Word,' in general, all Divine truth. 4703. 5075. 5272.

4720^s. Instruction by means of the Word. Sig.

4791. Therefore those who love the Word of the Lord, and desire from it the Knowledges of truth and good, belong to the province of the tongue . . . some to the tongue itself, some to the larynx and trachea, some to the throat, some to the gums, and some to the lips.

4807. For the Lord spoke (in Matt.xxv.) as everywhere in the Word of the Old and New Testaments, by representatives and significatives; for to speak (in this way) is to speak to the World and Heaven at the same time . . . Such speech is Divine, because universal, and therefore belongs to the Word. 5147⁵.

4814^o. For whatever is written in the Word is of such a nature that with the Angels it is turned into a corresponding sense, which does not at all appear in the sense of the letter . . .

4868³. If (the Jews) are told that the Word is . . . most holy, even every tittle of it, they acknowledge it and conjoin themselves, but from such a lust . . . 4911.

4903. The internal sight . . . is not in the light of Heaven, unless it is in faith in the Lord, and from that faith reads the Word.

4923². The Jews and some Christians believe that . . . in the Word there is some concealed meaning, which they call mystical. Ex.

4926⁶. 'Palace' = the Word.

4966. Primary things for the interpretation of the Word, Sig. and Ex. 5237.

4989^o. After death, a man retains nothing of the historical things of the Word . . . but only the spiritual and Divine things that he had learnt from the Word, and had applied to his life.

5089². Unless man's thought can be elevated above sensuous things . . . he cannot understand any interior thing in the Word . . .

5126³. From youth to early manhood, communication is opened between the Natural and the Rational . . . by hearing and reading the Word.

5136². As the Word could not be written except by representatives . . . even of places . . . the Church was successively preserved in the land of Canaan. 6516⁶, Ex. 7439^o.

5275². Things happened in this way . . . chiefly for the sake of the Word, that it might be written (representatively) . . . and thus might be serviceable not only to the man of the Church, but also to the Angels . . . for they perceive Divine things from it, and so are affected with holy emotions, which are communicated to the man who reads the Word from affection . . . 5316².

5329^o. The Word has been given that Angels may be with man . . .

5402. The doctrinals of the Church . . . are nothing but scientifics, until one has seen from the Word whether they are true, and in this way made them his own.

—². There are two ways of procuring the truths of faith—by doctrinals, and by the Word. When a man procures them by doctrinals only, he has faith in those who have drawn them from the Word . . . But when he procures them himself, from the Word, and thereby confirms them in himself as true, he believes them because they are from the Divine . . . When a man is able to view them from his own judgment, if, then, he does not consult the Word, in order to see from it whether they are true, they remain in him as mere scientifics; while if he does consult the Word, from the affection and end to know truths, he then, when he has found them procures for himself the things of faith from the genuine fountain, and they are appropriated to him from the Divine. Tr. 6047².

5432¹. When such read the Word, they scan it with the sole end of confirming the doctrinals they have learned, for the sake of gain; and some of them scan the Word that they may 'see the nakedness of the land' . . . 6047².

—⁵. But those who are in the affection of truth for the sake of truth and of life . . . have indeed faith in the doctrinals of the Church; but still they scan the Word for no other end than the truth . . . for it is everywhere said, Here is the Church . . . and therefore the Word should be scanned with devout prayer to the Lord for enlightenment.

5466. The holiness that is sometimes perceived in a man when he is reading the Word, has many such arcana in it.

5492. When the Word goes to the Inmost Heaven, each and all things of the Word pass into affections which are of love and charity . . .

5502. For in the Word everything is holy, and the holiness is from the heavenly marriage of good and truth. This is why Heaven is in the Word, and consequently the Lord . . . inasmuch that He is the Word.

5620¹². John the Baptist represented the Lord as to the Word, which is the Divine truth on earth.

5702. Spirits from the Christian world, on being compelled to hear the interiors of the Word, were seized with so great a nausea that they felt as if going to vomit . . . The reason (the Christian world is such) is that they have no affection of truth for the sake of truth . . . Their thinking and speaking anything from the Word . . . is from habit acquired from early childhood . . .

5719. They who despise and ridicule the Word in the letter . . . and are in no love towards the neighbour . . . relate to the vitiated things in the blood.

5922^o. For the Word is Divine truth for the use of the Church.

—⁶. The Word, as to the external sense, is in a cloud, for the reason that human minds are in darkness; and therefore if the Word were not in a cloud, it would be understood by scarcely anyone, and the holy things of the internal sense would also be profaned by the wicked. Sig.

5952^o. The Lord does not openly teach anyone truths, but . . . inspires, unknown to the man, the apperception and derivative choice that this is true because the Word says so . . .

6023. Scientifics are ruled by truths, when truth is acknowledged because the Lord has said so in the Word.

6221^o. In its descent (from the Lord through Heaven) the Word has clothed itself with forms adapted to the apprehension in the triplicate Heaven, and at last with a form adapted to the apprehension of man . . .

6222². The Intellectual of the Church, is to perceive from the Word what is the truth of faith and the good of charity.

[A. 6222]³. For the Intellectual of the Church is that when a man reads the Word, and carefully compares one passage with another, he perceives therefrom what is to be believed, and what is to be done. (Continued under ENLIGHTEN.)

6280. The Divine Human before the Lord's advent . . . was Jehovah Himself inflowing through Heaven when He was speaking the Word . . .

6333³. The Word is given that it may unite Heaven and earth . . . and therefore has been so written that it is spiritually apprehended by the Angels when it is naturally apprehended by man; and in this way what is holy inflows through the Angels, and through this the union is effected. Such is the Word in both the historicals and propheticals . . .

—⁴. The historicals have been given in order that through them infants and children may be initiated into the reading of the Word . . .

6343². That the Word is holy, and, in its interiors, most holy, is very evident from the fact that there is a heavenly marriage in every single particular of the Word, namely, a marriage of good and truth, thus Heaven; and that, in the inmost sense, there is in every single particular the marriage of the Lord's Divine Human with His Kingdom and Church; nay, in the supreme sense, the union, in the Lord, of the Divine itself and the Divine Human. These most holy things are in every single particular of the Word; a plain indication that the Word has descended from the Divine. Ex. 7022².

6620. From these things it may be known what infinite things there are in every Thing of the Word—for it has descended from the Lord through Heaven—although it appears very simple to those whose ideas are closed. Ex.

6621. The thought of those who when they read the Word had studied only the art of criticism . . . have been represented as closed lines . . . and a derivative texture . . . D.1951. 2041.

6714. Moses represents the Lord as to the Divine law, which is the Word.

6752². That 'the law,' in the widest sense, is the whole Word. Ill.

—³. For converse with the Lord is through the Word. Sig.

6757^e. For the Word has been written not for man only, but also for Spirits and Angels.

6774. Study there in the Word. Sig. and Ex.

6776. Instruction in truths from the Word. Sig.

6777. The doctrine of charity enriched from the Word. Sig.

6822^e. Everyone must first acquire truth from the doctrine of the Church, and afterwards from the Word of the Lord . . .

6880. The Divine itself cannot communicate itself to anyone except through the Divine Human, nor the Divine Human, except through the Divine truth, which is the Holy Spirit: this is meant by 'all things were made through the Word' (John i. 3).

—^e. For whatever proceeds from the Lord is the veriest reality in the universe: such is the Divine truth, which is called 'the Word through which all things were made.' 7004². S861².

6947. The Word is the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord's Divine Human.

6971. That if they do not obey what is announced from the Word, instead of being a spiritual and rational man, they will become non-spiritual and non-rational. Sig. and Ex.

6997^e. Thus the Word . . . in its interior bosom, has genuine truths stored in it, and, in its inmost bosom, Divine truth itself, which proceeds immediately from the Lord, thus also the Divine good, that is, the Lord Himself.

7004. For the Word which is uttered by a Spirit or Angel, proceeds from the Lord's Divine Human.

7053³. How the prophets wrote the Word. See PROPHET, here.

7206. 'The Word' = the Divine truth proceeding from the Divine good of the Lord's Divine Human.

7262. In itself the Word is nothing but the doctrine of love to the Lord, and of charity towards the neighbour. Ill.

7573⁵. 'The voice of Jehovah' = truth Divine and its power, thus the Word . . .

7643¹⁰. John the Baptist represented the Word. Ex.

7933. According to the promise in the Word. Sig. and Ex.

8078⁴. The insinuation of faith by an internal way is effected by the reading of the Word, and by enlightenment by the Lord then, which is given according to the quality of the affection, that is, according to the end to know truth.

8456. No truth . . . of the Word becomes truth with a man until it has received life from the Divine, and it receives life through the insinuation of the truth which proceeds from the Lord that is called the truth of peace. Ex.

8535. 'The testimony,' in the universal sense, = the Word . . .

8615^e. The Word has been so written that everything in it . . . corresponds to things in Heaven; and from this the Word has Divine force, and conjoins Heaven with earth; for when the Word is read on earth, the Angels in Heaven are moved to the holiness that is in the internal sense. This is effected through the correspondences of all the particulars in it.

8652^e. Because the Word is in the Church, and, through the Word, the presence of the Lord. 8768.

8686. The truth through which man is led (when being regenerated) is the Word; for this is truth Divine.

8694². Revelation means enlightenment when the Word is being read, and the perception then; for those in good, and who long for truth, are so taught from the Word; whereas those not in good cannot be taught from the Word, but only confirmed in such things as they have been instructed in from infancy, whether they are true or false. (Continued under REVELATION.)

8780³. When such read the Word, they are quite blind to the truth that does not make a one with their doctrine. Examp.

8783². The learned . . . believe that they would receive the Word more favourably if heavenly things were set forth nakedly, and if they had not been written in such a simple style; but they are very much mistaken, for they would then have rejected it more than the simple . . . for human learning induces this darkness with those who trust in their own intelligence. Ill.

8864³. Hence it is that the Lord is called 'the Word.'

8902^e. In this does the Word differ from, distance, and surpass all other writing.

8904. That the Word is not to be applied to confirm falsities and evils. Sig. and Ex.

8920². (The descent of the Word through the Heavens. See DIVINE TRUTH here.)

8931. That all things of the Word are through influx from the Divine through Heaven. Sig. and Ex.

— . What Jehovah speaks is truth Divine, thus the Word which is in the Church.

—³. For the Lord now began (at Sinai) to reveal the Word, which was to serve mankind for doctrine and life; first, through Moses, and afterwards through the prophets . . .

8939^e. Whoever wishes to be happy to eternity . . . let him know and believe that the Word is the only doctrine which teaches how man ought to live . . .

8941². The truths from which the Lord is to be worshipped, are to be taken from no other source than the Word, because in every single thing therein there is life from the Divine. Ex. 8943, Ex.

8962. These combats are effected through the truths of faith that are from the Word; (otherwise) the man does not overcome, because the Lord is in no others. 8964.

and that this was the reason they had not recognized the holiness of the Word; and it was testified, further, that all who have been in the truths of faith, and in a life according to them, have held the Word to be holy, and have perceived it to be so when reading it; and in this way they were shown that the cause had not been in the Word, but in themselves; for those who are in a life of good have their interiors opened into Heaven, whence the Holy of the Word inflows from the Angels; whereas those in a life of evil have their interiors closed towards Heaven, and opened into Hell, whence inflows the contrary. Examp.

9033. This (apparent truth) is not to be denied, for to do so would destroy faith in the Word; and if this is destroyed no one can live spiritually, because man has spiritual life through faith from the Word. 9036. See also 9039.

9049⁵. The reason worldly men were not to understand, was to prevent them from profaning the interiors of the Word . . . for the most frightful Hell of all is that of the profaners of the Word.

9094. For the Angels see the arcana of the Word in light from the Lord, in which innumerable things are presented to the view which do not fall into the words of speech, and not even into the ideas of thought, with men, so long as they are in the body.

9127³. Let them remain in their belief, provided they believe that there is holiness in the Word . . .

9144¹⁰. The quality of the Divine Word in the Jewish Church. Rep.

—¹¹. 'Judah' = the Lord as to the Word, and as to doctrine from the Word.

9152^e. When a man of the Church who is in the good of faith, is reading the Word, the Angels adjoin themselves to him, and are delighted with the man, because with the wisdom which then inflows to them through the Word from the Lord. Hence is the conjunction of Heaven with man, which would not exist at all without the Word; for the Word is such that, in its Original Language, there is not a jot that does not affect the Angels, and conjoin them with man. This . . . has been shown me from Heaven.

9212^e. There would be no conjunction with Heaven without the Word, that is, without Divine truth revealed. (Which in our Earth is the Word. 9216³. 9276⁷.)

9222. Truth Divine is the Word; and the doctrine of the Church is the derivative truth.

—². They who blaspheme or deny the Word, can receive nothing of the truth and good of faith; for the Word teaches the existence of the Lord, of Heaven and Hell, etc., which, without the Word would be quite unknown; and therefore they who deny the Word, cannot receive anything that the Word teaches; for, when they read or hear it, what is negative occurs, which either extinguishes the truth, or turns it into falsity; and therefore the first of all things for the man of the Church to do is to believe the Word, and this is indeed the primary thing with him who is in the truth of faith and good of charity; whereas with those who are in the evils of the loves of self and of the world, the primary thing is not to believe the Word, for they reject it the moment they think about it, and also blaspheme it. If a man saw the magnitude and nature of the blasphemies (of such) against the Word, he would be horrified: the man himself is not aware of them while in the world, because they lie hidden behind the ideas of his active thought . . . But they are revealed in the other life. Further ex.

[A.] 9256⁴. The heart and lungs (of the Church) are where the Word is; and the rest of the members and viscera are where the Word is not.

9351. The principal reason (why the Lord assumed the Human on our Earth) was for the sake of the Word, in order that it might be written in our Earth, and then be published through the whole Earth; and, once published, be preserved for all posterity; and that in this way it might be made manifest, even to all in the other life, that God has become Man. (All these statements fully ex. 9352-9356.) Further ex. 9358-9361.

9370. It treats (in Ex.xxiv.) of the Word given by the Lord through Heaven, its quality, that it is Divine in both the internal and external senses; and that through it there is conjunction of the Lord with man. 9372. 9378. 9401. 9403. 9419.

9372². There are many in the Word who represent the Lord as to truth Divine, that is, as to the Word; but the chief among them are Moses, Elijah, Elisha, and John the Baptist. III.

—³. The Word is compared to 'a reed shaken with the wind' when it is explained at pleasure. Ex.

9382². They who are thus illuminated, understand the Word as to its interiors, and therefore they make for themselves doctrine from the Word, to which they apply the sense of the letter . . . (Continued under ENLIGHTEN.)

9416. 'The two tables' = the book of the law, that is, the Word, in the whole complex. Ex.

9422. The top of the mountain, where Jehovah was = the highest or inmost of the law or Word; the rest of the mountain = the internal of the law or Word, such as is in Heaven; and the parts beneath the mountain, where the elders and people were, = the external of the law or Word, which is its external sense.

9424. Truths from the Word from which there is doctrine, support the Word. Rep.

10126. Hence the Word of the Lord may be called as it were Heaven in ultimates.

10131^e. The Church makes a one with Heaven; the Word is what conjoins them; the Lord is in the Word, and the Lord is the Word.

10251^e. It is the Word that must be the source of all the truths of the Church; for the Word is the Divine truth itself sent down from Heaven by the Lord.

10265. Whatever is said in the Word must be understood relatively to that of which it is said . . . In the Inmost Heaven, all things of the Word are applied to the Lord's Divine Human . . .

10276⁸. They who lay stress on the letter of the Word alone, and have no doctrine . . . may be drawn into any heresies. Hence the Word is called by such the Book of heresies. 10400².

—^e. Therefore unless the Lord had come into the world, and opened the interiors of the Word, the communication with the Heavens through the Word would have been broken, and the human race on this Earth would have perished; for man can think nothing of truth, and do nothing of good, except from Heaven . . . and the Word is what opens Heaven.

—³. Heaven is in wisdom from the Word, when it is being read by man . . .

— . This is why such a Word has been given; (and) if this medium of conjunction were not in the world, conjunction with Heaven would perish, and, with this conjunction, every good of the will and truth of the understanding with man; and, with these, that human principle which consociates man with man; so that what is evil and false would take possession of all things, and one community would perish after another . . . Such would be the state of man unless Heaven were conjoined with him, and Heaven would not be conjoined with him, unless there were a Word, or unless Divine truth were communicated immediately through Angels, as in ancient times. When Heaven is mentioned, the Divine is also meant . . .

10547. 'The tent of meeting'=the external of worship, of the Church, and of the Word, in which are internal things. 10548. 10550. 10551.

10548². To interrogate the Lord, is to consult the Word . . .

10554. [All] the Divine things in the Word are conjoined together. (As are the heavenly Societies, in the human form). Sig. and Ex.

10559³. The Word could not have been written anywhere but in the land of Canaan . . . and, where the Word is, there is the Church. Ex.

10578. 'Thou canst not see My faces'=that the interior Divine things of the . . . Word cannot appear to (such). Ex. 10583. 10584.

10582³. They who read the Word without doctrine, are like those who walk in the dark . . .

10600. The transparency of the Divine internal of the Word . . . through the external. Tr.

10603. The external of the Word . . . such as it was for the sake of that nation. Sig. and Ex.

10614. The external of the Word in which is the Divine. Sig. and Ex.

—². (The three senses of the Word. Ex.) W.221.

10632. The primary things by which there is conjunction of the Lord with mankind through the Word. Sig. and Ex.

—³. In the most ancient times there was not the Word, but immediate revelation . . .

—⁴. There was a Word in (the Ancient) Church, but one which was of service to that Church only . . . (and it was afterwards) provided that the Word should be written . . . H.306.

10633. The Word which is Divine in each and all things for the Church. Sig. and Ex. 10634, Ex.

10635. That all by whom the Word is received recognize the Divine in it. Sig. and Ex.

—². For all within the Church who are in the good of life recognize the Divine in the Word.

10638². These are they who understand the Word, and are affected with the truths from it . . .

10641. Seduction thence in the Word itself. Sig. and Ex.

10683². In the internal of the Word . . . are those who love to do truth for the sake of truth, from a spiritual affection; in the external of the Word in which is an internal are those who love truth for the sake of truth, but from a natural affection . . .

[A.] 10685. Temptations before the internal of the . . . Word is given. Sig. and Ex.

10687. 'He wrote on the tables the words of the covenant'=the Word, through which there is conjunction of Heaven with man. Ex. 10690.

10703^e. For the Word does not shine of itself, but only before the man who is in light from the internal; without this the Word is only the letter.

10707^e. For the Church is where the Word is, and is from the Word . . . and therefore such as is a man's understanding of the Word, such is the Church in him, and such is his worship. 10761.

H. 254. How the Lord spoke with the prophets, through whom was the Word. (See PROPHECY, here.)

258. It is not according to Divine order to be instructed by writings from Heaven, but by the Word, because through this alone is there communication and conjunction of Heaven with the world, thus of the Lord with man.

259. That there are writings in the Heavens has been provided . . . for the sake of the Word; for this, in its essence, is Divine truth, from which is all heavenly wisdom for both men and Angels; for it was dictated by the Lord, and that which is dictated by the Lord passes through all the Heavens in order, and is terminated with man; and hence it is accommodated to both the wisdom in which the Angels are, and to the intelligence in which men are. It is from this that there is a Word with the Angels also, and that they read it equally as do men on earth; their doctrinal things are from it, and their preachings are made from it. The Word is the same; its natural sense, however . . . is not in Heaven; but the spiritual sense.

261^e. They have the Word written in this way (des.) in the lower Heavens; and by heavenly forms in the Inmost Heaven. (See WRITE, here.)

303. On the conjunction of Heaven with man through the Word. Chapter. 307, III.

305. As man has broken the connection with Heaven . . . a medium has been provided . . . to be to Heaven as a basis and foundation, and also for the conjunction of Heaven with man: this medium is the Word.

308. There is also a conjunction through the Word of Heaven with those out of the Church, where the Word is not . . . But the Church where the Word is . . . is as the heart and lungs . . . and those out of the Church . . . constitute the members . . . and the conjunction of Heaven with them through the Word may be compared to light, which is propagated from the middle to what is round about. Divine light is in the Word, and the Lord with Heaven is present there, and from this presence the distant are in light: it would be different if there were no Word.

309. Unless there had been such a Word on this Earth, its inhabitants would have been separated from Heaven, and therefore would have been rational no longer; for the human Rational comes forth from the influx of the light of Heaven. Further ex. J. 103.

310. Although the style of the Word appears simple . . . nothing can be compared to it . . . because Divine wisdom lies hidden, not only in every meaning but also in each word; and in Heaven this wisdom shines forth . . . it is the light of Heaven, because it is Divine truth.

—2. Without such a Word, there would be no light of Heaven with the men of our Earth, and therefore there would be no conjunction of Heaven with them . . .

393. They who have loved the Word (here) and have sought truths therein with longing . . . for the sake of the use of life, for both themselves and others, in Heaven are in ecclesiastical affairs. They are in enlightenment and the light of wisdom according to their love and longing for use, and they come into them from the Word in the Heavens, which is not natural, as in the world, but spiritual. These perform the office of preachers . . .

489^e. They who have loved Divine truths and the Word from interior affection . . . dwell in light, in lofty places, which appear like mountains, and are continually in the light of Heaven . . . They live in a vernal temperature; and fields, harvests, and vineyards are in their view; everything in their houses is refulgent as with precious stones; and when they look through the windows, it is as it were through clear crystals. Ex.

516. All the instruction (in the spiritual places of instruction) is given from doctrine from the Word, and not from the Word without doctrine.

526^e. Abraham, David, the Apostles, etc. are not mentioned in the Word which is in Heaven, because that Word is the internal sense of the Word that is in the world.

N. 249. On the Holy Scripture, or Word. Gen. art. A. 10318.

255. On the necessity and excellence of the Word. (Refs. to passages.) W. H. 6.

256. That the Word is not understood except by the enlightened. (Refs. to passages.)

257. That the Word is not understood except through doctrine from the Word. (Refs. to passages.)

261. That the Word has been written by correspondences, and thus by representatives. (Refs. to passages.)

263. That the Lord is the Word. (Refs. to passages.)

264. On those who are against the Word. (Refs. to passages.)

J. 28^e. Without such a letter the Word could not have been Divine, or have served both Heaven and the world for doctrine of life and faith, and for conjunction.

55^e. For the way to Heaven is the acknowledgment of the Lord, and faith and love to Him, and the Word is what teaches the way, so that without the Lord, through the medium of the Word, there is no salvation.

57^e. As they wanted to know whether there is this spiritual sense in these words (to Peter), the Word that is in Heaven was handed them, in which there is not the natural but the spiritual sense . . . and when they read it, they saw that Peter is not mentioned there, but instead of him truth from good which is from the Lord. When they saw this they rejected it in a rage, and would have torn it with their teeth if it had not been instantaneously taken away. R.768².

65. In itself, the Word is spiritual, and therefore treats of spiritual things . . . In the sense of the letter, these are set forth by means of natural things, because natural things serve spiritual things as a basis, and without such a basis the Word would not be a Divine work, because not complete; the Natural, which is the ultimate in Divine order, completes . . .

L. 1. That the universal Holy Scripture is about the Lord, and that the Lord is the Word. Gen.art.

—². The Lord is called the Word, because 'the Word'=the Divine truth, or the Divine wisdom, and the Lord is (these).

—^e. As the Word is the Divine wisdom of the Divine love, it follows that it is Jehovah Himself, thus the Lord . . .

2. The Word here meant in special is the same as that manifested through Moses and the prophets, and through the Evangelists, as is very evident from the fact that it is the Divine truth itself, from which the Angels have all their wisdom, and men all their spiritual intelligence; for it is this same Word that is with men in the world that is also with the Angels in the Heavens; but in the world it is natural, and in the Heavens spiritual. And, as it is the Divine truth, it is also the Divine proceeding, and this is not only from the Lord, but is also the Lord Himself. As the Word is the Lord Himself, each and all things of it have been written about Him alone; from Isaiah to Malachi there is nothing that is not about the Lord, or, in the opposite sense, against Him. Ex. . . On this account, everyone, even at this day, who approaches the Lord alone, while he reads the Word, and prays to Him, is enlightened in it.

8. That the Lord fulfilled all things of the law, means that He fulfilled all things of the Word. Gen.art.

14². The Word, to which violence had been done by the Jewish people. Sig.

15². The Church with the Jews was utterly devastated, and by this, that they had perverted all things of the Word . . . This was signified by all things of the Lord's Passion. 16^e, Des. R.26.

19. That the Lord . . . as to the Word, is called 'the Son of Man.' Gen.art.

23. The Lord as the Word suffered, judges, comes into the world, redeems, saves, reforms, and regenerates. Fully ex. seriatim.

37. That the Lord is the very God from whom and about whom is the Word. Gen.art.

50^e. 'The blasphemy against the Son of Man'= something against the Word, by interpreting its meaning differently.

52. That Jehovah Himself . . . spoke the Word through the prophets. Ex.

53. It is not said in the Prophets that they spoke the Word from the Holy Spirit, but that they spoke it from Jehovah, from Jehovah of Hosts, from the Lord Jehovah. Ill.

— . And, as the Lord is Jehovah, it follows that all the Word has been spoken by Him. R.36^e. T.158.

S. 1. That the Holy Scripture, or Word, is the Divine truth itself. Gen.art.

2². 'Jacob's well'= the Word; and therefore the Lord sat at it.

3. The style of the Word is the Divine style itself, with which no other style . . . can be compared; for it is like thick darkness to light. The style of the Word is such that it is holy in every meaning, and in every word, and in some places in even the very letters. Hence the Word conjoins man with the Lord, and opens Heaven.

—². Two things proceed from the Lord — the Divine love and the Divine wisdom . . . in its essence, the Word is both of these. (Continued under READ.)

6². The three degrees in the Word. See DEGREE, here. In its ultimate sense, the Word is natural; in its interior sense, spiritual; and in its inmost, celestial; and it is Divine in every sense.

8. As, interiorly, the Word is spiritual and celestial, it has been written by pure correspondences . . .

12. The successive states of the Church as to the understanding of the Word. Sig. 13.

18^e. The power of the Word against falsities of every kind with natural men. Tr.

26². For the Lord teaches everyone by the Word, and He teaches from those truths which the man has, and does not pour in new ones immediately . . .

—⁵. The falsification of the Word by many at this day. (Rep. before Swedenborg.)

35^e. All who despise the Word, and falsify the sense of its letter, appear bald there; but they who honour and love it, appear with becoming hair.

39. The spiritual sense and celestial sense are not the Word without the natural sense, which is the sense of the letter; for they are like spirit and life without a body . . .

47. Where the Lord is meant, the Word also is meant, because the Lord is the Word.

48. The Word in its glory was represented by the Lord when He was transfigured. Ex. R.24^e.

51. That the Word is not understood without doctrine. Gen.art. (See DOCTRINE at S.52. 54.)

58. The reason the Word shines and is translucent with (such) is that in every particular of the Word there is a spiritual and celestial sense, and these senses are in the light of Heaven; and therefore the Lord inflows into the natural sense through these senses and their light into the natural sense and its light . . . and from this the man, from interior perception, acknowledges the truth, and then sees it in his thought, and this whenever he is in the affection of truth for the sake of truth; for perception comes from affection, and thought from perception, and thus is effected the acknowledgment which is called faith.

59. With these the first thing is to acquire doctrine from the literal sense of the Word; thus do they kindle for themselves a lamp for their further progress; (and then) from this they see the Word. (Continued under DOCTRINE.)

[S.] 61. I have spoken with many who believed that they would shine as the stars . . . because they had, as they said, held the Word to be holy, had read it through frequently, had collected many things from it by which they had confirmed the dogmas of their faith . . . but it was found that some of them had studied the Word from the love of self, in order that they might appear great in the world . . . some from the love of the world, in order to become rich; and when these were examined to find what they knew from the Word, it was found that they knew from it nothing of genuine truth, but only such as is called truth falsified . . . the reason of which was, that when self and the world are the ends, then, when they read the Word, their minds cleave to themselves and the world, causing them to think constantly from their proprium, which is in thick darkness in respect to all things of Heaven . . .

—³. It has been very different with those who have studied the Word from the affection of knowing truth because it is truth, and because it is of service to the uses of life, not only their own, but also their neighbour's. These I have seen elevated into Heaven, and thus into the light in which is the Divine truth there, and at the same time exalted into angelic wisdom, and into its happiness, which is life eternal.

69. (Thus) in the Word alone . . . there is spirit and life. Ill.

70. That the Word is in all the Heavens, and is the source of angelic wisdom. Gen.art.

71. The Word in Heaven is written in a spiritual style . . . which consists of mere letters, each of which involves a meaning, and there are points over the letters which exalt the meaning. Ex.

—². There are no names of persons and places in their Word . . . but instead of names there are the Things which they signify. Examps. . . It is the same with the numbers . . . (Thus) the Word in Heaven is a Word that corresponds to our Word, so that they are a one. (Further ex. in T.241.)

72. Wonderful to say, the Word in the Heavens has been so written that the simple understand it simply, and the wise wisely; for there are many points and signs over the letters which exalt the meaning, and the simple pay no attention to them . . . but the wise do, each according to his wisdom, even to the highest.

— A copy of the Word, written by Angels inspired by the Lord, is stored in the sacarium of each of the greater Societies, lest it should be altered in respect to any point. Our Word is indeed like the Word in Heaven, in that the simple understand it simply, and the wise wisely, but this is effected in a different way.

73. The Angels confess that they have all their wisdom through the Word; for in proportion as they are in the understanding of the Word, in the same proportion they are in light; and the light of Heaven is Divine wisdom . . . In the sacarium in which the copy of the Word is stored, there is a flaming and bright light, that surpasses every degree of the light outside . . . The reason is that the Lord is in the Word.

74². The Word in the Celestial Kingdom is written differently from the Word in the Spiritual Kingdom; for in the (former) Word the goods of love are expressed, and the signs mean affections; whereas in the (latter) Word the truths of wisdom are expressed, and the signs mean perceptions.

75. From this may be inferred the nature of the wisdom that lies hidden in the Word that is in the world; for all angelic wisdom, which is unutterable, lies hidden in it; for it is the containant of it, and after death the man who becomes an Angel from the Lord through the Word comes into this wisdom.

76. That the Church is from the Word, and that it is such as is its understanding of the Word. Gen.art. T.244, et seq.

—^e. It is not the Word that makes the Church, but the understanding of it . . .

77. The Word is the Word according to the understanding of it with a man . . . if it is not understood, the Word is indeed called the Word, but is not the Word with that man.

— The Word is the Truth according to the understanding of it; for the Word may not be the Truth, for it may be falsified.

— The Word is spirit and life according to the understanding of it; for the letter without the understanding of it is dead.

78. Moreover the Lord is present with a man, and is conjoined with him, through the Word, because the Lord is the Word, and in it as it were speaks with man; and also because the Lord is the Divine truth itself, and the Word, too, is that. (Thus) the Lord is present with a man, and is at the same time conjoined with him, according to his understanding of the Word . . . being present with him through the reading of the Word, and conjoined with him through the understanding of truth from the Word, and according thereto; and, in proportion as the Lord is conjoined with a man, in the same proportion is the Church in the man.

79. In many passages in the Prophets . . . it is taught that the Church is nowhere else than where the Word is rightly understood . . . Ill.

80. That in every particular of the Word there is the marriage of the Lord and the Church, and the derivative marriage of good and truth. Gen.art.

96. It is hurtful to confirm the apparent truth of the Word to the destruction of genuine truth, because everything of the sense of the letter communicates with Heaven . . . (Continued under SENSE OF LETTER.)

96a. The Word compared to a garden that should be called a heavenly Paradise. Des.

97⁵. The Divine external sphere of the Word is described in Ezek.i.4. This is represented as a man, in verse 5, etc. etc.

—^e. These summaries have been collated with the Word in Heaven, and they conform to it.

98. That the Lord came into the world to fulfil all things of the Word, and thereby to become Divine truth or the Word in ultimates. Gen.art. T.262, Ill.

—e. The Lord had indeed been the Word before, but in primes; for it is said, 'In the beginning was the Word . . .' But when the Word was made flesh, the Lord became the Word in ultimates also; and it is from this that He is called 'the First and the Last.' 99.

100. How the Lord is the Word. Ex. T.263^e, Ex.

101. That before this Word . . . there was a Word that has been lost. Gen.art.

102. That the Word which existed among the Ancients was written by pure correspondences, but that it has been lost, has been told me by the Angels, who have also said that that Word is still preserved among them, and is in use among the Ancients with whom it had existed in the world. Enum. . . Those who knew the correspondences of this Word were called 'wise and intelligent,' and afterwards 'diviners' and 'magi.' But as that Word was full of such correspondences as signified heavenly and spiritual things remotely, and therefore began to be falsified by many, of the Divine Providence it vanished in course of time . . . and another Word, written by correspondences not so remote, was given through the prophets . . . Yet in this Word many names of places in Canaan and its neighbourhood have been retained, by which like things are signified as in the ancient Word. For this reason Abram was commanded to go into that land . . . T.279.

103. That there was a Word among the Ancients, is evident in Moses, by whom it is mentioned, and quoted from. Ill.

—e. The first seven chapters of Genesis exist in that ancient Word, so that not a syllable is missing. T.279^e.

104. That through the Word there is light also for those who are outside the Church, and have not the Word. Gen.art.

— . There can be no conjunction with Heaven unless there is somewhere on earth a Church where the Word is, and thereby the Lord is known, because the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and without Him there is no salvation . . . De Verbo. 17.

105. How the presence and conjunction of the Lord and of Heaven exists in all lands through the Word. Ex.

108. (An experience which showed) that communication with the universal Heaven exists through the Word. Des. . . It is for this reason that, of the Divine Providence, there is a universal intercourse or commerce of the kingdoms of Europe, and principally of those where the Word is read, with the nations outside the Church.

110. (Thus) the Word, which is in the Church of the Reformed, enlightens all nations and peoples by a spiritual communication; and also it is provided by the Lord that there is always a Church on the Earth where the Word is read, and thereby the Lord is known. And therefore when the Word had been almost rejected by the Papists, of the Divine Providence the Reformation took place, and thereby the Word was again received. Moreover, the Word is regarded as holy by a noble nation among the Papists.

111. As, without the Word, there is no Knowledge of the Lord, thus no Salvation, when the Word had been completely falsified and adulterated among the Jewish nation . . . it pleased the Lord to descend from Heaven . . . and to fulfil the Word, and thereby to renew and restore it, and to give light again to the inhabitants of the Earth. Ill.

113. That man has communication with Heaven through the Word (has been shown by the fact) that when I read the Word from the first chapter of Isaiah to the last of Malachi, and the Psalms of David, it was granted me clearly to perceive that each verse communicated with some Society of Heaven, and thus that the whole Word communicates with the universal Heaven.

114. That unless there were a Word no one would know of God, Heaven, and Hell, the life after death, and still less of the Lord. Gen.art.

115. But as those who maintain . . . that without the Word man may know of the existence of God, and of Heaven and Hell . . . and as they thereby weaken the authority and holiness of the Word . . . we may not deal with them from the Word, but from rational light, for they do not believe the Word, but themselves.

117. The ancient Word (has been the source of all the gentile religions). Ex.

Life 54. As the laws (of the decalogue) were the first-fruits of the Word . . . they were (most) holy.

W. 83². When a man reads 'heat' and 'light' in the Word, the Spirits and Angels who are with him, perceive charity and faith.

208^e. There are like degrees in each and all things of the Word.

P. 94². To love the Lord above all things is nothing else than not to do evil to the Word, because the Lord is in the Word . . .

98³. Real freedom and rationality are not possible with those in the Christian world who utterly deny the Divine of the Lord, and the holiness of the Word, and who have retained this denial confirmed to the end of life; for this is meant by 'the sin against the Holy Spirit.'

131^e. The Lord enters man solely by an internal way, which is through the Word, doctrine, and preachings from it.

135. The Lord alone teaches man, but mediately through the Word, in enlightenment. . . No Spirit has ever dared, and no Angel has ever been willing, to tell me anything, and still less to instruct me, about anything in the Word, or any doctrinal matter from the Word . . .

154. That it is a law of the Divine Providence that man be led and taught through the Word, doctrine, and preachings from it; and this in all appearance as of himself. Chapter. 171, Gen.art.

172². That the Lord is the Word, because it is from Him, and about Him. Ex.

[P. 172³. That the Lord is the Word, because He is the Divine truth of the Divine good. Ex.

—⁵. Thus to be taught from the Word is to be taught by the Lord Himself. Ex.

— All who are taught by the Lord in the Word, are taught a few truths in the world, but in many when they become Angels; for the interiors of the Word, which are Divine spiritual and Divine celestial things, are implanted at the same time; but these are not opened in a man until after death, in Heaven, where he is in angelic wisdom.

—⁶. That this is done mediately by preachings, does not take away the immediateness; for the Word cannot be taught otherwise than mediately through parents, teachers, preachers, books, and especially by the reading of it; but still the man is not taught by these, but by the Lord through them. . . From this it may be seen that man is led and taught by the Lord alone, and that he is taught immediately by Him, when he is taught from the Word. This is an arcanum of arcana of angelic wisdom.

173. As man has light through the Word, and understanding from this light, and as this is the case with both the evil and the good, it follows that from light in its origin is light in its derivations, which are perceptions and thoughts about any Things whatever. III.

220⁶. All things of the Word are pure correspondences . . . and, as they are correspondences, they are also appearances; that is, all things of the Word are Divine goods of the Divine love, and Divine truths of the Divine wisdom . . .

230². As the Word is the proceeding Divine, it is 'the name of God,' which=God, with all the Divine that is in Him, and that proceeds from Him. And, as all the Divine things that are called the spiritual things of the Church, are from the Word, these also are 'the name of God.' This shows what is meant by . . . 'Hallowed be Thy name.' Further ill.

231. The first kind of profanation is committed by those who jest from the Word, and about the Word . . . This is done by some from a bad habit, by taking names or forms of speech from the Word and mixing them with remarks that are hardly becoming, and sometimes foul. This cannot but be conjoined with some contempt for the Word; yet the Word is Divine and holy in every particular . . . for every word stores in its bosom something Divine, and has communication with Heaven by it. But this kind of profanation is lighter, or more grievous, according to the acknowledgment of the holiness of the Word, and the unbecoming character of the talk into which it is introduced. D.1304.

—⁶. The sixth kind of profanation is committed by those who acknowledge the Word, and yet deny the Divine of the Lord. Ex.

254². Religion has been transplanted into the whole earth from the ancient Word, and afterwards from the Israelitish one. Unless there had been a Word, no one would have known of God, Heaven and Hell, etc. Rel.s.

256². It matters not whether a smaller or a greater part of the world has received the Christian religion, provided there are peoples that have the Word; for those have light therefrom who are outside the Church, and have not the Word: and, wonderful to say, where the Word is read holily, and the Lord is worshipped from the Word, there is the Lord with Heaven. The reason is that the Lord is the Word, and the Word is the Divine truth, which makes Heaven . . . This may take place with the Word with Europeans in many parts of the habitable world, because their commerce extends over the whole earth, and everywhere the Word is read by them, or there is teaching from the Word. 260².

—³. The reason the Christian religion is divided, is that it is from the Word, and the Word has been written by pure correspondences, and these are in great part appearances of truth . . . And, as the doctrine of the Church must be drawn from the sense of the letter of the Word, there must needs arise in the Church disputes, controversies, and dissensions, especially in regard to the understanding of the Word; but not in regard to the Word itself, or the Divine of the Lord; for it is everywhere acknowledged that the Word is holy, and that the Divine belongs to the Lord, and these two are the essentials of the Church. . . Those who deny the holiness of the Word are not regarded as Christians. 259². —⁶.

—⁴. A noteworthy fact in regard to the Word (which shows) that interiorly the Word is the Divine truth itself, and inmost is the Lord, is that when any Spirit opens the Word, and rubs his face or clothing against it, his face or clothing shines . . . as brightly as the moon or a star . . .

257⁵. When the love of self (among the Papists) exalted its dominion to the Lord's throne . . . it could not but profane all things of the Word . . . To prevent this, the Lord by His Divine Providence took care that . . . they should forbid the reading of the Word . . .

258². The doctrine (of faith alone) has been permitted . . . in order that the Divine of the Lord and the holiness of the Word might not be profaned. . . The Word is not profaned, because they pay no attention to the passages where love, charity, doing, and works, are mentioned. . . They are like those who have no knowledge of truth from the Word, and who therefore cannot profane it.

260³. The Jews have been preserved, and scattered over a great part of the world for the sake of the Word in its Original Language . . .

264². Babylon does indeed acknowledge the Word, but still despises it. Ex.

330⁷. The whole Word is nothing but the doctrine of life.

R. 1, Pref. The Lord as to the Word is described in Rev.i.

6. 'Who hath borne witness of the word of God' (Rev.i.6)=who from the heart, and thus in light, receive Divine truth from the Word. E.10 R.35. E.51.

10. 'The seven churches'=all in the Christian world where the Word is, and by it the Lord is known, and who accede to the Church.

11. 'Which are in Asia'=to those who are in the light of Truth, from the Word.

—². As to the ancient Word, which was in Asia before the Israelitish Word... it is still preserved there among the people who dwell in Great Tartary. I have spoken with Spirits and Angels who were from that country, who said that they possessed a Word, and had possessed it from ancient times; that they conduct their Divine worship according to that Word; and that it consists of nothing but correspondences. They said that in it is the Book of Jasher, mentioned in Josh.x. 12,13; 2Sam.i.17,18; and also that they have among them the books called 'The Wars of Jehovah,' and 'The Prophecies,' mentioned in Num.xxi.14,15,27-30; and when I read in their presence the words taken therefrom by Moses, they searched, and found them. . . . Seek it in China, and perhaps you will find it there among the Tartars. T.266. 279³.

26. 'To pierce Jesus Christ'=to destroy His Divine truth in the Word.

36. When the Word was given—factum est—to the prophets, they were in the body, and heard Jehovah speaking.

42. Before a man turns himself to the Lord, and acknowledges Him as the God of Heaven and earth, he cannot see the Divine truth in the Word. Ex. . . . He cannot be enlightened in the Word; for the Lord is the Word. . . . Those who do not approach the Lord alone, look at Him and His Word as behind them. . . . This arcanum is hidden in the words, 'John heard a voice behind him, and he turned to see the voice. . . .'

43. 'I saw seven golden candlesticks'=the New Church, which will be in enlightenment from the Lord, from the Word.

44. 'In the midst of the seven candlesticks one like the Son of Man'=the Lord as to the Word, from whom is this (New Church).

47. 'The hairs of the Son of Man'=the Divine good of love, and the Divine truth of wisdom, in the ultimates of the Word.

52. 'Out of His mouth a sharp two-edged sword'=the dispersion of falsities by the Lord through the Word and doctrine from it.

74. 'He that holdeth the seven stars in His right hand'=the Lord from whom are all truths through the Word.

111. 'Thou hast not denied My faith'=that they acknowledge the Word to be Divine truth.

134. 'To commit whoredom'=that the truths of the Word are falsified. Ex. 136.

179. 'Thou hast kept My word'=that they live according to the Lord's precepts in His Word. E.209.

198. 'The Church of the Laodiceans'=those in the Church who sometimes believe from themselves, and sometimes from the Word, and thus profane holy things.

199. 'The Amen, the faithful and true Witness'=the Lord as to the Word, which is the Divine truth from Him.

200. 'The beginning of the work—opificium—of God'=the Word. Ex.

— . The Divine truth itself in the (ancient) Word, and which is also in the Word of the present day, is meant by 'the Word that was in the beginning with God, and that was God;' yet not the Word regarded as to the words and letters of the languages, but as to its essence and life, which is from the inmost in the meanings of them. From this life the Word vivifies the affections of the will of the man who reads it holily; and from the light of this life it enlightens the thoughts of his understanding; on which account it is said, 'in the Word was life, and the life was the light of men.' The Word does this, because it is from the Lord and about the Lord, and thus is the Lord. All thought, speech, and writing derive their essence and life from him who does them; the man is in them, with his quality; but the Lord alone is in the Word. But no one feels and perceives the Divine life in the Word but he who is in the spiritual affection of truth while reading it; for he is in conjunction with the Lord through the Word. There is something inmost affecting the heart and spirit, that inflows into the understanding with light, and bears witness.

—². 'The light,' in Gen.i.3, = the Divine truth, (this) is the Word.

— . In fine, without the Divine truth of the Word, which in its essence is the Divine good of the Divine love, and the Divine truth of the Divine wisdom . . . a man cannot have life. Through the Word there is conjunction of the Lord with man, and of man with the Lord; and through this conjunction there is life.

—^e. Wonderful to say, the Word has been so written that it communicates with the universal Heaven, and severally, with each Society there.

— . That such is the Word in its essence, is evident from these words of the Lord, 'The words that I speak unto you are spirit, and are life' (John vi.63).

202. 'Thou art neither cold nor hot'=that they who are such now deny, and now acknowledge, that the Word is Divine and holy. 203.

217. 'I stand at the door, and knock'=that the Lord is present with everyone, in the Word, and is urgent to be received therein, and teaches how.

218. 'If anyone will hear My voice, and open'=him who believes in the Word and lives according to it. 'I will come in to him, and sup with him, and he with Me'=that the Lord conjoins Himself with such, and conjoins them with Himself.

224³. The Angels said, Read the Word, and believe in the Lord, and you will see the truths which must be of your faith and life. . . . But two of them said, We have read, but did not understand. The Angels replied, You did not approach the Lord; and you have also confirmed yourselves in falsities. . . . We assure you that every man whose soul desires it, can see the truths of the Word in light. Ex.

225, Pref. The subject treated of (in Rev.iv.) is the . . . preparation of all things for the Judgment, which would be from the Word, and according to it. 225, Sig.233. 256, Pref.

239. 'In the midst of the throne, and around the throne, were four living creatures'=the Word of the Lord from primes to ultimates, and its guards. Ex.

[R.] 241. The 'lion'=the Divine truth of the Word as to power.

242. The 'calf'=the Divine truth of the Word as to affection.

243. The 'third living creature having a face like a man'=the Divine truth of the Word as to wisdom.

244. The 'flying eagle'=the Divine truth of the Word as to Knowledges, and the derivative understanding.

245. 'The four living creatures had each by himself six wings about him'=the Word as to its powers, and as to its guards.

246. 'And they were full of eyes within'=the Divine wisdom in the Word, in the natural sense from the spiritual and the celestial senses.

247. 'They have no rest, day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty'=that the Word continually teaches the Lord, and that He alone is God, and therefore that He alone is to be worshipped.

249. 'The living creatures gave glory and honour and thanks to Him that sat upon the throne'=that the Word ascribes all good, truth, and worship to the Lord, who will judge.

256. 'A book written within and on the back'=the Word in every particular, and in every general. It also=the Word as to the interior and the exterior senses.

— That the Lord as to the Divine Itself from eternity has been the Word, that is, the Divine truth, is evident from . . . 'in the beginning was the Word . . . ' and that the Lord as to the Human also became the Word, from 'and the Word became flesh.'

257. 'Sealed with seven seals'=altogether hidden from Angel and man. . . Such is the Word to all whom the . . . Lord does not open it.

273. 'He came and took the book'=that the Lord as to His Divine Human is the Word.

295. Examination by the Lord of all . . . as to their understanding of the Word, and the derivative states of their life. Sig. and Ex.

298. The 'white horse'=the understanding of truth and good from the Word with them.

305. The 'red horse'=the understanding of the Word destroyed as to good, and thence as to life, with them. E.364.

312. The 'black horse'=the understanding of the Word destroyed as to truth, and thus as to doctrine, with them.

316. 'Hurt not the oil and the wine'=that the holy goods and truths that lie hidden interiorly in the Word, should not be violated and profaned. 314.

320. The 'pale horse'=the understanding of the Word destroyed as to both good and truth.

325. 'Slain for the Word of God' (Rev.vi.9)=hated on account of their life according to the truths of the Word. 329. (=on account of the Divine truth. E.392.)

411². A Christian has spiritual life solely from the truths of the Word, because life is in them; but when the truths of the Word are falsified . . . spiritual life is extinguished in the man. Sig.

469. 'A little book open'=the Word as to this doctrine—that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and that His Human is Divine.

484. The sound of a mill heard. . . A mill and grinding=to seek from the Word what may serve for doctrine. . . I saw an old man . . . holding the Word before him, and seeking from it what might serve for the doctrine (of justification by faith alone). (Swedenborg controverted him, and he threw the Word out of doors after him.) See also —⁴.

541. That all the truths of the Word have been destroyed by those who are meant by 'the dragon.' Sig. and Ex.

—^e. The Word thus becomes no longer a holy Book, but a profane book. Ex.

555. Victory by the Divine truth of the Word. Sig. and Ex.

—². As the Lord is the Word, the Divine truth in it is His blood, and the Divine good His body. For is not every man his own good and truth? . . . But the Lord is the Divine good and the Divine truth, which two are also the Word.

566. A debate among some Spirits as to whether anyone can see any doctrinal theological truth in the Word, except from the Lord, (that is to say) unless he approaches the Lord immediately. One side maintained that the Lord must be approached directly, because He is the Word, and the other that doctrinal truth can be seen when God the Father is approached immediately . . . Something was then read to these from the Word; and they prayed on their knees that God the Father would enlighten them, and then . . . they said that this and that was the truth in that passage; but it was false; and this repeatedly even to tediousness. . . On the other hand, those who approached the Lord immediately, saw the truths. T.162.

—². Some . . . were told from Heaven that they did not know a single doctrinal truth from the Word . . . They said, We will demonstrate that we have truths from the Word in great abundance. (Continued under TRUTH.)

—⁵. A table seen in the middle of a place into which light flows immediately from Heaven. When any paper on which a truth from the Word is written is placed on the table, the paper shines like a star. (Continued under TRUTH.)

—⁶. A chamber seen, whose walls shone as if golden, and which contained a table, on which lay the Word, set round with precious stones in heavenly forms. The Angel guardian said, When the Word is opened, a light of unspeakable brightness beams from it; and there appears from the precious stones a rainbow above and around the Word. When any Angel from the Third Heaven . . . looks at the open Word, there appears above and around the Word a rainbow of various colours on a red ground. When an Angel from the Second Heaven . . . a rainbow on a blue ground. When an Angel from the Ultimate Heaven . . . a rainbow on a white ground. When any good Spirit looks, there appears a variegation of light as of marble. . . If anyone comes who has falsified the Word, the resplendence is dissipated; and if he draws near, and fixes his eyes on the Word, there is an appearance of blood around it. . . A certain person, in the confidence that he had not falsified the Word . . . touched the Word; when suddenly fire and smoke issued from it, and an explosion (threw him) into a corner, where he lay as dead for half an hour.

—⁸. To falsify the Word, is to take truths from it, and apply them to confirm falsities. Examp.

571. 'A name of blasphemy' = a doctrine of the Church not from the Word, but from their own intelligence.

576^e. For the doctrine of the Church must be from the Word, and from no other source.

595. That they speak, teach, and write from the Word, as if it were the Lord's Divine truth, and yet it is truth falsified. Sig. and Ex.

602. That they were permitted to confirm that doctrine (of faith alone) by the Word, by which it is as they were vivified. Sig. and Ex.

611⁶. What it is to meditate upon the Word spiritually and materially. Ex.

642. 'A white cloud, and upon the cloud one sitting like the Son of Man' = the Lord as to the Word. Ex.

653. 'Blood out of the winepress . . .' = violence done to the Word by dreadful falsifications of truth . . .

666. 'Thou alone art holy' = that He is the Word, the Truth, and Enlightenment. Ex.

668. That the Word is now opened . . .

669. The inmost of Heaven, where the Lord is in His holiness in the Word. Sig. and Ex.

683. Influx into the understanding of the Word with (those in faith alone). Sig. and Ex.

684^e. That those in faith alone falsify all the truths of the Word, is because the whole Word treats of a life according to the precepts therein, and of the Lord as being . . . the only God.

689. The Divine good of the Word confirming this Divine truth. Sig. and Ex.

719. The profanations and adulterations of the truths of the Word (by the Papists). Sig. and Ex.

723. 'A woman sitting on a scarlet beast, full of names of blasphemy' = the Roman Catholic religiosity [based] upon the Word profaned by them. Ex.

724. 'Having seven heads, and ten horns' = intelligence from the Word, at first holy, then no intelligence, and at last insanity; and much power from the Word continually. (See also 725. 726. 727. 728.)

733. The Word acknowledged as holy among them, and yet really not acknowledged. Sig. and Ex.

735. Their amazement . . . that the Word, although rejected, still is. Sig. and Ex.

739. That the Word . . . is the Divine good itself, and the Divine truth, and that it is taken away from the laity . . . lest the profanations and adulterations made in it . . . should appear. Sig. and Ex. E.1067.

—². That the Word is the Divine good and Divine truth, is because there is in each and all things of it the marriage of the Lord and the Church, and the derivative marriage of good and truth; and also because there is in everything of it a celestial sense and a spiritual sense; and in the celestial sense it is Divine good, and in the spiritual sense Divine truth; and these are in the Word because the Lord is the Word.

740. The Word as to power from Divine truth with those who are in the kingdom of France . . . Sig. and Ex. 741. 746.

741². (The French) acknowledge that the Word is divinely inspired . . . but do not as yet draw Divine truths from it, except these general ones . . . These things they confirm in themselves from the Word; but before others, who do not listen to the Word, they do it from rationality . . . The reason they do not go further, and draw the doctrinal things of faith from the Word, is of the Divine Providence, because they still adhere in externals . . . to the Roman Catholic religion . . .

742. That dominion over the Church is effected solely through the Word. Sig. and Ex. 749.

814. That those of the New Church will be instructed in genuine and pure truths through the Word. Sig. and Ex.

819. That the acknowledgment of the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth, together with a life according to His commandments, is, in the universal sense, the whole of the Word and the derivative doctrine. Sig. and Ex.

820². The unition (of the Human to the Divine) was effected (also) by the fulfilling of all things of the Word (in its three senses).

821. The Lord as to the Word, that it is the Divine good and truth itself, from both of which He executes Judgment . . . Sig. and Ex.

823. In Heaven, diadems appear upon the heads of those who hold the Word to be holy. Ex.

825. 'His name is called The Word of God' (Rev. xix.13) = . . . the Word in the letter, to which violence has been offered.

830². The 'name written on His vesture' = the Word as to Divine truth; and the 'name written on His thigh' = the Word as to Divine good. Both are in the Word, the Divine truth of the Word in its spiritual sense . . . and the Divine good of the Word in its celestial sense . . .

832. The appropriation of goods from the Lord through the truths of the Word . . . in every sense, degree, and kind. Sig. and Ex.

—². No man has any spiritual good from the Lord, except through truths from the Word. Ex.

836. That all (such), being judged from the Word, perish. Sig. and Ex.

—². For the Word has proceeded from the Lord's mouth.

839¹³. For they were not allowed to contradict the Word.

[R.] 842². In the Word that is in Heaven, no number occurs (here), but the Thing instead.

846. 'Behended for . . . the Word of God' (Rev. xx.4) = rejected . . . because they lived according to the truths of the Word.

881. 'Prepared as a Bride for her Husband' = the New Church conjoined with the Lord through the Word. 895, Sig.

—². For the Word is the only medium of conjunction, or of marriage, because the Word is from the Lord and about the Lord, and thus is the Lord, and therefore it is called 'a covenant' . . . Moreover, the Word has been given for the sake of this end.

889. That to those who desire truths from any spiritual use, the Lord will give all that are conducive to that use from Himself through the Word. Sig. and Ex.

—^e. To the rest there is not given truth from the Word; they read it, but every doctrinal truth therein they either do not see, or, if they see it, they turn it into falsity, not so much in speech when repeating it from the Word, as in the idea of their thought about it.

897. That in the New Church the Word will be understood, because translucent from its spiritual sense. Sig. and Ex.

— These words describe the understanding of the Word with those in the doctrine of the New Jerusalem and an accordant life. When read by them the Word shines. It shines from the Lord by the medium of the spiritual sense, because the Lord is the Word . . .

904. That to those in the good of love the Lord gives to know . . . what His New Church is . . . as to the Word . . . Sig. and Ex.

909. The quality of the Word in the New Church—that all its truths and goods are from it. Sig. and Ex.

926². Under the swamp there was a great hewn stone, beneath which lay the Word completely hidden. . . . There came an east wind . . . that dried up the swamp, and laid bare the stone, under which lay the Word. . . I (then) saw the foundation stone, under which the Word had been deposited, set round with precious stones, from which as it were lightning flashed . . . (Then) instead of the temple, was seen the Lord only, standing upon the foundation stone, which was the Word . . .

932². The Apocalypse also is the Word, like the prophetic Word of the Old Testament.

936. They who are in evils and falsities cannot be healed by the Word, because they do not read it; but if they have sound judgment, they can be healed by rational truths. Sig.

943. That the Lord, from whom is the Word of both Covenants, has revealed . . . the things that will be. Sig. and Ex.

944. That the Lord will come, not in person, but in the Word, in which He will appear to all who will be of His New Church. Sig.

945². When the prophets were speaking the Word, they were not in the spirit, but in the body, and heard from Jehovah Himself . . . the words they wrote.

958. 'To take away his part out of the Book of life' = that such cannot be wise in, or appropriate to themselves, anything out of the Word. . . For the Lord is the Word, because it treats of Him alone . . . and therefore they who do not approach the Lord immediately, cannot see any truth from the Word.

959. The Word, which was dictated by the Lord, passed through the Heavens of His Celestial Kingdom, and the Heavens of His Spiritual Kingdom, and so came to the man through whom it was written; and therefore, in its first origin, the Word is purely Divine. When the Word passed through the Heavens of the Celestial Kingdom, it was the Divine Celestial; and when it passed through those of the Spiritual Kingdom, it was the Divine Spiritual; and when it came to man, it became the Divine Natural; and this is why the natural sense of the Word contains within it the spiritual sense, and this the celestial sense, and both the purely Divine sense, which is not open to any man, nor even to any Angel.

962. A golden table seen, on which was the Word, and two Angels standing by it. . . It was at a Council convened by the Lord.

M. 24. A sermon in Heaven on the Holy Scripture, and the conjunction of the Lord with both worlds through it. . . That holy Book has been dictated by Jehovah the Lord, and therefore He is in it, insomuch that He is the wisdom therein . . .

44¹⁰. (In order that the three novitiate Spirits might understand this passage from the Word) the angelic Spirits told them to look up into Heaven, and an answer would be given . . . because (said they) we have all interpretations of the Word from there; for the Word is inwardly spiritual, and as the Angels are spiritual, they will teach the spiritual understanding of it. (Two Angels then appeared over their heads, and explained the passage.)

77². (In the western ancient Heaven, or that of the Copper Age) we saw a sanctuary, which contained within an ark the Word that was given to the inhabitants of Asia before the Israelitish Word; the historical books of which are called 'The Wars of Jehovah,' and the prophetic books 'The Enunciations.' At the present day this Word is lost in the kingdoms of Asia, and is preserved only in Great Tartary. . . The sanctuary appeared in the brightest light; and the Angel said, That light is from that ancient Asiatic Word.

78. The people of the Iron Age are all from the ancient inhabitants of Asia, among whom was the ancient Word, and worship from it.

—². Those who merely read the Word, and draw nothing of doctrine from it, appear at a distance like bears; and those who confirm falsities from it, appear like leopards.

81. The Glorifications and celebrations of the Lord (in Heaven) are made from the Word, because in this way they are made from the Lord; for the Lord is the Word, that is, the Divine truth itself therein. (The Glorifications quoted.)

115⁴. The Holy Scripture, which has proceeded immediately from the Lord, is, in general and in particular, the marriage of good and truth.

128. That the Word is the medium of conjunction of the Lord with man, because it is from the Lord, and thus is the Lord. (Ex. fully under READ.)

—^e. As the Word is the medium of conjunction, it is called the Covenant, Old and New.

532². This (conjunction of the men of the Church with the Lord, and their consociation with the Angels) is effected through the Word, in which each and all things are correspondences.

I. 5². 'The Word' (John i.) = the Divine truth, and therefore the Divine wisdom. T.39. 50^e. 59^e. 76⁵. 224.

T. 6. The reason the whole Holy Scripture teaches that there is a God, is that, in its inmosts, it is nothing but God. that is, the Divine which proceeds from God; for it was dictated by God. . . . But in its derivatives . . . the Holy Scripture is accommodated to the perception of Angels and men; and in these it is in like manner Divine, but in a different form, and in this form it is called the Divine Celestial, Spiritual, and Natural, which are nothing but coverings of God; since God Himself, such as He is in the inmosts of the Word, cannot be seen by any created thing. Ill. But still the Divine, which is inmost . . . shines forth, like light through crystalline forms; but variously, according to the state of mind that the man has formed for himself . . . To everyone who has formed the state of his mind from God, the Holy Scripture is like a mirror, in which he sees God; but each one in his own way. The truths that he learns from the Word, and that he imbues by a life according to them, compose this mirror. (Thus) the Holy Scripture is the fulness of God.

7. When (those who at heart confess three Gods) read the Word, they do not perceive any light in it, or from it . . . To such the Word is as if it were spotted with blots; and, as to the unity of God, completely covered. Ill.

85. That Jehovah God descended as the Divine truth, which is the Word . . . Gen.art.

— That by 'the Word' (John i.) is meant the Divine truth, is because the Word that is in the Church is the Divine truth itself; for it was dictated by Jehovah Himself, and that which is dictated by Jehovah is pure Divine truth . . . But as it passed through the Heavens down into the world, it became accommodated to the Angels in Heaven, and to men in the world; and therefore there is in the Word a spiritual sense in which Divine truth is in light, and a natural sense in which it is in shade . . . 777, Ex.

—². Moreover, the Lord came into the world in order to fulfil all things of the Word, and therefore it is so frequently said that this and that were done by Him 'that the Scripture might be fulfilled.' 262, Ill.

116. The Word, on which violence had been inflicted by the Jewish people. Rep.

129. The Lord, being the Word itself, as 'the Prophet,' represented by His passion the Jewish Church—how it had profaned the Word itself. 130, fully des.

147². The minds of all who deny the holiness of the Word . . . think in the lowest region . . .

165. The only way is to go to the Lord God the Saviour, and read the Word under His auspices; for He is the God of the Word; and then the man will be enlightened . . .

—². Such a paralytic birth resulted from their not reading the Word under the Lord's auspices; for everyone who does not read the Word under His auspices, reads it under the auspices of his Own intelligence, which is like an owl . . . Ill. by comparisons.

177³. If the faith is false, it plays the harlot with every truth (in the Word), and perverts and falsifies it . . . But if true, the whole Word favours it; and the God of the Word, who is the Lord God the Saviour, pours light upon it . . .

—^e. But, my friend, go to the God of the Word, and so to the Word, and thus enter through the Door . . . and you will be enlightened . . .

189. On the Holy Scripture, or Word of the Lord. Chapter. (Chiefly repeated from the work on the Holy Scripture.)

191^e. Those only have life from the Word, who read it . . . in order to draw Divine truths from it as from their fountain, and at the same time to apply them to life. The contrary takes place with those who read it in order to get honours and gain.

193. The reason the Word is spiritual in its bosom, is that it has descended from Jehovah the Lord, and has passed through the angelic Heavens . . .

209. Wonderful phenomena that appear from the Word in the Spiritual World. Gen.art. (Such as the shining of the Word like a great star, or the sun; rain-bows from it; when a paper with a verse written on it is thrown into the air, it shines in the form in which it is cut; when anyone rubs himself or his clothes with the open Word, they shine; if one in falsities looks at the Word, it appears black to him; if he touches the Word there is an explosion; etc.)

—³. (This shows) that those in falsities of doctrine have no communication with Heaven through the Word . . . Whereas with those who are in truths of doctrine . . . their reading of the Word penetrates into Heaven . . .

—^e. The power of truth in the Word can overturn mountains . . . In short, the Lord's power from the Word is infinite.

223. On the power of the Word in ultimates. Ex.

—². In the Spiritual World, they who despise the Word become bald; but they who hold it to be great and holy appear with becoming hair.

224. On the ineffable power of the Word. Ex.

—³. Why God came into the world as the Word. Ex.

241². (Thus) the Word in the Heavens, as to the literal sense, is similar and at the same time correspondent to our Word, so that they are a one.

245. So the Word does not establish and make the Church in special with a man; but faith according to the truths, and life according to the goods, which he derives from it and applies to himself. The Word is like a mine . . . (which is) opened according to the understanding of the Word. Without the understanding of the Word . . . it would no more make the Church with a man, than the mines in Asia would make a European rich, unless he owned and worked them. (Further comparisons.)

[T.] 272°. (Thus) as the Lord is the Word, so also is Heaven the Word. Shown.

279°. The Angels and Spirits from Great Tartary . . . are separated from others . . . because they possess a different Word.

290. That there is infinity in everything of the Word. Ex.

—². All angelic wisdom is from the Word.

299. 'The blasphemy of the Holy Spirit' = . . . against the holiness of the Word.

314. 'Thou shalt not commit adultery,' in the spiritual sense, = to adulterate the goods of the Word, and to falsify its truths. Ill. (In the celestial sense, it = to deny the holiness of the Word, and to profane it. 315.)

323. 'To bear false witness,' in the celestial sense, = to blaspheme the Lord and the Word, and thus to banish Truth itself from the Church.

343. That man receives faith by going to the Lord, learning Truths from the Word, and living according to them. Gen.art. 347. 348.

344. The essence of the faith of the New Church is Truth from the Word.

347². The reason Truths are to be taken from the Word, is that all the Truths that conduce to salvation are there, and there is efficacy in them because they have been given by the Lord, and so have been inscribed on the universal angelic Heaven; so that when man learns Truths from the Word, he comes into communion and consociation with the Angels, and this more than he knows.

349. Who cannot collect Truths from the Word if he will? And every Truth in the Word, and from the Word, shines . . .

350. The Word of the Lord is an abyss of Truths, from which is all angelic wisdom . . .

380³. For no satan can endure to hear any truth from the Word . . .

— . All become such after death who in heart and faith deny the Divinity of the Lord and the holiness of the Word.

384. That none in Christendom have any faith who reject the Lord and the Word . . . Ex.

— . (Thus) they who reject the Word, reject the Lord also . . . and also reject the Church, because the Church is from the Lord through the Word.

396°. What is theology . . . unless the understanding is enlightened when the Word is read . . .

487³. (The real sentiments of the predestinarians concerning the Word.)

508. On the right of the pulpit (in that magnificent temple) lay the Word open, encompassed with a sphere of light, (which) signified the internal sense revealed.

—⁴. As the dogmas of the Christian Churches . . . have not been composed from the Word . . . of the Divine Providence the Word has been taken away from the Roman Catholic laity; and among the Protestants it . . . has been closed by their declaration that the understanding is to be kept under obedience to their faith.

—^e. Enter henceforth into the mysteries of the Word . . . for its several Truths are so many mirrors of the Lord.

644°. Reader, open your ears, and read the Word, and you will clearly perceive . . .

759. Have made a morning light from Own intelligence, and an evening light from the Word.

776. That this second advent of the Lord is not in person, but in the Word, which is from Him, and is Himself. Gen.art.

777. That the Lord is the Word. Ex.

778. How the Lord is the Word. Ex.

779. (That Swedenborg was) filled with the Lord's Spirit, to teach the doctrines of the New Church through the Word, from Him. Gen.art.

— . I have not received anything that concerns (these) doctrines from any Angel, but from the Lord alone, while I have read the Word.

797⁵. In this state (Melancthon) consulted the Word, and then his eyes were opened . . .

798. (Calvin) had cited the Word merely to win the assent of the common people.

—⁸. (Calvin said) Is not the Word the book of all heresies . . .

810. The main reason why these (English) preachers are deprived of the priestly office, is that they do not fashion their sermons from the Word . . . They do indeed take texts from the Word, but merely as a prelude.

838. The Scripture . . . among Christians, which is called the Word.

845°. The Jews say that interiorly in the Word there is nothing but gold.

Ad. 936. The Divine Word itself is like a body with its soul . . .

D. 382. When the Word of God Messiah is read, it penetrates everyone according to his state . . .

383. This is the efficacy of the Word. Ex.

895°. When little children read the Holy Bible, the Angels understand the meaning of the Word more clearly than when adults read it.

1139. On those who are unwilling to hear the interior things of the Word.

1304. (On those who jest from the Word. See HOLY SCRIPTURE, at A.961.)

1464. (The objection of those who reject my writings on the ground that they have the Word, overruled.)

1856. The pleasant heat of those who have been delighted with the Word of the Lord. 1857. 1858.

1877. In itself, the Word of the Lord is dead, for it is merely the letter, but it is vivified by the Lord in being read, according to the capacity of understanding and perception given by the Lord to each reader ; thus it is alive according to the life of the man who reads it.

2380. On those who inhere in the mere words of the Word of the Lord . . .

2407. That the application of the interior things of the Word of the Lord is universal . . .

2435. When I attended less to what is in the Word, as I was reading it, the Angels perceived it more fully. Ex.

2445. A vision concerning the interiors of the Word. Ex.

2462. On the more interior and inmost things of the Word. Ex.

2472. On the Word of the Lord : that everything in it is a vessel, into which life is poured by the Lord. Ex.

2539. On the life of the Word of the Lord.—In the supreme sense is the Lord Himself ; in the universal sense below the Lord, is the universal Heaven of Angels and good Spirits ; in a sense still lower, is the Lord's Church most universally throughout the whole world, and from the first creation to the last times ; in a sense less universal, it treats of the Church that has been built up—instructa est—with all its various doctrines ; in a sense still less universal, of the inmost Church on earth ; in a sense still lower, of each man in particular ; in the most particular sense, of each article of faith ; in the abstract sense, of celestial, spiritual, and rational things, of wisdom, intelligence, and so on. As is the subject, so are the predicates.

2631^a. The mode of speaking in the Word is natural, and not artificial. Ex.

2721. (On the four principal styles in the Word of the Old Testament.)

2785. (The difference between the Word and all other writings.)

2885. That corporeal Spirits cannot understand the interiors of the Word. Ex.

2900². So when I have read the Word of the Lord, a double thought has been plainly observed . . .

3421. So preachers do not see in the Word of the Lord the things that conflict [with their views] . . .

3442. How a single expression of the Word, taken alone, may induce a wholly false doctrine.

3605b. On the interiors of the Word—how they are to be set forth. Ex.

3741. On those who despise the Word and Divine worship.

4121. That each and all things of the Word are vessels. Ex.

4135. When yet the Word is such that it embraces all things . . .

4143. (The effect of paying attention to the mere materials, or terms, of the Word. From experience.)

4184. That the Word of the Lord, when presented before the Angels, is such that everything is alive. Ex. 4185.

4191. The Word with me was represented by my father in his life-time.

4330. (Delight of the gentiles there in the Word, on account of its significative character.)

4343. If the thought is held fixedly in any subject, and the Word is read, everything in it will apply itself to the universal of the thought . . .

4565. They said that there is nothing Divine in the Word, and that they had opened a copy of the Bible, and no matter where they read, they had found nothing but what is merely earthly . . .

4663¹⁰. Why the Word was given in our Earth. —ⁿ.

— . When the Word is read in this Earth, it passes, by the correspondences, into Heaven, and in this way the truths of faith can be communicated to the Angels of other Earths.

4664. In whatever Church a man may be born, he ought to inquire from the Word whether they are in the truth ; but he must hold as a principle the life of charity towards the neighbour, and love to God, otherwise there is no enlightenment.

4671. When the Word is read by man in the Hebrew text, the Third Heaven knows all the Divine Celestial that is inspired, and that each and all things therein treat of the Lord. 5619², Ex.

4757. Revealed theology, or the Word, compared with natural theology.

4759a. Necessity of having fixed doctrinals from the Word when reading it. 4762.

4791. The Moravians persecuted me when engaged in the reading and study of the Word.

4820. How the Word was inspired, shown by my own writing.

4824. For if a man lives evilly, and still believes in the holy Word, he works evil to Heaven ; and therefore the Epistles of Paul have been permitted.

4903. There were very many who had no doctrine, but merely acknowledged the Word, saying that it is sufficient to read the Word . . . 5067. 5070. 5083.

5015. One who (by persuasive faith) believed the things in the Word pre-eminently. Des.

5090. Before the Lord, the Word is as one man, for it is Divine truth, and therefore the sense of the letter is as the soles of its feet . . .

5187. All the wisdom of the Angels is given by the medium of the Word, for there is Divine wisdom in its internal and inmost senses, which is communicated to the Angels through the Word when it is being read by men, and when they are thinking from it . . . 5193, Ex.

5561. On the Word in Heaven.—They have the Word there . . . In the Spiritual Heaven the writing is similar to that in the world, in Roman letters, but entirely unintelligible to those in the natural world, because it is in an entirely different language, which is universal. Ex . . . Some have the Word according to its internal sense, and some according to its external sense, but more spiritual.

5603. They have the Word (there) complete from beginning to end, so written that everyone can read it; the preachers there preach about it, and the rest read it as in the world.

[D.] 5604. But they have the Word written in the spiritual language. . . They have the Word in a two-fold wisdom; the spiritual have a sense that is intermediate between the internal and the external sense; the interior spiritual have it entirely according to the internal sense; and the celestial, according to the celestial sense. There are no names in their Word, nor numbers, but Things instead. They who desire to be intelligent and wise, can be instructed from the Word about everything. Instead of the history of the creation, the new creation of man is treated of.

5605. They have the Word of the Ancient Church. . . The nature of this Word is evident from the first chapters of Genesis, which were taken from it.

5606. There are four kinds of men there, just as here. The first attend to the uses in the Word, seeing indeed the other things, but paying no attention to them. . . Thus is it read by the celestial. The second are those who take out the doctrinal things of the Word from it: thus do the spiritual apprehend it. The third are those who are delighted merely with its holy external, without intelligence: these are they who are in the Ultimate Heaven. And the fourth are they who attend solely to the literal sense, and they who attend solely to the words; as the critics, and those who write various things about it; the former of these are at the threshold of Heaven, and the latter are in the very extremes.

5609. If the men who are reading, or thinking, or preaching, from the Word, are wise, the Angels are unaware of it. . .

5618. On three maidens who read the Word daily. (See READ, here.) Their Word was according to the interior sense, which is intermediate between the natural and the spiritual sense. It was historic and prophetic; but instead of the names of persons, places, and numbers, there were Things.

5619^e. The Jews read the Word in the Original Language. . . They have been tolerated so long for the sake of the Word, through which there might be some communication with Heaven.

5621. From this it is evident that the Word is Divine. . . not only in the words, but also in the syllables, or letters. . .

5666. The maidens there have the written Word, and Psalmodies, and they take them with them to the preachings. They also read them; and if they do not read them, either some garment is taken away, or their little garden vanishes.

5670. On enlightenment through the Word, and on the Intellectual of man as to the Word. Ex.

5709. On the two foundations of truth—the Word, and nature.

5710. The Word is the real foundation, but is so for those who live well, and acknowledge the Word as holy and Divine. . .

— . How the foundation from the Word accords with that from the truths of nature. Examps.

—^e. In a word, nothing can be founded on scientifics, unless it has been first founded on the Word.

5722. Ex. Benz. had the Word, but it served him merely for preaching. . . 5722a.

5809. The wiser of the gentiles (in Africa) have a book which is to them the Word. Des.

5933. No one can be conjoined with Heaven. . . except by such things as are of the Word. . . however morally he lives. . . The reason is that a man becomes spiritual solely through the things of the Word. . .

5947. On the influx of the Word into Heaven. . .

—^e. (Thus) there is a communication to the whole Heaven from the Christian Heaven where the Word is, so that the Word is the source of wisdom and interior joy. . .

5961. Those constitute the tail of the dragon who merely read the Word, and place salvation in this, but are in no doctrine, saying that the Word in the letter is doctrine; but in this way they can defend whatever they please. I have spoken with them. . . and they said that they take care that all in their Society are diligent in the reading of the Word; but I told them that this does not save, but their living according to the Word, and that no one can (do this) unless he is in the doctrine of truth from the Word; (Ex.) and that the reading of the Word is not heard by the Lord. . . unless they are in the life of truth (which is impossible) unless they are in doctrine from the Word. (Ex.) They said that they had formed their opinion because they knew that everything of the Word has conjunction with Heaven; but it was replied that the conjunction is with the man who reads it, and the conjunction is such as he is from the Word, as they might know from the fact that the Word [as it lies] upon a table has no conjunction, thus neither is there any with the reader otherwise than as he is in the understanding of it, and in affection of life from it.

5964. Some Societies in Heaven have the Word written according to the spiritual sense as to many things, where, instead of the names of persons, kingdoms, and places, there are words which only the wiser of them understand, for these words involve many arcana of the subject signified by the name. . . 5965, Further ex.

6030. Others know how to excite Societies by sayings from the Word.

6073. One who in his youth had read the Word diligently, but afterwards rejected it because he did not understand it. Des.

6077. See TARTARY, here.

6107. Moses seen. . . He has with him his five books, and also the ancient Word. I asked him about the book of Jasher; and he said that he had seen it, and told me that that Word still exists among the ancients of his time, and is read. Also that he knows about the subsequent Word of the present day, but does not read it. (Continued under Moses.)

D. Min. 456¹⁰. (Paul) rejects the interior things of the Word, because they are contrary to worldly glory, and [self] merit.

460⁷. On a certain Gentile who was much moved by the Word.

E. 11. Hence the Word can be understood only by one who is enlightened . . .

36². The Lord reveals Himself solely in the Word, and there only by the internal sense.

43. 'The Word' (John i.) = the Divine truth that is in the Heavens, and from which are all things there. (=the Lord as to the Human, and therefore Divine truth. 151⁴. 852⁴. 1071².) (=Divine truth. 196. 726⁴. 850². 907³.) (=the Lord as to Divine truth. 294¹⁶.) (=the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord, thus the Lord as to His existence. 1069².) (=the Divine good and Divine truth. 1070³.) (=the proceeding Divine. 1093.)

50. All about whom and through whom the Word was written, were led to places that had a significance . . .

62. It is usual in the Word to mention first the things that are to happen last, because these include the intermediate things.

71⁴. For the Word to be Divine, and to be for both Heaven and earth at the same time, it must necessarily be natural in the letter. Ex.

112. Those within the Church who want to understand the Word, and do not as yet understand it . . . Sig. and Ex.

117². Their anxiety when they read the Word, and do not well understand it . . . Sig. and Ex. 122, Sig.

176⁴. (In this way) man can be in some natural enlightenment when he reads the Word. For the Word in the letter is not understood without enlightenment, and enlightenment is either natural or spiritual. Ex.

177². Therefore they who read the Word solely for the repute of erudition, (or other such ends) never see and perceive truths, but falsities. Ex.

—³. But they who read the Word from the spiritual affection of truth . . . see truths therein, and rejoice at heart when they see them.

190. For when these read the Word, they do not see it from the doctrine of the Church in which they were born, but as if they were separated from it . . . Such are enlightened . . . and it is granted them to formulate doctrine . . .

—². But they who read the Word from doctrine that is from others, cannot see truths from the light of their own spirit . . . Such cannot be enlightened . . . and this is why they remain natural . . . for to become spiritual is to imbue one's spirit with truths from the Word . . .

195⁴. Why man becomes spiritual through Knowledge of the Word (applied to life), and not through any other Knowledge. Ex.

—¹⁴. To believe what another says is servile; but to believe what we ourselves think from the Word is freedom. Sig.

200⁵. If it is accepted as a doctrine . . . that the Lord is one with the Father, and that His Human is Divine from the Divine in Himself, light will be seen in everything of the Word . . . (otherwise) nothing will be seen in light in the Word. Ex.

233. There are two states of faith and the derivative life . . . one from doctrine, and the other from the Word or from preaching from the Word. Ex. —².

260². So that if the Word in the letter also were spiritual, it would have no basis, and would be like a house without a foundation.

275¹¹. 'The Word of Jehovah' = the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord.

288². The reason the heavenly marriage is in everything of the Word, is that the Divine which proceeds from the Lord is Divine truth united to Divine good . . .

351. It is said 'the Church where the Word is,' because the Lord's Church is in the whole world, but, in special, where the Word is and the Lord is known thereby. . . The presence of the Lord and thence of the Angels of Heaven with the men of this Earth is through the Word, because it has been written by mere correspondences . . .

—². The light of Heaven . . . is from the Lord through the Word, from this the light is propagated as from the middle into the circumferences on every side, thus to . . . the gentiles who are outside our Church; but this propagation of light is effected in Heaven by the Lord; and (thus) inflows into the minds of men . . .

355¹⁴. The Lord is called 'the Word,' because 'the Word' = the Divine truth proceeding from Him.

356². That no one can understand the Word without doctrine. Ex.

— . But he who reads the Word from doctrine sees all things that confirm . . .

—⁵. That doctrine cannot be procured from any other source than the Word . . .

365. The Word not understood (because there is no good) whence come dissensions in the Church. Sig. and Ex.

—². Therefore if good is not present with a man who is reading the Word, truth also does not appear.

—⁴. In the Word are all the truths of Heaven and the Church, and even all the arcana of wisdom possessed by the Angels of Heaven, but no one sees them except those who are in the good of love to the Lord, and in the good of love towards the neighbour . . .

366². That the understanding of the Word is destroyed when there is no good with the man, that is, no love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour. Ex.

369². The Word has been written from such things as were seen and heard in the ultimates of Heaven, thus from mere correspondences . . .

373². In itself the Word is Divine truth itself, but the understanding of it is according to the state of the man who reads it: a man who is not in good apprehends nothing of good therein, and a man who is not in truths sees nothing of truth therein; so that the cause is not in the Word, but in the reader.

[E.] 382. For the Word appears to everyone according to his quality . . .

392⁷. That the Word is the Lord, is because 'the Word' = the Divine truth, and all Divine truth proceeds from the Lord . . .

410⁴. The Word is written in many places according to appearances in the Spiritual World that are unknown to man, but known to Spirits and Angels, from which it is evident that the Word is written for them also.

411²³. To look at the Word from without, and not from within . . . is to see it not from doctrine, but solely from the letter, whence they wander in every direction . . . and are sure of nothing, whence come endless adulterations . . . Such are they who study the Word for the sake of glory and honour; and, as such, when studying the Word, regard themselves in everything, they are outside the Word; whereas they who love truth and the derivative good are within the Word; for they regard it from the Lord, and not from self. Tr.

—²⁴. The Word is called 'a fire,' and 'a hammer' (Jer.xxiii.29) because these = the good of love and the truth of faith.

419¹⁴. 'He sendeth out His Word' (Ps.cxlvi.18) = the Divine good united to Divine truth.

433³. That 'Judah' = the Word also, is because the Lord is the Word; and He assumed the Human in that tribe that He might be the Word as to the Human also.

435⁴. In every particular of the Word there is an inmost or celestial sense, an internal or spiritual sense, and an external sense, which are for the three Heavens respectively . . .

438⁵. 'Thy shoe iron and brass' = that the ultimate of the Word is natural truth and good.

449¹⁰. The blessing of the tribes by Moses describes the Word.

466². As the Word has been given man for the sake of the conjunction of the Lord with the Angels and with men, truth conjoined with good, and good with truth, are in it everywhere; for there are . . . two expressions, one of which relates to Divine truth, and the other to Divine good . . .

473. Hence the Word, even that spoken by Angels, is Divine.

504¹³. (That) the Word is Divine truth itself united to Divine good, for there is everywhere in it the marriage of good and truth. Rep.

517². All in the love of self falsify the truths of the Word if they study it. Ex.

518²⁶. That although the Church perishes . . . still the Word will not perish. Sig.

520². For there is a marriage of good and truth in everything of the Word, and therefore if there is not good in the truths of the Word on the part of him who perceives them, the truths are without their consort, and may be applied to any evil cupidities and false principles whatever, and may thus become falsities of evil.

535⁸. That those who falsify the truths of the Word by interpretations to confirm evils of life, avert themselves from Heaven, and convert themselves to Hell, is because the conjunction of Heaven with man is through the Word. For Heaven is in the spiritual sense of the Word, and man is in its natural sense . . . This is why those who apply the Word to evils of life, and to false principles that are from their Own intelligence, cannot be conjoined with Heaven . . . But those who apply the Word to such falsities as do not disagree with the good of life . . . have their falsities applied by the Lord to good . . .

545². For he who denies the Word to be Divine in the whole sense of the letter, breaks the connection with Heaven. (Continued under SENSE OF LETTER.)

569¹⁶. That spiritual things are not to be investigated through the scientifics of the natural man, nor the derivative reasonings, but through the Word . . . Sig.

—²¹. The prophet's 'book' = in special, that Word which was in that book; but in general, the whole Word . . .

579². When the Divine things of the Word are conjoined with (the loves of self and of the world) all things therein are adulterated and falsified; for the Divine things of the Word can never be conjoined with anything but heavenly love . . .

585³. Of the Divine mercy . . . media have been given by which man can be removed from his proprium; these media have been given in the Word . . .

593. 'I saw another strong Angel coming down from Heaven' = the Lord as to the Word; here, as to its ultimate sense . . . because it is from this sense that the Lord is called 'strong' . . .

—². The Word, which is Divine truth, descends from the Lord, through the Heavens, into the world; and therefore it is adapted to the wisdom of the Angels who are in the three Heavens, and also to men who are in the natural world. Hence it is that the Word, in its first origin of all, is wholly Divine, is afterwards celestial, then spiritual, and finally natural . . . This is why the Word exists with the Angels of each Heaven, but with a difference according to the degrees of their wisdom, intelligence, and knowledge; and although it differs in its sense in each Heaven, still it is the same Word. Ex.

594². As the Word, which is Divine truth, was represented (at the transfiguration) Moses and Elijah were seen . . .

—³. Since the giving of the Word, the Lord manifests Himself solely through it; for the Word, which is Divine truth, is the Lord Himself in Heaven and the Church; and from this it is evident that the manifestation here foretold (concerning the second advent) = His manifestation in the Word; and (this) has been effected by His having opened and revealed the internal sense . . . 612.

595. 'A rainbow above his head'=the interiors of the Word. Ex.

596. The Divine truth which in Heaven and the Church is the Word.

612. For the Word is the doctrine of Divine truth, (and) everything of doctrine must be from the Word.

614. Examination of the men of the Church as to what understanding of the Word yet remained with them. Sig. and Ex.

—². (Such) may indeed be delighted with the reading of the Word, but not with the truth itself which is of its interior sense . . . and therefore the Word as to the sense of the letter may indeed be loved, but only because it can be drawn to confirm falsities . . .

615. 'A little book open'=the Word manifested by the Lord to Heaven and the Church.

616. The faculty of perceiving from the Lord the quality of the Word. Sig. and Ex. . . The Lord gives this faculty to everyone; but still no one perceives it, unless, as from himself, he wills to perceive it. Ex.

617. That he should read, perceive, and examine the Word as to its quality within and without. Sig. and Ex.

—¹⁷. As the Word is Divine truth, before the Lord it is, in image, like a Divine man; so that its ultimate sense . . . corresponds to the heel; and the perversion of the Word . . . by the application of the sense of the letter to falsities . . . is signified by 'to lift up the heel upon the Lord.'

—¹⁸. To read the Word, and to be instructed from it, effects nothing for salvation, unless we at the same time live according to it. Sig.

618². When the exteriors of the Word . . . are falsified and adulterated, the interior truths of the Word are falsified and adulterated; and therefore when a man applies the Word in the sense of the letter to the evils of earthly loves, it is made undelightful to the Angels, who are in the internal sense. Sig.

619. That the external of the Word was 'sweet as honey,' that is, delightful, was because it is such that it can be applied to any love and any derivative principle . . . 621.

624. A Divine command that (up to the end of the Church) the Word is still to be taught. Sig. and Ex. . . The reason was that it was found that the Word was still delightful as to the sense of the letter. Ex. 625. —³.

627⁶. The degrees of Divine truth in their order as they are in the Word. Enum.

630. That the external of the Word . . . is not to be examined. Sig. and Ex. 631. 632².

641². When the end of the Church is at hand, the interiors of the Word . . . are revealed and taught, in order that the good may be separated from the evil . . . Moreover, the interiors of the Word, which are revealed at the end of the Church, serve the new Church, then being established, for doctrine and life. (Thus) when the end of the Jewish Church was at hand, the Lord Himself opened and taught the interiors of the Word . . . So has it been done at this day . . . which revelation is meant by the advent of the Lord in Matt.xxiv. . . 670².

644¹³. 'So shall My Word be that goeth forth out of My mouth' (Is.lv.11). 'The Word'=the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord, which, with us, inflows through the Word.

652¹⁹. 'Garners full of food'=doctrinal things from the Word, thus the Word where are all truths of doctrine, from which is spiritual instruction and nutrition.

653⁷. 'The Word of Jehovah' (Is.i.10)=the Divine good; 'the law of our God'=the Divine truth.

668. Everything that proceeds from the Lord is called, in general, Divine truth, and with us in the world, the Word.

684³⁶. 'Know therefore and perceive from the going forth of the Word' (Dan.ix.25)=from the end of the Word of the Old Testament, because this is to be fulfilled in the Lord; for, in the supreme sense, all things of the Word of the Old Testament treat of the Lord, and of the glorification of His Human, and thus of His dominion over all things of Heaven and the world.

701¹¹. That the proceeding Divine, which is the Divine truth, thus the Word, is 'a covenant,' because it conjoins. Ill.

710⁹. 'Blessed are they who hear the Word of God, and keep it' (Luke.xi.28)=to learn truths from the Word and to live according to them.

714¹⁰. They who love truth because it is truth . . . are elevated from their proprium while they are reading the Word, even into the light of Heaven, and are enlightened . . .

—¹¹. They who study the Word without doctrine, and are at the same time in the love of self, constitute the externals of the draconic body. Ex.

715². All spiritual truths are from the Word, and make a one with the good of love and of charity.

718. The falsification and adulteration of all the Truths of the Word. Sig. and Ex. 719.

734. Their warfare is not against the Word, for this they call holy and Divine; but it is against the genuine truths of the Word . . . 775.

—². 'The Word of Jehovah' (Is.ii.3)=truth from the good of love.

747. That they dispute with them continually from the Word. Sig. and Ex.

748³. How the Word is falsified, if regarded only exteriorly, and not at the same time interiorly.

754. To live from the Word, is to live from the Lord; for the Lord is in the Word; nay, is the Word.

768³³. The Word is said to be falsified when its truths are perverted, and adulterated when its goods, and also when its truths, are applied to loves of self.

778². How the Word is blasphemed by the falsification of it. Examp.

—³. The 'sin and blasphemy against the Holy Spirit' is to deny the Word, and also to adulterate its very goods and falsify its very truths. But 'to speak a word against the Son of Man' is to interpret the natural sense of the Word . . . according to appearances. Ex.

[E. 778]⁴. That to deny the Word is a sin that cannot be forgiven . . . to eternity . . . is because those who deny the Word, deny God, deny the Lord, deny Heaven and Hell, and deny the Church and all things of it.

—⁶. For the Word in ultimates is like a man clad in a garment, whose face and hands, however, are bare; and, where the Word is thus bare, its goods and truths appear there bare as they are in Heaven, thus such as they are in the spiritual sense. (Continued under SENSE OF LETTER.)

783⁵. Some infernal Spirits acquire power through the Word; for they know some passages, and pronounce them, by which communication is effected with the simple good . . . and they prevail over others accordingly as they are in this conjunction; the reason of which is that all things of the Word are truths, and there is all power in truths, and the simple good are in truths . . .

785. The disagreement of their doctrinals with the Word, where love, life, and works are so frequently mentioned. Sig. and Ex.

790⁴. Therefore it is necessary for the spiritual mind to be opened and formed through things that are in the Word, where all things are spiritual, because Divine. Ex.

—⁶. The second reason is that the Word is from the Lord, and hence the Lord is in the Word, inasmuch that He is the Word; for the Word is Divine truth, which is all from the Lord; from which it follows, that he who abstains from doing evils because they are contrary to the Divine precepts in the Word, abstains from them from the Lord.

—⁸. The spiritual mind is formed from the things which are in the man's memory from the Word. Ex.

— This spiritual affection of truth . . . is given through the Word, because the Lord in the Church is the Word.

—^e. Man has no need to 'work,' further than to learn truths from the Word, and live according to them.

797. That the Word is the Lord because from the Lord, is because the Word is the Divine truth, (which) proceeds from the Lord as a Sun, and that which proceeds is His from whom it proceeds, nay, is Himself; and therefore the Divine truth, from which both Angels and men have all their wisdom and intelligence, is the Lord in Heaven. That it is also the Word such as it is with us in the world, is because the Word is the Divine truth in the ultimate of order, and contains a spiritual sense, which is the Divine truth such as it is in Heaven. —⁹.

—². On those who so falsify the Word that they completely close Heaven against themselves.

798. When (the things said in the Word about works, deeds, and doing) are falsified, all things of the Word are falsified; for all the other things of the Word, which are called its truths, live from those things . . . Moreover, there is a marriage of good and truth everywhere in the Word . . . so that when good is taken away, the truth that remains is falsified . . .

—⁴. In (love to the Lord and towards the neighbour) are all those who do goods from the Word . . .

800². On those who although in Churches where faith alone is acknowledged, still do not falsify the Word. Fully ex.

803². In order for a man to be in enlightenment . . . let him read the Word every day, one chapter, or two . . .

815. For the Word can never confirm a false dogma unless it is falsified; for all things of the Word are truths, and therefore all truths can be confirmed from the Word, and by no means falsities.

816². The reason (any heresy can be confirmed from the Word) is that the sense of the letter is according to the apprehension of the simple, and therefore consists in great part of appearances of truth . . . In the sense of the letter of the Word there are naked truths as well as truths clothed, and these latter are appearances of truth (which) can be understood only from passages where naked truths are visible, from which doctrine can be formed by the Lord with one who is enlightened, and all the other things explained according to it. This is why those who read the Word without doctrine are led into manifold errors. The reason the Word has been written in this way is that there might be conjunction of Heaven with man; and there is this conjunction because every word in it, and in some passages every letter, contains a spiritual sense, in which the Angels are, so that when a man perceives the Word according to its appearances of truth, the Angels who encompass the man understand it spiritually. . . If the Word had been written differently, no conjunction of Heaven with man would have been possible.

—³. As the Word in the letter is of such a character, it is as it were a support for Heaven: for all the wisdom of the Angels . . . as to the things of the Church, is terminated in the sense of the letter of the Word as in its basis . . . Hence it is that the sense of the letter of the Word is most holy, and is even more powerful than its spiritual sense. (This is shown by the fact that) when Spirits bring forward any passage according to the sense of the letter, they at once excite some heavenly Society to conjunction with them. (This shows that) everything of the doctrine of the Church must be confirmed from the sense of the letter of the Word for there to be any holiness or power in it, and this from those books of the Word in which there is a spiritual sense. (This also shows) how dangerous it is to so falsify the Word as to destroy the Divine truth that is in its spiritual sense; for by so doing Heaven is closed to man. S32².

819². See FALSIFY, here. —^e. S88³, etc.

825. For that which is confirmed from the Word, is confirmed from Heaven. But when falsity is confirmed from the Word, it is not confirmed from Heaven, but only appears (to be so).

826. When reasonings (from the natural man) are confirmed from the Word, they become effectual, the reason of which is that the Word is Divine, and in the sense of the letter consists of appearances of truth . . .

832. For each and all things of the Word communicate with the Heavens, from which there inflows what is holy into one who is speaking or preaching it . . .

—³. All love becomes spiritual through truths from the Word in proportion as the man acknowledges them, and sees them in his understanding, and afterwards loves, that is, does them from the will.

846². In order that man may from enlightenment see and perceive the genuine Truths of the Word, the three degrees of the understanding, natural, rational, and spiritual, must be together. Ex.

888⁴. For the Word in the whole complex regards the life of man, thus works; for the Lord says that the law and the prophets hang upon these (two great) commandments.

914³. For when the Word is explained in favour of earthly loves, and to confirm falsities of doctrine, the Church is laid waste; but not when the Word is understood in simplicity according to the sense of the letter . . .

937⁵. For conversation with the Lord is through the Word.

941². When the spiritual internal has been opened . . . the man is enlightened, especially when he is reading the Word, because the Lord is in the Word, and the Word is the Divine truth, (which) is light to the Angels.

948². The Word interiorly revealed, before the Church had been completely devastated. Tr. and Ex. 956.

960¹⁴. 'The name of God' (which is not to be taken in vain) = . . . the Divine truth, and, with us, the Word.

—¹⁵. There are two things by which Heaven is closed against the men of the Church; one is the denial of the Divinity of the Lord, and the other is the denial of the holiness of the Word. Ex.

974. This is why an internal holiness from the Angels inflows into the external thought of the man who holds the Word to be holy, although he is unaware of it.

983. For they who remove a life according to the Lord's commandments, annihilate all things of the Word; for all things of the Word are precepts of life; the precepts of faith which are the truths of the Word, teach life.

985⁴. As the members of generation . . . correspond to the Societies of the Third Heaven, and as the love between married partners corresponds to the love between good and truth, therefore those members and this love correspond to the Word, the reason of which is that the Word is the Divine truth united to Divine good that proceeds from the Lord; and hence it is that the Lord is called the Word: and from this also it is that in everything of the Word there is the marriage of good and truth.

— This also is why adulterers make Divine truths, and consequently the Word, of no account . . .

988⁴. The Reformed . . . emerged into some light by the reading of the Word . . .

1006³. They who have studied the Word solely for the sake of glory . . . breathe forth adulteries as of a father with a daughter-in-law.

1024³. For the Word is Divine truth itself, thus Divine wisdom, proceeding from the Lord as a Sun, and appearing in the Heavens as light. The Divine truth is that Divine which is called 'the Holy Spirit' . . .

1028. That the Word has been falsified even to the destruction of all genuine truth. Sig.

1033. (That religiosity) dominating over all things of the Word. Sig. and Ex.

—³. For the genuine truths of the Word are like a man; and the appearances of truth of which the sense of the letter consists, are like his garments . . .

1038². How the Divine Word can be signified by 'a beast.' Ex.

1054. That the Word was at first received in the Church and read, and was afterwards taken away from the people and not read. Sig. and Ex. 1058.

1055. That the Word is rejected by them. Sig. and Ex. 1056.

1062. The goods of the Word adulterated and profaned by them. Sig. and Ex.

1063. The truths of the Word falsified and profaned by them. Sig. and Ex.

1064³. The fifth kind of profanation . . . consists in jesting from the Word, and about the Word. Ex.

1065³. On the Word and its holiness. Serialim articles. 1066³, etc.

1066³. The four senses of the Word. Enum. and Ex.

1067³. That the Word is Divine truth itself, which gives wisdom to Angels, and enlightens men. Ex.

—^e. Hence it is that the man who reads the Word from the affection of truth, has enlightenment through Heaven from the Lord.

1069². That the Lord is the Word. Ex.

1070. Those (of them) who have ascribed Divine holiness to the Word, and not to the decrees of the Pope. Sig. and Ex. 1071. 1072.

1074². As the Divine truth . . . has been written in each Heaven, and made the Word, the Word is the union of the Heavens with each other, and also the union of the Heavens with the Church in the world; for the same Word is everywhere, and differs only in the perfection of glory and wisdom, according to the degrees in which the Heavens are. (Continued under READ.) 1082^e.

[E.] 1077². The Word of the Lord is wonderful in this: that in every particular of it there is a reciprocal union of good and truth, which testifies that the Word is the Divine that proceeds from the Lord, which is Divine good and Divine truth reciprocally united; and testifies also that there is in the Word the marriage of the Lord with Heaven and the Church, which also is reciprocal. Ex. and Ill.

1079². Each least particular of the Word contains senses more and more interior, (such as exist in the three Heavens in order). These senses are in the sense of the letter, one within another, and they are evolved therefrom, one after another, each from its own Heaven, when the Word is read by a man who is led by the Lord. . . (This shows) how the Word has been inspired by the Divine, and that it is written from an inspiration to which nothing else in the world can be compared. The arcana of wisdom of the three Heavens which are in it, are the mystical things of which many have spoken.

1080². There is a Word in each Heaven, and these Words are in our Word in their order, and thus make one by influx and the derivative correspondences. Ex. 1081².

1083². As there is a trine of one thing within another in every least thing of the Word, and as this trine is like effect, cause, and end, it follows that there are three senses in the Word. Ex. and Examps. 1084², Ex.

1084². How a man, from the Word in the letter, calls forth a natural sense, a spiritual Angel a spiritual sense, and a celestial Angel a celestial sense, and this in an instant, whence comes conjunction and communication. Ill. by comparisons.

1085³. (This shows) what a profanation it is to falsify the truths and adulterate the goods of the Word; and how infernal it is to deny or invalidate its holiness. As soon as this is done, Heaven is closed against that man of the Church. The blasphemy against the Holy Spirit . . . is the blaspheming of the Word by those who deny its holiness. As the Word is the basis of the Heavens, and as it had been wholly falsified and adulterated by the Jewish nation . . . therefore, lest the Heavens should be endangered, and the wisdom of the Angels there should become foolishness, it pleased the Lord to descend from Heaven, and . . . become the Word. . .

1086⁵. As all higher things place themselves in the lowest ones in simultaneous order, it follows that in the ultimates of the Word . . . are all things of Divine truth and Divine good even from their primes . . . (thus) the power of Divine truth is there, and the omnipotence of the Lord in saving man. Ex.

1089². That no one can understand the Word without doctrine. Ex.

—³. Yet doctrine can be acquired solely from the Word. Ex.

—^e. He who loves truth because it is truth, can as it were interrogate the Lord in doubtful matters of faith, and receive answers from Him; but nowhere else than in the Word, for the reason that the Lord is the Word.

1106. For all things that man draws from the Word are 'a voice from Heaven.'

1130². For the Word never confirms evil (unless it is falsified).

1173². That the Lord does not teach man truths immediately . . . but mediately through the Word . . . Ex.

1177. Immediate revelation is not given, except that which has been given in the Word . . . which is such that everyone may be taught according to the affections of his love, and the derivative thoughts of his understanding . . . Ex.

—². (Thus) the Lord teaches the man of the Church immediately through the Word, according to the love of his will which he has by his life, and according to the light of his understanding which he has by his knowledge; and nothing else is possible, because this is the Divine order of influx.

—³. Even those outside the Christian world, and who have not the Word, are taught in no other way. Ex. 1179².

1228. Thus has the Word been written by the Lord by the media of Angels. Ex.

J. (Post.) 261. The Word in (the Hebrew) letter has a more immediate communication with Heaven.

—⁵. The difference between the three Words, the natural, the spiritual, and the celestial, shown by an examp.

—⁷. (This shows) the nature of the Word in its bosom.

— In our natural Word, therefore, are contained both the spiritual Word, and the celestial Word; but in (these) is not contained the natural Word; and therefore the Word of our world is the most full of Divine wisdom, and so is more holy than the Words of the Heavens.

15. On the old Word which is lost.

—⁵. The religions of many nations were derived . . . from this (old) Word.

16. On the nations and peoples outside the Church, with whom there is not the Word. Gen.art.

22. It is better for man to understand the Word according to the letter, in very many places. Examps.

D. Wis. xi. 2a. They who are in the love of truth are actually in the light of Heaven, and are therefore in enlightenment, and in the perception of truth when they are reading the Word. All others are only in the confirmation of their own principles. Ex.

Dicta Probantia. The Word, through which the Church would revive. Sig. (in Dan.iv.15).

55. It pleased the Lord to prepare me (Swedenborg) from my earliest youth to perceive the Word . . .

Docu. 234. When Heaven was opened to me, I had first to learn the Hebrew language, as well as the correspondences according to which the whole Bible is composed, which led me to read over the Word of God many times; and as God's Word is the source whence all theology must be derived, I was enabled thereby to receive instruction from the Lord, who is the Word.

See VOICE-vox; and under EXPRESSION, and SPEAK.

A. 2°. Whatever word in the Word does not involve the Lord, is not Divine.

4°. There is not the least of a word which is not representative . . .

41. Every word, etc. of an Angelic Spirit is alive. Ex.

64. The Angels do not know even the proximate meaning of a single word (of the letter). . . They have only the idea of the Things signified by the words and names.

241. He who fixes his attention on the sense of the words, hears the words, but as it were does not hear them . . . but he who attends to the words (only) apprehends little of the sense . . . and sometimes forms a judgment of all that is said from a single word, or grammatical form.

607. The Most Ancients did not speak so much by words . . .

608. With external respiration came the speech of words, that is, of articulate sounds, into which were determined the ideas of thought.

621. In the Word, one word is never used instead of another.

771. Every word in the Word is from the Lord. Ex.

793. They who are in the internal sense can know . . . from a single word what is the subject treated of . . . When a different subject is treated of, the words are at once different, or the same words stand in a different connection. The reason is that there are words peculiar to spiritual things, and words peculiar to celestial things . . . Examps. . . In the Hebrew they are very often distinguishable by the sound. Ex.

1007°. Therefore such mild words are here used.

VOL. VI.

1118. Not like the speech of words, of our time. . . 1120.

—². Than by articulate sounds, or sonorous words . . .

—³. There is nothing in any word that is not directed by applications of the breathing.

1388. The quality of Spirits known from every word. Ex. 1640°. D. 3064, Ex.

1391. Spirits can represent more by one idea than they can utter by a thousand words.

1637°. The language of Spirits is not of words . . . When with man, their ideas pass into the words that are in the man; and . . . they suppose the words to be their own.

1638. The words they speak . . . are well chosen and clear, full of meaning, and distinctly pronounced . . . They choose the words better and more promptly than the man himself . . . for the ideas of their language inflow only into words that are fitting; almost as when a man speaks, and thinks nothing about the words . . . for then the thought falls readily and spontaneously into the words: it is the internal meaning that brings forth the words.

1639. The speech of words is that proper to man, in fact to his corporeal memory.

—². Every word contains an idea of great possible extension . . .

1641. Ideas the primitives of words.

1648. In choirs they have no thought about the words, or ideas . . . The words follow spontaneously from the meaning.

1756. The series . . . cannot appear when each thing is explained according to the signification of the words . . . As with one who hears another . . . and pays attention to the words.

—². The most ancient mode of writing represented subjects . . . by words that were understood quite differently.

1757. The speech of Spirits among themselves is effected by ideas, the originaries of words. 1876, Ex.

1759. The speech of celestial Spirits cannot easily inflow into the articulate sounds, or words, with man; for it cannot be fitted to a word in which there is anything that sounds harshly . . .

1763°. Others spoke by a belching of words, as from the belly.

1870. Each of the words (in the Word) presents in form its own idea; for a word is nothing but an idea so presented in form that the sense may be perceived.

—². The Word is inspired, not only as to each word, but as to the letters . . .

1876°. No part of a word of the Word can pass to Spirits . . .

1923°. How the speaking (of the Word) came to man by words of articulate sound. Ex.

1936°. There are inexhaustible things in every word of the Word . . .

1955°. Angelic ideas do not fall into the words, but only into the sense of the words . . .

[A.] 2157. They who perceive the Word as to the affection, pay no attention to the words . . .

2209². Souls speak together most distinctly, yet without the speech of words.

2236. (The internal sense is here) not so evident from the signification of the words . . .

2303. Angelic speech, not distinct in words.

2311. All the words have a spiritual sense.

2333². The internal sense does not come into view, unless the words are explained one by one according to their constant signification.

2343². The series cannot appear fully in the explanation of the several words . . .

2470^e. The ideas belong to the Angels and Spirits, the words into which they inflow, to the man.

2472. Men cannot speak together except by languages distinguished into articulate sounds, that is, into words . . . because (they speak) from the exterior memory.

2643^e. These are Divine things which can be expressed by no forms or formulae of words.

3342². When (speech that is heard) ascends towards the interiors, it passes into ideas not unlike those of sight, and from these into intellectual ideas, and thus becomes a perception of the sense of the words.

3343. The ideas (of the interior Heaven) are not expressible in words . . .

3952. Why this has been explained for the most part only as to the signification of the words . . .

3969¹⁴. There are words in the Word that express spiritual things, and words that express celestial things, and this constantly. Examp.

4043². All human words . . . as they involve natural things, are inadequate to express these things.

4136^e. There is not a single word used in the Word that does not involve a heavenly arcanum.

4402¹. The Word is inspired as to all the words . . .

4406^e. As man's spirit is in the light of Heaven . . . many things that are interior have fallen into words (that are used correspondentially).

4493¹. Like one who . . . takes in the sense, and does not attend to the words. 5165².

— Like one who is intent upon the words . . .

4528². The speech of Angels is effected by means of spiritual and celestial ideas, which to them are the forms of words . . .

4585¹. There is no other way than to use these words; for without words adapted to the subject, nothing can be described.

4609². The things which then appear . . . do not fall into words; for human words are from ideas formed from things that are in the light of the world.

4966¹. (Philosophical things) are mostly bare words . . .

5075². The interior significatives of words originate for the most part from the interior man . . .

5212. Lowest truths . . . being in the exterior memory . . . can be represented to others by forms of words, that is, by ideas formed into words by means of such things as are of the world and its light.

5287. So far as thought and speech are determined to . . . words, they become less universal . . .

—². (Thus) in so far as the thought regards the words of a speaker, it does not regard his meaning.

5614¹. The interior mind . . . does not think from the words of any language . . .

5648². Those in the other life . . . understand no human words, but only the sense of the words; and this not according to the man's natural thoughts, but according to his thoughts that are spiritual.

5757^e. Why one word sometimes means many things.

6319². Man thinks in a moment more than he can utter in half an hour, because he thinks abstractedly from the words of language.

6343². There are words which constantly = good; words which constantly = truth; and words which constantly = both . . . 8314. 8330. 10254². 8.80^e.

6516^e. In (spiritual writings) all the words, and even the syllables, involve such things as are of that World, thus spiritual things, and they are perceived from the aspiration, and from the affection that results from their utterance, thus from a milder or a harsher modification.

6621. The thought was then as it were kept in prison; for it was determined solely to the words, by withdrawing the mind from the sense. D. 1950.

6622². So, innumerable things concur to one word, as foldings of the lips, etc.

6623. The Angels can know, from a single word that comes forth from the thought, the quality of a Spirit, or man.

6624. Ideas of thought are the words of Spirits; and ideas of thought still more interior are the words of Angels. Ideas, being the words of speech, are sonorous (there); so that the tacit thought of man is audible to Spirits and Angels, when the Lord so pleases. 7745.

6814. (The Spirits of Mercury) are averse to the speech of words, because it is material . . .

6924^e. Affectations of elegance . . . hide Things, and present words, which are the material forms of Things.

6974^e. In the Word, where truth is expressed by its words, good is also expressed by its words . . .

6987². It appears as if the words of speech were in the thought, but it is a fallacy . . .

— When the speech of the spirit inflows into the correspondent organs of the body, it presents the speech of words . . .

— Yet, the words of spiritual speech are not such words as man uses in the body, but are ideas . . .

7089^e. For spiritual speech is not one of material words, but of spiritual words, which are ideas modified into words in the spiritual aura . . .

8022. The speech (of the Angels of Jupiter) was not effected (with me) by words, but by ideas . . . So do they speak with the men of their Earth. Ex.

8249°. The Most Ancients could not have the speech of words, because the words of language were not poured in immediately, but had to be invented and applied to Things, which could not be done except in course of time.

8250°. The dissidence is clearly perceived in every word. and in the tone of every word . . .

8314°. In the Word there are words that belong to the spiritual class, and words that belong to the celestial class . . . There are also words that are predicated of both (truth and good).

8420. The spiritual signification is seen in the very word 'walk,' as in many others.

8443°. Truth Divine in the fifth degree is such as is in the First Heaven . . . and is such that a great part of it cannot be uttered in human words.

8733. In order to know the thought (of the spiritual) it must be collected from their words; but with the celestial it is not so . . .

8990°. For the interior sense of very many words has flowed from the Spiritual World from correspondences. Examps.

9094°. When let down again into the light of the natural man, I could not express in words the things I had heard . . .

9258. For words adapt themselves to their subject . . .

10604°. The initiations of the thoughts are devoid of words of speech . . .

10708. The quasi articulate speech (in the Fourth Earth) is not by words, but by ideas . . .

10709°. The speech of words is relatively material.

H. 1. There is an internal sense . . . not only as to the sense of many words, but also as to every word.

235. Angelic speech is equally distinguished into words as is human speech . . . and the Angels utter their words by means of the respiration . . .

236. The articulations of sound, which are words, correspond (there) to the ideas of thought . . .

237. The angelic language has nothing in common with human languages, except some words, which sound from some affection; yet not with the words themselves, but with their sound.

— The Angels cannot utter one word of human language; it has been tried . . .

239. (The Angels) can express by one word what man cannot by a thousand words.

—³. The ideas of thought of the Angels, from which are their words, are modifications of the light of Heaven; and the affections, from which is the sound of the words, are variations of its heat . . .

240. By a few words, the Angels can present what has been written on many pages.

—². The ideas of thought of the Angels, and the words of their speech, thus make a one . . . and this is why every word comprehends in it so many things.

241°. From the words of the Word in the Hebrew, it may in some measure be known whether they belong to the celestial or the spiritual class . . . those which involve good partake much of u and o, and somewhat of a; and those which involve truth, of e and i . . . In human discourse also, when great subjects are treated of . . . those words are preferred that contain the vowels u and o.

262. (In the writings in Heaven) the hand does not hesitate in the choice of any word, because the words they speak, as well as those they write, correspond to the ideas of their thought . . .

269. The quality of the wisdom of the Angels cannot be described in words . . . The Angels can express in one word what a man cannot in a thousand words; moreover in one angelic word there are innumerable things that cannot be expressed in the words of human language . . . What the Angels do not fully express by the words of their speech, they supply in the tone . . . They can utter in a few words all the things written in a volume . . . and insert into every word such things as elevate to interior wisdom; for . . . every word is consonant to their ideas; and the words are varied in infinite modes according to the series of the Things . . .

—². The interior Angels are able to know the entire life of a speaker from the tone and some words . . .

284°. I can describe the peace of Heaven, but not in words, such as it is in itself, because human words are not adequate, but only in words such as it is comparatively . . .

U. 23°. A speaker who draws attention more to his words than to the meaning of his words, affects the hearing of another more than his mind.

J. 41°. No word can be wanting without the series of Things in the internal sense suffering a consequent change.

S. 18. That it is from the spiritual sense that the Word is . . . holy in every word. Ex.

W. 280. From the sound the Angels know a man's love, from the articulation of the sound, his wisdom, and from the sense of the words, his knowledge. They say that these three are in every word, because a word is as a conclusion; for the sound, the articulation, and the sense are in it . . . From every word of one who is speaking in a series, the celestial Angels perceive the general state of his lower mind, and some of the particular states also. (What there is in every word of the Word. Ex.)

281. This is why it is said . . . that a man shall render an account of his words. D.2661.

295. There was no word of spiritual speech that was like any word of natural speech . . .

306. (This) cannot be described otherwise by words flowing from natural ideas; but it can by words flowing from spiritual ideas, because these are apart from space (and which therefore) do not fall into any words of natural language.

P. 258. Place Salvation in certain words . . . 264°. 279°.

M. 326°. (The words of spiritual language are not understood by Spirits themselves when the Spirits are with men. Shown.)

D. 1147. The words are flowing . . .

1394. The words of speech are all from natural things . . . but the sense is spiritual.

1645. The celestial love soft words . . .

1735. If one word is uttered—as all words are ideas—that word is as it were put on (by the Spirits) . . .

2002. There is a certain universal sphere of the thoughts which rules . . . so that all the words or ideas flow fitly . . .

2138. When these (spiritual ideas) inflow into the memory of a man, they excite corresponding words . . .

—^e. Spirits excite the ideas, consequently the words, which are in agreement with their nature.

2142. Spirits speak by ideas the primitives of words ; for in every word there is some idea, and in every composition of words, a composite idea . . .

—². When (their speech) entered my internal sense, [it fell] into distinct words . . .

2251. I have spoken with Spirits by ideas only, without words, and they have understood as well as with words . . .

2285. Particulars are the words of every language . . .

2301. Nay, the ideas of the words . . . are material . . .

2370. He who inheres in words, inheres in material and corporeal things . . .

2380. On those who inhere solely in the words of the Word . . .

2410. The Angels can then know how many times I have read these words . . .

2472. Each word is as it were a vessel . . .

2631. Nature of the Hebrew words.

2961. They who are high over head perceive the sense without being disturbed by the words.

2969. Fitting words then follow . . .

3043. That an idea remains attached to a word.

—^e. Therefore such words should be constantly used as have had an idea once impressed on them.

3050^e. For every word has an idea which is of great extension . . .

3210. That the quality of a man is sometimes Known from a single word. Ex.

3278^e. Their thought does not fall into words, but into motions of the lips.

3423. Spirits and Angels use familiar words, and no word is introduced that multiplies the sense, or diverts it : (they avoid) an artful elegance and combination of words . . .

3637. A speech of words (in which attention is paid only) to the sense of the words. Des.

3812. (Such) answer the same purpose as certain words . . . as connectives.

4143. On the materials of words.—When I took certain words from my collection to insert them in what I was writing, and I took a single word . . . that was not in my memory, there occurred a change of Spirits . . . The reason was that Spirits succeeded who indulge in words, or the materials of speech, but the former only in thoughts : thus I learned from experience that these two kinds of Spirits cannot be together . . .

4342. When Spirits are speaking together, they cannot bring forth . . . a word of human language. (Continued under SPEAK.)

4784². For many of these (ideas) make one idea of speech, or one word.

4866. Examps. of the articulate words of spiritual language. 6063. 6090. J.(Post.)324. E.107^e.

4871. Not a single word of the (inferentials) can be uttered by the Angels . . .

5112. The words of the spiritual Angels . . . have an affinity with the vowels e and i . . . but the words of the celestial Angels, with a, o, and u . . . Therefore when a man is speaking with the latter, he is diverted from words that contain e and i, to words that contain a, o, and u.

5114. Hence, in the Hebrew language, and, in general, in the most ancient language, there were words proper to the celestial class, and to the spiritual class ; and some common to both.

5561. The words (in the writing of the spiritual Heaven) are according to their natural ideas.

5579. In the Spiritual Kingdom (the writing) is made by words written in a like diction to that (here) ; but the words there are from their natural or universal language . . . I have often seen such words in Roman letters, but when I was in the natural sphere I understood nothing whatever of them . . .

—². But the writing of the celestial is quite different . . . They express, by one such (inflected) form, more than can be expressed by very many words in the spiritual language . . .

5585. The speech of Spirits . . . is from their interior memory, the ideas from which become words, but such as accord with the Things themselves ; which also are the initiations of natural words.

5587. The celestial do not speak anything from their interior, because this does not fall into words.

5588. The ideas of the speaking thought, with man, are devoid of words . . .

5589. Every subject has its own conformity . . . and these conformed ideas fall, with Spirits, into words, which are distinctly enunciated, and are distinctly and sonorously heard . . .

—². (Thus, spiritual) speech is one of words, but of entirely different words, being formed according to the nature of the Thing [spoken of], and articulated by the sound . . .

5589a. How much the words of the language of Spirits differ from the words of that of men. Ex.

5594. I could express even material things without words . . .

5606. The fourth class . . . attend solely to the words (of the Word) . . .

5964. In (that Word) there are words which only the wiser (Angels) understand . . .

5965. (Thus) the writings in Heaven (contain) words that contain more than those who read them are aware of . . .

6062. Not like the inspiration of a prophet, to whom all the several words were dictated.

6063. One letter (there) means an entire word.

D. Min. 4617. How much more perfect are ideas than words of speech. Ex.

J. (Post.) 324. The Spirits and Angels were told to speak words . . . in their spiritual state, and to retain them when with me in a natural state, and then not any word was similar, nor did they understand any of their own words. Examp.

De Verbo. 3³. It was granted to some Angels of the Middle Heaven to speak with some of the Third Heaven, and to retain in the memory what they had said, and afterwards to return into their own Heaven, and they told me that they could not express any idea or any word of the previous state.

—⁷. I have retained the words (uttered by the Angels) and have afterwards examined to see whether any word coincides with any word . . . of men, and there has not been one.

26. The spiritual Angels utter the words of their speech according to correspondences. Examp.

—². They have correspondences in the words of their speech which previously they had not known. . . Their words are all formed from correspondences. Examps.

8976. A state of confirmed truth without his exertion. Sig. and Ex.

R. 956. Without their exertion. Sig. and Ex.

M. 207². We have heard that in Heaven there are . . . wonderful handicrafts.

—³. In Heaven there are . . . also mechanical arts and handicrafts.

—⁶. They were then brought to the wonderful handicrafts that are performed in a spiritual manner by the artificers

T. 71². Man must purify himself from sins by his own exertion and power. —³.

D. 6088⁴. In the Hells, all are driven to their works . . . Thus are they driven to their labours. E. 1226³.

E. 1191². All the inhabitants (of Heaven) love uses, and perform them by various kinds of work.

1226⁴. The uses they perform in the Heavens, and the works they do in the Hells, are in part like those done (here); but most of the uses are spiritual . . .

J. (Post.) 230. In Hell (such) remain under the supervision of a judge, who imposes tasks on them which they must do daily, (otherwise) no food, garment, or bed is given them; and if they do them negligently they are severely punished. Thus by tasks adapted to them they are withdrawn from the delights of their will. D. Love xv².

D. Wis. vii. 5³. The manual employments (or handicrafts—operae manuarum of the Angels), which are innumerable, and the duties of their callings, differ in the same way from the employments (or crafts) and duties of natural men in the world; and therefore cannot be described in words of human language.

xi. 4. That use is to discharge one's office, and do one's work rightly, faithfully, sincerely, and justly. Ex.

— (Then) everyone . . . is doing uses daily . . . a workman by his craft.

Work. Opus.

See under ACT, DO, and USE.

A. 63. Therefore the regenerate man is called in the Prophets, 'the work of the fingers of God.'

84. 'On the seventh day God finished His work . . . ' (Gen. ii. 2) = the celestial man . . .

88. When the spiritual man becomes celestial, he is called 'the work of God,' because the Lord alone has fought for, created, formed, and made him . . . III.

348. 'The fruit of the ground' = works of faith without charity . . . for (such) are works of no faith, and, in themselves, are dead, being of the external man only.

531. 'He shall comfort us for our work . . . ' (Gen. v. 29) = doctrine, by which what has been perverted should be restored. . . By 'work' is signified that they would not be able to perceive what truth is without labour and distress. . . There is work and labour of our hands, when men have to seek what is true, and do what is good, from themselves, or from what is their Own.

848². When he reflects about the goods of charity, or, as they are called, good works . . .

880². Man's Natural is what does a work of charity . . . but, in itself, this work is dead, and lives only from what is spiritual that is in the work, and what is spiritual does not live except from what is celestial, which lives from the Lord; and from this it is called a good work . . .

—³. (Thus) in every work of charity, the work itself is only something material.

1110. On those who have placed merit and righteousness in good works. 1111.

—⁶. These are . . . vastated, because they have performed good works . . .

1679³. With one who believes in meriting salvation by works, and confirms himself in it . . .

—⁶. One who believes that piety of life is impossible without merit being placed in works . . .

1873. It was said that good works are the fruit of faith in the external sense . . . but that these good works have no life unless they proceed from charity.

—⁶. For thus in the good work there is charity; in this love to the Lord; and in this the Lord Himself.

2039³. The celestial things of love are (here) described by the works of charity. Enum.

[A.] 2094. (Such) have no need to know . . .

2439². (Thus) to do a good work, or good of charity . . . with one is a good of charity . . . with another is a work of obedience . . . with some is meritorious . . . and with others is hypocritical . . .

2784. 'Wood' = the goods that are of works . . . and 'to cleave wood' = to place merit in the goods that are of works. Shown.

3147². When . . . the love of self and of the world are removed, good is received . . . for then the man exercises the works of charity . . . and also the works of piety so far as he can.

—⁷. Good works are evil works unless the things of the love of self and the world are removed; for when works are done before these have been removed, they appear good outwardly, but are evil inwardly; for they are done for the sake of reputation, etc. . . and thus are either meritorious or hypocritical; for the things of the love of self and the world make these works such. But when these evils are removed, the works become good, and are goods of charity . . . for then celestial love and spiritual love inflow from the Lord into the works, and make them to be love and charity in act.

3240⁴. Celestial things, that is, the goods of faith, or, what is the same, the works of charity, which they have. Sig.

3260. At the commencement of a work, the Ancients used to say, 'God bless.' Ex.

3451³. If anyone says that good works ought to be done that we may have our reward in Heaven, according to the literal sense . . . in Matt. x. 41, 42; xxv. 34-46, and elsewhere, and yet in doing good works never thinks of merit, he is in the Lord's Kingdom . . . and readily suffers himself to be instructed . . . that works wherein merit is placed are not good.

3671². Scientifics and works are like ground . . . (in which) the seeds grow.

3934. 'A troop cometh' . . . in the external sense, = works . . . because these correspond to the good of faith; for the good of faith produces works, since it is impossible without works. Ex.

— . Unless works correspond to the good of faith, they are neither works of charity, nor works of faith . . . but are dead works, in which there is neither good nor truth; but when they correspond, they are works either of charity or of faith. Works of charity are those which flow from charity as their soul; and works of faith are those which flow from faith. Works of charity exist with a regenerate man; but works of faith with one not yet regenerate, but being regenerated. Ex.

—³. This shows what works are; and also that he who makes profession of faith . . . and denies works, and still more so if he rejects them, is devoid of faith, and still more so of charity.

—⁴. As the works of charity and of faith are such, and as a man is never in charity and faith unless he is in works, 'works' are so frequently mentioned in the Word. Ill.

—⁷. From these passages it is evident that works are what save man, and what condemn him; namely, that good works save, and evil works condemn; for the will of a man is in his works. Ex.

—⁸. Moreover, the Lord's Kingdom commences in a man from the life which is of works; for he is then at the beginning of regeneration; but when His Kingdom is in the man, it terminates in the works; and then the man is regenerate. Ex. . . His works are then charity.

— . As the life of the internal man thus comes forth in the works of the external man, the Lord, in speaking of the Last Judgment, recounts nothing but works (Matt. xxv. 32-46) and says that those who have done good works shall enter into life eternal . . .

—^e. By 'John' (also) who lay on the Lord's breast . . . were represented good works.

3935. 'Gad' = the quality of the good of faith, and of works. 4609.

— . The good of faith of the internal man, and the good works of the external man, when they correspond, are the third general medium . . .

3956. Therefore the works that are done for the sake of reward are not in themselves good, because they do not spring from the genuine fountain, which is charity towards the neighbour.

4189. The conjunction of the Divine Natural with the goods of works, in which are . . . the gentiles. Sig. and Ex.

—^e. Good works may exist without goods within; but not the goods of works.

4191. Those who are in the good of works. Sig. and Ex.

—^e. 'Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto Me,' means the works of charity; (and shows that charity towards the neighbour is conjunction with the Lord).

4198^e. The quality of the Lord's presence . . . with those who are in the goods of works. Sig. and Ex.

4226. Spirits interiorly evil . . . but who had exteriorly assumed the appearance of good by means of the works they had done for others for the sake of themselves . . . complain that they are not admitted into Heaven . . .

4270^e. These truths of faith . . . and works of faith that are first exercised, are the things by which man . . . is insinuated into good. Sig.

4368⁵. When those in the affection of truth from the good of genuine charity, are instructed that the works of the external man are nothing unless they proceed from the internal man . . . they receive it with joy; but those in the affection of truth from the love of self and the world applaud the works of the external man, and care nothing for the willing well of the internal man . . .

4382. 'According to the foot of the work' (Gen. xxxiii. 14) = according to generals.

4638⁹. That they wish to enter Heaven . . . from works in which there is not the Lord's life, but the life of self. Sig.

4663². They say that in what the Lord said of works, the fruits of faith are meant; and that He mentioned them for the sake of the simple.

—³. This is why only works of charity are mentioned by the Lord: for he who is in the works of charity . . . is capable of receiving faith . . . But one who is not in the works of charity . . . is by no means capable of it . . .

4683. When there is no longer any charity, faith . . . is said to be saying without works; and then works are no longer called works of charity, but works of faith, and are named the fruits of faith.

4730². He confirms himself against charity by thinking . . . that if he does the works of charity or of piety, he cannot but place merit in them. . . He (then) confirms himself still more, until he believes that the works of charity are not necessary to salvation.

— The reason (faith alone) has not been everywhere recognized . . . is that the prelates cannot gain anything . . . except by the preaching of works.

4754. Those in simple good acknowledge that . . . the works of charity are necessary to salvation.

4766. That there is no Church where . . . charity is not (recognized) as an essential of the Church, and consequently the works of charity. —⁴, Ex.

4783². From these words (in John iii. 16) it is concluded that faith alone without works is what gives eternal life . . . and then they no longer attend to what the Lord so often said concerning . . . charity and works.

—⁵. They who are in faith separate cannot believe otherwise than that the works of charity consist solely in giving to the poor . . . when yet the works of charity consist in doing what is just and right, each in his own employment, from the love of what is just and right, and of what is good and true.

5004. 'He went into the house to do his work' (Gen. xxxix. 11) = when He was in the work of conjunction with spiritual good in the Natural.

5084³. It is a fallacy of sense that good works merit reward; and that to do good to anyone for the sake of self is a good work.

5128⁴. For the life of works is from the will, and . . . from the intention or end. Such, therefore, as is the intention or end . . . in the works, such is the life; for . . . works without interior life are mere motions.

5132. Therefore the exercises of charity are described in the Word by works of mercy. Ill.

5148. 'The work of the baker' (Gen. xl. 17) = according to every use of the Sensuous.

— That 'work' = use, is because it is predicated of the Voluntary . . . [for] whatever is done by this, and can be called a work, must be a use. All the works of charity are nothing else; for they are works from the will, which are uses.

5351³. They do indeed call charity and its works the fruits of faith; but who believes that fruits do anything for salvation, when it is believed that man may be saved by faith at the last hour . . . and when by doctrine they separate works . . . from faith, saying that faith alone saves without good works, or that works—which are of life—contribute nothing to salvation?

5608³. End, cause, and effect (are as) love to the Lord, charity towards the neighbour, and the works of charity. When these three become a one . . . the first must be in the second, and the second in the third. As in the works of charity—unless charity . . . is interiorly in them, they are not works of charity. . . So (also) unless there is innocence (in the charity) they are not works of charity.

5622. 'Fruits' = works; the fruits of useful trees, good works; or, what is the same, goods of life; for goods of life, as to use, are good works.

6024⁴. The good of faith, the derivative works, and their doctrinals. Sig.

6048. 'What are your works?' (Gen. xli. 33) = to know your goods; for 'works' = goods, because they are from the will.

6073. 'What are your works?' (Gen. xlvii. 3) = concerning offices and uses; for 'works' = goods . . . All goods that are called goods of charity are nothing but uses, and uses are nothing but works done for—erga—the neighbour, our country, the Church, and the Lord's Kingdom. Moreover, charity itself . . . does not become, in itself, charity, until it comes into act, and becomes work. Ex. . . But then, within the deed or work itself, are contained all things of charity towards (the neighbour); for works are the complex of all the things of charity and faith in the man; and are what are called spiritual goods, and they become goods by exercise, that is, by uses.

—². The Angels . . . long . . . to perform uses . . . and they enjoy bliss and happiness according to the uses; as the Lord teaches in . . . 'The Son of Man . . . shall render to everyone according to his works' (Matt. xvi. 27). 'Works,' here, do not mean works as they appear in the external form, but as in the internal form, that is, according to the quality of the charity they have in them. The Angels see works no otherwise.

—³. As works are the complex of all the things of charity and faith in the man . . . the Lord loved John more than the other disciples . . . for by him were represented the goods, or works, of charity.

— By (these words) it was foretold that faith would despise works; but that still they are with the Lord . . .

6353. That doctrinal things serve to destroy the works of charity; thus charity itself. Sig. and Ex.

6377⁷. 'He poured in oil and wine' = that he performed the works of love and charity.

6388. 'Issachar' = recompense from works. Ex. 6390².

6390. 'Lying between the burdens' = life among works. . . That 'burdens' = such works, is because they do not do goods from the affection of love towards the neighbour, but from the affection of love towards self; for the works that flow from (this) are like the burdens which the viler asses carry; for they are among the lowest services. Ex. —^c.

6391. That works of good without recompense are full of happiness. Sig. and Ex. 6392². Ex.

6392². Hence many reject good works, believing that they are not possible without the end of meriting . . .

for they are not aware that they who are led by the Lord, desire nothing more than to do good works, and think of nothing less than of merit by them . . .

[A.] 6393³. They who want a reward for the works they perform . . . are never content, but are indignant if they have not a greater reward than others . . . and make bliss to consist in . . . being eminent, etc.

6394. To 'be a servant unto tribute'=those who want to merit by works. III.

6404. 'Gad'=works from truth and not yet from good.

—². 'Gad,' here = those who hallucinate about truth, and yet do works from it, thus works not of truth, still less works of good. By works from this source they are driven away from truth; for as soon as (such a one) carries out anything into act from a religious principle, he afterwards defends it . . . Examp.

—³. By 'Gad' are also signified those who place everything of salvation in works only, like the Pharisee . . . Such are in the Lord's Kingdom, but at the threshold. Sig.

— . Hence their works are such as are their (erroneous) truths; for works are nothing but the will and understanding in act. What saves them is the intention to do good . . . —⁴, III.

6406. They who do works from truth and not yet from good, cannot but induce a want of order on their Natural; for works affect the Natural; and consequently they cannot but in the same proportion close interior things against themselves. Ex.

—^e. However, works are most necessary, for they are charity and faith in effect and life. Who cannot see that without them there is no charity? Works are nothing else than good and truth itself in an external form; for when the good that is of the will, and the truth that is of the understanding, are put forth into act, they are called works; from which it is evident that such as is the good and truth, such are the works.

6587². The external of the Church is to perform rituals holily, and to do the works of charity, according to the precepts of the Church.

6628. (Instruction) was one of their works of charity.

7104. 'Why do ye . . . withdraw the people from their works?' (Ex.v.4)=that (they) shall not exempt them from grievous things. . . For the works were labours, and also burdens . . . thus grievous things from combats.

7133. 'Fulfil your works' (ver.13)=that they should serve falsities so called; for . . . the making of bricks . . . were the works.

7272³. He who believes . . . that the works of charity contribute nothing to salvation . . . and from this principle lives without charity . . . This is an evil of falsity.

7318. Truth is falsified when it is said that all the good man does regards himself, and is done for the sake of recompense, and therefore the works of charity should not be done.

7430^e. 'The work of his hands' (Is.xvii.8)=such things as are from proprium.

8121. Charity . . . is to do right in every work . . .

8708. 'The work that they shall do' (Ex.xviii.20)=faith in act; for 'the work that they shall do'=action; here, action from the light of intelligence, thus from faith . . . It is this reception (of the truths of faith) that is meant by 'the work that they shall do.'

8888. 'Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work' (Ex.xx.9)=the combat that precedes and prepares for this marriage. . . For 'to labour,' and 'do one's work'=to do the things that are necessary for life; here, for the spiritual life. T.301.

8890. 'Thou shalt not do any work . . .' (ver.10)=that then Heaven and bliss appertain to each and all things in man's internal and external; for 'not to do any work'=rest and peace, thus Heaven; for when a man is in Heaven, he is free from all solicitude, unrest, and anxiety . . .

9278. 'Six days shalt thou do thy works' (Ex.xxiii.12)=a state of labour and combat while in external delights that are to be conjoined with internal things.

— . By the works of the six days, and the rest on the seventh, are signified those things which come forth with a man in his first and second states during regeneration . . .

—³. When man is in externals, he is in labour and combat . . . which are signified by the six days of the week in which works shall be done. But when he is in internals . . . the labour and combat cease . . .

9296. 'When thou gatherest in thy works out of the field' (ver.16)=the enjoyment and use of all things that have been implanted in good; for 'works' mean not only those of the field, but also those of the vineyard and oliveyard . . .

9319. 'Thou shalt not do according to their works' (ver.24)=that evils of life are not to be followed after.

9598. 'The work of the designer' (Ex.xxvi.1)=the Intellectual.

9642⁸. 'The tribe of Gad'=works from these truths.

9824³. This is why it is said that man is to be judged according to his deeds, or works, which=that he is to be judged according to his thought and will ; for these are in his deeds as the soul is in its body. H.358², Refs. 471. Fully ill.

9915. 'The work of the weaver' (Ex.xxviii.32)=from the Celestial . . . for 'work'=that which is done or comes forth, thus that which is from something else.

9976. Therefore they who place merit in works, love themselves ; and they who love themselves despise the neighbour . . .

9977. (Thus) their works are not from heavenly love, nor from true faith . . . Such cannot receive Heaven in themselves.

10143³. When man is such, then in every work that he does there is Divine worship . . .

10230. 'The work of the Tent of meeting' (Ex.xxx.16)=that which operates and makes Heaven.

10265. 'The work of the dealer in ointment' (ver.25) = from the influx and operation of the Divine itself . . . 'Work'=its operation.

10331. 'In wisdom, and in intelligence, and in knowledge, and in every work' (Ex.xxxi.3)=as to the things that are of the will and of the understanding in the internal and the external man. . . 'Work'=the things of the will and the derivative effect, in the external man.

—². 'Work' is that which is effected from the foregoing ; thus 'work' is their effect in which they conjoin themselves together ; and therefore no one can be called wise, intelligent, or knowing . . . who does not do. Ex.

—³. With those who are in love to the Lord, wisdom, intelligence, knowledge, and work follow together in order from the inmost to the ultimate . . . Work is to do well from willing well, and is of the external man. Thus, wisdom must be in intelligence, this in knowledge, and this in work. Thus work includes and concludes all the interior things ; for it is the ultimate in which they cease.

—⁴. From this it is evident what is meant by 'works,' and 'deeds,' which are so frequently mentioned in the Word. Ill.

—⁵. 'Works,' here, mean all things that are in man, because all things of man that are in his willing and understanding are in his works ; for the man does these from those ; from them the works have their life ; for the works without them are like shells without a kernel, or a body without a soul. That which proceeds from a man proceeds from his interiors, and hence the works are the manifestations of them, and are the effects by which they appear.

—⁶. It is a general law, that such as is a man, such is all his work ; and hence it is that by the works according to which there will be reward and recompense, is meant the quality of the man as to love and as to faith . . .

—⁷. Besides, the very willing of a man is nothing but work, because that which anyone wills, he does . . .

10364. 'Everyone that does work on that day' (ver.

14)=who turns himself from heavenly to corporeal and worldly loves. 10362², Ex.

10366. 'Six days shall work be done' (ver.15)=the state that precedes and prepares for the heavenly marriage.

10406¹¹. 'The work of the hands' (Jer.x.3)=that which is from the proprium of man, thus that which is from his Own proper understanding, and . . . will . . .

10453. 'The tables were the work of God' (Ex.xxxii.16)=(what is) from the Divine.

10635. 'To see the work of Jehovah' (Ex.xxxiv.10)=to acknowledge the Divine in it.

10729. 'Six days shall work be done' (Ex.xxxv.2)=the first state of man's regeneration by the Lord ; and, in the supreme sense, of the glorification of the Lord's Human.

10731. 'Everyone that doeth work in (the seventh day) shall die' (id.)=spiritual death for those who are led by themselves and their own loves, and not by the Lord.

H. 393³. In Heaven, there are so many offices and administrations, and also so many works, that they cannot be ennum. In the world there are relatively few. All are in the delight of their work and labour from the love of use . . .

394. In Heaven, everyone is in his work according to correspondence ; but the correspondence is not with the work, but with the use of each work . . . He who is in a function or work that corresponds to his use, is in a state of life exactly similar to that in which he was (here) . . . with this difference, that he is in more interior delight . . .

472. (What is meant by the 'deeds' and 'works' according to which man will be judged and rewarded. Fully quoted under Do.)

473. As deeds, or works, are of the will and thought, so they are of the love and faith ; consequently, are such as are the love and faith.

474. But . . . the will makes the man, and the thought only in so far as it proceeds from the will ; and the deeds, or works, proceed from both . . .

—e. (Thus) a deed, or work, without love . . . is a deed or work of death . . .

475. In the deeds, or works, the whole man is presented ; and his will and thought, or love and faith, which are the interiors of the man, are not complete, until they are in deeds or works, which are the exteriors of the man : for these are the ultimates in which the former things are terminated, and without terminations they are as it were unbounded things, which as yet do not come forth into existence. (Fully ex. under Do.)

—². The love and will is the very soul of the deed, or work . . .

—e. In a word, all things of a man and his spirit are in his deeds, or works.

483. Love in act is what remains . . . Love in act is work and deed.

484. All works and deeds are of moral and civil life, and therefore have regard to what is sincere and right, and also to what is just and fair . . . The works and deeds of moral and civil life are heavenly if they are done from heavenly love . . . But the deeds and works of moral and civil life are infernal if they are done from infernal love . . .

J. 13. That every Divine work has regard to infinity and eternity. Ex.

— . There is everywhere a certain image of the Infinite, to the end that all things may be regarded by the Divine as His own work; and at the same time, that all things, as His work, may have regard to the Divine.

S. 27. In every Divine work there is a first, a middle, and an ultimate . . .

28°. (Thus) every Divine work is complete and perfect in the ultimate.

81°. For in every Divine work there is good conjoined with truth, and truth conjoined with good.

Life. 2°. That works are what make the man of the Church; and that he is saved according to them. Ill.

30°. Unless man shuns evils . . . none of his works are good. Ill.

72. When a man is in . . . the good of love towards the neighbour, whatever he does is of this love, and consequently is a good work. A priest, who is in this good, whenever he teaches and leads, does a good work. (So with a magistrate, a merchant, and a workman.)

—°. (But) he who does not regard as sins the kinds of murder . . . whether he be priest, magistrate, merchant, or workman, whatever he does is not a good work, because all his work partakes of the evil that is within him . . .

105. As this reciprocal . . . and the derivative mutuality, is in a man from the Lord, man must render an account of his works, and be recompensed according to them. Ill.

W. 36. There is a union of love and wisdom in every Divine work; from this is its perpetuity, nay, its eternity . . .

214. In a series of like degrees are charity, faith, and good work; for charity is of affection, faith of thought, and good work of action.

—°. So all things of faith and charity are in good work.

215. The ultimate of each series, which are use, action, work, and exercise, is the complex and containing of all the prior things. Ex.

—°. Hence it is that from the deeds, or works, of a man, others judge of the thought of his will . . . From a mere deed, or work, of a man, the Angels see and perceive everything of the will and thought of the doer. . . . This is why 'works' and 'deeds' are so frequently commanded in the Word, and it is said that a man is Known from them.

216. Unless the will and understanding . . . clothe themselves with works, or deeds, whenever possible, they are . . . phantoms . . . The reason is that the ultimate is the complex, containant, and basis of the prior things. Such an airy nothing . . . is faith separated from good works; and such also are faith and charity without their exercises; with the sole difference, that they who maintain faith and charity, know and can will good works . . .

220°. (It follows) that everything of charity and of faith is in works; and that without works charity and faith are like rainbows round the sun, that vanish . . . and this is why 'works' are so frequently mentioned in the Word, and it is said . . . that the salvation of man depends on them . . .

—°. But it is to be known that by works are here meant uses which are actually done . . .

253°. (Thus) the end is the all of the cause, and the effect is the all of the end through the cause. The end is charity, or good; the cause is faith, or truth; and the effects are good works, or uses. From this it is evident that no more of charity can be carried into works than in so far as charity has been conjoined with truths that are called of faith. Through these, charity enters into works, and qualifies them.

277. That all things of the three degrees of the natural mind are included in the works that are done by the acts of the body. Gen.art.

279°. The quality of a man is perceived from a single work. Ex. . . In a word, every act, or work, of a spiritual man, before the Angels is like a fruit that is palatable, useful, and beautiful . . .

307°. Thereby conjoin the Creator with His great work.

316°. There is a like progression . . . of charity, through faith, into works . . .

431. In Heaven, to do uses is to act sincerely, rightly, justly, and faithfully in the work that is of one's office: this they call charity . . . and they say that when anyone does the work of his office (in this way) the community subsists and persists in its good; and this is to be in the Lord . . .

P. 115. That 'man is justified by faith without the works of the law' (Rom.iii.28) (refers to) the rituals described by Moses . . . and not to the commandments . . . and therefore Paul explains his meaning by saying, 'Do we then make the law of none effect through faith? God forbid; nay, we establish the law' (ver.31). (Fully ex. in R.417°. —³.) T.288°, Ex. 338°.

— . Those who have confirmed themselves in faith separate . . . do not see where Paul enumerates the laws of faith, that they are the very works of charity themselves; and therefore what faith is without its laws they do not see where he enumerates evil works, and says, that those who do them cannot enter Heaven.

258°. Still, the goods of charity, which are good works, are everywhere taught, (which) is of the Divine Providence, lest the common people should be seduced by (faith alone).

—°. Luther thought that if he did not reject works, no separation from the Catholic religion could be effected.

318°. When they were asked whether they saw the many things in the Word about love and charity, works and deeds . . . they said that while reading those things they did not see but that they were faith, and so passed them by as with their eyes shut. R.456².

326². Good [works] enum. They are not good unless the man shuns evils as sins. Ex.

R. Pref. IIIa. The doctrine of the Reformed concerning good works. Fully stated.

76. 'I know thy works' (Rev.ii.2)=that He sees all man's interiors and exteriors together. (=the things that are of the will and love. E.98. Ex. and Ill.) R.94. 109.etc. E.107. 116,etc.

— Ten men may do works that appear alike in externals, but yet are unlike with them all, because they proceed from a different end, and from a different cause; and the end and the cause make the works to be either good or evil; for every work is a work of the mind; and therefore such as the mind is, such is the work. If the mind is charity, the work becomes charity; but if the mind is not charity, the work does not become charity; and yet both may appear alike in externals. Works appear to men in their external form, but to the Angels in their internal form, and to the Lord such as they are from inmosts to outermosts. (Shown by a comparison with fruit.) Such are all works, the inward quality of which the Lord alone sees, and the Angels also perceive from Him, when the man is doing them. 641.

84. 'Repent, and do the first works' (ver.5)=that they should invert the state of their life. . . He who is being regenerated, after he has imbued truths, regards the goods of life in the first place. . . (=that the good of life of the Church at its beginning may come into mind. E.105.)

86. 'Thou hatest the works of the Nicolaitans which I also hate' (ver.6)=that they do not want works to be meritorious, because this is contrary to the merit and righteousness of the Lord. (=aversion from the Divine for those who separate good from truth, or charity from faith, from which there is no life. E.107.)

107. 'The Church in Pergamos'=those who make everything of the Church to consist in good works, and not anything in the truths of doctrine.

— There are two kinds of men of whom the Christian Church at this day for the most part consists; one . . . who are in works only, and in no truths; the other, who are in worship only, and not in works or truths. The former are here treated of; the latter, in the things written to the Church in Sardis. They who are in works alone . . . are like those who do without understanding, and deeds without understanding are inanimate, and appear before the Angels like images carved out of wood; and they who have placed merit in works, like these images naked. They also appear like sheep without wool; and they who place merit in works, like the same sheep covered over with dung. For all works are done from the will through the understanding; and they receive life, and at the same time clothing, in the understanding. This is why they appear before the Angels as things lifeless and naked.

110². By those 'in darkness . . . whose eyes the Lord will open,' are meant the gentiles, who have been in good works, but not in any truths . . . Quite similar to them are those in the Christian world who are in works alone . . . on which account they cannot be called anything but gentiles . . .

—³. In the Spiritual World, satanic Spirits have power through those who are in works alone . . . If one of these Spirits says, I am thy neighbour . . . they give him aid . . . Sig.

114. That among them are those who do hypocritical works . . . Sig. and Ex.

115. That among them are also those who make works meritorious. Sig. and Ex.

120. The appropriation of the good of celestial love in their works, and thus the conjunction of the Lord with those who work. Sig. and Ex.

124. 'The Church in Thyatira'=those who are in faith from charity, and thence in good works; and also those who are in faith separated from charity, and thence in evil works.

130. By 'the last works being more than the first,' are meant all things of their charity and faith; for these are the interior things from which are the works. (=the external things that are therefrom. E.157.) See also E.157⁴.

141. 'I will give to everyone according to his works' (ver.23)=that He gives to each one according to the charity and its faith that are in his works; (for) works are the containants of charity and faith . . . (=eternal bliss according to one's internal in his external. E.168.)

146. 'He that . . . keepeth My works unto the end' (ver.26)=those who are in charity and faith actually, and remain in them until the end of life. (=perseverance in love and faith . . . even unto death. E.174.)

153⁵. Those who, in doctrine and life, have . . . rejected from the means of salvation the goods of charity, which are good works, are led . . . into the evil Societies . . . T.281.

—⁷. They enter the huts, and some work is there given them to do; and, as they do it, so they receive food.

—⁸. After some time, they are disgusted with work . . . and if they are priests, they want to build. Des.

—⁹. Certain say to them, Why sit ye idle? come with us into our houses, and we will give you work to do, and will feed you. Then . . . to each one is given his work; and food is given for the work. But, as all who have confirmed themselves in falsities of faith cannot do works of good use, but of evil use; and not these faithfully, but only so as to appear, for the sake of honour, or gain, they leave their work . . . and are then cast out as useless.

—¹⁰. The overseer of the cavern says to them . . . behold your companions, they all labour; and, as they labour, food is given them from Heaven. . . And their companions say, Our overseer knows what work each one is fitted for, and allots it daily to everyone. On the day in which you finish it, food is given; and if not, food is not given, nor clothing. . . After his work, everyone is permitted to walk about, to converse, and afterwards to sleep. . . Of such caverns, which are nothing but eternal workhouses, the universal Hell consists. 531⁴.

[R.] 160. 'I have not found thy works full before God' (Rev.iii.2)=that the interior things of their worship have not been conjoined with the Lord. Ex. (=that otherwise the Divine is not in the moral life. E.189.)

417¹. They concluded that faith alone produces the goods of charity, which are called good works, as a tree produces fruit. (This idea refuted.)

—⁶. They think that every good of charity, which is called a good work, that is done by man for the sake of salvation, is . . . evil, because the man wants to save himself by a work done by himself . . . and that it is so with every good work in which a man is sensible of his own will. Therefore, among themselves, they call the good works done by man . . . cursed; and say that they merit Hell rather than Heaven.

—⁷. But . . . do they not preach . . . charity and its works, which they call the works of faith? (But) they think of moral charity only, and its civil and political goods . . . And therefore they unanimously declare that no one is saved by any works, but by faith alone. (Their idea ill. by comparisons.) 421².

—⁸. Their goods of charity, or works (are supposed to be) invisible, being done within the man by the Holy Spirit, and of which he knows nothing. Further ex.

—⁹. (How we can do good works without their being from ourselves.)

457. 'Yet repented not of the works of their hands' (Rev.ix.20)=that neither did they shun as sins their Own things, which are evils of every kind. E.585.

463³. (The solididian clergy) speak from the Word about love, charity, good works . . . and quote almost all things therein on these subjects. But . . . they understand inwardly that all these things are not to be done for the sake of God, Heaven, and salvation; but only for the public and private good.

541². They assert that whatever proceeds from man's will and judgment is not good; and therefore that the goods of charity, or good works . . . contribute nothing to salvation. (Refuted.)

—³. They have broken this sole bond of conjunction (of man with the Lord), by asserting that the goods of charity, or good works, which proceed from man and his will, are nothing but the moral, civil, and political works, by which man has conjunction with the world . . .

571². Who cannot see that no one can love the neighbour unless he lives according to the works of the law? . . . (Thus) it is blasphemy to exclude the works of this law from Salvation . . .

641. 'Their works follow with them' (Rev.xiv.13)=as they have loved and believed and thence have done and spoken. By 'the works that follow with them' are signified all the things that remain with a man after death. . . The externals and internals, taken together, are the works; good works, if the internals are in love and faith; but evil works, if the internals are not in love and faith, and the externals act and speak from them.

If the externals act and speak as if from love and faith, the works are either hypocritical or meritorious. (=that such have spiritual life, which is the life of the Angels of Heaven. E.901.)

—³. Like things are signified by 'works,' in the following passages. Ill.

649. The Lord's operation . . . into the works of charity and faith, of the men (in the Christian world). Sig.

651. 'He cast it into the great winepress of the anger of God'=exploration of the quality of their works—that they were evil.

663. 'Great and marvellous are Thy works . . .' (Rev.xv.3)=that all things of the world, of Heaven, and of the Church, have been created and made by the Lord, from His Divine love, by His Divine wisdom. (=that all the goods of Heaven and the Church are from Him. E.93S.)

675⁶. The subtleties and artifices (of the solididians) to set aside good works, which are the goods of charity. (Exposed.)

698. 'They repented not of their works' (Rev.xvi.11) =that although instructed from the Word, they do not recede from falsities of faith and the consequent evil of life. (=that they were not willing to live according to the Lord's commandments. . . 'Their works'=evils from falsities. E.993.)

716⁶. Through that hierarchy, the above-named Works for the New Jerusalem, though published in London, and sent them as a gift, have been so basely rejected . . .

758. Among the dogmas (of the Babylonians) is this wicked one: that the works which are done according to their doctrinals constitute merit . . .

793. For every work of man corresponds . . . provided it is of any use, to such things as are of angelic intelligence. Enum.

868. 'The dead were judged from the things written in the books, according to their works' (Rev.xx.12)=that all have been judged according to their internal life in the externals. S71.

— There are works of the mind, and works of the body; both of them internal and at the same time external. The works of the mind are the intentions and endeavours; and the works of the body are the speech and acts; and the latter and the former proceed from the man's internal life . . . Whatever does not cease in works, either in internal works of the mind, or in external works of the body, is not in the man's life . . .

875⁷. (So) charity and faith without works are not anything; but they become something in works, according to the quality of the use of the works.

926. I saw . . . bishops who taught . . . that works are good, but not for salvation; but that still they are to be taught from the Word, in order that the laity . . . may be kept more strictly in the bonds of obedience to the magistrates; and, as from religion . . . may be compelled to exercise moral charity.

949. 'I come quickly, and My reward is with Me, to render to everyone as his work shall be' (Rev.xxii.12)

=that the Lord will certainly come, and that He is Heaven and the happiness of eternal life to everyone, according to his faith in Him, and his life according to His commandments. . . For by 'good works' are signified charity and faith in internals, and their effects at the same time in externals.

M. 5⁴. The Angels (have these social gatherings) after they have done the uses in their functions, and in their works.

9⁴. The Glorification of God means to bring forth the fruits of love, that is, to do the work of one's function faithfully, sincerely, and diligently; for this is of the love of God, and of the love of the neighbour; and this is the bond of society, and its good.

10⁷. As (good work) is the containant of (charity and faith,) the state of heavenly life is from the conjunction of these in (good work). Ex.

11^e. Until noon, all (in that Society of Heaven) are engaged in their offices and in their works.

207⁶. (For the wonderful works that are done in a spiritual manner by the artificers in Heaven, see WORK —opera, here.)

—^e. The maidens then sang an ode, in which they expressed . . . the affection of the works of use . . .

267³. It is granted to (such, in the Spiritual World) to apply their minds to some study, or work, by which they are kept in externals, and thus in a state of intelligence.

524³. 'The works' according to which it is rendered to everyone, are the life, because the life does them, and they are according to the life.

79². Precious sayings about good works, etc. are the exteriors of the doctrine of faith alone for the sake of the laity.

84². When charity is thus removed, good works, which are of charity . . . become so obliterated that they no longer come into remembrance. It is a general rule of religion, that in proportion as anyone does not will goods and consequently does not do them, in the same proportion he wills evils and consequently does them; and the converse. (Shown from the parable of the sheep and the goats.)

I. 17. This is why it is said . . . that 'everyone is to be judged according to his works'; for the end, or the love of the will; and the cause, or the reason of the understanding, are simultaneously present in the effects, which are the works of his body. 317. Workmen transgress the seventh commandment who do their works unfaithfully and dishonestly.

373. That charity and faith are together in good works. Gen.art.

— . In every work that proceeds from man, there is the whole man such as he is as to the mind—animam, or such as he is essentially . . . If we look upon works thus, they are as mirrors of the man. Ex. . . But that he is such in all his work, is not manifest in his external man . . . Ill.

—². That . . . every work which proceeds from a man is good, when the Lord, charity, and faith reside in his internal man. Fully ex.

374. That . . . good works are to do well from willing well. Ex.

— . Charity and works are distinct from each other as are will and action . . . and are like cause and effect . . . 420, Ex. 421.

—². (Thus) works are essentially of the will, formally of the understanding, and actually of the body. Ill. by comparisons.

—^e. Finally, there is a determination to uses, according to the doctrinal things . . . which is effected by acts of the body, which are called good works. Thus the end, through the mediate causes, produces the effects, which are essentially of the end, formally of the doctrinal things of the Church, and actually of uses.

375. That charity and faith are only mental and perishable things, unless, when possible, they are determined to and coexist in works. Ex. and Ill. 376, Fully ill.

376². (Thus) charity and faith are not charity and faith until they are in works. Des.

[T.] 377. That charity alone does not produce good works, still less faith alone; but charity and faith together. Ex.

— (Thus) when a man does good works according to truths, he does them in light; that is, intelligently and wisely.

392. On Good Works. Chapter.

403². All the works a man does with the body are done according to the state of his mind in his head; and if the mind is in the love of uses, the body . . . effects them. Ex.

421. Therefore, if the works proceed from the spiritual mind, they proceed from its good will, which is charity; but if from the natural mind, they proceed from a good will which is not charity, although it may appear like charity in the external form. Ex.

422. That charity itself is to act justly and faithfully in the office, business, and work in which anyone is . . . Gen.art.

423². (These) place no merit in their works, because they do not think of merit, but of duty . . .

423². They who make charity itself to consist in these benefactions, cannot but place merit in these works . . . After death, they enumerate their works, and demand salvation as a reward. But inquiry is then made as to the origin of the works, and thus as to their quality; and if it is found that they have proceeded from pride, a hunt for fame, from bare munificence, friendship, merely natural inclination, or hypocrisy, they are judged accordingly; for the quality of the origin is in the works.

—^e. But genuine charity proceeds from those who have imbued it from the justice and judgment in the works which they do without the end of recompense . . .

426. Some who have performed these beneficent acts . . . believe that they have practised the works of charity; and they regard them as many in popedom do indulgences . . . and yet do not regard as sins adultery, hatred, revenge, etc. What in this case are those good works but pictures of Angels in the company of devils . . . It is quite different if these benefactions are done by those who shun these evils as hateful to charity.

439. That in the exercises of charity a man does not place merit in works while he believes that all good is from the Lord. Gen.art.

— It is hurtful to place merit in the works that are done for the sake of salvation; for evils lie hidden in it of which the doer knows nothing. Enum.

440. But to think that men come into Heaven, and that good is to be done for the sake of this, is not to . . . place merit in works. Ex.

441. Very different is the case with those who in their works regard the reward as the end itself. Ex.

442. (Thus) . . . such as are the faith and charity together, such are the works.

457. They who are in the mere worship of God, and not at the same time in good works from charity. Des.

506^e. The conjunction of faith and good works . . . could not be found, because it has been impossible, on account of there not being faith in the Lord . . .

535. That . . . this repentance is performed by those who do the works of charity from religion. Gen.art.

D. 1194. (Such) good works are external. . . Good works are more interior when . . .

2474. Faith and works are like soul and body . . .

3979. On good works. Ex.

— Those came who had confirmed themselves in the belief that faith saves without good works. (They were tied up by the lower good Spirits, because the persuasion that good works are of no account caused a sphere so general that the other Spirits seemed to themselves to disappear, or to be diffused into the atmosphere . . .) Such was the sphere when good works were snatched away from them. Ex. . . Such a sphere is sad, because there is nothing determinate. 3980. 3982.

3983. Some good Spirits, who had the idea that faith is possible without good works, said that it would be better to call them the goods of charity, although [the term] good works is applicable; and that works which are devoid of faith are works simply.

3984. They now add, that if any should want to snatch away works, they must want the whole Heaven and human race to perish . . . for to serve man, teach Spirits, resuscitate them . . . and perform the works of charity to each other, are what hold Heaven and the human race together . . .

4021. On faith and good works. Ex.

4022. They who are in faith without . . . good works, are in no Knowledge . . . Much better are those who do good works from a conscience received from the fact that the Lord has commanded us to give to the poor, and do good; for those who act from a conscience thus originated do not place merit in works, and are admitted into Heaven; whereas those who confirm themselves in the belief that faith saves without good works cannot be admitted into Heaven, because they do not know what love is . . .

4561. One who did his work with avidity . . . but (was in merely natural good). Des.

6041. Luther replied that if he had received works, he would not have removed far from the Papists. . . Calvin remained in faith with good works; but Luther in faith alone, believing that faith produces them as a tree does fruit, and said that there is a conjunction, but he had not thought it out . . . He wrote to Calvin that he could not confirm works, because they are from man . . .

6044. They were industrious in their works.

6075. On good works with merit, and without merit.

6087. She is in some spiritual work that corresponds to knitting.

6088³. Food is given everyone (there) according to the work he performs . . .

—^e. The works of those in Hell have correspondences with the Heavens, but not the infernals themselves.

6094. In the touch of the hand there is the affection with the thought . . . and this is why, in the Spiritual World, they are in works, because the thought is determined vividly by the hand into the works.

6098. On an English bishop (who) said that in England they would receive the first work on the Lord . . . and also the second work on the holiness of the Word, and the third on the doctrine of Life; but would utterly reject the fourth on Faith . . . and he at last confessed that unless the fourth work was received, the other three would fall to the ground.

6101². That bishop told how he had nullified the five works on Heaven and Hell and the other four, which had been presented to all [the bishops], and to all the Protestant peers. 6098².

—². When he was told that it is not my work, but the Lord's . . . he was not ashamed . . .

6105². One is a part in the general body from the fact that he does his work faithfully and justly . . . for everyone in a society must be in some work. Works make the communion, and cause all things to be held together in connection; for works contain in themselves all things of men. Therefore they must be in works even in Hell.

D. Min. 4639. Good works are especially to administer justice . . . So in every employment.

E. 98. 'Works' = the things of the will and love. —², Ex. 116, Ex. 154.

—³. 'Works' = all things of the Church in general, (thus) love and faith. . . For every work . . . is not done from the body, but through the body from the will and thought . . . This is why 'works' = these, and not the things that appear in the external form.

—⁴. Hence it is said that 'man shall be judged,' and that it 'shall be rendered to him,' 'according to his works.' Ill.

—⁵. Why 'works' are so frequently mentioned.

154^e. The internal of the Celestial Church is meant by 'works.'

157. 'Works' = external things in which are internal things; for works are the ultimate effects in which the internal things present themselves together, and in a series; there they form their ultimate and fulness.

167³. 'The fruits of his works' (Jer.xvii.10) = the goods that are of love.

174. 'Works' = the things that are of the love and the faith in the cause and in the effect, that is, in internals and in externals.

185. 'Works' = the things that are of man's life, both good and evil. (For) works are the effects of life . . . If the life is good, the works are good; but if the life is evil, the works are evil. The life that is in the works is the intention that is of the will and the derivative thought . . . Without this life in works, they would be only motions like those of an automaton. . . This is why the wise do not look to the works, but to that life in the works, namely, the intention . . . The Angels do not see a man's works; but only the intentions of his mind . . . (Thus) 'works,' in the spiritual sense, mean the life; and, as the life of man is various, and depends principally on his love, therefore his love is principally signified by 'works.' This is why it is said to the Angel of each Church . . . 'I know thy works,' by which is meant that the Lord knows the whole life of man, and its quality as to love. 207.

237⁷. Such call 'works' the fruits of faith . . .

250⁶. The Athanasian Creed (says) At whose coming all men shall give account for their own works . . . (Fully proved from the Word.)

288⁶. 'The works of Jehovah' (Ps.cxi.2) = all things that proceed from and are done by Him . . .

323³. 'All His work is done in Truth' (Ps.xxxiii.4) = the good of truth.

324²². 'The works of their own hands' (Jer.i.16) = the things that are from man's Own intelligence.

355²⁹. 'The work of the hands' (Hos.xiv.3) = the proprium itself.

376¹⁹. 'Works,' by which uses are effected, = the Knowledges of good.

—³⁷. 'The work of Jehovah' (Is.v.12) is said of the goods of life; and 'the deed of His hands,' of the truths of doctrine, both from the Word.

405²¹. 'The fruit of Thy works' (Ps.civ.13) = the Divine operation.

412³². 'Works' (Is.iii.8) = affection, because man does that which is of his affection. (=life. 433²³.)

444. 'Of the tribe of Levi were sealed 12000' = good works. Ex.

—⁴. As the tribe of Levi = charity in act, thus the goods of charity, which are good works (his rod . . . blossomed with almonds). Ex.

458⁸. 'The work of the hands of the workman with the axe' (Jer.x.3) = what is from proprium and Own intelligence. 587⁶. 1145⁶.

514¹². 'That do work in many waters' (Ps.cvii.23) = who intensely study truth from the Word. 'These see the works of Jehovah' = that they understand . . . all things of the Word that perfect man.

585⁴. That 'the works of the hands' = such things as a man thinks, wills, and does, from proprium. Ill.

—¹². But where 'the works of the hands' are attributed to . . . the Lord, they = the reformed or regenerated man, and also the Church; and, in special, the doctrine of truth and good of the Church. Ill.

695³. That they will receive Heaven according to their love and affection of good and truth from the Lord, is meant by, 'the wages of His work are before Him'; and by 'He will give to every one as his work shall be.' By 'the work' for which Heaven is given as a reward, no other is meant than work from the love or affection of good and truth; for all the work from which is Heaven must be from this source in a man; for work derives its all from the love or affection . . .

778³. Those who exclude the works of charity . . . blaspheme the Holy Spirit . . . They have put . . . evil works in place of good works, because their works are done from earthly love . . .

785. The disagreement of their doctrinals with the Word, in which . . . 'works' . . . are so often mentioned. Sig. and Ex.

[E. 785]². They separate the life of love, which is good works, from faith . . .

—³. Passages in which 'deeds,' 'works,' 'doing,' and 'working' are mentioned. Fully ill. and ex.

786. The disagreement apparently removed by devised conjunctions of works with faith. Sig. and Ex. 787⁴, Ex.

—^c. A person seen who had excogitated hundreds of modes of conjoining (faith and works) . . . but the more interiorly he thought upon the subject, the more he separated faith from good works.

787⁵. The less learned . . . think that faith produces good works, which they call the fruits of faith . . .

794². The goods of the Word . . . are destroyed especially by the teaching that faith without good works justifies . . .

—, But such do not know what good works are. For there are works done by man, and these are not good; and there are works done by the Lord through man, and these are good. Yet both appear the same . . . The works enumerated by the Pharisee were works done by himself, and were therefore meritorious; and so there are works done by servants by command, who are called useless.

—³. How works are done by man himself; and how they are done by the Lord in man. Ex. —⁴, Ex.

797³. They regard the goods of life, which are good works, as of no value . . .

—⁴. (Thus) those who regard good works—which are the goods of love, the goods of charity, and the goods of life, and which in Heaven are called uses—as of no account . . . close Heaven against themselves . . .

—⁵. —¹⁰, Ex.

—⁵. (For such) excuse evil works . . .

798. Such shut out love and charity, from which works become good . . .

—, When the passages where 'works,' etc. are mentioned are falsified, all things of the Word are falsified. Ex.

—⁴. For works are love and charity in act . . .

—, As those who confirm themselves, in doctrine and life . . . that faith produces good works as a tree does fruits, look from faith to good, they have conjunction with the natural Heaven . . . —⁵, Ex. —⁷.

—⁸.

802². It follows that by 'works,' and 'doing,' faith and to have faith are meant.

—⁴. Therefore just the same things must be said of faith as are said of works . . .

—⁵. All things that a man does before evils have been removed, although they are works of chastity, works of sincerity, works of charity, works of Truth and of justice, are still not good, because they are from man.

—, As all works, both those done by God, and those not done by God, cannot be performed except by man, or as by him, it is evident why 'works,' etc. are so frequently mentioned in the Word . . .

—⁷. (The falsity) that by 'works' . . . in the Word is meant faith. Ex.

803⁴. Although with such (as shun evils as sins) there is a like perception that their works are done as from self, yet they are all good, and, from the light of Heaven, appear like white snow and wool (Is. i. 12–18). These are the works that are meant in the Word by 'the works' that can by no means be separated from faith . . .

819². (Such) pay no attention to the passages in the Word where 'works,' etc. are mentioned . . . but wrest them . . . by saying that faith alone includes works. Ex.

822². As 'John' = good works . . . I will show what good works are . . . that they contain in them all things of charity and faith that are with the man. Fully ex.

825³. What is meant by good works. Good works are all things that a man does, writes, preaches, and speaks, not from self but from the Lord; and he does this when he lives according to the laws of his religion. Fully ex.

826². Good works. Def. 828², Further ex. 831⁵.

837³. By good works are meant each and all things that a man does after he has turned away from evils because they are sins against God. Ex.

—¹². So long as faith was conjoined with works . . . the Church was in truths . . .

—, But if man is saved by a faith separated from . . . good works, what need is there of truths . . .

—^e. (Thus) faith without works is not faith. Ex.

839². By works are meant all things a man does, speaks, and writes. Fully enum.

—, All such works are good when done from the Lord in the man, and are evil when done from the man himself. Thus they are good in proportion as he shuns evils as sins . . . but evil in proportion as he does not do so.

—, Such as are the works, such is the faith. Ex. 842, Ex.

842. The love, the life, and the works, make a one with every man. Ex.

847³. When good works are set aside . . . evil works take their place. Ex.

901. The reason 'works' = the life of man, is that they make his life. Ex.

946². The goods that a man does (by shunning evils) are what are meant by good works; and good works in their whole complex are what is meant by charity. 974², Ex. 975², Ex.

963. Where there are not good works, there are evil works. Ex.

974². Works done by man. Ex.

975². Works are more or less good according to the excellence of the use. Ex.

— The goodness of the works increases with the man according to the fulness of the Truths from the affection of which they are done. Ex.

976². What is meant in the Word by 'evil works.' Ex.

979⁹. Refrain from asking . . . What are the good works that I must do . . . to receive eternal life? Only abstain from evils as sins, and look to the Lord, and He will teach and lead.

1002². The good works of chastity. Ex. —³.

1017. When a man abstains from hatred . . . then for the first time the works he does are works of love and charity; while the works he did before . . . were all works of the love of self and of the world . . . Life 72, Ex.

115. The fruits of this tree are the good works that are done in the body . . .

134. That ministries, functions, offices, and various works are the goods of use . . . from which the general good arises. Ex.

158. That every man who looks to the Lord, and shuns evils as sins, and does the work of his office and duty sincerely, justly, and faithfully, becomes a form of charity. Gen.art. (Shown by the case of priests, magistrates, generals, soldiers, sailors, workmen, etc.)

189⁹. There are also various works of the hands, which give motion to the body, and divert the mind from the works of its calling.

C. 168. Charity in workmen. — By workmen are meant mechanics and artificers of various kinds. If they look to the Lord, and shun evils as sins, and do their works sincerely, justly, and faithfully, they become forms of charity, each in proportion as he loves his work, and is earnest in it. For their works are goods of use (enum.) and are gains-emolumenta—to the commonwealth. In proportion as anyone applies his mind to his work and labour from the love of it, he—as to the affection and derivative thought—is in it; and in the same proportion is withheld from thinking and loving vain things, and is afterwards led by the Lord to think and love good things, and also to think and love the means to good, which are truths. It is not so with one who applies himself to no work. Every workman who looks to the Lord, and shuns evils as sins, shuns idleness, because it is the devil's pillow; shuns insincerity and fraud; and shuns luxury and intemperance. He is industrious, sincere, sober, content with his lot, and works for his neighbour as he would for himself . . .

2682^e. To those who believe . . . the world is relatively nothing; but to those who do not believe, the world is everything of their thought and affection . . .

2750. When anyone commits adultery . . . he lives solely in worldly and corporeal things . . .

2752. Those addicted to adulteries want . . . to obsess men, and through them to return into the world . . .

2763^e. For man has become altogether worldly and corporeal . . . What then will he do in the other life . . . where there is nothing worldly and corporeal . . .

2813^d. 'The field is the world' (Matt. xiii. 38) . . . 'The world'=men. (=the whole human race. 9295^d) (=the Church. R. 645^e) (=the Church everywhere. E. 911^e.)

2896^d. They saw worldly and earthly things . . . but from them thought of spiritual and celestial things . . . For when celestial and spiritual things come down to man, they fall into such things as are with him in the world. Every several thing in the world represents and signifies something that is in the Heavens. 2897.

2973^d. See CORPOREAL, here. 3304^d. 3345^e. 3885. 3928. —. 4027^d. 4269^e. 4622^e. 6928. 8452^d. H. 312^e. 481. D. 1897.

2987. Unless he knows that there is a Spiritual World, and that it is distinct from the natural world . . .

2990. It is known, or may be, that there is a Spiritual World, and a natural world. The Spiritual World, in the universal, is where Spirits and Angels are; and the natural world is where men are. In the particular, there is a spiritual world and a natural world with every man; his internal man being to him a spiritual world, and his external a natural world. The things that inflow from the Spiritual World and are presented in the natural, are, in general, representations; and, in so far as they agree, they are correspondences.

2992. In the natural world and its three kingdoms, there is not the smallest thing which does not represent something in the Spiritual World, or which has not something there to which it corresponds. Examp. 2993. 2999.

3016^e. For human life . . . is nothing but a progression from the world to Heaven . . .

3425^d. Then corporeal and worldly things appear as relatively nothing . . .

3438^d. (Such a one opens his internal eye) when he looks downward, that is, to worldly and corporeal things . . .

3603^d. (Effect of the things of the glory of the world.)

3660^d. For the thoughts of Angels and Spirits are not interrupted by cares about Things worldly, corporeal, and earthly, as they were (here).

3696. As he advances in life (man) gives himself up to worldly cares (and thus loses tranquillity).

3701^d. This nature is what must be extirpated while man lives in the world.

3827^e. By the affection of genuine love, man is withdrawn from corporeal and worldly things . . .

3834. For there are as yet present with him worldly and corporeal affections, which do indeed cause him to receive these (heavenly) arcana; but (prevent them) from being conjoined.

3913^d. See SELF, here. —^d. 4948.

—³. The spiritual man does not despise riches, because by means of them he can be . . . in the world.

3938^d. To come forth—existere—is predicated of the Lord, but only when He was in the world . . .

—⁷. As to the happiness of eternal life, the man who is in the affection of good and truth cannot perceive it while living in the world, but in place of it a certain delight. The reason is, that . . . he is in worldly cares, and consequently in anxieties. Ex.

3951^d. Those who infer that spiritual good is impossible in worldly opulence . . . are much mistaken. (Fully quoted under RICH.)

3954. The sense of the letter cannot come to the Angels, because it treats . . . of worldly, earthly, and corporeal things, of which the Angels cannot think. 5329^e.

3957^d. For while man is in the body, corporeal and worldly things occupy his thoughts, and induce obscurity . . .

— . When man dies, he passes from shade to light, because from the things of the world to those of Heaven . . .

—³. The life a man has acquired in the world follows him . . . —⁶.

—⁵. He who in the world has thought solely of such (worldly things) . . . is not fitted to be among those whose delight is to think of heavenly things.

—⁷. Therefore, man, while living in the world, ought to be solicitous to acquire such a plane . . .

4042. (Thus) through man alone is there a descent from the Heavens into the world, and an ascent from the world into the Heavens.

4063^d. But the old man is in the affections of worldly and earthly things . . . He, therefore, regards ends in the world.

—³. The concupiscences of the world must be put off . . .

— . Man must therefore be kept long in a certain mediate good, which partakes of both the affections of the world, and those of Heaven. Sig. 4145.

—^e. When he no longer has worldly, earthly, and corporeal things as his end . . . that mediate good is separated.

4096^d. For they who have worldly and earthly things as their end, cannot withdraw their senses from them. Ex.

4099. The Societies of Spirits that serve as mediate good are those which are in worldly things . . .

—². In proportion as the man is initiated into heavenly things . . . the Spirits in worldly things are removed, (otherwise) truths are dissipated. For worldly things and heavenly are in accord with man, when heavenly things dominate over worldly things; but are in disagreement when worldly things dominate over heavenly . . . and in this case truths are diminished . . . because worldly things cast a shade over heavenly . . . but when heavenly things have the dominion, they enlighten worldly things, and put them in clearness . . .

4104^d. When man acknowledges (the things of the kingdom of the world) as instrumental and secondary,

Truths and their affections are elevated in him . . . The contrary happens when he prefers the things . . . of the kingdom of the world to those of the Lord's Kingdom . . .

[A.] 4279². The literal sense is for man while he lives in the world.

4318. The Angels thus know and perceive innumerable things in the Heavens, and thence also those that are in the world; for the things that come forth in the world and its nature, are causes and effects from the former as their first principles.

4570². Through these (sensuous things of the body) man has communication with worldly and corporeal things.

4585³. Saying, We see the world; but not the other life . . .

4658². For everyone can easily be let into the state of life he had in the world, because he takes it all with him.

4801. Being such, he could have no other opinion of Heaven than as a worldly kingdom.

4947. Under the soles are those who . . . had lived to the world . . . being delighted with such things as are of the world, and had loved to live in splendour; but only from an external cupidity . . . for they had not been proud . . . and had not rejected the doctrinal things of the Church . . . In some of these, the interiors are open towards Heaven . . . and they are afterwards taken up there. (See 4948, for those who had been devoted to the things of self and the world from interior cupidity.) D.2683.

5006¹. Man is in the world in order to be initiated by his training there into the things of Heaven; and his life in the world, relatively to his life after death, is hardly a moment.

5078². Immediately after death, a man appears to himself in a body, just as in the world. Des. . . So that when he sees and touches himself, he says that he is a man as in the world. Ex. 6054, Ex.

—⁴. The earthly Corporeal is no longer of any use to him, for he is in another world . . .

5079². He (no longer) sees what is in the world, nor hears the things in the world, nor smells, tastes, and touches the things in the world, but the things in the other life, which indeed for the most part appear like those in the world; but still are not like them, for they have in them what is living, which the things that properly belong to the natural world have not. Ex. . . What appears living in them is from the Spiritual World; that is, through it from the Lord.

5094². When a man dies, he takes with him all the Natural as it has been formed with him in the world, and such it remains . . .

5114. This Sensuous sees from the light of the world . . . and all that it sees is worldly, corporeal, and earthly.

5119². It appears as if the things in the world inflow . . . towards the interiors, but it is a fallacy . . .

5159³. He who does not suffer himself to be regenerated . . . loves the world for the sake of the world . . . But one who is being regenerated, likewise loves . . . the things of the world, but . . . for the sake of the end that by the world, its wealth, possessions, and honours, he may have the means of doing what is good and true, and what is just and right. . . In the outward form, they appear alike . . .

5161². Feasts on birthdays represented regeneration, which is . . . the conjunction of Heaven with the world in a man; for what is worldly, or natural, is then conjoined in him with what is spiritual and celestial.

5280⁴. As soon as they reach the age of adolescence, they suffer themselves to be carried away by the world, and thus go over to the side of the infernal Spirits . . .

5477². For all the ideas of man's thought, so long as he lives in the world, are founded upon such things as are in the world . . .

5614³. As the interior or rational mind of the man who is in good is in the Spiritual World, and his exterior or natural mind in the natural world, both minds must think . . .

6013². As to his exteriors . . . man is formed after the image of the world, and has therefore been called a microcosm. Des. 6057.

6048². For the natural world is from the Spiritual World as an effect from its cause, to the end that the Spiritual World may inflow into the natural world, and there act the causes; and in this way all things therein are kept in their tenor and order.

6054. He knows no otherwise than that he is in the world; for the life after death is a continuation of the life in the world.

6110⁵. The reason (the shining of the sun and the rotation of the Earth, causing day and night) come forth in the natural world, is that the natural world comes forth—existit—from the Spiritual World, and consequently also subsists from it.

6202². (Man is let down into his proprium) when he immerses himself too much in worldly and corporeal things . . .

6210. (When) I have thought inordinately about worldly things . . . I relapsed into what is sensuous . . . and was removed from the company of the Angels. D.185. 1166.

—^e. Once, when I was led through the abodes of Heaven, and was in a spiritual idea, it happened that I suddenly lapsed into thought about worldly things, and then all that spiritual idea was dissipated. D.304.

6631. When man became external, he became also worldly and corporeal. Des.

6696. (The expression 'this world' used in the sense of our solar system.) 6697. 7171.

6810^e. (Such) care not for worldly things, except in so far as the necessities of life require.

6839^e. He who is taken up with worldly things cannot possibly apprehend interior things . . .

6927. (The Spirits of Mercury) know more than others about the worlds and Earths outside the sphere of the world of our sun . . .

6948². But as the things in the world and upon the Earth appear otherwise than as they are, they are full of fallacies . . .

6954. Of himself, man looks only downwards, that is, into the world, and to the earth . . .

7090³. Those who have filled their ideas with worldly things, and also with earthly things, and have caused the truths of faith to be adjoined to such things, are let down to the Lower Earth . . . until those worldly and earthly things have been separated from the truths of faith . . .

— These worldly and earthly things cannot be separated and removed, except through combats against falsities. Des.

—⁴. For the man of the Church cannot endure combat while he lives in the world. Ex.

7280^e. This (delight of destroying others) is concealed in the world. 7392².

7721^e. Such things frequently happen to those in Hell . . . especially that they may remember the evils they had done in the world.

7820. (Thus) those who are in the glory of the world, that is, who are pre-eminently in eminence and opulence, are equally able to look above themselves to the Lord . . . for they (do so) when they have (these things) as means, and not as the end.

7893. See WORK, here.

8380. (The inhabitants of Jupiter) care little for worldly things. Des.

8472^e. Everyone in Heaven has the power of receiving (the Divine good) according to the quality and quantity of the good he has acquired in the world. 8533.

8478². Those have care for the morrow . . . who look only to worldly and earthly, and not to heavenly, things. Des.

8700⁴. In the other life, all are consociated according to the life they have acquired in the world. Ex.

8701^e. But in the other life everyone is led according to his will—velle—which has been acquired in the world.

8711. Pure truths without a worldly end. Sig. and Ex.

8717³. Those who place all happiness in worldly and corporeal things (then) reject the Divine Providence.

8783². For they who have earthly and worldly things as the end—that is, love them above all things—are averse to spiritual things . . .

8812^e. For all things in the world have been created to the image of those in Heaven; for natural things come forth from spiritual as effects from their causes; hence there is a correspondence of all things in the world with those in Heaven . . .

8939². That worldly blessing is nothing in comparison with heavenly blessing . . . the Lord thus teaches in, 'What does it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?' (Matt.xvi.26). But the man who is in worldly and earthly things does not understand this word; for worldly and earthly things suffocate, and even cause disbelief in eternal life . . .

8981³. Those who from infancy have thought little about life eternal . . . but about worldly life and its prosperity, and yet have lived a good moral life, and have believed the truths of doctrine of their Church, when they come to a more adult age cannot be reformed otherwise than by the adjunction of spiritual good while they are in combat; but still they do not retain it, but only confirm the truths of their doctrine by it. The reason of this is that in their past life they had indulged in worldly loves, which, when inrooted, do not suffer spiritual good to be conjoined with truth. Further ex.

8993³. For worldly ends, which are gains, and corporeal ends, which are honours, cause total blindness (as to truth).

9093². To 'serve two masters,' is to serve the Lord by faith, and the world by love.

9227³. (This shows) how man is elevated from the world into Heaven when being regenerated . . .

9256³. Denials of truth, or affirmations of falsity . . . must be dispelled in the world.

—⁴. Then, at the same time, all the earthly and worldly things that they have drawn with them from their life in the world, are elevated . . .

9265. 'A gift'—everything worldly that is loved, whether it be opulence, dignity, reputation, or anything else that pleases the natural man . . .

— These things are held in aversion when what is heavenly and Divine is loved more than what is worldly and earthly; for in proportion as the one is loved, the other is hated, according to the Lord's words (about serving two masters).

9274^e. In the first state (of regeneration) man looks from the world to Heaven; in the second, from Heaven to the world. Ex.

9278². Divine order is for Heaven to rule the world in a man, and not the world Heaven . . . Man is born into this—that he loves the world and himself more than Heaven and the Lord; and this, being opposite to Divine order, must be inverted by regeneration, which is effected when the things of Heaven and the Lord are more loved than those of the world and self. (How this is brought about.)

[A. 9278]³. Thus it is according to Divine order, that the Lord, through Heaven, rules the world in a man, and by no means the converse.

—⁴. When a man is in external things . . . he grows warm from the world, and cold towards Heaven, unless it is as the world, and he is consequently in such shade that he cannot conceive otherwise than that external things inflow into internal . . . and that consequently he can . . . from the world, see Heaven.

— . But when he is elevated from external into internal things . . . he perceives that the things of the world in him, thus those of the body and its senses, see and act through influx from Heaven . . .

— . This shows why a sensuous man believes that the whole of his life is derived from the world, and from nature . . .

—⁶. That 'the world cannot receive the Spirit of Truth, because it seeth Him not' (John xiv.17)= that it will not acknowledge the Lord in faith of heart, because the external things that are of the world will obscure.

9279². The externals of man have been formed to the image of the world, but his internals to the image of Heaven; and therefore his externals receive the things of the world . . . The externals that are of the world are opened in man successively from infancy . . . and they are opened through the things that are of the world . . .

9441. That there are many worlds. Shown.

9582. Near the end of our solar world there appeared a bright but dense cloud, and then a fiery smoke . . . A vast gulf separated our solar world on that side from certain worlds of the sidereal heaven . . .

—^e. There were guards there to prevent Spirits from this world from passing, without permission, into any other world in the universe. D.4665.

9706. The external man has been created to the image of the world; and therefore . . . to think and will from the external man, is (to do so) from the world, that is, through the world from self.

9730². There are in man two determinations of the intellectual and voluntary things, one outwards towards the world . . . (which exists) with natural and sensuous men; but with spiritual and celestial men there is a determination of those things towards Heaven, and also, alternately, towards the world . . . But if a man does not suffer himself to be regenerated, all his interiors remain determined towards the world . . .

9755¹⁵. To be 'sunk in the depth of the sea'=into what is merely worldly and corporeal, thus into Hell.

9763. They who come from the world into the other life . . . take with them worldly and earthly things that do not accord with spiritual and celestial things . . . and therefore those who are to be elevated into Heaven are first prepared, which is effected by the separation of the worldly and earthly things . . .

9993³. For at this day what is worldly is everything in the understanding and the will . . .

10030². The universal world is a theatre representative of the Lord's Kingdom.

10049. And the things of the world cannot enter into those of Heaven . . . but the things of Heaven can enter into those of the world in a man. 10236⁴, Ex.

10156. For the knowledge of the natural man . . . is in the light of the world . . . and so long as a man is solely in the light of the world, he is in Hell . . .

—³. So long as a man is merely natural . . . only his exteriors, which see from the light of the world, are open; and the man then looks downwards, that is, into the world and to self . . .

—⁴. For man has been so created, that as to his internal he is formed to the image of Heaven, and as to his external to the image of the world, to the end that Heaven and the world may be conjoined in man, and that thus the Lord, through him, may inflow from Heaven into the world, and may rule the latter, in particular with everyone, and in general with all, and may thus conjoin both together, and thereby cause that even in the world there is an image of Heaven. But when a man cares solely for the world, Heaven is closed with him. But when he suffers himself to be elevated by the Lord, Heaven is opened with him, and the world is subjected to it, and then Hell is . . . removed from him, and for the first time the man knows what good and evil are. This is what is called 'the image of God' in a man.

10200. For the things that come forth in the world are images of the Things that are in the Heavens . . .

10471^e. The external in man is in the world, thus is his world, and the world has been made in order to serve Heaven, as a servant his lord.

10655³. Hell in the whole complex is what is called 'the prince of the world' . . .

10702^e. They who love themselves, turn themselves to the world, thus outwards . . .

10734. I was brought to an Earth in the universe outside our solar world, which was effected by changes of the state of my mind . . . 10736. 10783.

10789. There are two things in man that must be in order, namely, the things of Heaven, and the things of the world . . . The things of the world are called civil.

H. 252². The Most Ancients . . . spoke with the Angels . . . and Heaven and the world made a one in them.

282^e. So that all the delight of the world appears to be relatively nothing.

309. For the man of this Earth is more in worldly things, and thus in externals, than those of other Earths (and therefore cannot receive immediate revelation).

312. For it cannot be believed that Heaven and Hell are from mankind, when it is believed that no man goes there until the end of the world.

313^e. The exteriors of man have been formed for the reception of all things of the world; and they who receive the world, and not Heaven at the same time, receive Hell.

347². He who loves Divine truths for the sake of his own glory . . . turns his (mental) sight from Heaven to the world . . . and this is why such are in the light of the world (only).

349. All who in the world have acquired intelligence and wisdom, are received in Heaven . . . For whatever a man acquires in the world . . . he carries with him after death . . .

358. In a word, a man may live outwardly altogether like a man of the world, and it will not hinder his coming into Heaven, provided that he inwardly thinks as is becoming about God, and deals sincerely and justly with his neighbour. Ex.

360. I have spoken with some who, while they lived in the world, had renounced the world . . . so that by the withdrawal of their thoughts from worldly things, they might be at leisure for pious meditations . . . But in the other life these are of a sad disposition, and despise others. (Their nature and lot des.) 528. 535.
—². Man cannot be formed for Heaven except by means of the world. Ex. 528. 535³.

394. He who, in Heaven, is in an employment . . . that corresponds to his use, is in a state of life altogether similar to that in which he was in the world . . . but in more interior delight . . .

493. The first state of man after death is similar to his state in the world. Des. . . This is why he knows no otherwise than that he is still in the world, unless he pays attention . . .

509. No one is punished there for evils done in the world . . .

532. Therefore if the internal sight, or thought, is turned to the world, and there abides, the thought becomes worldly ; if to self, corporeal.

602. All (Spirits) can be brought into a state like that in which they had been in the world . . .

N. 123. Renunciation of the world without life in the world does not make spiritual life . . . but renunciation of the world with life in the world, does.

126. It is believed . . . that to renounce the world, and to live to the spirit and not to the flesh, is to reject worldly things, which are chiefly riches and honours, and to be continually engaged in pious meditation . . . prayer, the reading of the Word, etc. But these things are not the renouncing of the world ; but to renounce the world is to love God and the neighbour ; and God is loved when we live according to His commandments, and the neighbour when we perform uses ; and therefore in order that a man may receive the life of Heaven, he must by all means live in the world, and in offices and business there. A life withdrawn from worldly things, is a life of thought and faith separated from a life of love and charity . . . and the spiritual life is like a house without a foundation . . .

128. (Thus) the renunciation of the world is of avail, and is accepted by the Lord, in proportion as it is made in the world ; for those renounce the world who remove the love of self and of the world, and deal justly and sincerely in every function, business, and work, from . . . a heavenly origin, and this origin is in his life when a man (does this) because it is according to the Divine laws.

J. 1. That the destruction of the world is not meant by the day of the Last Judgment. Gen.art. J.(Post.) 134.

73. On the state of the world and of the Church hereafter. Gen.art. C.J.8, Gen.art. 13.

L. 13. By 'the world,' 'the prince of the world,' etc. (in these passages) is meant Hell. T.116³.

34. So the Heavens where Angels are, without the world where men are, would be like (a house without a foundation). Ex.

Life 63. Such a man thinks these things allowable before God, but not before the world.

—². Thus he abstains from evils only for the sake of the world.

69². So long as a man is in the world, he is in the midst between Heaven and Hell . . . and is kept in the freedom of turning himself to either . . . Or, what is the same, so long as a man is in the world, he stands in the middle between the Lord and the devil . . . Or, what is the same, so long as a man is in the world, he is in the middle between evil and good . . .

86. The natural mind is the mind of man's world ; and the spiritual mind is that of his Heaven . . .

108. That he who shuns evils for any other reason than because they are sins . . . merely causes them not to appear before the world. Gen.art.

W. 261. And all that inflows into the natural mind is from the world ; for the natural mind is the world in form.

284⁹. When the Angels look into the world, they see nothing but darkness . . .

P. 17. In the world, man can with difficulty come into the . . . union of good and truth, or of evil and falsity, because so long as he lives there, he is kept in a state of reformation or of regeneration . . .

41. The closer anyone is conjoined with the Lord, the more happy he becomes ; but his happiness rarely manifests itself in the world, because man is then in a natural state, (which) communicates with what is spiritual only by correspondences ; and this communication is felt only by a certain quiet and peace of the lower mind, especially after combats against evils . . .

142. No one is reformed in a state of bodily disease . . . for a mind that is removed from the world does indeed think about God, but not from God, because it is not in the freedom of reason. Man has the freedom of reason from the fact that he is in the midst between Heaven and the world, and that he can think from Heaven, and from the world ; and also from Heaven about the world, and from the world about Heaven. But when a man is in a state of disease . . . he is not in the world . . . and in this state no one can be reformed, but he can be confirmed, if he had been reformed before.

—². It is the same with those who renounce the world, and all business there . . .

278³. On those who on account of worldly things do not think about sins, and therefore are not aware of them. Ex. . . These are they who love the world above all things . . .

R. 153¹¹. No one (in those Hells) knew who, and in what employment, he had been in the world. But the Angel told me . . .

224⁴. (The Angels said) When we have looked down from Heaven into the world, we have not seen anything, but only heard sounds. Ex.

589. 'From the foundation of the world' (Rev.xiii.8) = from the establishment of the Church, both Jewish and Christian. E.807, Ex.

— By 'the world,' in the widest sense, is meant the whole world, both the good and the evil in it, and sometimes only the evil; but in a sense not so wide, by 'the world,' is meant the like as by 'the world-orbem,' and 'the earth,' thus the Church. Ill.

—^e. That 'the world' also = the people of the Church. Ill.

— From this it may be seen what is meant by 'the foundation of the world' in other passages. Ill. E.807.

937^e. This (removal of evils) must be done by man in the world; for such as a man is in the world as to his spirit, such he remains to eternity . . .

M. 31. I have often heard (Spirits) saying that they knew no otherwise than that they were in the former world, with the sole difference that they no longer see those whom they had left behind them in that world, but those who had departed from that world. Ex.

48a^e. But a good man, because in the world he had looked to God, and had repented, is more wise in his internal than in his external: in the external, also, through the allurements and vanities of the world, he had sometimes been foolish.

269^e. The highest things in man are turned upwards to God, the middle ones outwards to the world, and the lowest downwards to self.

339^e. Some of them are cast into the gulfs that are at the borders of the worlds.

T. 13². He can see that the world is a complex of uses in successive order for the human race . . .

75. (Creation cannot be understood unless it is known that) there are two worlds . . . and in each world a sun . . . and in each world three degrees . . . 76².

395². The man in whom these three loves are rightly subordinated . . . (in the lowest storey of his mental house) is in company with Genii as a man of the world; and instructs, reproves, and subdues them.

475. That so long as he lives in the world, man is kept in the midst between Heaven and Hell, in spiritual equilibrium, which is free will. Gen.art.

497⁸. So long as he lives in the world, man is in equilibrium between Heaven and the world, and scarcely knows that in proportion as he recedes from Heaven to the world, he accedes to Hell.

604^e. The lower or national region of the mind is the world in the least effigy.

798. When Calvin first arrived in the Spiritual World, he believed no otherwise than that he was still in the world where he was born. Des.

D. 179. On the end of the world.

1166^e. That he who inheres in worldly cares falls down into an entirely different state. Ex.

—^e. (Thus) Spirits cannot speak with a man who is much devoted to worldly and bodily cares.

797^e. And the natural mind is man's world; and therefore he has conjunction with the world through it. 1056², Ex.

1057⁵. For 'the world' = the like as 'heaven and earth.'

1062⁸. Those who give themselves up wholly to a life of piety . . . and yet do not shun (evils) as sins . . . are those who profane more; for by the impurities of their minds they defile the piety of their lips, especially if they renounce the world, and live solitary.

D. Love. viii. That to a like form (of use) do all things of the world look. Gen.art.

— All things of the world, defined.

Can. God iii. 13. It is vain to think what there was before the world, and also what there is outside the world; because there was no time before the world, and there is no space outside the world.

vi. 1. The first origin of all things of the world is love, and the world has been created from it through wisdom. It is solely from this that the world, from its primes to its ultimates, is a work that coheres to eternity.

World of Spirits. Mundus Spirituum.

A. Title. Wonderful things that have been seen in the World of Spirits . . .

50. Through Spirits, man has communication with the World of Spirits; through Angels, with Heaven. Without (these two communications) man could not live.

59. Such deadly hatred reigns in the World of Spirits against the things of love and faith in the Lord . . .

167. The words of the letter . . . are represented in the World of Spirits . . . for the World of Spirits is representative; and whatever is represented to the life there, is perceived in the Second Heaven . . .

311. Those who perished by the Flood . . . cannot be in the World of Spirits . . .

581. If the Lord, by His coming into the world, had not delivered the World of Spirits from (the Nephilim) no one could have been there, and so the human race would have perished . . . —. 1266, Ex. 1675².

592². So in the World of evil Spirits . . .

644². Man is a least Heaven . . . corresponding to the World of Spirits, and to Heaven.

730⁵. This idea was represented in the World of Spirits by such things as are in the world; as is the case with all angelic ideas when they pass down into the World of Spirits.

996. Man's delight (becomes far greater) when he comes into the World of Spirits.

1269. Some (of the Nephilim) were permitted . . . to ascend into the World of Spirits . . .

1270^e. While they were in the World of Spirits, the character of the sphere there was changed. D.3367, Ex. 3584.

1376. The states of thought and affection are presented to view in the World of Spirits (as places and distances); but not so much in Heaven, because the Angels are not in the idea of place . . . 1377, Ex. 1379.

1388². This knowledge is natural to man (and originates) from the communication of his spirit with the World of Spirits.

1399. There are communications of (a Spirit's) interiors in Heaven, as there are of his exteriors in the World of Spirits.

1524. Such is the light . . . in Heaven, in comparison with that in the World of Spirits. Des.

1786^e. The Lord had then a perception of all things in the World of Spirits and the Heavens.

1808². Similar things (to those which appear in Heaven and earth) are seen in the World of Spirits . . . and there they are nothing but representatives.

1868². Evil and diabolical Spirits desire nothing more than to come up into the World of Spirits . . .

1877. The Souls in the World of Spirits, especially the evil, at first retain the things they had in the bodily life . . .

1887. What is inspired by the Lord descends . . . through the angelic Heaven, and so through the World of Spirits down to man.

1971. What comes forth in Heaven . . . is turned into representatives when it passes down into the World of Spirits.

1972. The sights . . . I have seen in the World of Spirits I have seen in clear light; but those in Heaven . . . more obscurely . . .

1980. The ideas of the Angels are turned into representatives in the World of Spirits. 2039⁷.

2025^e. The Lord delivered the World of Spirits from infernal Genii and Spirits, and thus freed the human race from destruction . . .

2026^e. On the Heaven of Angels depends the Heaven of angelic Spirits; on this the World of Spirits; and on this the human race.

2034⁸. By this (influx through the Divine Human) were dispersed the direful persuasions . . . and lusts . . . with which the World of Spirits was filled, and with which it was continually filling . . .

2121. At this day (A.D. 1750) the World of Spirits is full of evil Genii and Spirits, mostly from the Christian world... This is the case also with the interior sphere of the World of Spirits, where those are who have been interiorly evil... This, also, is now so filled up, that I have wondered... For all are not cast into the Hells in a moment... Hence these regions of the World of Spirits are very densely thronged with Spirits of this kind... and through them the Souls that come from the world are grievously infested... 2122². 2123, Des.

2179². Various representatives are presented in the World of Spirits (such as) horses variously caparisoned, oxen, sheep, lambs, and other animals, and sometimes such as are nowhere seen on Earth, but are only representative. Such animals were seen by the prophets. Ex. 2762. —³.

2252². The Ancients... had the significations of numbers from the representatives in the World of Spirits...

2625. In the World of Spirits (space and time) still appear as something, because Spirits fresh from the body take with them the idea of natural things...

2762. When (such) Spirits are taken up from the World of Spirits into Heaven, there appear to them horses that shine as with fire. 8029².

2763. Besides representatives, there are also correspondences... These are not so represented in the World of Spirits...

3213. In the World of Spirits there come forth innumerable and almost continual representatives, which are forms of Things spiritual and celestial, not unlike those in the world... These inflow from Heaven, and from the ideas and speech of the Angels there. Fully ex. 3216, Examps.

3368³. Before an Angel (rational things) are not presented so evidently in the Natural; but they are with those in the World of Spirits, and are in the spiritual natural; and hence they have representatives of truth.

4043². The things which take place in the Heavens are represented in the World of Spirits by forms to which those seen (here) bear some resemblance.

4227². What their Hell is, where they are when not in the World of Spirits, will be told.

4264². When the speech of the Angels passes down into the World of Spirits, it falls into various numbers. 5265².

4335⁵. This signification is from the representatives in the World of Spirits.

4533². The Angels look at the evil whenever they observe them trying to get... into the World of Spirits (which causes them to appear in horrible forms). Des.

4627². For the spiritual things in Heaven are represented in the World of Spirits by natural things, or rather by such things as are similar to natural. Examp. 5201⁴.

4742². When the light passes from Heaven into the World of Spirits, it is there presented under the appearance of various colours. Des.

4951. In this Hell are the most malicious... they pour out the poison of their malice to those in the World of Spirits, and excite them...

5115². (Such representatives) are actually presented in the World of Spirits, when the Angels... are conversing... 6048, Examp. 9272², Examp.

5427. The Angels... can see everything that is taking place in the World of Spirits, which World is next beneath the Heavens... but not the converse.

5984. When Spirits who are in the World of Spirits want to have communication with a number of Societies, they are wont to send forth Subjects. (Continued under SUBJECT [Spirit]).

5990². Lest such (obsessing) Spirits should come into the World of Spirits, it is provided... that they be kept closely shut up in their Hells... Nevertheless, there are internal obsessions. Ex.

6475. See EVIL SPIRIT, here. 6559. 6762².

6484. He was then in the World of Spirits; and when Spirits are there, they are in the delights of the loves in which they had been (here).

6626². The gates (of Hell and of Heaven) that open into the World of Spirits. 10483². H. 428, Ex.

7111². These emissaries (from the Hells) appear in their own stated places in the World of Spirits. (Fully quoted under EMISSARY.)

7357². When any such (infernal) speaks—as is the case when they appear in the World of Spirits—it is at once known that it is false.

8029. See HEAVEN, here.

H. 294. All the Spirits who are in the World of Spirits have communication with either Heaven, or Hell...

421. On the World of Spirits, and the State of Man after Death. (Title of the second part of H.)

— The World of Spirits is not Heaven, nor is it Hell, but is a place or state midway between them; for thither man first comes after death, and then, after some time has passed, he, according to his life in the world, is either elevated into Heaven, or cast into Hell.

422. The World of Spirits is both an intermediate place . . . and an intermediate state . . . The Hells are beneath it, and the Heavens above . . . and while a man is there he is not as yet in either Heaven or Hell. Ex. . . This conjunction (of either good with truth, or of evil with falsity) is made in the World of Spirits, because the man is then in an intermediate state. 423, Ex. 428.

[H.] 426. There is a vast number of people in the World of Spirits . . . Some merely enter that World, being soon either taken up into Heaven, or cast down into Hell; some remain there only for some weeks; some for many years, but not more than thirty. The differences of the time arise from the correspondence, or non-correspondence, of the interiors and the exteriors.

427. As soon after death as men come into the World of Spirits, they are well distinguished by the Lord; the evil are at once attached to the infernal Society in which, as to their reigning love, they had been in the world; and the good to the heavenly Society, in which, as to love, charity, and faith, they had been. But still those who have been friends and acquaintances (here) all meet in that World . . . when they desire it, especially wives and husbands . . .

—². The reason they see each other in the World of Spirits, and not in Heaven or Hell, is that those who are in the World of Spirits are brought into states similar to those in which they had been (here), from one to another . . .

429. The World of Spirits appears like a valley between mountains and rocks, which winds upwards into them here and there. The gates and doors to the heavenly Societies do not appear, except to those who are prepared for Heaven . . . To every Society there is one entrance from the World of Spirits . . . Neither do the gates and doors to the Hells appear, except to those who are about to enter . . .

430². The rational mind, during its formation, corresponds to the World of Spirits; the things above it, to Heaven; and those below it, to Hell.

431. Those who are in the World of Spirits are (called) Spirits . . .

457. When the spirit of a man first enters the World of Spirits, which takes place shortly after his resurrection, he has a similar face and tone of voice to that which he had (here); the reason of which is that he is then in the state of his exteriors . . . But the face is afterwards changed . . . and becomes like his reigning love. Fully ex.

481². As soon after death as they come into the World of Spirits, all are examined, and are attached to those who are in like love . . . After passing through the first and second states, they are so separated that they no longer see or know each other . . .

491. After death, man undergoes three states before he comes into either Heaven, or Hell: that of his exteriors; that of his interiors; and that of his preparation. He undergoes these three states in the World of Spirits. There are some, however, who do not undergo these states, but are either taken up into Heaven, or cast into Hell, immediately after death. Ex.

—^e. But these are few relatively to those who are kept in the World of Spirits.

510^e. (Such) have been in Hell even (here); but . . . in a state similar to that of those who are in the World of Spirits.

540. This, then, is the equilibrium between Heaven and Hell. Those who are in the World of Spirits are in this equilibrium; for the World of Spirits is intermediate between Heaven and Hell. Hence all men . . . are kept in a like equilibrium; for they are ruled by the Lord through Spirits who are in the World of Spirits. 590.

550. Evil Spirits are severely punished in the World of Spirits, to deter them from doing evil. Des.

583. The World of Spirits is in the low parts of the Spiritual World . . . The Heavens do not appear to the Spirits in the World of Spirits, except when their interior sight is opened. Sometimes, however, they appear like clouds . . . The reason is that the Angels of Heaven are in a more interior state in respect to intelligence and wisdom; and therefore are above the sight of those in the World of Spirits.

—^e. All the gates to the Hells open from the World of Spirits, and none from Heaven.

588^e. The whole of Heaven, and the whole of the World of Spirits, are as it were hollowed out [beneath], and under them there is a continuous Hell.

590. The reason the World of Spirits is in that equilibrium, is that after death every man first enters the World of Spirits, and is there kept in a state like that in which he had been (here) . . . for by this all are examined . . . being left in freedom.

600. The conjunction of man with Heaven and with Hell is not with them immediately, but mediately through Spirits who are in the World of Spirits. These Spirits are with man, and none from Hell itself, or Heaven itself. Through evil Spirits in the World of Spirits, man is conjoined with Hell; and through good Spirits who are there, with Heaven. As this is the case, the World of Spirits is midway between Heaven and Hell, and there is equilibrium itself there. 601.

J. 69. The Last Judgment was not executed . . . upon those in the World of Spirits . . . but only upon those who had made themselves a likeness of Heaven.

C. J. 20. (The arrangement of the Reformed nations in the World of Spirits.)

30. After the Last Judgment . . . there was light in the World of Spirits such as there had not been before . . . because those infernal Societies had been interposed like a cloud . . .

57. Such Societies are innumerable in the World of Spirits . . . for they are as many as are the genera and species of good and evil affections. Meanwhile . . . they are in spiritual conjunction with men . . . for the reason that these also are in the midway between Heaven and Hell. W. 141.

F. 63³. Between Heaven and Hell there is a middle place, which is called the World of Spirits, and every man comes into it immediately after death; and there .

is a like intercourse of one with another to that of men upon the Earth. All things that appear there are correspondences. Enum.

W. 140. After death, every man first comes into the World of Spirits . . . and there passes through his times, or states, and is prepared, according to his life for either Heaven, or Hell. So long as he stays in that World, he is called a Spirit . . . he who is being prepared for Heaven is called an angelic Spirit; and he who is being prepared for Hell, an infernal Spirit . . . All the Spirits who are in the World of Spirits are adjoined to men, because, as to the interiors of their mind, men are in like manner between Heaven and Hell, and through those Spirits communicate either with Heaven, or with Hell, according to their life. R. 850.

—e. It is to be known that the World of Spirits is one thing, and the Spiritual World another. Ex.

P. 166². Spiritual natural light is such as is the diurnal light in this world, and exists with those in the Ultimate Heaven, and also with those in the World of Spirits, . . . with the good being like the light of summer on earth, and with the evil like that of winter.

307³. The Lord rules the interiors of the mind of man (in either Heaven or Hell); but the exteriors in the World of Spirits. Ex.

— . And therefore, when man dies, he first comes into the World of Spirits, into his external, which is there put off . . .

R. 153². After some days they see that they are in a World where various Societies are instituted, which World is called the World of Spirits, and is midway between Heaven and Hell. All the Societies there, which are innumerable, are wonderfully ordained according to natural affections, good or evil, and communicate either with Heaven . . . or with Hell. (Continued under SOCIETY.)

204². It is said of these that they are 'spewed out,' because the World of Spirits . . . corresponds to the stomach. Ex. 791.

342. The universal Heaven in the endeavour to execute the Last Judgment upon those who were in the World of Spirits. Sig. and Ex.

—². 'The four corners of the earth' = the universal World of Spirits . . . For the Last Judgment was executed upon those who were in the World of Spirits . . .

—³. The Lord (then) caused the Heavens to approach over the World of Spirits . . .

343. A Last Judgment takes place when the evil are multiplied to such a degree . . . in the World of Spirits, that the Angels cannot subsist in their state of love and wisdom, because they have no support and foundation.

530^e. Such (reasonings, commotions, and falsifications of good and truth) come forth in the World of Spirits from the presence and influx of the Heaven that is above them. Sig.

552. That ('the dragon') was cast out into the World of Spirits . . . from which there is immediate conjunction with the men of the Earth. Sig. and Ex. 558.

— . That by 'the earth' into which the dragon is said to have been cast out, is meant the World of Spirits, is because that World lies immediately under the Heavens . . .

—e. It is to be known that as to his affections and the derivative thoughts, every man is in Society with those who are in the World of Spirits; and, mediately through them, with those who are in either Heaven or Hell. The life of every man depends on this conjunction.

784². Purgatory is merely a Babylonish fiction for the sake of gain. . . Every man after death first comes into the World of Spirits . . . and is there prepared for either Heaven or Hell . . . and in that World there is torment for no one. There are innumerable Societies in that World, and joys in them similar to those on earth; for the reason that those who are there are conjoined with men on earth . . . Their externals are there successively put off . . .

791². For the World of Spirits is like a forum, in which all are at first gathered; and it is like the stomach . . .

842. That those meant by 'the dragon' were forcibly withdrawn from the rest in the World of Spirits . . . for a time. Sig. and Ex. 843, Ex.

855. The rest . . . remained in the World of Spirits.

858. That they would draw to their party all who were from the earth in the universal World of Spirits, and who lived there in mere external natural worship . . . Sig. and Ex.

866. All from the earth, and who were now among those in the World of Spirits . . . gathered together by the Lord to Judgment. Sig. and Ex.

—². For all come first into the World of Spirits, and are prepared there . . . and stay there, some only for a month, or a year; and some for ten and up to thirty years; and those to whom it was granted to make for themselves as it were Heavens, for some centuries; but at this day not beyond twenty years. There is a vast multitude there; and Societies, as in the Heavens and the Hells. The Last Judgment was executed upon those who were in that World . . .

878. The reason (the New Heaven) was not formed sooner, was that the dragon and his two beasts had dominion in the World of Spirits . . .

M. 2². An angel sent to convoke the wisest in the World of Spirits . . .

4². This (introduction into their imaginary joys) happens to very many in the World of Spirits . . .

48a. The preparation in the World of Spirits has for its end that the internal and the external may agree and make a one. Ex.

436. In the Spiritual World (the two spheres of scortatory and of conjugal love) meet in the World of Spirits . . .

461. They replied, Heaven is above your head, and Hell beneath your feet; for you are now in the World of Spirits, which is midway. 477².

B. 94. So long as the dragon with his crew stays in the World of Spirits, into which he has been cast down from Heaven, no Divine truth united to Divine good can pass through to the men of the Earth... T.182.

T. 77. (The satans and Angels who were conversing) were in the World of Spirits...

120. Every man after death comes into the World of Spirits, and is then exactly like himself... and at his entrance cannot be restrained from conversing with his deceased parents, brothers, relatives, and friends. Every husband first seeks his wife, and every wife her husband; and by these they are introduced into various companies of such as outwardly appear like sheep, but inwardly are like wolves; and even those who have been devoted to piety are perverted by them. From this cause, and from abominable arts unknown in the natural world, the World of Spirits is as full of the wicked and cunning, as stagnant water is of the spawn of frogs... For all evils are contagious... Thus without a redemption by the Lord, no one could be saved...

121. At the time of the first Advent... the Hells... had filled the universal World of Spirits... and had thus assaulted even the Middle Heaven...

135. This articulate sentence descended... to the lowest Heaven, and from this into the World of Spirits, where I was (and as it descended the idea of one God was changed into that of three).

137. (A council of the learned was convened) in the World of Spirits. Des.

160. I was once walking in the World of Spirits in company with Angels...

—². The way from this world is terminated in the middle of the World of Spirits, because the Societies in love to God and the neighbour are in the east; those in the opposite, are in the west; and those who are more intelligent are in the south.

475². Between Heaven and Hell there is a great interspace, which to those who are there seems like a complete world. Into it evil from Hell exhales in all abundance; and good... from Heaven. It was this interspace of which Abraham said to the rich man in Hell, 'Between us and you there is a great gulf fixed...' (Luke xvi.26). In the midst of this interspace is every man as to his spirit... in order that he may be in free will. This interspace, because it is so vast... is called the World of Spirits. It is full of Spirits...

476. Every man, from infancy to old age, is changing his locality or situation in (the World of Spirits). While an infant, he is kept in the eastern quarter, towards its northern part; in childhood... he gradually leaves the north for the south; in adolescence... he is carried southward; and afterwards... into the south, to the east. But if he favours evil... he advances towards the west... The man himself, as to his body, is not kept in that interspace... but as to his spirit; and as the spirit changes its state... it is transferred to localities... in this quarter, or that...

504. I was in the interior spiritual sight, in which are the Angels of the higher Heaven; but was then in the World of Spirits...

D. 1609. (First mention of the World of Spirits, The Heaven of Spirits is mentioned and described in D.1080. 1277. 1296. 1298. 1316. 1321². 1340.)

1610. The interior Heaven is in a degree within the World of Spirits; for the World of Spirits is separated from Heaven, because Spirits derive what pertains to them from corporeal things... or rather the World of Spirits, relatively to our corporeal things, is as the grosser atmospheric world to the teraqueous; and therefore the World of Spirits occupies—possidet—the interiors of corporeal things. 1611.

1619. In a word, the World of Spirits, and also the interior, more interior, and inmost Heavens, each by itself constitutes a man, with his members and organs; but each of them distinctly, that is to say, the World of Spirits [does so] from the exterior... (Compare 1340.)

1660. The Spirits of Jupiter... must be considered to be Angels; and therefore... they constitute the Heaven of Spirits; but not the World of Spirits.

1778. The World of Spirits before the Lord's advent. 2387, Gen.art.

2180. What came through the World of Spirits to me was turned into something else; so that the World of Spirits is in such disharmony that the Word of the Lord cannot flow down to man through the World of Spirits, but is changed...

2237. That in the World of Spirits they are excited one by another... Ex.

2239. Thus, if the Lord did not rule the universe, the universal World of Spirits would perish in a moment...

2254. That the World of Spirits is like what men are in their thoughts. Ex.

2266. The quality of the World of Spirits then around me (is thus known).

2311. (Thus) in the whole World of Spirits there reigns hatred against truth and good, consequently against the Lord. Des.

2319. That a multitude of men who are together on earth... can be far apart in the World of Spirits. Ex.

2323. In the World of Spirits, and especially in that of Souls... the bridle is sometimes relaxed to their cupidities, but rarely to their falsities. They then suppose that this [activity]... disturbs not only the whole World of Spirits, but the Heavens also. But it is a fallacy...

2354. I can in some measure know this from the state of the World of Spirits...

2550. On representations in the World of Spirits, and how they inflow from Heaven. Gen.art.

2565. That insanity reigns in the interior sphere of the World of Spirits. Gen.art. 2577. 2620.

2574. Those in the interior sphere of the World of Spirits use those in the exterior sphere, as (men) use an exterior sphere for thinking and speaking. Ex.

2797. On the good Spirits who are in the interior World of Spirits.

2848. Spirits who are deceitful are not permitted to be in the World of Spirits, unless their poisons are taken away from them, or tempered . . .

2888. On the evil Spirits of the interior World of Spirits. Gen.art.

2958. Sometimes open communication with the World of interior Spirits is closed . . .

2972. (The Spirits with bells) purify the plain of the World of Spirits from the evil . . .

3104^e. (When) the interior memory is ruled by evil Spirits of the interior World of Spirits—a thing never permitted—the man can no longer live.

3224. (They) thus consider the World of Spirits as a body, just as the World of Spirits considers the body of men as its own.

3398. So (the interior angelic Spirits) have, as it were, their head in their own Heaven, but their feet in the World of the lower angelic Spirits; and these have their head in their World of Spirits, but their feet in man.

3464. The customary respiration, which is the general one of the World of Spirits . . .

3528. While the World of Spirits is full of evil Spirits . . . good Spirits, or Angels, can no longer resist, and the equilibrium perishes . . .

3546. That the World of Spirits have to flee from a single Angel.

3604. When there is a tumult (in the streets) a sphere of anger has reigned in the World of Spirits . . .

3632^e. Whenever others concentrate their thoughts into one of (the interior Spirits), he then comes into the World of lower Spirits.

3634. Therefore, unless the Lord saw man to be something, the whole World of Spirits would see him as nothing . . .

3637. That man can perceive the quality of the World of Spirits from himself. Ex.

3639. As man is ruled by the Lord through the World of Spirits . . . it is evident that the World of Spirits is such in the greatest, as is an individual man in particular.

3726. All the good of the Lord that inflows through Heaven into the World of Spirits is turned into evil . . .

—^e. Therefore, such an equilibrium, and such an order, is preserved by the Lord in the World of Spirits . . . and if evil should preponderate . . . the World of Spirits is at once so disposed that there is equilibrium . . .

3781. For almost the whole World of Spirits is wicked, and enthusiastic, and desires to obsess man . . .

3821^e. Unless the Lord preserved man every moment . . . he would at once perish, for such is the endeavour of the World of Spirits.

4003. In the Interior World of Spirits, the Lord's life is received differently from what it is in Heaven . . . and so also in the lower World . . .

4217. The Antediluvians . . . are continually striving to emerge into the World of Spirits.

4230. The things that come forth in the Spiritual World . . . are turned into representations in the natural World of Spirits. Examp.

4285. That the whole World of Spirits becomes, and has become, worse and worse. Gen.art.

—². The Lord turns everything into good, but the World of Spirits is so evil that it turns everything into evil, and becomes worse and worse, so that the equilibrium is as it were on that side; and, when the World of Spirits is such, it cannot but be that man should become worse, through the inflowing World of Spirits; for in proportion as the World of Spirits is worse, the less avails the good that inflows from the Lord, and the less can man be bent to good. The World of Spirits, in the whole, is as each Spirit and man in the part . . . The World of Spirits is as a general receiving vessel; and a Spirit or a man is as a particular vessel. (28 May 1749.)

4286. The Spirits said that . . . as there is an influx from the whole evil World of Spirits, they are not in fault, and the same is true of men. (The answer to this.)

4344. The Lord thrusts no one down into Hell . . . and therefore the evil stay long in the World of Spirits; and one more slowly, and another more quickly, precipitates himself into Hell. Further ex.

4452. The (Sirens) are removed successively from their former station in the World of Spirits . . .

4461. That some are taken out of Hell into the World of Spirits for vile uses. Ex. 4471, Ex. 4472. 4625. 4627^e. 4661. 5165. 5361, Ex. 5463. 5529².

4471. Evil Souls . . . first return into their life, and then exercise their wickednesses in the World of Spirits . . .

4479. For Spirits are (at present) tolerated in the World of Spirits.

4486. Such are kept in the World of Spirits longer than others.

4573. Sirens . . . insinuate themselves with simple Spirits . . . and thus keep themselves in the World of Spirits, and can with difficulty be thrust down from it.

4580^e. Hence, communication with the World of Spirits is taken away from (these male Sirens).

4683. He told me that he saw . . . a multitude of very tumultuous Spirits . . . and in the midst an obscure something, which was said to be a man round whom they are; and it is said by the Angels that there are such things around every man, because man is the ultimate plane . . . The Spirits do not know that it is a man. He said that there were many Hells below them . . . and that those who are above, in the World of Spirits, act thus tumultuously into a sphere . . . 4686, Further des.

4849. (Magicians) cannot penetrate further than to the lowest form, which is that of the World of Spirits, and this scarcely to a ten-thousandth part.

[D.] 5162. On the World of Spirits, and those who are there. Gen.art.

— The World of Spirits is not a fixed place between Heaven and Hell; but is the state in which those are who are between Heaven and Hell. In that . . . world are (1) all those (in whom) the understanding and will do not act as a one . . . (2) all those with whom the interiors and exteriors are in disagreement . . .

5163. Man, from infancy up to adult age, is, as to his spirit, in the World of Spirits, because he is successively in diverse states, and is then in freedom, so that he can be reformed. (After this he is, as to his soul, in either Heaven or Hell. 5167.)

5169. The state called the World of Spirits, defined.

5240. All taken together [in the World of Spirits] are not extended in a plane; but are in a globe, like the Earth. 5244.

5361. See LAST JUDGMENT, here.

5529. Those who are not yet vastated . . . do not constantly turn to their reigning love . . . so that there are rotations—versurae . . . With some of those who come from the world, this lasts only a week; with some, months; with some, years, up to fifty; entirely according to their use there; for they are of service to man, and also to the rest, as Subjects. Such are said to be in the World of Spirits; and if they are cast into Hell, they return; but those who have been vastated . . . do not return . . .

5530. All the evil in the World of Spirits communicate with the Hells, but variously, according to the kind of their evil and falsity that has been confirmed by life. And the good communicate with the Heavens, in like manner . . . With these, evils are successively separated; and with the former, goods.

5935. See VASTATION, here.

D. Min. 4602. Spirits . . . who ascend . . . towards the internal ear . . . so as to observe what is going on in the World of Spirits . . . My sight would (then) be kept in the World of Spirits.

4791. Infernal Spirits who are long in the World of Spirits . . .

—^e. Therefore those in Hell are tamer . . . when they have been in the World of Spirits . . . and, when such, they see those in the World of Spirits.

E. 537². Every man is conjoined with Spirits who are in the World of Spirits, and who are such as he is himself . . .

— All Spirits, before being cast down into Hell, or elevated into Heaven, are first in the World of Spirits, and are then with men who are living in the world; the evil Spirits with the evil, and the good with the good . . .

580². 'Whatsoever goeth into the mouth passeth into the belly, and is cast out into the privy' . . . 'The belly' = the World of Spirits; and 'the privy' = Hell.

702². The Heavens are like expanses . . . and under them is the World of Spirits; and under this, the Hells . . . The World of Spirits is midway, and receives influx from both the Heavens and the Hells, each person there according to the state of his life.

732³. The New Church on earth increases according to its increase in the World of Spirits . . .

1145. The derivations of the doctrinals and worships of the Ancient Church. Sig. and Ex.

1150. External worship is said to correspond to internal when what is essential is in the worship, (that is) the adoration of the Lord from the heart, which is never possible unless there is charity . . . In this the Lord is present, and then He can be adored from the heart. (Continued under ADORE.) The nations . . . called 'sons of Japheth' lived in mutual charity . . . and therefore the Lord was present in their worship. For when the Lord is present in external worship, there is internal worship in the external, or external worship corresponding to internal. In ancient times there were very many such nations. At this day also there are those who place worship in externals, and do not know what internal worship is, or if they know, do not think about it: if these acknowledge the Lord, and love the neighbour, the Lord is in their worship . . . But if they deny the Lord, and love themselves only . . . their worship is external separated from internal . . . 1151.

1151². A Church which . . . at last placed all worship in externals, or rituals, charity being extinguished. Tr. —³.

1153². What the differences of worship are. Ex.

—³. The more sensuous a man becomes, the more exterior his worship becomes, and therefore the more remote from the true worship of the Lord . . . Tr.

1155^e. In Heaven, the differences of worship, which are innumerable, appear to the life, as they are in internals.

1158. That the worships of many nations originated from these. Sig. and Ex.

—'. 'Isles' = worship which is more remote from internal. Ill.

—³. Upright nations out of the Church that have religiously observed their external worship. Sig.

1162. Where there is no faith there is no worship, internal or external. If there is any worship it is corrupt. Sig.

1169. Those who had no internal worship, but internal Knowledge of faith. Sig. 1171.

1171. Internal worships. Sig. —³.

1175. 'Nimrod' = those who made internal worship external.

—'. Internal worship, which is from love and charity, is real worship; and external worship, without it, is no worship. To make internal worship external is to make external worship essential more than internal, which is to invert the priority, as when it is said that internal worship without external is no worship, when yet the truth is that external worship without internal is no worship.

—'. All external worship is a form of internal worship; for the internal is the very essential; and to make worship formal without its essential, is to make internal worship external; as, for example, to hold that if a person lives where there is no Church, preaching, sacraments, or priesthood, he cannot be saved, or can have no worship; when yet he may worship the Lord from the internal. But it does not follow from this that there ought not to be external worship.

—². To make the matter more evident, take the case of making the very essential of worship to consist in frequenting churches, attending the sacraments, hearing preachings, praying, observing feasts, and many other things that are external and ceremonial, and persuading themselves that these—all of which are the formal things of worship—are sufficient. . . Those who make worship from love and charity essential likewise do these things. . . very earnestly and diligently; but do not place the essential of worship in them. In their external worship there is what is holy and living, because there is internal worship in it; but (not) in that of the former. For the essential itself is what sanctifies and vivifies the formal, or ceremonial; but faith separated from charity cannot sanctify and vivify worship, because the essence and life are absent. Such worship is called 'Nimrod'; and it is born of the Knowledge which are 'Cush'; and these, of faith separated from charity, which is 'Ham.'

1179. This worship ('Nimrod') is 'mighty in hunting,' that is, is one that captivates the minds of men.

1182. Worships the externals of which appear holy, while the interiors are profane. Sig. and Ex.

—'. For the quality of the external worship is exactly in accordance with the interiors. Fully ex.

1205. For they who place worship solely in external things. . . are very prone to all these idolatries. . . In internal worship alone is there the bond that withholds from idolatry. (Continued under IDOL.)

1227°. Internal and external worship (means the same) as internal and external Church.

1238°. Afterwards a certain external worship began in Syria, which spread far and wide. . . and was different from the worship of the Ancient Church. . . The first institutor was Eber. Tr. 1241, Ex.

1264. (Thus) this chapter (Gen.x.) contains, in general, not only all the differences of worship, as to the goods of charity and the truths of faith, that were in the Ancient Church, but that are in any Church.

1283. That in course of time the internal worship of the Ancient Church was falsified and adulterated, and therefore its external worship also, for external worship is according to internal. Tr. (in Gen.xi.)

1285°. The first Ancient Church. . . was of one doctrine. . . yet its worship, both internal and external, was everywhere different. Ex. —³, Ex.

1292. That their worship became more impure and profane. Sig. and Ex.

—². For in proportion as the Church. . . recedes from charity, the worship recedes from what is holy, and approaches what is impure and profane.

1306. 'A tower' = the worship of self. (For) there is the worship of self when a man exalts himself above others, even to being worshipped. Ill. 1307. 1308, Ex.

1308. For they know that everyone wants to be in some worship; for this is common, and among all nations. For everyone, when he looks at the universe. . . acknowledges some supreme being, and, because he desires his own prosperity, adores it. Moreover there is something within which dictates this; for such a dictate inflows from the Lord. . . The man who is not such, is under the dominion of evil Spirits.

1321. When the worship of self succeeds in place of the worship of the Lord, all truth is not merely perverted, but effaced; and at last falsity is acknowledged as truth, and evil as good. Sig. and Ex.

1322°. (Such) acknowledge a doctrine and ritual harmoniously enough, but the common bond that holds them together is the worship of self. . .

1324. That. . . such worship as has in it the worship of self was not permitted to this Ancient Church. Sig. 1327°, Ex.

[A.] 1326. When the love of self . . . enters into worship, all (these) evils are in it . . . Hence comes all the profanation of worship. . . In proportion as anything from the love of self . . . is carried into worship, internal worship recedes . . . Internal worship consists in the affection of good and the acknowledgment of truth, and (these) recede in proportion as the love of self enters . . . This is why there is no internal worship with such . . . but only a dead something which is worshipped. It is therefore evident what must be the quality of their external worship . . . Such worship is 'Babel.' Ill.

1328. That there came to be no internal worship. Sig. and Ex.

1448. (The Lord's) first worship of His Father from the Celestial of love. Sig.

1454. (The Lord's) external worship of His Father from this state. Sig.

1455. His internal worship of His Father from this state. Sig. 1561.

1561^e. Worship itself is nothing but a certain activity coming forth from the Celestial that is within. The Celestial cannot exist without activity, and worship is its first activity . . .

1571. Worship is here treated of, namely, that of the internal man and that of the external, (which) did not as yet agree. The disagreement between the internal and the external man is especially known in worship, nay, in every single thing of worship; for when, in the worship, the internal man wants to regard ends of the Kingdom of God, and the external man, ends of the world, there is a disagreement which shows itself in the worship, and this so much that the least of the disagreement is noticed in Heaven. Sig. 1572.

1618. By worship in the internal sense is meant all conjunction through love and charity; a man is continually in worship while he is in love and charity; external worship is merely the effect. The Angels are in such worship, and therefore there is with them a perpetual Sabbath . . .

—². But man, while in the world, ought not to be otherwise than in external worship also; for internal things are excited by external worship, and by it also external things are kept in holiness so that internal things can inflow; besides that man is thus imbued with Knowledges, and is prepared to receive heavenly things; and is also gifted with states of holiness, of which he is unaware, which are preserved for him by the Lord for the use of eternal life . . .

1798². The life itself is the internal of all worship.

—³. The first Commandment is, 'Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God;' and he who has the life of love and charity worships Him, because this is his life. The second is, 'Thou shalt keep the Sabbath,' and he who is in the life of love . . . keeps the Sabbath holily, because nothing is sweeter to him than to worship the Lord, and to glorify Him every day.

1850⁴. This Church remaining in its external worship, like the Jews in theirs, in whose worship there is nothing of charity and faith, that is, nothing of the Church.

1947². Thus nothing is grateful to the Lord that is not free . . . spontaneous, and voluntary; for when anyone worships the Lord not from freedom, he worships from nothing of his own . . . —⁴, Ill.

2190^e. All things of a man's faith are in the Holy of his worship; and the quality of the Holy of his worship appears to the Angels as in clear day . . . myriads of myriads of his thoughts about the goods and truths of faith, and the derivative affections, are in its Holy.

2312. 'Lot' (in Gen. xix.) = the state of the Spiritual Church, which is in the good of charity, but in external worship—how in course of time it decreases. 2324. 2334.

2334². Those in external worship undergo only a light temptation.

2367. The perception of good and truth is in . . . still greater obscurity with him who is in external worship. Ex.

2373. The reason those in evil . . . reject charity more than they deny the Lord, is that they can have . . . external worship with no internal worship; that is, the worship of the lips and not of the heart; and the more they make this worship Divine and holy, the more they are in dignity and gain.

2468². Such (external) worship . . . falls to those in natural good, who despise others . . .

4680³. The representative worship of the Ancient Church. Ex. 4966.

4733. Men want to worship that of which they can have some perception and thought, and sensuous men that which they can hold by some sense, nor are they willing to worship unless what is Divine is therein. This is common to mankind. Hence Gentiles worship idols . . . and others worship men after their death . . . [A.] 6887. As the Divine Itself cannot be worshipped, because it is unapproachable . . . it is the Divine Human . . . that can be approached and worshipped. Ill.

6888. That (the Divine Human) is to be worshipped perpetually. Sig. and Ex.

6905. Thus the worship of the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

7093. That they may worship the Lord from a glad mind in the obscurity of faith in which they are. Sig. and Ex.

7245². For the worship with that nation was impure, because they worshipped external things, and utterly rejected internal things . . . Being such, their worship was impure, for they worshipped Jehovah from the love of self and the love of the world, and not from love to Him and love towards the neighbour. This worship is (here) signified.

7263. The reason these names (the 'blind,' 'lame,' 'poor,' etc.) are used in the Word, is that those in external worship were to exercise charity to the people so named; and those in internal worship, towards such spiritually understood.

7272². The evil of this worship (of the dead, and of images) is the evil of falsity.

7290. Miracles were for those in (mere) external worship . . . and are injurious to those in internal worship, that is, in charity and faith. Ex. —³.

7724. What it is to worship the Lord from good, and what to worship from truth without good. Ex. . . The veriest worship is effected from good through truth; for the Lord is present in good; whereas worship from truth without good is not worship, but only external rite and act . . . By the good from which the worship must be, is meant the good of life, which is made spiritual through conjunction with truth . . .

7882. The worship of the Lord for deliverance from damnation. Sig. and Ex. 7934. 8057.

7884. The worship of the Lord according to the order of Heaven for those of the Spiritual Church. Sig. and Ex.

—². By worship according to the order of Heaven, is meant all exercise of what is good according to the Lord's precepts. At this day, by the worship of God, is chiefly meant the worship of the lips in a place of worship, and also in the morning and the evening. But the worship of God does not essentially consist in this, but in a life of uses: this worship is according to the order of Heaven. The worship of the lips is also worship, but effects nothing at all unless there is the worship of the life, for this worship is of the heart. The former, in order to be worship, must proceed from the latter.

7899. Worship from faith and charity according to Divine order. Sig. and Ex.

8254. The veriest worship of the Lord consists in a life of charity, and not in a life of piety without it. Ex.

8271. 'I will exalt Him' = that now also Divine worship belongs to Him . . . for Divine worship consists in the exaltation of the Lord in comparison with self, which is effected according to the degree of the humiliation of self before the Lord. Humiliation is an essential of Divine worship. Ex.

8337². Musical instruments used in Divine worship. Ex.

8633. (In Jupiter) they have no solemn-festos-days, but every morning at sun-rise, and every evening at sun-set, they hold holy worship to the only Lord in their tents, and also sing psalms then.

8680. Worship from the good of love and truths of faith. Sig. and Ex.

—^e. The worship of God, in general, is founded upon love and faith, for without these there is no worship, but only rites . . .

8710^e. For 'the fear of God' = worship from the good of faith, and from the good of love. Refs.

8762. They who (in the Ancient Church) placed

Divine worship in sacrifices, and in the rites and statutes . . . were in externals; but they who at the same time placed Divine worship in the celestial and spiritual things that were represented, were in internals. And so at this day, they who place Divine worship in frequenting places of worship, in hearing preachings, attending the Holy Supper, with devotion, and think no further about them than that they are to be frequented because they have been instituted and commanded, belong to the external Church; but they who at the same time believe that such things are to be observed, but that still the essential of worship is a life of faith, that is, of charity towards the neighbour and of love to the Lord, are of the internal Church. Consequently, they are of the external Church who do good to the neighbour and worship the Lord solely from the obedience of faith; and they are of the internal Church who (do these things) from love.

8859. These precepts about sacrifices, etc. . . are external truths of worship.

9449. To perceive delight in worshipping God for His own sake (is one of the signs that sins have been remitted).

9459. The interior things of worship that were to be represented. Sig. and Ex.

9506. The hearing and reception [by the Lord] of all things of worship from the good of love. Sig. and Ex. 9513. 9518. 9682.

—. Those who have been . . . expiated, that is, cleansed from evils, are alone heard, and their worship received by the Lord; but not those in evils. Rep.

9525. The worship of the representative Church. Sig. and Ex.

9588. Hence it is that worship from freedom is pleasing to the Lord; but not worship from what is compulsory.

9710. It treats in (Ex. xxvii.) of the worship of the Lord from the good of love. This worship is signified by 'the altar,' and is described in general by all things of it. 9714. 10245.

[A.] 9717. Worship is said to be just when the good and truth that are in it are from the Lord, and not from man. Sig.

9806². Those who performed the ministry of worship were called priests . . . and as all worship is effected from good . . . 'priests' = the good itself.

9903. In all worship. Sig. and Ex. 10103.

9921. All things of doctrine and worship from good, passing to those who are of the Church. Sig. and Ex. 9922, Ex. 9924.

9925. While in worship and evangelization. Sig. and Ex.

—^e. The whole Word is Gospel, and so is all worship that was performed according to the things commanded in the Word.

9927. In every state of good and truth in worship. Sig. and Ex. . . For all things of worship with (that) nation were representative of internal worship; and internal worship is from good and truth, that is, from the affection of good and the faith of truth. 9938. 9963, Ex.

9954⁵. For the Divine enters through the good of love, and through it is present in Heaven and in the Church, and consequently in worship also; and without it the Divine is not . . . present, but the proprium of man (thus) Hell . . . Sig.

9965. The annihilation of all worship. Sig. and Ex.

9972. All who come into the other life at first have a worship like their worship in the world, but are successively removed from it. The reason of this is that all worship remains implanted in the interior of man's life, from which it cannot be removed and eradicated except gradually. Examp. D. 5776.

9993⁵. To worship the devil from the good of celestial love; and to worship Satan from the truths of faith. Sig. 10137⁷.

10022⁶. For all worship has as its end that man may be purified from evils and falsities, consequently that goods and truths may be implanted in him by the Lord, and that he may thus be regenerated. Rep. 10042⁵.

10040². There is almost the like worship with the people of the Catholic religion . . . namely, external without internal. Ex.

10133². For the good of innocence must be in all good, and thence in all truth . . . thus in all worship; for all worship, in order to be worship, must be from the good of love and the truths of faith.

10143³. When good and truth have been conjoined in a man . . . there is Divine worship in every work he does. Ex.

—³. In a word, to do according to the Lord's commandments is truly worship of Him. Ex.

—⁶. That external worship without this internal, is not worship. Sig.

10177⁷. When worship is mentioned, there is meant that Holy which is effected by prayers, adorations, confessions, and the like, which proceed from the internal things that are of love and charity.

10183. A representative of all things of worship from good. Sig.

10184. The inmost here signified . . . is the inmost of worship; for there are in worship like things to those in the man from whom the worship is, namely . . . an inmost, called celestial; a middle, called spiritual; and an external, called natural. Rep.

10198. The elevation by the Lord of worship from love and charity. Sig. and Ex.

10201. That the hearing and reception of all things of worship, is chiefly when they are in a clear state of love, and thence in the intelligence and wisdom of truth. Sig. and Ex.

10203. A man who knows not the arcana of Heaven supposes that worship is from himself, because he thinks, and adores. But the worship that is from man is not worship; but only that which is from the Lord with man. For love and faith make worship; and as these are from the Lord, so is worship. Sig. 10299².

10205. No worship from any love but the love of the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

—¹. Acknowledgment, faith, and love to the Lord are the principal things of all worship within the Church; for (these three) conjoin. Ex.

10206. Regeneration is one thing, and worship another; for regeneration is the first thing, and the worship is according to the quality of it in a man; for in proportion as a man has been purified from evils and falsities . . . worship is accepted, and is pleasing. For by worship is meant all that which proceeds from the love and faith in a man, and is elevated to the Lord by the Lord.

10242. Worship from the good of faith. Sig. and Ex.

—¹. There are two essentials of Divine worship: the good of faith, and the good of love; and Divine worship must be from either the one or the other . . .

10291. The affections of truth from good that must be in Divine worship. Sig. and Ex.

10295². As to Divine worship from celestial good, such as there is with those in the Celestial Kingdom, it is not effected by means of confessions, adorations, and prayers, as with those in the Spiritual Kingdom, thus not through truths from the memory, but through truths from the heart . . .

10298⁶. How the case is with the Divine worship that is signified by the incense of spices; namely, that the whole man is in each and all things of his worship. Fully ex.

10299². That there must be the Divine influx and operation into each and all things of worship. Sig. and Ex.

—¹. When a man is in genuine worship, the Lord inflows into the goods and truths that are in him, and elevates them to Himself, and the man with them . . .

10307. That worship from the holy truths of the Church must not be applied to man's loves. Sig. and Ex.

10308. That worship must be applied to love Divine. Sig. and Ex.

—^e. For all worship that is truly worship is from truths.

10309. The imitation of Divine worship by means of affections of truth and good from proprium. Sig. and Ex.

10370. That the very essential of the Church is the acknowledgment of the union of the Divine Itself in the Lord's Human, and that this must be in each and all things of worship. Sig. and Ex.

10397. That they betook themselves to the (mere) externals . . . of worship. Sig. and Ex.

—². He who separates the internal . . . of worship from its external, separates the holy Divine from it . . . and the body without the spirit is dead ; and to worship what is dead is to worship an idol, here, to worship a golden calf . . .

10407². For that which a man loves above all things, he worships. They indeed say that they worship the God of the universe, but . . . such are meant by those who worship the molten calf.

10408. 'These be thy gods, O Israel' = that which is to be worshipped above all things.

10411⁶. Where the heart is, there is the worship.

10412. (Such) want to be worshipped as a god.

10414⁶. For that is worshipped which is loved ; and love worships.

—⁶. For the end of all worship is communication with Heaven, and thereby the conjunction of the Lord with man. Tr.

10459. Infernal worship that was according to the delight of the external loves of that nation, and its consequent interior festivity. Sig. and Ex.

10497. The duration of such worship even until the end of the Church. Sig. and Ex.

10503. That they worship infernal delight. Sig. and Ex.

10505. That the internal . . . of worship should not perish. Sig. and Ex.

10525. Instruction about the quality of the worship . . . with the Israelitish nation. Sig. and Ex.

10570². The Divine truths revealed in the Word make worship internal, if they are known and lived ; for if a man could worship God holily without them, there would be no need of any doctrine of the Church, or of any preaching.

10571. That the Divine will be in the external . . . of worship with that nation. Sig. and Ex.

10583. The closing of the internal . . . of worship that was upon their external. Sig. and Ex.

10584. That the externals . . . of worship will be seen, but not the internals. Sig. and Ex.

10600. The transparency of the Divine internal . . .

of worship through their external, but not before that nation. Tr.

10603. 'The two tables' = the external . . . of worship, as it was for the sake of that nation. Ex.

— . For the worship is from the Word ; for all the truth of faith, and good of love, that make . . . worship, must be from the Word ; consequently, as there is an external and an internal in the Word . . . so there is an external and an internal in worship.

10607. Moses, here = that external . . . of worship which receives Divine truth.

10609. 'Mount Horeb' = the external . . . of worship.

10615. The worship of the Lord from the truths and goods of faith and love, and thus preparation for reception. Sig. and Ex.

10625. Worship from humiliation. Sig. and Ex.

10643. The Ancients held their worship chiefly on mountains, on hills, and in groves, and set statues there. Ex.

10644⁶. That the Ancient Church held worship in groves, and in gardens under trees, according to their signification. Ref.

10645. That the Lord alone is to be worshipped from faith and love. Sig. and Ex.

— . For the worship of the Lord is either from faith, or from love. Worship according to truths is called worship from faith . . . and worship from good is called worship from love . . . Those in the Spiritual Kingdom worship Him from faith ; and those in the Celestial Kingdom worship Him from love.

—². Many suppose that they worship the Lord by faith when they believe the things of the doctrine of the Church, and that they worship the Lord by love when they love Him ; but the Lord is not worshipped by merely believing and loving, but by living according to His commandments. Ex.

[A.] 10646. That if any other is worshipped, Divine good and Divine truth recede. Sig. and Ex.

—³. (From) its being said that the Lord alone is to be worshipped, he who does not know how the case is with the worship of the Lord, might believe that the Lord loves to be worshipped . . . But the Divine love is to want worship . . . not for its own sake, but for the sake of the man and his salvation ; for he who worships the Lord, and gives the glory to Him, is in humiliation, and proprium recedes from him who is in humiliation, and in proportion as this recedes, the Divine is received . . . This is the Lord's glory, and the worship of Him is for the sake of this end. W.335².

10653. The worship of self and not of the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

—^e. Such worship exists with those who regard the holy things of the Church as means, and dominion as the end.

10655. The worship of the Lord, and thanksgiving, for deliverance from evil and the falsities of evil. Sig. and Ex.

10683. Thereby conjunction with those in external and internal worship. Sig. and Ex.

—². In the internal . . . of worship are those who love to do truth from . . . spiritual affection. In the external . . . of worship in which there is an internal, are those who love truth for the sake of truth, but from . . . natural affection . . . But those in external worship without internal, are those who love truth . . . for the sake of gains in the world . . .

10685. Temptations before the internal . . . of worship exists. Sig. and Ex.

10689. Influx of the internal into the external . . . of worship. Sig. and Ex.

10701. That the internal . . . of worship did not appear to the Israelitish nation, but only the external without an internal. Sig. and Ex.

10707^e. Hence, such as is a man's understanding of the Word . . . such is his worship.

10711. (In the Fourth Earth) the common people worship an old man with a beard . . . but the more intelligent worship God.

10725. In (Ex. xxxv.) it treats of all the kinds of good and truth, in the Church and in Heaven, from which is the worship of the Lord.

10833. Divine worship in the Sixth Earth. Des. (Preaching every thirtieth day.)

H. 56. The variety (in Heaven) of the worship of the Lord . . . is an advantage ; for it is the source of perfection to internals. Ex.

221. On Divine worship in Heaven. Chapter.

—^e. Divine worship in the Heavens, as to externals, is not unlike Divine worship on earth ; but it differs as to internals. Des. 223. J.1².

222. But the real Divine worship in the Heavens does not consist in frequenting places of worship, and in hearing preachings ; but in a life of love, charity, and faith according to the doctrines . . .

—^e. In the world, Divine worship is believed to consist in . . . The Angels said that these are external things that ought to be done ; but are of no avail unless there is an internal . . .

327^e. Worshippers of self and the world. Des.

506. The holy internal in which real worship truly consists.

553. When others praise, reverence, and worship them . . . 556^e. 587².

N. 124. Divine worship consists, primarily, in a life of charity, and secondarily in a life of piety.

125^e. External worship without internal may be compared to the life of the respiration without that of the heart ; but external worship from internal, to (these two) conjoined.

J. 50². After death, all . . . are first brought to those whom they had worshipped in the world . . .

55⁴. (The Papists) place all worship in a holy external without an internal . . .

56³. Therefore (in the Spiritual World) they have . . . especially a like worship, because this is inrooted in a man's inmosts, nor can anyone be withdrawn from it after death, unless he is in good from truths, and in truths from good. This (Babylonish) nation can be withdrawn from their worship with greater difficulty than all others . . .

—⁶. Their worship there is almost like their worship here ; it consists in masses, etc. Des.

C. J. 16. See LAST JUDGMENT, here.

L. 64. 'Jerusalem' = the Church as to worship . . . for worship is prescribed in doctrine, and is performed according to it.

S. 23³. The gold, frankincense and myrrh (offered to the Lord) = celestial, spiritual, and natural good, from which three is all worship.

116^e. If a doctrine of worship were hatched from rational lumen only, self would be worshipped, as has been done . . . From the proprium of man no other worship is possible, not even that of the sun and moon.

Life 30. That unless a man shuns evils, all things of his worship are not good. Ill.

W. 157^e. This is why the worship of the sun is the lowest of all the worships of God.

P. 136⁴. Compulsory worship shuts evils in . . . (See ENGLAND, here.)

137. (Thus) compulsory worship is corporeal, inanimate, obscure, and sad worship. Ex. . . But worship not compulsory, when genuine, is spiritual, living, lucid, and glad worship. Ex.

249. That a worshipper of self and a worshipper of nature confirms himself against the Divine Providence . . . 250. 251. 252.

250. If he has any thought of God from the worship initiated from infancy . . . in the worship there is hidden . . . that he may be raised to higher dignities and greater wealth ; and if he attains these, his worship departs more and more to the exteriors, until . . . at last he holds God cheap and denies Him . . .

328^e. Thus arose in the Churches the worship of men in place of the worship of God ; and worship from doctrines of falsity in place of worship from doctrines of truth . . .

R. 107. There are two kinds of men of whom the Christian Church at this day for the most part consists: they who are in works alone . . . and they who are in worship alone . . . The latter are treated of in the things written to the Church in Sardis.

111. That still [the former] have religion, and worship according to it . . . Sig. and Ex.

154. 'To the Angel of the Church in Sardis write' = . . . those in dead worship, that is, worship devoid of the goods of charity, and the truths of faith. . . By dead worship is meant worship alone, which is to frequent places of worship, hear the preachings, attend the Holy Supper, read the Word and books of piety, speak of God, of Heaven and Hell, of the life after death, and pray morning and evening; and still not to long to know the truths of faith, nor to want to do the goods of charity, believing that they have salvation through worship alone; when yet worship without truths and a life according to them, is only an external sign of charity and faith, within which there may lie hidden evils and falsities of every kind, unless there are charity and faith in it. Genuine worship is of these . . .

159. In order that the things of their worship may receive life, and not be extinguished. Sig. and Ex. . . (For) dead worship, in the external form, is exactly like living worship . . . so that those in dead worship need but to learn truths and live them.

160. That the interiors of their worship have not been conjoined with the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

— Dead, or solely external worship, effects the presence of the Lord, but not conjunction; whereas external worship in which the interiors are living, effects both presence and conjunction. Ex.

161. (For) all worship is natural in its beginning, and afterwards becomes spiritual through truths from the Word and a life according to them. Sig. and Ex.

164. That otherwise the things of worship will be taken away, and they will not know when and how. Sig. and Ex.

— For there is something of good in dead worship, because they are thinking about God, and eternal life . . . but evils and falsities take it away like a thief . . .

165. That among them are some who have life in their worship. Sig. and Ex.

249. That the Word ascribes all . . . worship to the Lord who will judge. Sig. and Ex.

277. For there are two kinds of good, from which is all worship. Ex. and Sig.

376. For . . . in all Divine worship the man first wills, desires, and prays, and then the Lord answers and does; otherwise the man does not receive anything Divine. Ill.

392. Spiritual worship, which is from the good of charity through the truths of faith. Sig. and Ex.

459. That thus they are in worship from mere falsities. Sig. and Ex.

659. The furthest boundary of the Spiritual World, where were gathered together those who had religion, and worship from it, but no good of life. Sig. and Ex.

777. That they no longer have worship from spiritual goods and truths, because they have nothing within their worship that corresponds . . . Sig. and Ex.

— The things of doctrine have been premised, and those of worship now follow, because the quality of the worship is from the goods and truths of the doctrine; for worship is only an external act, in which there must be internals, that are of doctrine. Without these, the worship is devoid of its essence, life, and soul. . . (Therefore there are here mentioned) the spiritual things of worship . . . the celestial things of worship . . . and the natural things of worship . . . and that all these goods and truths of worship must be from the Word . . . This is the series of things in the spiritual sense. 778. 780.

778. That they no longer have worship from celestial truths and goods . . . Sig. and Ex.

— For the goods and truths of doctrine are in worship as the soul is in the body; and therefore worship without them is lifeless worship . . .

780. That they no longer have worship from the natural goods and truths of the Church . . . Sig. and Ex.

858. That those meant by 'the dragon' would draw to their party all . . . in the World of Spirits who have lived there in external natural worship only, and in no internal spiritual worship, and would stir them up against those who have worshipped the Lord . . . Sig. and Ex.

859. That those in external worship, and not in any internal worship, are meant by 'Gog and Magog.' Ex. and Ill.

M. 3⁶. Eternal happiness supposed to consist in the perpetual Glorification of God . . . and most blessed worship . . . (The fallacy of this shown by experiment. 9.)

23. The worship of God in Heaven. Des.

155. It has therefore been provided . . . that celibacy exist only with those who are in external worship, in which they are because they do not approach the Lord, or read the Word.

B. 51. That from the faith of the modern Church there results a worship of the lips, and not of the life; when yet the worship of the lips is accepted by the Lord according to the worship of the life. Gen.art.

T. 457. They who are only in the worship of God, and not at the same time in good works from charity. Des.

667². These two sacraments, regarded in the spiritual sense, are the most holy things of worship. 709².

D. 3741. On those who despise the Word, and Divine worship.

4099. That external worship is null except from internal things.

4535. Hence many worships and varieties matter little if there is charity in all.

5899. Such cats are those who have been in external worship, and have lived morally . . . but have not attended at all to what was preached . . .

D. Min. 4615. That the worship of God [with many] is an external matter.

E. 126². Most suppose that they are to come into Heaven solely by holy worship . . . The holy worship (of such) does not proceed from any spiritual origin . . . and worship that proceeds from what is empty is mere natural posture . . . Their holy worship . . . repels Heaven from them, instead of opening it to them . . . for their holy worship is like a vessel that contains foul things . . . I have seen thousands of such cast into Hell.

— But quite different is the holy worship . . . with those who are in the Knowledges of truth and good and a life according to them. With such, these things are pleasing to the Lord, for they are effects of their spirit in the body . . . and so are not natural postures, but spiritual acts.

182¹. The worship, etc. of such in places of worship are either the result of habit . . . or from the principle that such external things are all that is necessary to salvation, or are a consequence of the cessation of their business at home and abroad on holy days, or of the fear of being regarded as irreligious by their associates. But with those who live a moral life from a spiritual origin, the worship is quite different; for it is truly the worship of God; for their prayers are elevated to Heaven, and are heard, because the Lord leads their prayers through Heaven to Himself.

248^e. Those also err who believe that they can dispose themselves for influx by prayers, adorations, and the externals of worship: these things are of no effect unless the man abstains from thinking and doing evils; and, through truths from the Word, as of himself, leads himself to good as to the life. If a man does these things, he then does dispose himself, and then his prayers, adorations, and external things of worship are of avail before the Lord.

277^e. Hereafter . . . the Heavens cannot be approached by the worship and prayers of those who are in faith alone . . . Their worship is no longer received . . . but attention is paid solely to their life's love; and therefore if the love of self and of the world reigns, they are conjoined with the Hells, no matter how they may be in external worship.

316²⁷. All worship that is truly worship is effected from the good of love through truths. Rep.

324⁵. (Nadab and Abihu's act, represented) worship from some other love than love to the Lord.

325³. Worship from spiritual good. Ex. . . Worship does not consist in prayers and external devotion, but in the life of charity. Ex. . . (Thus) the essential of worship is the life of charity, and its instrumental is posture and praying; that is, the primary of worship is the life of charity, and its secondary is praying. Ex. —⁵.

—⁴. (Thus) actual piety is real worship.

340²⁶. To worship God in externals, and yet to reject all truth. Sig.

—^e. To worship God from such things as represent spiritual good, and yet to love evil and falsity. Sig.

391². By worship is not meant external worship only, but also internal worship; and internal worship comprehends everything of love and of faith . . .

—¹⁰. For all worship is either from love, or from faith; either from good, or from truth; worship from the good of love is such as is in the Celestial Kingdom; and worship from the truths from this good . . . is such as is in the Spiritual Kingdom. (Sig. by 'the altar,' and 'the temple,')

—¹¹. Worship from the delight of good. Sig.

400⁹. For external worship has everything from internal worship . . .

405²⁷. The worship of the Lord from truths that are from good. Sig.

419³. For all worship, confession, and prayer must be from truths and from goods: in order to be heard they must be from both . . .

478³. 'To serve Him day and night in His temple' does not mean that they are continually . . . in worship and prayers; for this is not the case in the Heavens. Fully ex.

502⁴. For Divine truth descending from Heaven produces the gladness and holiness of worship. Sig. —⁷.

630. That the external . . . of worship is not to be explored. Sig. and Ex.

— What signifies the Church, signifies . . . worship also. Ex.

—². The Word, and worship, are exactly as are Heaven and the Church. Ex.

696. All who worship the Lord from every religion. Sig. and Ex.

—². Those who worship the Lord less, or more. Sig. and Ex.

—⁴. 'To fear' the Lord = to worship and revere Him, because in worship, and in all things of it, there is a holy and reverential fear. Ex.

—⁶. All the worship of Jehovah God must be from the good of love through truths. Worship that is from the good of love alone is not worship, neither is worship that is from truths alone . . . For the good of love is the essential of worship, but good comes into existence and is formed through truths; and therefore all worship must be through truths, from good. —¹⁰, Sig.

—¹¹. 'The fear of Jehovah' = the internal spiritual worship that must be in the external natural worship. Internal spiritual worship is to think and understand truths, thus to think reverently and holily about God . . . and external natural worship is to do truths. Sig.

700². For all the worship of God passes through the Heavens up to the Lord, and is purified on the way, until it is elevated to the Third Heaven, and there it is heard and received by the Lord; everything else, being impure, is wiped off on the way. Rep.

—³⁵. That there would no longer be external worship, but internal. Sig.

799. Every doctrine of the Church, and worship therefrom. Sig. and Ex.

939^e. That all things of worship are utterly evil, nay, abominable, unless the interior has been purified from evils. Sig.

942. The worship of the Lord from the good of love. Sig. and Ex.

943. The worship of the Lord from the truths from that good. Sig. and Ex.

1150. Worship from celestial love, profaned. Sig. and Ex.

1151. Worship from spiritual love, profaned. Sig. and Ex.

1152. Worship from truths and goods that are from a celestial origin, profaned. Sig. and Ex.

1153. Worship from truths and goods that are from a spiritual origin, profaned. Sig. and Ex.

J. (Post.) 243. They who worship the Lord from love, worship Him from all the truths of faith, so that the more truths there are, the fuller and more acceptable is the worship. Ex.

C. 173. That the signs of charity are all things that are of worship. Chapter.

— . All things of worship are externals of the body, and externals of the mind. Ex.

174. The externals of the body which belong to worship are, 1. Frequenting places of worship. 2. Hearing preachings. 3. Singing devoutly, and praying on the knees. 4. Attending the sacrament of the Supper. Also, at home, 1. Praying morning and evening, and also at dinner and supper. 2. Speaking with others about charity and faith, and about God, Heaven, eternal life, and salvation. 3. With priests, preaching, and also teaching in private. 4. With everyone, instructing children and servants about such things. 5. Reading the Word, and books of instruction and of piety.

175. The externals of the mind which belong to worship, are 1. Thinking and meditating about God, Heaven, eternal life, and salvation. 2. Reflecting upon one's thoughts and intentions, as to whether they are evil or good . . . 3. Being averse in one's mind to speech about impious, obscene, and filthy things. 4. Besides thoughts, there are also affections that come to the sight and sense of a man.

Wrap. Obvolvere.

Covering. Obvolutio.

H. 577². The evil of the spirit . . . wrapped up in external probity . . .

E. 331². 'The covering that is cast over all peoples' (Is.xxv.7)=the shades that have covered the understanding.

Wrath. Excandescencia.

Grow hot. Excandescere.

A. 3614. See ANGER, here. —². —³. —⁵. 6343³. 6997⁵. 7791. 8875. S.84. T.134². E.481^e. 887.

5360². This state (of desolation and vastation) is called 'the day of His wrath and vengeance,' etc.

6359. 'Their wrath, for it was hard' (Gen.xlix.7)=a turning away from truth, which was confirmed; for 'wrath,' being predicated of truth,=a turning away from it.

8284. 'Thou sendest forth Thy wrath' (Ex.xv.7)=the fury of cupidities, and the endeavour to inflict violence, with the evil. For 'wrath,' when attributed to the Lord,=the destruction and punishment of the endeavours of those who oppose themselves to the Divine, and who want to inflict violence on those whom the Divine protects. This appears as if the anger and wrath were from the Divine, and yet it is in themselves. Refs.

9144². Hence a man is said to grow hot, when he is angry.

L. 5. By 'the day of wrath,' etc. is meant the advent of the Lord to Judgment.

P. 309. They grew so hot that a flame appeared from their nostrils.

340^e. In the heat of his faith he may say . . .

R. 216². With the Lord, zeal is not wrath; it only appears so . . .

635. 'The cup of His wrath' (Rev.xiv.10)=the truth through which is good.

—². In the Word, 'anger' and 'wrath' are frequently mentioned together, and then . . . 'wrath' is predicated of falsity, because . . . those in falsity grow hot. Ill.

M. 358. Therefore, if the love . . . is touched . . . and the touch hurts, there ensues wrath.

T. 146². Regarded in itself, zeal is a violent heating of the natural man.

593². Unless it is regenerated, it is nothing but . . . wrath against all things of faith.

2311. How the Word differs from all other writing—scriptio. 3954^e.

2760². 'A name written' (Rev. xix. 16) = the quality of the Word in the internal sense. (Compare R. 830.)

3179^e. The books of the Ancient Church were written in this way; and this manner of writing—scribendi—spread from them to the Gentiles; for it was their desire to express, by things in the world, those which are in Heaven.

4442². In the manner of writing among the Ancients . . . it was common to introduce Things as if speaking together . . .

—³. This is why the Word was written in such (a representative) style. But the Word has this peculiarity over the writings—scriptis—of the Ancients: that each of the subjects represents, in a continuous series, the celestial and spiritual things of the Lord's Kingdom; and, in the supreme sense, the Lord Himself.

5224². That the care of the Ancients was for (internal) things, is evident from their writings—scriptis—which survive to this day.

6516². There are writings in the Spiritual World also, which I have sometimes seen, and been able to read, but not to understand. Des. H. 258, Ex. D. 5102³, Ex.

8620. 'Write this memorial in a book' (Ex. xvii. 14) = in perpetual memory . . . 'To write in a book' = to be perpetually remembered. Ill.

9353. The reason the Word could be written—con-scribi—in our Earth, is that the art of writing has existed here since the most ancient time; first upon wooden tablets—codicibus, then upon parchments, afterwards upon papers, and finally in print. This has been provided by the Lord for the sake of the Word.

9386. 'Moses wrote all the words of Jehovah' (Ex. xxiv. 4) = an imprinting on the life; for 'to write' = to imprint on the life. Ex.

9411. When those in enlightenment read the Word, they see the Lord . . . This takes place in no other writing—scriptio.

9416². The writing and engraving on tables, in the Word, = the things which must be impressed on the memory and the life, and thus be permanent. Ill.

9418. 'Which I will write to teach them' (ver. 12) = for remembrance and instruction; for 'to write' = for remembrance; and 'to write to teach' = for instruction.

9942⁴. This (made-up representative history) was the manner of writing in the most ancient times, not only with those who belonged to the Church, but also with those outside the Church, as the Arabians, Syrians, and Greeks, as is evident from the books of those times, both sacred and profane. Examps.

10336³. 'To write the law on the heart' (Jer. xxxi. 33) = to impart Divine truth to the will.

10453. 'The writing was the writing of God, cut out upon the tables' (Ex. xxxii. 16) = the internal sense of the Word from the Divine, and the Divine truth. 10376. 10604.

—³. That the writing (on the second set of tables) was still the writing of God, involves an arcanum. Ex.

[A.] 10505. 'Which Thou hast written' (ver. 32) = what is from the Lord therein; for 'to write,' when said of the Lord, = what is there from the Lord.

10682. 'Write for thee these words' (Ex. xxxiv. 27) = instruction concerning the primary truths that are to be remembered and done. . . 'To write' = for remembrance that it is to be done.

259. That there are writings in the Heavens, has been provided by the Lord for the sake of the Word. Ex.

260. A paper sent me from Heaven on which were some words written in Hebrew letters. Des. D. 4671. 5578.

—². The writing in the Inmost Heaven consists of various inflected and circumflected forms, (which) are according to the form of Heaven. By these the Angels express the arcana of their wisdom, and also many things they cannot utter in words; and the Angels know this writing without art or a teacher; it is implanted in them . . . so that this writing is heavenly writing. The reason it is implanted, is that all the extension of the thoughts and affections . . . moves according to the form of Heaven, and this is why their writing flows into that form. 261, Further ex. S. 90².

—³. The Most Ancients also had such writing, before letters were invented . . .

261. But there are no such writings in the lower Heavens; the writings in these Heavens are like the writings in the world, with similar letters, but still not intelligible to man, because they are in the angelic language . . . This writing involves more in a few words than a man can describe in several pages. I have seen these writings also. They have the Word written—conscriptum—in this way in the lower Heavens, and by means of the heavenly forms in the inmost Heaven.

262. The writings in the Heavens flow naturally from their very thoughts, and this so easily that it is as if the thought threw itself out. The hand does not hesitate in the choice of a word, because the words . . . they write correspond to the ideas of their thought . . .

—^c. There are also writings in the Heavens made without the aid of the hand, from the mere correspondence of the thoughts; but these are not permanent.

263. I have also seen writings from Heaven written—exaratis—of mere numbers in order and series, just as in writings of letters and words . . . This writing is from the Inmost Heaven; and their heavenly writing, spoken of above, is presented in numbers with the Angels of a lower Heaven, when the thought from it flows down; and this numerical writing in like manner involves arcana, some of which cannot be comprehended in thought, or expressed in words. —^c, Further ex.

461². A Spirit who is delighted with studies, reads and writes as before.

W. 295². There is nothing of spiritual writing that is like natural writing, except the letters, each of which [however] contains an entire meaning. . . Yet they seem to themselves . . . to write in the spiritual state just as man does in the natural . . .

361. When a man is writing, he comprehends (this) still less, because his thought then communicates with the Sensuous . . . This is why some people can think and speak well, but cannot write well, as is common with the female sex.

—³. Hence many of the learned . . . especially those who have written much, have weakened . . . their common perception . . .

R. 20². In the Spiritual World every alphabetical letter signifies some Thing . . . from this origin is spiritual and angelic speech, and also writing . . . Each letter . . . has a meaning, in both speech and writing.

193. 'I will write upon him the name of My God' (Rev. iii. 12) = that the Divine truth will be written on—inscriptum erit—their hearts. 'To write upon anyone' = to inscribe so that it may be in him as his. (= Divine truth implanted in the life. E. 222.)

473. 'I was about to write . . . I heard a voice . . . Write them not' (Rev. x. 4) = that these things . . . are not (as yet) received. . . 'To write,' in the natural sense, = to commit to paper, and thus to posterity, for remembrance; but in the spiritual sense, it = to commit to the heart, for reception. (= that he wanted to disclose that state, but there was a command . . . that they be reserved. E. 603, 604.)

613. 'Written in their foreheads' (Rev. xiv. 1) = acknowledgment from love and faith. By 'written,' or inscribed, is signified the acknowledgment in them. E. 852.

5561. In the Spiritual Heaven there is writing like the writing in the world, in Roman letters; but quite unintelligible to those in the natural world, for the language is quite different . . .

5562. In the Celestial Heaven, however, they have not such writing, but the letters are different, being almost like the Hebrew ones . . .

5563. They also write letters to others, and to other places, which I have seen.

5578. On the writing of the celestial Angels. Gen.art.

5579. The writing in the Celestial Kingdom is entirely different from that in the Spiritual Kingdom. In the Spiritual Kingdom the writing is done with words written in a speech like that of the world, but the words in it are from their natural or universal language . . . I have frequently seen such words in Roman letters, but while in the natural sphere I understood nothing . . . But the writing of the celestials is quite different. It consists of various curves-inflexionibus . . . and each curvature means something; and in this way they express, in one such form, more than can be expressed by very many words in the spiritual language; and after all [in the latter, they express] only some exterior things. This writing the celestial Angels know perfectly well how to write and read, and that without any previous instruction.

5580. [The celestials] had seen the spiritual writing, and had understood it according to the spiritual meaning, but had also understood other things from the mere curvings of the syllables, and which the spiritual Angels . . . had not understood . . .

5581. When writing first commenced, the Ancients wrote in that way . . . The Hebrew language approaches it in some measure . . .

5582. In other writings (than those of the Word, there are not heavenly things in the very syllables) but only in those which are from the Divine . . . In the common spiritual writing that is not from the Divine, something is indeed hidden, but not according to correspondence.

5583. Such writing . . . is according to the form of Heaven . . . The celestial Angels know perfectly well . . . in what way good proceeds to this or that quarter . . . Hence is their writing . . . When the Angels see any Spirit walking below them, they instantly perceive . . . from the bendings of his way, of . . . what he is thinking . . . from which it was evident to me that the curvings of their writings-scriptionum-are according to the form of Heaven. No one can learn by art to walk according to the heavenly form, and to write according to the heavenly writing.

6042. When (Melancthon) prays to God, something inflows from Heaven as if dictated, which he writes, but when he reads it afterwards he does not understand it. (Compare J.(Post.)28.)

6063. On writings . . . in the Spiritual World.—That the writing there is quite different from (what it is) here, is evident from, 1. That while anyone is writing there, a single letter means an entire word. (For example, each letter in the word bono. Ex.) 2. All the vowels mean something that conjoins, such as with, in, and so on. 'I' means what is from within . . .

—^e. When in a natural state they understand nothing of their own writing. J.(Post.)324.

6090^e. Their writing differs from their language.

D. Min. 4562. (Paul) seems to himself to have with him a paper, and whatever he observes, he writes down—inscribit. The way in which he writes—inscribit—was shown me, namely, by lines drawn round to the ends. Perhaps such writing, with them, answers to their language. This is allowed him in order that such things as are to be observed may be the better impressed on his memory.

4830. On writings in the other life.

E. 222². That 'to write' upon anyone—to implant in the life, is because to write is to commit to paper from the memory, thought, and mind that which is to permanently remain; and therefore in the spiritual sense it—that which will permanently remain in the life of a man, being inscribed and implanted in it.

—As 'to write'—to implant in the life, it is said of the Lord that He 'writes,' and 'has written in a book,' by which is meant that which has been inscribed by Him on the spirit of a man . . . Ill. 223¹⁷, 299.

—³. 'I will write it on their heart' (Jer.xxxi.33)=to impress on the love.

—⁶. To be 'written on the earth' (Jer.xvii.13)=to be condemned on account of the state of life. . . The Lord's writing on the ground (John viii.)=the like. —⁷. 483⁹.

635³. 'Search the Scriptures, for . . . they are they which testify of Me' (John v.39). The Holy Scripture, or Word, is the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord; and the proceeding Divine is the Lord Himself in Heaven and in the Church; and therefore when it is said that 'the Scriptures testify of Him' it is meant that the Lord Himself does so of Himself.

825³. When a man shuns these evils because they are contrary to the Word . . . he is daily taught by the Lord . . . what he must preach, or what he must write . . . but not by any dictate, or perceptible inspiration, but by an influx into his spiritual delight, from which he has perception according to the truths of which his understanding consists.

898. 'Write' (Rev.xiv.13)=certainty . . . for what is said from Heaven, and is commanded to be written, is like what has been endorsed—scriptum erat; thus is true, and therefore certain. . . That 'to write'=certainty, is because writing—scriptio—is the ultimate act of the thought and derivative discourse . . .

1183². What has come from the Lord has been written; what has come from the Angels has not been written.

J. (Post.) 324. (Spirits and Angels) write with letters and marks, but it differs so much from the writing in the world that there is nothing exactly the same except the letters and some points.

—^e. They write also by many signs, so that the wiser an Angel is, the more things he understands in wisdom. The Word is written in this way.

De Verbo 3⁵. The unlimited difference between the Natural, the Spiritual, and the Celestial is evident from . . . the difference of their writings—scripturionum.

—⁷. The writing of the spiritual Angels, as to the letters, is like the writing of men in the world, but each letter means a Thing, so that you would say, if you saw it in a natural state, that it is mere letters. But the writings in the highest Heaven are not the same as to the letters: they have letters set forth by various curvatures, not unlike those of the Hebrew language, but everywhere bent, and nothing merely linear in them. Each letter involves a Thing, the perception of which they have from affection, and not from thought. Hence it is that a natural person comprehends nothing from spiritual writing, nor a spiritual person from natural; nor does a spiritual person comprehend anything from celestial writing, nor a celestial person from spiritual writing, except together with a spiritual person.

14¹. The spiritual Word, and the celestial Word, differ also as to the writing: the writing of the spiritual Word is made of letters like the printed ones of our world, but each letter has a meaning: so that if you were to see that writing, you would not understand a single word; for there is one letter next another in a continuous series, with little lines and points above and below; for it is written according to the spiritual speech . . .

—². But the writing of the celestial Word is made of letters unknown in the world. (Fully quoted under LETTER.)

—Such was the writing with the Most Ancients. In some things it agrees with the Hebrew writing, but only a little. By such writing the affections . . . are expressed, and therefore it involves more arcana than they themselves can utter . . .

26². How (the spiritual Angels) write 'horses harnessed to a chariot.' They said that they write merely the letter 'l,' which expresses it. How they write

'the understanding of doctrine.' They said, In like manner by 'I,' but they are then in a higher thought . . .

D. Love xv. A man is in external thought . . . when writing.

D. Wis. vii. 5³. Although the writing (of the Angels), as to its letters, is like the writing of the men of this world, no man . . . could understand it. Every consonant is a complete meaning, and every vowel is an affection. The vowels are not written, but pointed.

Inv. 51. The sayings of Scripture, by which Truths are confirmed, ascend into Heaven. They are like smoke from a censer.

Xavier. Xaverius.

C. J. 65. I spoke with one who was said to be Xavier. (His lot.)

D. Min. 457^o. Francis Xavier, the second father of the Jesuits, appeared deep under the buttocks. He was a still more subtle magician (than Anthony), operating profanely through conjugal love and innocence . . . Perhaps it is another. 4603^o. J.(Post.) 66.

A. 37. 'The luminaries shall be . . . for days, and for years' (Gen.i.14). . . There are alternations of spiritual and celestial things, in the universal, and in the singulars, that are compared to the alternations of days and years . . . those of years are from spring to summer, then to autumn, and through winter to spring . . .

452. The 'years,' and numbers of 'years,' that occur in (Gen.v.). Ex.

—². 'The midst of the years' (Hab.iii.2)=the advent of the Lord . . .

—³. 'Years'=states. 2636.

486. 'Years' (Gen.v.4)=times and states in special. 487.

488. That 'days'=states in general; and 'years,' states in special. Ill. 493.

515^o. The number of 'years' does not=the period of the life of any man; but the times and states of the Church.

893. Any whole period is designated in the Word by 'a day,' 'week,' 'month,' or 'year,' even though it be a hundred or a thousand years . . . for, in the internal sense, 'a day,' and 'a year'=nothing but time; and, from time, state; and therefore 'a year,' in the Word, is used for time and state. Ill.

1329. 'A hundred years' (Gen.xi.10)=the state of that Church at the beginning. (=in general. 1332.)

1335. 'Two years after the flood' (id.)=the second post-diluvian Church; for 'a year,' in the Word . . . =an entire period, less or greater, of fewer or of more years.

1336. 'Years'=duration and state. 1341. 1344. 1346. 1347. 1348. 1350. 1352. 1354. 1375.

2906. 'The years of the lives of Sarah' (Gen.xxiii.1) =while any truth Divine remained; for 'a year'=an entire period of the Church from beginning to end; thus 'years'=periods. —², Ill.

—². 'The year of the good pleasure of Jehovah' (Is.lxi.2); 'the year of My redeemed' (lxi.4); and 'the year of visitation' (Jer.xi.23)=the time of a new Church, (and the Lord's advent.) E. 295⁷. 413^o. —⁷. 612⁵.

—³. 'In the posterity of years' (Ezek.xxxviii.8)=the last time of the Church, which then becomes no Church.

—⁴. 'Thou art come unto thy years' (Ezek.xxii.4) =to the end, when the Lord withdraws from the Church.

—⁵. 'Within three years' (Is.xvi.14)=the end of the former Church.

—⁵. 'Seventy years' (Is.xxiii.15)=the entire period, from the time when the Church began, until it expires.

—⁶. That 'a year,' and also 'years'=the entire period of a Church, or the time of its duration. Ill.

[A.2906.] 'As in ancient years' (Mal.iii.4)=the Ancient Church.

—7. That 'a year,' and 'years'=the full time of a Church. Ill.

—8. As 'a year,' and 'years,' when predicated of the . . . Church=the full time between the two limits, which are the beginning and the end, so they=what is eternal when predicated of the Lord's Kingdom in Heaven. Ill.

—10. The Angels can have no idea of a year; but as a year, in nature, is a fulness of time . . . therefore, instead of a year they have the idea of what is full in relation to the state of the Church, and of what is eternal in relation to the state of Heaven. Times, to them, are states.

3251. 'The days of the years of the life of Abraham' (Gen.xxv.7)=a state representative of the Lord as to the Divine Itself . . .

3405. 'In that year' (Gen.xxvi.12)=the entire state here treated of.

3469. 'Forty years'=states of temptation.

3814. When 'a year,' etc. is mentioned in the singular number, it=an entire state, thus the end of a preceding, and the beginning of a subsequent, state.

3824. 'I will serve thee seven years' (Gen.xxix.18)=study, and then a holy state. . . 'Years'=states.

4168. 'These twenty years have I been with thee' (Gen.xxxi.38)= . . . states of the proprium.

4670. 'A son of seventeen years' (Gen.xxxvii.2)=the state of (the Lord's Divine spiritual Human). Ex.

5265. 'The seven good kine are seven years' (ver.26)=states of the multiplication of truth in the interior Natural. 5266. 5268.

5275. 'There come seven years' (ver.29)=states of Providence.

5277. 'Seven years of famine' (ver.30)=the states that follow when there is a failing of truth. 5360. 5893. 5894.

5292. 'In the seven years of plenty' (ver.34)=in those times when truths with goods were multiplied. 'Years'=states, and therefore also times. . . The reason 'years'= . . . times also, is that in the internal sense, 'years'=entire states, that is, entire periods, from the beginning of a state, to the end; and these periods cannot be expressed otherwise than by times, nor apprehended, by those who are in time, except as times. 5294. (Compare 5339. 5340.)

5335. 'Joseph was a son of thirty years' (ver.46)=a full state of remains. . . 'Years'=states.

6093. 'How many are the days of the years of thy life?' (Gen.xlvii.8)=(a perception) concerning the state of the natural life from the spiritual. 'Days,' and 'years'=states. 6095. 6097. 6098.

6129. 'In this year' (ver.18)=the period of that state; for 'a year'=an entire period from beginning to end. 6130.

R. 106. That these will not afterwards yield to evils and falsities from Hell. Sig. (by 'not being hurt by the second death.') E. 128.

890. That those who . . . do not yield when tempted by the Babylonians and dragonists, will come into Heaven . . . Sig. and Ex.

T. 123⁶. At this day . . . Hell assaults all such with diabolical fury, so that unless the Lord resisted . . . the man could not but yield.

597². Since the Council of Nice, if anyone had been admitted (into spiritual temptation) he would have at once yielded, and would thus have precipitated himself more deeply into Hell.

E. 736. That (the dragonists) yielded. Sig. and Ex.

Yoke. Jugum.

A. 905². When the Lord is delivering man from the yoke and dominion (of evil Spirits) there arises a combat; and, when he has been delivered . . . he is led so gently . . . that it is anything but yoke and dominion . . . as the Lord teaches in . . . 'My yoke is easy . . .' (Matt.x.30).

1327⁵. 'That will not put their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon' (Jer.xxvii.8). Ex. (=not to be desolated as to truth, and vastated as to good. 3542⁴.)

3603. 'Thou shalt break his yoke from off thy neck' (Gen.xxvii.40)=that the conjunction would then be by good . . . (thus there would be) deliverance . . . for 'a yoke upon the neck'=restraint and interception (of the influx); and when there is not (this,) good inflows . . .

8902¹⁶. See CALF, here. 9262⁴.

9262⁶. For 'to draw, in the yoke'=to serve.

H. 359⁹. That it is not so difficult (to enter the way of Heaven) as is believed, is meant by . . . 'My yoke is easy . . .' The reason the Lord's yoke is 'easy' . . . is that in proportion as a man resists the evils that spring from the love of self and of the world, in the same proportion he is led by the Lord, and not by himself; and the Lord then resists them in the man, and removes them.

533². When a man has made a beginning, the Lord operates all goods in him, and causes him not only to see evils, but also not to will them, and at last to feel aversion for them. This is meant by . . . 'My yoke is easy . . .' But . . . the difficulty . . . increases in proportion as the man does evils from the will . . .

P. 42. Believe they are not under the yoke of the law. 101. (See 258⁴.) 265. 340³. R.578².

E. 365²⁷. 'The bonds of the yoke' (Ezek.xxxiv.27)=the delights of evil from the love of self and of the world which keep them bound.

727¹⁷. 'Thou hast broken the yoke of his burden' (Is.ix.4)= . . . to destroy the evil by which they were oppressed.

548⁵. 'Five yoke of oxen' (Luke xiv.19)=all those affections, or cupidities, that lead away from Heaven.

700²². 'Milch kine on which no yoke had come' (1 Sam.vi.7)=natural good not yet defiled by falsities; for 'to bear a yoke'=to serve; here, to serve falsities that defile good.

774⁷. That . . . by the imputation (of the Lord's righteousness) . . . man is loosed from the yoke of the law. (Refuted.)

Young (man). Juvenis.

Young, To grow. Juvenescere.

See under ADOLESCENCE, and YOUTH.

A. 2348². 'Young men' (Jer.vi.11)=falsities that are nature.

2762³. Those who are resuscitated . . . see a young man sitting on a horse, and then alighting from it, by which is signified that they are to be instructed . . . D.1118.

3081⁵. 'Young men' (Amos viii.13)=truths, or, what is the same, those in them. (=those in affections of truth. 8568.)

3183. When man grows still older, he comes into a state of the affection of truth, which is signified by 'young men.'

4335². 'The young men were led away to grind' (Lam.v.13)=to hatch falsities by applying truths, and thus persuading.

4682². 'Your young men shall see visions' (Joel ii.28) . . . 'Young men'=those who are intelligent. E.624⁸.

5037³. 'All the young men are hidden in prison houses' (Is.xlii.22)=that the truths of faith are no longer acknowledged.

5497². But when he becomes a young man, if, as he then matures, he cultivates his Rational, he thus forms reasons from the things in the interior Natural, which reasons are truths still higher, and as it were drawn out from the things in the interior Natural . . .

6369. 'A young lion'=one who is in power through truth from good; and 'an old lion,' one who is in power through good.

7102⁸. 'Your young men have I slain with the sword' (Amos iv.10)=the vastation of truth. 'Young men'=truths. 7505². (=the truths of the Church. 10458².)

7668. 'Go now, ye young men, and serve Jehovah' (Ex.x.11)=that those will be left who are in confirmed truths, so that they may worship the Lord. 'Young men'=confirmed truths. Ex. 8902⁵.

—². By 'young men,' in the Word, are meant those who are intelligent; or, according to abstract angelic ideas, intelligence; and (therefore) by 'young men' is meant also truth confirmed, for this is of intelligence.

— The word in the Original Language by which 'young men' is here expressed, is derived from 'strength' and 'power,' which is in truth from good, thus in confirmed truth; and therefore this term is applied to the Lord. III.

—³. 'Young men,' expressed in the Original Language by another word, =intelligence, thus the truth of it. III.

10837. (How the young men choose a wife in the Sixth Earth.)

H. 368⁹. This is why by 'a young man,' and 'a man-vir,' in the Word, is meant the understanding of truth. Refs.

414⁹. To grow old, in Heaven, is to grow young.

R. 620³. Where 'young men,' and 'virgins,' are mentioned together, 'young men'=truths; and 'virgins,' the affections of truths.

M. 44². In Heaven . . . the young men . . . may be called moralities in form; and the beauties of the virgins, and the moralities of the young men, correspond to each other . . .

—⁵. Within the enclosure of the heart . . . the morality of a young man is delicatized with the beauty of a virgin, with the deliciousnesses of the chaste love of the sex . . .

—⁶. The love of one of the sex arises when a young man sees a virgin who is provided by the Lord, and a virgin a young man; both feel what is conjugal . . . and perceive, he, that she is his; and she, that he is hers . . . 229, Ex. 316³.

[M.] 187². There then comes the conjugal inclination, which is that of a virgin to a young man, and of a young man to a virgin; and, as the virgins in Heaven (also) conceal their inclinations to marriage, the young men there know no otherwise than that they affect the virgins with love, and this appears to them also from their masculine incitation; but this also they have from the influx of love from the fair sex.

199. That in this way . . . a young man is formed into a husband. Ex.

315. I saw boys, young men, and old men, entering a house . . . where young men are initiated into various matters of wisdom.

—². The chair was for the young men, who were to give answers . . .

—³. Then the young men who had been chosen that day to mount the chair . . . arose. There were five, who . . . had been found to excel in sagacity. (They state their opinions on the nature and quality of the soul.)

316. I saw a grove, in the midst of which was . . . a small palace, with virgins and young men . . . entering . . .

—². At the right side . . . I saw a company of young men . . . who were conversing about conjugal love . . .

322. The marriage of a young man with a virgin (as compared with that) of a young man with a widow. Ex.

355². All the husbands (there) are mature young men—adolescentes juvenes.

444⁸. Infants grow up in Heaven; and when they attain the stature common in the world to young men of eighteen, and to virgins of fifteen, they stay in it; and then marriages are provided for them . . .

Younger. Junior.

E. 9⁴. 'When thou wast younger, thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldst' (John xxi.18) = that in the first time of the Church, men would imitate truths from the good of charity, and would act from freedom. 820⁷.

Younger. Minor.

A. 3296. 'The elder shall serve the younger' (Gen. xxv.23) = that the good of truth shall be lower for a time . . . than truth.

3494. The affection of truth, and the derivative doctrine of truth, is what is called the younger son.

3843. 'Not to give the younger (daughter) before the first-born' (Gen.xxix.26) = that the affection of interior truth should (not) precede the affection of external truth. Ex.

4254. 'I am less than all the mercies . . . Thou hast done to Thy servant' (Gen.xxxii.10) = humiliation in that state . . .

6270. 'He was the younger' (Gen.xlviii.14)=(truth, 'Ephraim') which is in the second place.

7834. 'If the house be too little for one of the flock' (Ex.xii.4)=if the particular good is not sufficient for innocence.

1854⁶. The Angels are constantly advancing to a life of young manhood and youth.

3701⁶. The state of adolescence and youth (as to the new life) is that regard is no longer had to any person as he appears . . . but to his quality as to good . . .

4676. Those in Heaven are continually brought by the Lord into a more perfect life, and at length into the flower of youth . . .

5126⁶. This (opening of the Rational) takes place especially in the youthful age even to the adult, and progressively . . .

8851. (In Jupiter) they marry in the first flower of youth.

10225. The third state is from the twentieth to the sixtieth year, which is a state of intelligence, and is called adolescence, youth, and manhood-virilitas.

As such continue to grow young-juvenescent-more interiorly, it follows that love truly conjugal continually increases . . . The reason man thus grows young-juvenescent-in Heaven, is that he then enters into the marriage of good and truth . . .

Zabuah. Zabuah.

E. 650⁵³. 'The bird Zabuah' (Jer.xii.9)=reasonings from falsities.

Zachar. Zachar.

E. 376¹⁹. 'The wool of Zachar' (Ezek.xxvii.18)=natural good.

Zachariah. Sacharia.

E. 329²⁹. 'The blood of Zachariah the son of Barachiah' (Matt.xxiii.35). . . 'Zachariah' = those in truths of doctrine; abstractedly, the truth of doctrine itself; and 'blood'=the extinction of it.

391¹⁹. 'From the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zachariah' (Luke xi.51)=the adulteration of all good.

Zarah. Serach.

A. 4812. 'Zarah' (Gen.xxxviii.30)=love.

4928. 'His brother came out afterwards' (id.)=good actually prior; for 'Zarah,' who is here 'the brother,' =good; for he it was who opened the womb, and therefore was the firstborn. 4930.

4930². 'Zarah,' in the Original Language, means 'the rising,' and is attributed to the sun and the first appearance of its light. This is why he was named 'Zarah,' for such is the case with good in the man who is being regenerated—it rises first and gives light, by which the things in the natural man are enlightened, so that they can be seen, acknowledged, and finally believed . . .

Zeal. Zelus.

Zealous. Zelotes.

Zealous, To be. Zelare.

See JEALOUSY.

A. 1321². Such may speak truth with apparent . . . zeal . . . 2689⁴. 3895². 4314⁵. T.518.

* Juventus is the age from the twentieth to the fortieth year.

[A.] 2250. This is evident from the zeal of love that shines forth (from these words).

2351^e. When evil attacks good, it is called anger; but zeal, when good reproves evil.

2417^e. Charity is all the good there is in a man, in his affection, and in his zeal . . .

—7. There is charity in punishing the evil; for thus one is carried away by zeal to amend them, and to protect others.

2576¹⁶. Zeal for doctrine, and truth. Sig.

3413^e. They preach as it were from zeal; but it is the fires of these (earthly) loves that kindle it; the zeal is only the derivative heat, as is evident from the fact that they can preach against their own veriest life with a like zeal, or fervour.

3614². When predicated of good and truth, 'wrath,' and 'anger,' are zeal.

3839³. With the Angels there is an indignation . . . not of anger, but of zeal, in which there is nothing of evil . . .

3906. 'Rachel was zealous—zelavit—against her sister' (Gen. xxx. 1)=indignation . . .

3909^e. Spiritual indignation, and still more celestial, derives nothing from anger . . . but is from the interior essence of zeal; which zeal, in the external form, appears like anger, but in the internal form, is not . . . even the indignation of anger, but a certain sadness, with a prayerful wish that it be not so; and, in a form still more interior, it is only a certain obscure something that interrupts heavenly delight, because of what is not good and true in another.

4164. 'Jacob was wroth . . .' = the zeal of the Natural . . . For with the Angels there is no anger, but zeal in its stead. For anger differs from zeal in there being evil in anger, but good in zeal; or in this, that he who is in anger intends evil to the other . . . but he who is in zeal intends good to him towards whom he has zeal. And therefore he who is in zeal can be good in a moment; and in the very act can be good towards others; but not he who is in anger. Although, in the external form, zeal appears like anger, in the internal form it is altogether unlike.

4444. (The anger of the sons of Jacob against Shechem) appeared like zeal . . . but it was not zeal; for zeal is utterly impossible with one who is in evil; and is possible only with one who is in good; for zeal has good in it.

4730³. A judge who acts from zeal, is in charity . . .

5071^e. They are in a kind of fire; but from it are in the love and zeal for doing good to others.

5145^e. With those in whom (the things of the will) have been terminated, there is a zeal for spiritual good and truth, or for what is just and fair . . .

5356^e. Goods with truths are (then) in the midst, and are elevated upwards according to the zeal of affection.

5489^e. Therefore when the Lord insinuates into them a zeal for good, these truths come forth in their order; and when He insinuates a zeal for truth this good is present, and animates it.

6481². For the evil . . . want to seem upright and zealous, and, from this desire . . . are more strongly moved than the upright to do good works.

6914³. The worst . . . can preach with such an ardour and pretended zeal as to move hearts . . . 8148³. P. 139^e.

8595. In order that Divine truth may be made combating, it inflows into such Angels as are in ardent zeal for good and truth . . .

8598². They who are in zeal, fight, but not from any enmity . . . but rather from charity; for zeal differs from anger in this: that zeal has in it the good that is of charity; and therefore when zeal fights, it merely removes those who are in falsity and evil to prevent them from injuring those who are in good and truth . . . For zeal, from the charity that is in it, wishes well even to those who are in evil and falsity, and also does well to them in so far as they do not injure the good.

8875. 'A zealous God' (Ex. xx. 5)=that falsity and evil are thence; for 'a zealous God,' in the genuine sense, = the Divine truth of the Divine good; for 'God' is predicated of truth, and 'zealous,' of good; but relatively to those who do not receive the Divine truth of the Divine good, 'a zealous God' = falsity and evil . . . for everyone sees them from his own quality, and this is why the Lord's zeal—which, in itself, is love and compassion—appears to them as anger . . .

—³. That the Lord's zeal is love and mercy . . . Ill.

—4. 'The zeal of Jehovah of hosts shall perform this' (Is. ix. 7)=that it will be from the ardent love of saving the human race.

—⁵. That the Lord's zeal, or mercy, when it protects the good, appears like hostility. Fully ill.

—⁸. The Lord is called 'zealous,' or 'the Avenger,' especially when that which should reign universally with the man of the Church—namely, what is Divine—is corrupted . . . Ill.

8902¹⁶. Purification from that evil because it was done from the immoderate zeal of one who is ignorant of what truth is. Sig.

9143². Zeal is a fire that breaks forth from the affection of good; and therefore zeal is described by 'fire.' Ill.

10646. 'For Jehovah His name is Zealous, and a zealous God is He' (Ex. xxxiv. 14)=that if any other is worshipped, Divine good and Divine truth recede; for 'zealous' = one who does not suffer anyone but himself to be loved and worshipped.

—The Lord is called 'zealous,' because as soon as anyone else is worshipped, all truth and good recede . . .

P. 197². As the priests were then in theological zeal . . .

252². A good man is solely in the . . . zeal of protecting; and rarely in any . . . zeal of attacking.

257³. There were none (to preach the Lord then) except those who were in a heat, like zeal, from the fire of the love of self.

R. 216. 'Be zealous, therefore, and repent' (Rev.

iii.19)=that this should be done from the affection of truth, and aversion to falsity. It is here said, 'Be zealous,' because it had been said, 'I would thou wert cold, or hot' . . . for zeal is spiritual heat, which is the affection of love; here, the affection of the love of truth. (=that they must have charity. Ex. E.247.)

— 'Zeal,' in the Word, where the Lord is treated of, =love, and wrath. Ill. . . But, with the Lord, zeal is not wrath; it only appears so in externals. Ex.

—^c. This shows why Jehovah calls Himself 'zealous.' Ill.

454. For fictitious zeal, etc. . . do all, and the Truth nothing. Sig.

756. The concupiscences of profaning the truths of Heaven from the spurious zeal of (the love of self). Sig. and Ex.

831. The Lord from Divine love and thence from Divine zeal calling all (such) to the New Church, and to conjunction with Himself . . . Sig. and Ex.

— For 'a voice,' or influx . . . from the Divine love, is from the Divine zeal; for zeal is of love. —².

M. 78⁶. We are so vehemently zealous—zelamus—for our wives, that we suffer no one to enter our houses further than the vestibule; and, as there is zeal, there is love.

132⁶. There then came upon them a zeal from the love of Truth . . .

155a³. Wives are . . . as it were ardent zeals for the preservation of conjugal friendship and confidence . . .

208². From the zeal of love for your happiness and ours, we dissimulate . . .

357. See JEALOUSY, here. 358. 371. 372.

359. That the flame of this love, which is zeal, is a spiritual flame, which originates from . . . an attack on the love. Gen.art.

—². The reason zeal arises from an attack on the love, is that love is the heat of each person's life; and therefore when the life's love is attacked, the life's heat kindles itself . . .

361². Such is the exasperation of love which is called zeal.

362. That a man has a zeal such as is his love; thus that it is different with one whose love is good, from what it is with one whose love is evil. Ex.

—^c. The zeal of one person cannot be absolutely the same as the zeal of another. In general, there is the zeal of a good love, and the zeal of an evil love.

363. That the zeal of a good love, and the zeal of an evil love, are alike in externals, but quite unlike in internals. Ex.

— Zeal in externals, with everyone, appears like anger and wrath; for it is love enkindled and inflamed to defend itself against a violater, and to remove him.

—². That zeal appears in externals like anger . . . may be seen and heard from all who speak and act from zeal; as, for example, from a priest when he is preaching from zeal, in that the tone of his voice is high, vehement, sharp, and harsh; his face is heated and perspires; he exerts himself, thumps the pulpit, and calls for fire from Hell against those who do evils.

364. A distinct idea of zeal with the good, and of zeal with the evil, and their unlikeness. Examp.

365. That the zeal of a good love stores up love and friendship in its internals, and the zeal of an evil love, hatred and revenge. Ex.

— The zeal of a good love is like a heavenly flame, which never bursts forth against another, but only defends itself . . . but the zeal of an evil love is like an infernal flame, which of itself bursts forth and rushes at, and wants to consume, another.

— The zeal of a good love instantly burns out and becomes mild, as soon as the assailant ceases his attack; but the zeal of an evil love lasts, and is not extinguished. Ex.

366. As, in externals, zeal is alike with both good and evil . . . it is frequently said of Jehovah in the Word that He is angry and wroth, that He avenges, punishes, casts into Hell, besides many other things which are appearances of zeal in externals; and this also is why He is styled 'the Zealous' . . .

367. That the zeal of conjugal love is called jealousy. Ex.

— Zeal for love truly conjugal is the zeal of zeals, because this love is the love of loves . . .

380⁶. From a kind of indignation of zeal for the Truth, we addressed him . . . —⁸.

499. A more rational zealot . . .

T. 146². Regarded in itself, zeal is a violent heating of the natural man. If the love of truth is within it, it is like the sacred fire . . . But if the love of falsity is inwardly hidden in the zeal, or heat, it is like fire imprisoned in wood . . .

155². If (the delight) is of the love of evil . . . it excites a zeal which outwardly is harsh, rough, burning, and flaming, and within there is anger, rage, and unmercifulness; but if it is of good . . . it is outwardly mild, smooth, thundering, and flashing, and within there is charity, grace, and mercy.

159. The fire bursting forth as a flame (seen there) was the kindling of zeal in favour of the falsities.

408. They who have genuine charity, have a zeal for what is good; and in the external man this zeal may seem like anger and flaming fire; but its flame is extinguished . . . as soon as the adversary repents. Whereas with those who have no charity, the zeal is anger and hatred . . .

798⁷. From a zeal to convert him, I said . . .

D. 2351. For example, proneness to anger is turned into zeal.

3107. A certain person was let into the state of zeal in which he had preached . . . 3200.

3200. The zeal (of an evil preacher) was such that the Spirits could scarcely endure it. Its quality was signified to me by the stench of teeth.

3904. He was of those who had . . . defended the Knowledges of true faith with zeal, and yet now . . . knew nothing.

D. Min. 4547. (A man's charity) is Known from his zeal for what is good and true, and just and right.

He has charity, if he is in the zeal to punish the evil to the end that they may become good, and that the good may not be injured . . .

E. 395¹³. 'He clothed Himself with zeal as with a cloak' (Is.lix.17). This is said of the Lord and of His combat with the Hells . . . 'Zeal as a cloak' = the Divine love from which [He fought].

693². But the good . . . have no wrath or anger, but zeal. In the Word, this zeal is called 'anger,' but is not anger. In the external form it appears like anger, but inwardly is nothing but charity, goodness, and forbearance; and therefore zeal does not, like anger, continue after the object of it repents. . . Anger belongs to those who are in the loves of self and of the world . . . but zeal to those who are in love to the Lord and towards the neighbour. So that zeal has regard to the Salvation of man, and anger to his condemnation . . .

850¹⁵. 'To roar,' when predicated of Jehovah, = an ardent zeal to protect Heaven and the Church, and to save those who are there, which is done by destroying the evils and falsities that rise against them from Hell . . .

1016^e. With the good this seeming anger against evil . . . is not anger, but zeal for good, in which there lies hidden a heavenly fire. Ex.

1029. At first they are seemingly in zeal for the Lord, the Word, love and faith, and especially for the salvation of men. But in this zeal there lies hidden the fire of exercising dominion . . . —².

Zebaoth. See JEHOVAH ZEBAOth.

Zeboim. Zeboim.

A. 1212. See SODOM, here. 1666.

1663. 'Shemeber king of Zeboim,' etc. (Gen.xiv.2) = so many kinds of cupidities of evil, and of persuasions of falsity, against which the Lord fought. . . It is the most general, or most universal kinds of evils and falsities, that are here signified.

E. 578³. Mentioned.

653^e. 'Admah & Zeboim' (Dent.xxix.23) = the Knowledges of evil and falsity.

Zebulon. Sebulon.

A. 3952^e. By 'Issachar and Zebulon' are signified and represented the things of conjugal love, thus those of the heavenly marriage.

3960, 3961. 'Leah said, God hath endowed me with a good dowry; now will my husband dwell with me, because I have borne him six sons; and she called his name Zebulon' (Gen.xxx.20) = in the supreme sense, the Lord's Divine Itself and His Divine Human; in the internal sense, the heavenly marriage; and in the external sense, conjugal love. 4606². R. 359.

3961. He was named 'Zebulon,' from 'to cohabit,' (or 'dwell together').

3969². The conjunction of the good of the natural man with the truths therein is signified by the last son of Jacob by Leah, namely, by Zebulon, who was so named from 'dwelling together.'

4592¹³. By 'the tribe of Zebulon' is signified the heavenly marriage, in which is Heaven, thus in which are all things.

6024². 'The sons of Zebulon . . .' (Gen.xlvi.14) = the heavenly marriage, and its doctrinal things.

6382-6386. 'Zebulon shall dwell at the haven of the seas, and he shall be for a haven of ships, and his side shall be unto Sidon' (Gen.xlix.13). 'Zebulon' = the dwelling together of good and truth; 'he shall dwell at the haven of the seas' = a life where there is the concluding of truth from scientifics; 'he shall be for a haven of ships' = where there are doctrinal things from the Word; 'and his side shall be unto Sidon' = an extension on one side to the Knowledges of good and truth. E.447³, Ex. 514¹⁷.

6383. 'Zebulon' = the heavenly marriage, thus the conjunction of good and truth . . . It is said the dwelling together of good and truth, because 'Zebulon,' in the Original Language, means 'dwelling together.'

— By 'Zebulon' it here treats of those in the Church who form conclusions about spiritual truths from scientifics, and thus strengthen them in themselves; but . . . by 'Zebulon' are not meant those who do not believe unless scientifics and sensuous things dictate . . . but by 'Zebulon' are here meant those who believe in doctrinal things from the Word, thus with whom there universally reigns something that is affirmative, and yet their faith has life not in truths, but in scientifics; for they apply scientifics to doctrinal things, and thus strengthen their affirmative. Those, therefore, who are 'Zebulon' do not elevate themselves from scientifics; but when they hear or think about any truth of faith, they at once fall into what is scientific. There are many such in the world; and the Lord provides that scientific and sensuous things may serve them for this use. 9755¹⁴.

R. 359. 'Of the tribe of Zebulon were sealed 12000' (Rev.vii.8) = the conjugal love of good and truth with those who will be of the Lord's New Heaven and New Church. . . For he was named from 'dwelling together,' and this is said of married partners whose minds have been conjoined into a one . . . The conjugal love of good and truth which is here signified by 'Zebulon,' is the conjugal love of the Lord and the Church; for the Lord is the good of love itself, and He gives the Church to be the truth from this good . . . (= the conjunction with the Lord of those in the Third Heaven. E.447.)

406². By 'Zebulon' is meant the conjunction of good and truth.

E. 431¹². By 'the tribe of Zebulon' (which encamped on the east) (Num.ii.7) is signified the marriage of good and truth, which is called the heavenly marriage.

439¹. 'Zebulon, a people that devoted their soul to death, and Naphtali . . .' (Judg.v.18). These were the two tribes that fought against Sisera . . . and thereby was represented spiritual combat against the evils that infest the Church . . . The reason only these two tribes fought, is that by 'Zebulon' is signified the conjunction of good and truth which constitutes the Church; and 'Naphtali,' combat . . . By 'Zebulon and Naphtali,' together, is signified reformation and regeneration through temptations. Ill. 447⁴.

—⁵. In the supreme sense, by 'Zebulon and Naphtali' is signified the union of the Divine and the Human in the Lord. 447⁶, Ill.

445⁵. 'Of Zebulon he said, Be glad, Zebulon, in thy going out' (Deut. xxxiii. 18). These things are said of those in the marriage of good and truth; that is, in truths as to understanding and thought, and in goods as to will and affection. 'Zebulon' = this marriage. 447¹.

—⁶. As the tribes of Judah, Issachar, and Zebulon = the Heaven where there is the good of love . . . 'Zebulon,' the conjunction of this good with truths; these three tribes encamped on the east . . . 447⁹.

447². 'Zebulon,' in the supreme sense, = the union of the Divine Itself and the Divine Human in the Lord; in the internal sense, the conjunction of the Lord with Heaven and the Church, and, in special, the conjunction of good and truth there . . .

447⁵. By 'Zebulon and Naphtali' is signified the conjunction of good and truth through combat against falsities and evils, and the consequent reformation, in 'Jesus . . . came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is . . . in the borders of Zebulon and Naphtali; that it might be fulfilled . . . The land of Zebulon . . .' (Matt. iv. 13, 15; Is. ix. 1, 2).

3109. On those who are high up in the zenith.

5941a. Some look up to a certain one over head, in the zenith . . . whom they say is the Father.

Zerubbabel. Serubabel.

A. 9548¹. It here (Zech. iv. 2, 3) treats of Zerubbabel, who should found the house of God, and perfect it; by whom is represented the Lord who would come, and would restore the Spiritual Heaven and Church. R. 43^e. E. 62².

Ziim. Ziim, Tziim.

A. 1326³. 'The ziim,' etc. (Is. xiii. 21) = the interiors of (Babel) worship; for such things are of the love of self.

8869⁴. 'The ziim, and iim, and daughters of the owl' (Jer. l. 39) = evils and falsities, thus the things that, inwardly, are of death. (= infernal falsities and evils. 587¹⁰.)

9755⁴. 'The people of the ziim' (Ps. lxxiv. 14) = those in falsities, or the falsities themselves. (= those in infernal falsities. E. 483^e.)

R. 458. 'The ziim,' etc. = various concupiscences. Ill.

E. 586⁵. 'The tziim and iim' (Is. xxxiv. 14) = corporeal concupiscences.

3931. 'She took Zilpah her handmaid' (Gen. xxx. 9) = an affirmative medium conjoining.

3933. 'And Zilpah the handmaid of Leah bore a son to Jacob' (ver. 10) = the acknowledgment of external truth. 3937.

6409. 'The sons of Zilpah the handmaid of Leah; Gad, and Asher' (Gen. xxxv. 26) = things subservient to exterior things; for 'Zilpah the handmaid of Leah' = a sequent affection that is subservient to the affection of exterior truth as a medium (for conjunction).

6024⁴. 'These are the sons of Zilpah' (Gen. xlv. 18) = that these are of the external Church.

Zinzendorf. Zinzendorfius.

Zinzendorffians. Zinzendorffiani. (D. 5995a.)

C. J. 89. When Zinzendorf first entered the Spiritual World . . . I heard him asserting that he knew the secret things of Heaven; and that no one comes into Heaven who is not of his doctrine; and also that those who do good works for the sake of salvation are utterly condemned, and that he would rather admit atheists into his congregation. He said that the Lord was adopted by God the Father as His Son because He endured the cross, but still He had been a simple man. When he was told that He was conceived of God the Father, he replied that he thought of that matter as he chose, not daring to speak out as the Jews do. D. 5993. J. (Post.) 37.

D. 5988. Zinzendorf mentioned, and treated of. 5995. 6043. 6060. 6061a. 6068. 6074. 6078. J. (Post.) 37. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 57. 298.

5993. Zinzendorf was a very persuasive man, and fortified his persuasive power by attestations that he knew the secrets of Heaven . . . He spoke with all according to their religion, thus pretending that he held the same doctrine . . . and afterwards instilled his own secrets . . . He held very cheap the things said by the Lord in the Gospels . . . and said that Paul spoke far better. He did not care for the Old Testament . . . rejected all the life of charity . . . and was all for faith separated from charity.

[D.] 5993a. As he believed that he alone with his followers would come into Heaven . . . he was asked what he believed about heavenly joy. (His ideas on this subject, and his experience when admitted into good Societies fully described.)

6043³. Zinzendorf removed himself from those Moravians who want to kill those who divulge their secrets. (See also 6081^e.)

Zion. *Zion, Sion.

A. 402. By 'the mountain of Zion' is meant the Celestial of faith; and by 'the city of Zion,' the Spiritual of faith. III.

415^e. 'The daughter of Zion' (Jer.vi.2)=the Celestial Church. 1664⁴.

795³. 'The mountain of Zion' (Is.xxxi.4)=the Lord; and, derivatively, all the Celestial, which is love.

1585². The places in the middle of Canaan . . . represented the Lord's internal man, as the mountain of Zion, and Jerusalem; the former, the celestial things, and the latter, the spiritual things.

2015⁴. 'Zion' (Lam.ii.6)=the Church, which is perishing.

2039⁵. 'Put on thy strength O Zion' (Is.lii.1); 'Zion'=the Celestial Church; 'Jerusalem,' the Spiritual Church.

2235³. 'Zion' (Is.xxxiii.5)=the Church.

2362. The affection of good constitutes the Celestial Church, and is called, in the Word 'the daughter of Zion *,' and 'the virgin daughter of Zion *.'

2534^e. They do not perceive that mountain of Zion *, or Zion, that was at Jerusalem, but the Lord's Kingdom.

2607². The names = Things, as . . . 'Zion,' the Celestial Church; 'Jerusalem,' the Spiritual Church.

2830⁵. 'The new temple' and 'New Jerusalem'=in special, the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom; and 'Zion,' the Celestial Kingdom.

2851⁸. 'The ways of Zion do mourn; (Lam.i.4)=that there are no longer any truths from good. 'Ways'=truths.

2909^e. After David had reigned in Hebron seven years and six months, he went to Jerusalem, and took possession of Zion (2 Sam.ii.1-11; v.5; 1 Kings ii.11) and then for the first time the Lord's Spiritual Church began to be represented by Jerusalem; and His Celestial Church by Zion.

2928. When Judah and Zion are treated of, the term 'nation' is used, by which is signified the Celestial Church; for this Church is meant by 'Judah,' and 'Zion.'

2973². The Land of Canaan represented the Lord's Kingdom; 'Zion,' the Celestial of it; and 'Jerusalem,' the Spiritual.

3024². 'The daughter of Zion'=the Celestial Church, and this from the affection of good; 'the daughter of Jerusalem,' the Spiritual Church, from the affection of truth.

3081². 'The virgin daughter of Zion' (Is.xxxvii.22)=the Celestial Church.

3084². Hence it is said to 'go up' from Jerusalem to Zion; and to 'go down' from Zion to Jerusalem; for . . . 'Jerusalem'=the interiors of the Church; and 'Zion,' the inmosts of it.

3103³. 'The daughters of Zion exalt themselves' (Is.iii.16)=the affections of evil within the Church. Des.

3703². 'Jehovah will comfort Zion' (Is.li.3)=the Celestial Church. (=the Church. R.90⁴.) (=the Church where the Lord must be worshipped. E.326⁵.)

4288⁴. They were therefore restricted (in regard to their worship) to the mountain where Jerusalem was, and at last where Zion was . . .

4545². As 'Zion'=the Celestial Church, and 'Jerusalem' the Spiritual Church, and as the Celestial Church is that which is in good from love to the Lord . . . 'strength' is predicated of Zion (in Is.lii.1).

4599⁴. 'Jehovah shall reign over them in mount Zion from henceforth even to eternity . . .' (Micah iv.7). Here is described the Lord's Celestial Kingdom; its inmost, which is love to the Lord, by 'mount Zion'; its derivative, which is mutual love, by 'the hill of the daughter of Zion,' which love, in the spiritual sense, is called charity towards the neighbour . . . (Continued under JERUSALEM.)

5044¹⁰. 'The daughter of Zion,' and 'the daughter of Judah' (Lam.ii.1,2)=the Celestial Church; here, this Church destroyed. 9815².

5313¹². Zion is called 'the throne of Jehovah's glory' in Jer.xiv.21; (and) by 'Zion' is meant the Lord's Celestial Kingdom (where the principal thing is the Divine good from which is the Divine truth).

5536^e. 'Zion,' or the Celestial Church, and its fructification after vastation (is treated of in Is.xlix.18-21).

6367². 'So shall Jehovah of Hosts come down to fight upon the mountain of Zion, and upon its hill' (Is.xxxi.4) . . . 'the mountain of Zion'=the good of the Divine love; and 'its hill,' the derivative Divine truth. (=the Celestial Church, and the Spiritual Church. E.601⁵.)

6413⁴. 'The daughter of Zion' (Lam.i.6)=the affection of good, which is of the Celestial Church.

6435⁵. 'The mountain of Jehovah' (Is.ii.2) which is 'Zion,'=the Lord's Celestial Kingdom, thus the good of that Kingdom, which is the good of love to the Lord; thus, in the supreme sense, the Lord Himself . . . The like is signified by 'the mountain of Zion' elsewhere in the Word, and by 'its hill,' the good of mutual love; as in Is.xxxi.4. . . Jehovah does not 'fight upon the mountain of Zion . . .' but where there is the good of love; it is for this, that is, for those in it, that the Lord fights. . . If He has fought for Zion and for Jerusalem, it is because they represented the Celestial Church. E.433¹⁹.

—¹¹. In order that this representative (Divine worship on mountains and hills) might be retained, the mountain of Zion was chosen, and by it, in the supreme sense, was represented the Divine good of the Lord's Divine love; and, in the relative sense, the Divine Celestial and the Divine Spiritual in His Kingdom.

6537². 'Rejoice, ye sons of Zion' (Joel ii. 23); 'sons of Zion' = truths from good. (Compare E. 922⁶.)

6745³. In Is. lx. 15, 16 it treats of Zion * and Jerusalem, which = the Celestial Church; 'Zion *,' its internal, and 'Jerusalem,' its external.

7356³. 'Zion' (Is. xxxi. 9) = the Celestial Church; thus the good of love, which is of this Church.

8313³. 'The daughter of Zion' (Jer. vi. 23) = the Church where good is.

8330³. 'Zion' (Ps. xx. 2) = Heaven, where is the good of love.

8902¹⁰. 'The daughter of Zion' (Jer. iv. 31) = the Celestial Church.

9053⁸. 'The daughter of Zion' (treated of in Is. iii. 24) = the Celestial Church; that is, the Church which is in love to the Lord.

9433². 'The habitation of the mountain of Zion' (Is. iv. 5) = Heaven and the Church. (= the good of the Celestial Church. E. 504¹¹. 594¹⁵.)

9809⁴. 'Jehovah shall send the sceptre of strength out of Zion' (Ps. cx. 2) = power, then, from celestial good; 'Zion' = this good.

9857³. 'Jehovah hath filled Zion with judgment and righteousness' (Is. xxxiii. 5); 'Zion' = the Celestial Church (filled with) intelligence from Divine truth, and with wisdom from Divine good.

9930⁷. 'For Zion's sake I will not be silent . . .' (Is. lxii. 1). By 'Zion,' and 'Jerusalem,' is meant the Church; by 'Zion,' the Celestial Church; and by 'Jerusalem,' the derivative Spiritual Church. Tr. E. 272⁵.

9954¹⁴. 'Zion, the mountain of My holiness' (Ps. ii. 6) = the Celestial Kingdom, which is in the good of love: this Kingdom is the inmost of Heaven, and the inmost of the Church. E. 850³.

10037². 'He that is left in Zion . . .' (Is. iv. 3). By 'Zion,' and 'Jerusalem,' is signified the Church: by 'Zion,' the Church with those who are in the good of love; and by 'Jerusalem,' the Church with those who are in truths from this good. 'To wash away the excrement of the daughters of Zion' = to purify from evils those in the Church who are in the good of love . . . E. 475¹⁰.

10438². This is why the city of David was built upon a mountain, and why that mountain, which was called mount Zion, = the Inmost Heaven.

10540⁸. These things (in Is. xlix. 17, 18) are said of Zion, by which is signified the Celestial Church.

S. 71². In the Word in Heaven, instead of 'Zion,' and 'Jerusalem,' there is 'the Church as to the Word,' and 'as to doctrine from the Word.'

R. 612. 'A lamb standing upon the mount Zion *' (Rev. xiv. 1) = the Lord in the New Heaven. . . By 'the mountain of Zion *' is signified the Heaven where are those who are in love to the Lord. (= the presence of the Lord in Heaven and in the Church to separate the good from the evil, and to execute the Judgment. . .

'The mount Zion' = Heaven and the Church where the Lord reigns through His Divine truth. E. 850.)

—³. In the middle of Canaan was the city Zion *, and below it the city Jerusalem, both upon a mountain; and therefore by 'Zion *' and 'Jerusalem' are signified the inmost things of the Church. And as the Church in Heaven makes a one with the Church on earth, by 'Zion *,' and 'Jerusalem' is meant the Church in both; but by 'Zion *' the Church as to love; and by 'Jerusalem,' the Church as to the derivative doctrine. It is called 'mount Zion *,' because by 'a mountain' is signified love.

—⁴. That by 'mount Zion *,' are signified Heaven and the Church. Fully ill.

E. 176². 'The daughter of Zion' (Micah iv. 13) = the Celestial Church.

195⁶. 'Zion,' in the Word, = the Lord's Celestial Kingdom, thus also the Celestial Church; and 'Jerusalem,' the Spiritual Kingdom, and the Spiritual Church.

2081². 'Zion,' and 'the daughter of Zion' = the Celestial Church.

223⁹. 'I will return to Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem' (Zech. viii. 3). By 'Zion,' here, is meant the Celestial Church; and by 'Jerusalem,' that Church as to the doctrine of truth. 652¹².

240⁷. 'The daughters of Zion' (Is. iii. 17) = the Celestial Church, and the things of it; here, perverted.

294⁶. 'Zion' = the Church.

—¹⁰. 'Zion' (Is. iv. 5) = the Church as to the Word.

313⁴. 'The inhabitress of Zion' (Is. xii. 6) = the like as 'the daughter of Zion,' namely, the Celestial Church, that is, the Church which is in the good of love to the Lord. 326³.

3161². 'Rise and thresh, O daughter of Zion' (Micah iv. 13) = the dispersion of evil with those who are of the Church. . . 'The daughter of Zion' = the Church that is in the affection of good.

3281⁰. 'The daughter of Zion' (Is. lxii. 11) = the Church that is in love to the Lord.

331⁶. 'The mountain of Zion' (Is. xviii. 7) = the Church, to which they are invited.

3401³. 'Zion' (Ps. cxxviii. 5) = Heaven, whence these things are.

—¹⁴. 'The mountains of Zion' (Ps. cxxxiii. 3) = where the goods of celestial love are.

342⁵. 'For God will save Zion, and will build the cities of Judah' (Ps. lxi. 35) = the Celestial Church, and its doctrine.

365³⁰. 'Zion' (Is. lii. 7) = the Church that is in the good of love to the Lord.

—³⁶. 'Jerusalem' (Ps. cxlvii. 12) = the Church as to the truths of doctrine; 'Zion,' the Church as to the goods of love.

—³⁷. 'Jehovah shall bless thee out of Zion' (Ps. cxxviii. 5) = the blessing that is from the good of love; for 'Zion' = the Church as to the good of love . . .

374³. 'To sing in the height of Zion' (Jer. xxxi. 12) = internal celestial joy; that is, such as there is in the Lord's Celestial Kingdom.

[E.374]¹². 'Praise Jehovah, O Jerusalem ; praise thy God, O Zion' (Ps.cxlvi.12). . . 'Jerusalem'=the Church as to the truths of doctrine ; and 'Zion,' the Church as to the goods of love.

375¹⁹. 'I have anointed My king upon Zion, the mountain of My holiness' (Ps.ii.6)=the Celestial Kingdom which is in the good of love : this Kingdom is the inmost of Heaven, and the inmost of the Church. (=the Lord's Human as to Divine truth proceeding from the Divine good . . . and His derivative Kingdom over all things of Heaven and the Church. 684¹².)

—²⁶. 'The mountains of Zion' (Ps.cxxxiii.)=the Divine good ; therefore 'like the dew of Hermon that descended upon the mountains of Zion'=the conjunction of truth and good.

391¹⁷. 'Do good in Thy good pleasure unto Zion ; build Thou the walls of Jerusalem' (Ps.li.18)=to restore the Church by leading it into the good of love, and by teaching it in the truths of doctrine.

405⁸. 'O Zion, that proclaimest good tidings' (Is.xl.9)=the Church that is in the good of love to the Lord.

—²⁶. As . . . from the Divine good proceeds the Divine truth, therefore the mountain of Zion was built above Jerusalem ; and by 'the mountain of Zion,' in the Word, is signified the Church that is in the good of love to the Lord ; and by 'Jerusalem,' the Church that is in truths from that good . . .

—As 'the mountain of Zion'=the Divine good, and the Church as to it, it is said . . .

—²⁸. As the mountain of Zion, and Jerusalem, were built, as far as possible, according to the form of Heaven, it is evident what is signified in . . . 'the mountain of Zion, the sides of the north, the City of the great king' (Ps.xlviii.2) . . .

—³⁴. As 'mountains'=the goods of celestial love, and 'hills' the goods of spiritual love . . . Zion was upon a mountain, and Jerusalem was upon the mountainous places below it.

433⁸. 'Exult, daughter of Zion ; shout, daughter of Jerusalem' (Zech.ix.9)=the advent of the Lord, and the establishment of the Church by Him with those who are in the good of love and the derivative truths of doctrine.

448¹¹. 'In the mountain of Zion there shall be escape' (Obad.17)=love to the Lord from which there is Salvation.

449⁷. 'Zion'=the good of the Church ; and 'Jerusalem,' its truth.

453¹⁰. 'The mountain of Zion shall be glad' (Ps.xlviii.12)=the Celestial Church, in which are those who are in love to the Lord. . . 'Encompass ye Zion, encircle her'=to embrace, from love, the things of this Church. Further des.

514¹⁰. 'Zion'=the Church where the good of love reigns ; and 'Jerusalem,' where the truth of doctrine. 540⁶.

637¹¹. 'The elders of the daughter of Zion' (Lam.ii.10)=the wise and the intelligent in the Church ; abstractedly, wisdom and intelligence. 'The daughters of Zion,' and 'the virgins of Jerusalem'=those in the Church who are in the affection of good and truth ; abstractedly, these affections themselves.

—¹⁷. 'The daughters of Zion'=the Church as to the affections of celestial good ; consequently, the affections of good that are of the Celestial Church.

644¹⁸. 'The sons of Zion' (Joel.ii.23)=those who are in genuine truths and through which they have the good of love ; for 'Zion'=the Celestial Church which is in the good of love to the Lord through genuine truths. 650⁴⁰.

655⁶. 'Zion' (Lam.v.11)=the Celestial Church, which is in the good of love to the Lord, and which Church the Jewish nation represented.

659¹⁸. David and the succeeding kings were buried in Zion (III.) the reason of which was that 'Zion'=the Celestial Church and Heaven, where the Lord is.

684²⁹. 'In Zion will I make the horn of David to bud' (Ps.cxxxii.17)=the power of Divine truth from Him in Heaven and the Church.

685². 'The daughter of Zion' (Micah.iv.8)=the Celestial Church, the essential of which is the good of love.

700²⁶. 'Zion,' where David was,=the inmost of the Church, which is called its Celestial.

—³². The bringing of the ark into Zion (2 Sam.vi.)=ascent into the Third Heaven. . . For Zion represented the inmost of the Church, and from this the inmost of the Heavens, which is the Third Heaven, where the Angels are in the good of love to the Lord . . .

717¹². 'The stones of Zion' (Ps.cii.14)=Divine truths ; for by 'Zion, upon which Jehovah will have mercy,' is meant the Church that is in celestial love.

721⁸. 'Zion' and 'Jerusalem'=the Church and its doctrine.

—¹¹. 'Zion' (Is.li.3)=a new Church.

—¹⁹. 'The daughter of Zion' (Jer.iv.31)=the Church that, from the good of love, is in the truths of doctrine.

727⁵. 'Zion' (Ps.ex.2)=the Church that is in love to the Lord, and is thence called the Celestial Church.

—²⁰. 'Fear not, O inhabitant of Zion' (Is.x.24)=that truths will not be perverted in those of the Church who are in celestial love and the derivative truths.

750¹⁰. 'The multitude of all nations that fight against the mountain of Zion' (Is.xxix.8)=the falsities of evil that fight against the goods of the Church. . . 'The mountain of Zion'=the Church as to the good of love.

799¹⁰. 'Look upon Zion, the city of our set feast, let thine eyes see Jerusalem, a quiet habitation' (Is.xxxiii.20). 'Zion' and 'Jerusalem'=Heaven and the Church as to the good of love, and the truth of doctrine.

—¹⁷. 'The daughter of Zion' (Lam.ii.4)=the Church that is in the affection of truth from the good of love.

811²¹. The sons of Zion (treated of in Is.xlix.)=those in love to the Lord and thence in truths.

—²². 'Zion' (Ps.xiv.7 ; liii.6)=those who from the Lord are in the good of love.

[811]²⁶. 'Put on thy strength, O Zion; put on the garments of thy beauty, O Jerusalem, the city of holiness' (Is. lii. 1). By 'Zion' is meant the Church that is in the good of love to the Lord; and the truth from this good is signified by 'the strength' . . . and the truths of doctrine of this Church are signified by 'the garments of beauty' . . . 'The daughter of Zion' (ver. 2) = those who, from the Lord, are in the affection of truth from the good of love.

850². That by 'the mountain of Zion *' is signified Heaven and the Church where the Lord reigns through His Divine truth, is from the fact that Zion * was the city that David built, and in which he afterwards dwelt, and which was therefore called 'the city of David'; and David represented the Lord as to the royalty, which is the Divine truth . . . This also was why the ark . . . was transferred into this city. (Continued under JERUSALEM.)

—'. 'Mountains,' and, primarily, 'the mountain of Zion *' = love to the Lord.

—³. That 'Zion *' = Heaven and the Church where the Lord reigns through His Divine truth. Fully ill. 863². —³. 899¹⁰. 946². 1057³.

Coro. 55. 'Zion,' in the following passages, = the Church as to the Word.

Zipporah. Zippora.

A. 6793. 'He gave Zipporah his daughter to Moses' (Ex. ii. 21) = that he adjoined to him the good of his Church. . . 'Zipporah' = the quality of the good of that Church.

6941. This is signified by the circumcision of her son by Zipporah.

7044. 'Zipporah took a piece of rock' (Ex. iv. 25) = the quality shown by the representative Church through truth; for 'Zipporah' = the representative Church.

8647. 'Jethro . . . took Zipporah the wife of Moses' (Ex. xviii. 2) = good from the Divine conjoined with truth Divine . . . For 'Zipporah the wife of Moses' = good Divine. Ex. (=the good that is derived from Divine good (Jethro), and is conjoined with truth Divine (Moses). 8661.)

Zoan. Zoan.

A. 1482^o. 'The princes of Zoan,' and 'the wise counsellors of Pharaoh' (Is. xix. 13) = primary scientifics.

5044⁴. See NOEH, here. E. 654⁵⁰.

—⁶. 'When his princes were in Zoan' (Is. xxx. 4) = truths falsified, thus falsities.

Zoar. Zoar.

A. 1589. 'Like the land of Egypt in coming to Zoar' (Gen. xiii. 10) = scientifics from the affections of good. . . For 'Zoar' = the affection of good.

—'. Zoar was a city not far from Sodom, to which Lot fled . . . and besides 'Zoar' is mentioned in Gen. xiv. 2, 8; Deut. xxxiv. 3; Is. xv. 5; Jer. xlviii. 34, where also it = affection. And, as it = the affection of good, in the opposite sense, it = the affection of evil.

1663. 'The king of Bela, this is Zoar' (Gen. xiv. 2) = (a kind) of cupidity of evil and persuasion of falsity.

2429. '(This city) is a little one' (Gen. xix. 20) = a little of truth. Ex.

—^e. 'Zoar,' in the Original Language, means 'little.' For it here treats of those who are in the affection of truth, and not so much in the affection of good.

2430^e. (Zoar) was situated at the foot of the mountain; and Lot afterwards went from it up the mountain. Ex.

2435. 'I will not overthrow the city (Zoar)' (ver. 21) = that the man in whom there is truth that has good within it shall not perish. Ex. 2437.

2439. 'Therefore he called the name of the city Zoar' (ver. 22) = the affection of truth. . . For they who are in the affection of truth have 'little' of truth, because they have little of good as compared with those in the affection of good.

2442. 'Lot came unto Zoar' (ver. 23) = that those who are in the affection of truth are saved; for 'Zoar' = the affection of truth.

2459. 'Lot went up out of Zoar' (ver. 30) = when they were no longer in the affection of truth . . . because all the good of truth had been devastated.

2462. 'For he feared to dwell in Zoar' (id.) = because he could no longer, from the affection of truth, look to good. 'Zoar' = the affection of truth, and when this has been devastated, it is impossible to look to good any longer.

Zuzim. Suzim.

A. 1654. 'The Zuzim,' etc. (Gen. xiv. 5) = a kind of persuasions of falsity. 1673.

APPENDIX.

PREFATORY NOTE.—The omissions from the main body of this work which are contained in the following Appendix are of two classes.

I. A few extracts from the Writings which are of doctrinal importance.

II. Cross references of English words which were inevitably omitted during the construction of the main work. These are comparatively numerous, and many of them will be found to be of essential usefulness and importance.

N.B.—A large number of references, without extracts, and which have little or no important doctrinal bearing, but which may be of use to translators, and other students of the Latin of the Writings, will be found in the Latin-English Vocabulary which follows this Appendix.

A. (The letter A.)

D. 5112. When the spiritual Angels utter A there is something of E, or AE, in it . . . whereas the words of the celestial Angels have an affinity with A, O, and U, and therefore [their speech] falls into such words as contain these vowels. For this reason, when a man is speaking with the latter, he is diverted from words that contain E, and I, to those which contain A, O, and U. 5620.

5622°. (In the Most-ancient Heaven, not that of the modern celestials) instead of A, they say AO, diphthong.

Aaron. Aaron.

E. 375¹³. The reason Aaron . . . and his sons were anointed, and also their very garments, was that they might represent the Lord as to the Divine good, and the derivative Divine truth; Aaron, as to the Divine good, and his sons as to the derivative Divine truth . . . 502¹.

431². Aaron, as the high-priest=the good of love to the Lord.

696¹⁹. 'O house of Aaron trust ye in Jehovah' (Ps. cxv.10). 'House of Aaron'=all who are in the good of love.

717⁷. Aaron himself represented the Lord as to the priesthood, which is His Celestial Kingdom; and his garments represented in general the Spiritual Kingdom; for this invests the Celestial Kingdom . . . and therefore the Divine truth is signified in general by the garments of Aaron . . .

727¹¹. For Moses and Aaron represented the Lord as to the Law, which is the Word . . . and 'the rod of Aaron blossomed, and brought forth almonds' (Num. xvii.) because his rod represented . . . truth from the good of love, (which) is the only truth that produces fruit, which is the good of charity.

768¹⁹. Aaron represented the Lord's priesthood; and therefore 'the seed of Aaron'=those who are in the affection of genuine truth which is from celestial good. III.

D. 206. That Abraham does not know us. Ex.

E. 768¹³. 'Abraham'=the Lord as to the Divine Celestial of the Church . . . (therefore) 'the seed of Abraham'=Divine truth celestial.

—¹⁴. That 'the seed of Abraham' does not mean the Jews, is evident from . . . John viii.33-44. Here 'Abraham' means the Lord, and 'the seed of Abraham, Divine truth from the Lord, which is the Word. . . 'I know that ye are Abraham's seed'=that the Lord knew that the truth of the Church, which is the Word, was among them . . . (and also because) Judah = the Lord as to the Word.

Adam. Adam.

De Verbo 14³. 'Adam' (in the celestial Word) = the Lord as to the Divine Itself and at the same time as to the Divine Human; and his wife = the Church . . .

Q. 8. In the genealogy in Luke, it is said that Adam was 'of God,' that is, created by God, and not the son of God.

Coro. 35³. To deduce (the origin of all evils from Adam and his seed) would be like deriving all species of birds from one egg . . .

Adult. Adultus.

D. 5167. Up to adult age, man is in a variable state, and therefore in the World of Spirits; but afterwards is, as to his soul, in either Heaven or Hell, because he then has a constant mind, which is rarely changed, although this does happen with some.

Adultery. Adulterium.

De Conj. 78. On a sphere of adultery. — While (people) are speaking against the truths and goods of faith and charity, there is produced a sphere that is meretricious and of adultery, and then adulterers gather there, like ravens to a carcase, and are delighted with the stench that prevails there . . .

114. When the Angels are discoursing about the union of good and truth, then, in a lower region . . . with evil Spirits, there is presented a representative of adultery. Hence it is that the adulteration of good, and the falsification of truth, are called 'adultery' and 'whoredom.'

T. 669². In the lower temple there is preached the Gospel of the Lord's new advent . . .

E. 806³. That the Lord came into the world for these two reasons, and thus saved the human race from eternal death, is evident from the fact that before His advent the Hells were not in order, and therefore there was no equilibrium between Heaven and Hell. (The consequence.) Therefore, in order to restore the destroyed equilibrium, it pleased the Lord to come into the world. Ex. . . This was one reason why He came into the world; and the other was that He might glorify His Human . . .

Coro. XVIII. While the vastation is going on, and before the consummation has come, the Lord's advent is announced, and a redemption by the Lord; and, after this, a New Church.

XXXI. By His first advent and the redemption then, the Lord could not form, from Christians, a new Heaven, and from this a new Church, because as yet there were no Christians . . .

21¹¹. At this day, also, a redemption has been effected by the Lord, because at this day is His second advent, according to the prediction; by which, having been an eye-witness of it, I have been made certain of the Truth of the foregoing arcana.

51². They could not be made internal and spiritual men, as men could after the Lord's advent.

Inv. 30. 'When the Son of Man shall come in His glory . . .' (Matt. xxv. 31). This advent of the Lord is meant by these words in the Apostles' . . . Nicene . . . and Athanasian Creeds. (Quoted.)

34. The Lord's advent is according to order in this respect: that the spring does not come until after the winter, nor the morning until after the night; etc. etc. III.

But the age of the Ancients was called Silver, because they were in a state of Truth, and, derivatively, in charity towards the neighbour . . . But the time of their descendants was called the Iron Age, because they did not live—degere—in the affection of truth, but in obedience to it . . .

Body. Corpus.

D. 1099. All that is vital of man, however much dispersed may be the parts of his body, is collected together in a moment (when he is being resuscitated after death).

1668. On Spirits who are quite unwilling [to admit] that they have been in a body. 1672a.

1706. I could scarcely tell whether I was in the body, or out of the body; for I have perceived nothing of the body, because it was not granted to reflect upon it; thus the perception to me [is as if I were] devoid of a body . . .

1708. On the coming forth—existentia—and subsistence of human bodies from the Lord through the Grand Man. Gen.art.

1710. The Lord's life inflows into all in the universe, for they constitute the Grand Body; and Heaven, with the Heaven of Spirits, His Body, which lives from Him as a man does from his soul . . .

1711. But those in this Grand Body who are evil, are circumstanced as are the bad parts in the body, which, in various ways, are brought so as to be adjoined. Ex.

1713. The soul could not inflow in this way into the forms of its body, according to all their varieties . . . unless there were a Grand Man, of which the Lord is the life, and which, in all its details, corresponds to human bodies . . .

1714. Hence, then, is the coming forth—existentia—of bodies and their operations; and hence is their subsistence, which is a perpetual coming forth—existentia . . . Hence are the coming forth and subsistence of all animal bodies, even those of the smallest animalculae. Hence are the coming forth and subsistence of all plants . . . which, in their own way, relate, in a type, to the bodies of living creatures . . .

1827. It is (commonly) said that the external senses and their pleasures belong to the body only, and also the appetites . . . for people are unaware that there is a certain natural mind which is almost like the lower mind of brutes . . . and which is distinct from the bodily things.

J. (Post.) 87. When I said (to the Mohammedans) that the Lord was conceived from Jehovah . . . and that He therefore could glorify the whole body, so that as to that of the body which is rejected and putrefies with those born of men as parents, with Him it was glorified and made Divine from the Divine in Him, and that He rose again with this, by leaving nothing in the sepulchre, and that it happens differently with every man, they listened with attention . . .

129². (Thus) His body was like His soul, after He had rejected that of the body which He derived from the mother; and therefore He rose again as to the whole body, and did not leave anything of it in the sepulchre, as happens with every other man, who rises again as to the spirit only, and never as to his material body . . .

Dicta Probandia p. 11. The consummation of the Church as described by various things in the book of Daniel.

Coro. III. In every Church . . . its third state has been its decline, when was its evening, or vastation; and its fourth has been its end, when was its night, or consummation. (Compare XVII. XVIII.) 6, Ex.

9. The end of the Church, or consummation of the age, is when there does not remain any genuine truth, and consequently not any genuine good; or when there does not remain any good, and consequently not any truth; but in their stead there reigns falsity and consequently evil, or evil and consequently falsity. It is then 'the fulness of time' in the Church, the members of which are like persons walking in the night. Des.

10. That after the consummation, or end of [the Church], the Lord Jehovih appears, and executes a Judgment upon the men of the former Church. . . Gen.art.

12. From the time of the vastation of a Church, up to its consummation, Hell grows to so great an extent as to overshadow the whole angelic Heaven. (The effect.)

31. The fourth state of this (Most Ancient) Church, which was its end, or night, and is called its consummation, is described in Gen.iii.9-23. Ex.

Correspondence. Correspondentia.

Inv. 45. The correspondences by which, in each and all things, the Word has been written, possess such force and power that they may be called the force and power of the Divine omnipotence; for through them the Natural acts conjointly with the Spiritual, and the Spiritual with the Natural; thus all things of Heaven with all things of the world. Hence it is that the two sacraments are correspondences of spiritual things with natural. This is the source of their virtue and power.

there will be such dissension (among truths and goods) with those who are being reformed. III. (Compare 724⁶.)

Dividing, A. See SPLIT.

Divine. Divinus.

A. 2531². The doctrine of faith . . . is Divine truth from Divine good, and thus wholly Divine. What is Divine is incomprehensible, because above all understanding, even the angelic; but still this Divine, which in itself is incomprehensible, can inflow into the Rational of man through the Lord's Divine Human; and, when it inflows into his Rational, it is received there according to the truths which are there, thus variously . . .

Divine good. Bonum divinum.

T. 702. That . . . the Lord's 'flesh,' and 'the bread' (in the Holy Supper) = the Divine good of His love . . . Gen.art.

De Verbo 2. The celestial ideas with the Angels of the Third Heaven partake of the flame of good, which, in its essence, is the Divine good.

Divine love. Amor divinus.

T. 65. There are two things from which order has come into existence, and through which it subsists: the Divine love and the Divine wisdom; and man has been created a receptacle of them, from which it follows that he has been created into the order according to which these two act in the universe; principally, according to that in which they act in the angelic Heaven . . .

365². The Divine love which proceeds from the Lord as a Sun, is perceived by the Angels as heat; and the Divine wisdom . . . as light . . . (This) heat contains in its bosom all the Infinities of His love, and (this) light, all the Infinities of His wisdom . . . This is because that Sun is the circle that most closely encompasses the Lord, emanating from His Divine love, and at the same time from His Divine wisdom; for . . . the Lord is in the midst of that Sun.

778. Every man is his own love and his own intelligence . . . and in like manner the Lord is Divine love and Divine wisdom, or, what is the same, Divine good and Divine truth; for His will is of the Divine love, and the Divine love is of His will; and His understanding is of the Divine wisdom, and the Divine wisdom is of His understanding; the Human Form being their containant.

838. God, in His essence, is the Divine love, and the Divine love is like the purest fire . . . Therefore He descended and assumed the Human . . .

— Another said that woman has been created by the Lord through the wisdom of man, because from man; and hence she is a form of wisdom inspired with the affection of love; and, as the affection of love is life itself, woman is the life of wisdom, the male being wisdom; and the life of wisdom is beauty itself.

— A third (said) that to women there has been given a perception of the deliciousnesses of conjugal love; and, as their whole body is an organ of this perception, it (must be) beauty.

—⁴. A fourth (said) that the Lord has taken away from the man beauty and elegance of life, and has transcribed them into the woman . . .

— A fifth (said) that women were not created beauties for their own sake, but for the sake of the men . .

—⁵. A sixth (said) . . . nothing in the universe was created more perfect than a woman beautiful in face and graceful in manners, to the end that the man may render thanks to the Lord for His bounty, and repay it by the reception of wisdom from Him.

75⁷. Woman was born to be the love of the man's wisdom . . .

Sense of Letter.

E. 816³. The Word in the letter being of this character, it serves as a support for Heaven; for all the wisdom of the Angels in regard to the things of the Church is terminated in the sense of the letter of the Word as in its basis; and therefore the Word in the letter may be called the support of Heaven. For this reason the sense of the letter of the Word is most holy, and is even more powerful than its spiritual sense, as has been made known to me by much experience in the Spiritual World; for when Spirits quote any passage according to the sense of the letter, they at once excite some heavenly Society to conjunction with them. It is therefore evident that for there to be any holiness or power in anything of the doctrine of the Church, it must be confirmed by the sense of the letter of the Word; and that this must be done from those books of the Word which contain the spiritual sense. This shows how dangerous it is to so falsify the Word as to destroy the Divine truth that is in its spiritual sense; for by so doing Heaven is closed against the man.

PREFATORY NOTE.—The following Vocabulary contains three classes of entries:—

First: Latin words (and a few Swedish words) of which the English equivalents constitute the heads to the various articles in the Concordance. These words, together with their English renderings, are printed in the Vocabulary thus, Amor—Love.

Second: Latin words which are not so represented by any English equivalents in the Concordance heads. These, together with their English meanings, and a few references to places in the Writings where they occur, stand thus, Quare (wherefore). H.9². 48.

Third: Additional references to the first class of entries, which are printed thus, Agmen—Body. R.655¹.

Words of the second class are mainly such as occur in the Writings without doctrinal significance; such as many conjunctions, prepositions, and adverbs; also words of rare occurrence, and verbal phrases of common occurrence. It will be understood that in most cases only specimen instances are given.

While it is not claimed that even with these additions the Vocabulary contains a complete list of all the Latin and other words that occur in the Writings, it is believed that it will be found to be of much use to students and translators of the original Writings. It is at any rate the beginning of a complete Dictionary to the Latin of Swedenborg.

TABLE OF REPEATED PASSAGES.

PREFATORY NOTE.—The passages in the Writings which are indicated in the following Table by the corresponding references in the opposite columns are not merely parallel passages, but are actual verbatim repetitions. They have not been noted by Swedenborg as being such by any references, but have been found by the Compiler of the Concordance as he went along. Numerous as they are, there are doubtless many others which as yet remain to be discovered. These repetitions vary in length from a few lines to whole pages of unbroken repetition.

The use of this Table will be necessary to the close student of the Writings for the reason that the Concordance does not usually indicate, by reference, such verbatim repetitions as are here given. The Concordance indicates parallel passages by references to them, but, as a rule, not actual copies of statements.

From this Table the student can mark, in his private copy of the Writings, the places where these repeated passages occur, until such time as an annotated edition of the Writings is made, which will of course contain them.

It will be noticed that the references to passages in the posthumous works are reversed in respect to the order of time, but in this the Table merely follows the order that has been observed all through the Concordance. This reversal begins at D. 185 on page 862.
